INTRODUCTION

TO THE

CIRCLE

OF THE

UPPER RHINE.

§. I. OF the upper Circle of the Rkine, which is also simply called the Circle of the Rhine, the fullest and best chart hitherto published is that by Gerkard Valk in two sheets. Those of Visscher, de Wit and Homann, the latter of which, in the Atlas of Germany, composes the ninety-second chart; as also those executed by other hands, are remarkably superficial and defective.

§. 2. From this Circle, almost all lands and states, situate on the other side of the Rhine, have been gradually taken away by France; that is to say, the greatest part of the bishopric of Strasburg, as also those of Metz, Tull and Verdun, together with the archbishopric of Bisaur, or Besançon, the princely abbey of Murbach, the abbey of Munster, in the Gregorienthale, and the dutchy of Lorrain (which at first was reckoned in the Circle of the Upper Rhine, but afterwards was annexed to that of Burgundy, see vol.2. p. 420. the county of Bissch, the land-vogtey of Hagenau, which comprized the ten ancient Imperial cities of Alsace, together with the Imperial cities of Metz, Tull, Verdun and Strasburg. This Circle is at present terminated by the Electoral Circle of the Rhine, by which it is also properly intersected, the Lower

Circle of the Rhine and the Westphalian, together with the Lower Saxon, the Upper Saxon, the Franconian and Swahian Circles, Alface and Lorrain, in the latter of which also are some lands belonging to the Circle of the Upper Rhine. Concerning its extent we have spoken of that before, under the Electoral Rhenish Circle.

§. 3. The Circle of the Upper Rhine has, at present, the following states belonging to it; namely, those of the bishoprics of Worms and Spire, as also the provostship of Weissenburg, together with the bishoprics of Strasburg, Basel and Fulda, and the commandery of the order of St. John, as also the princely abbey of Prum, with the provostship of Odenbeim and the Electoral Palatinate of Simmern, Lautern and Veldenz, the Palatinate of Deuxponts, Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, Hersfeld or Hirseld and Sponheim, as also the margraviates of Nomeny, Salm with Kirburg, Naffau-Weilburg, Naffau-Ufingen, Naffau-Idstein, Naffau-Saarbrucken and Otweiler, with those of Waldeck, Hanau-Munzenburg, Hanau-Lichtenburg, Solms-Hobenfolms, Solms-Braunfels, Solms-Rodolleim, Solms-Laubach, and the Electorate of Mentz on account of Konigstein; that of Stolberg on account of Konigstein, those of Isenburg-Birstein, Isenburg-Budingen, Wachtersbach and Meerbolz, as also the Rhinegraves of Greweiler, Grumbach, Dhaun, Leiningen-Hartenburg, Leiningen-Westerburg and Grunstadt, Munzfelden, Witgenstein of Witgenstein, Witgenstein-Berleburg, Falkenstein, Reipolzkirchen, Chriechingen, Wartenberg, Bretzenbeim, Dachsluhl and Ollbruck, and the Imperial cities of Worms, Spire, Franckfort, Friedberg and Wetzlar. Some Seigniories also lie in this Circle, but these are either exempted, or have neither feat nor voice in it. Helle-Cassel and Hanau-Munzenberg have fometimes separated from the Circle, and I know not whether, at present, they hold of it again or not. The dukedom of Savey is also reckoned in it, but this has separated itself from the Circle. Some disputes relating to the ranks of the above-mentioned states of the Circle, are still existing, but they generally follow each other in the order here recited.

§. 4. The bishop of Worms and the Elector palatine of the dutchy of Simmern, are summoning Princes of this Circle. These, on account of the Directorium, entered into a stipulation at Weinheim, in the year 1690, to the following effect; viz. that Worms indeed should posses it alone, but yet communicate with the Elector-palatine of Simmern. In the year 1705, they stipulated again, that Worms should separately engross and expedite the circular summons, but both before and after engrossing them, communicate them to the Elector-palatine for perusal and revision: That the deputies of the Palatinate of Simmern should concur in binding the officers of the Circle, at the solemn engagement; and that the deputies of Worms should subscribe the heads of bills to be brought in, after the words, Von gesammten Kreis-Ausscheib-amts wegen. That the chancery of Worms should address the circular fummons transmitted to the states of the Circle, should open the writings addressed to the summonary office of the Circle, by that furnmoning Prince of it to whose hands they first came, and were fent to the other; but when delivered to their deputies in the prefence of both, that they should be opened only by those of Worms, but thould be communicated, according to custom, to the Palatine of Simmern. As the Catholic line of Neuburg obtained the Electoral Palatinate, and the co-funmoning office of the Circle in the Upper Circle of the Raine, the Protestant states of this Circle wanted a Protestant summoning Prince for it, and, being unable to obtain their wish, most of the Protestant states of the Circle bound themselves under the conduct of Hesse Cassel to a separation from the other states; but these were divided among themselves, and therefore effected nothing further than that, in the year 1700, it was previously stipulated, that, in all executions, which concerned the Catholics in common with the Protestants, or the Protestants alone, the prefiding protesting state should concur therewith; but in all cases wherein this state either impeded, or was itself, directly or indirectly, interested in the execution: That the Impetratus should have the privilege of nominating another Protestant state to the laudable summoning office of the Circle, which at that time affifted at the execution; and that the like should also stand free for the Impetrans executionis, when of the Protestant religion, and the Impetratus of the Catholic. In commissions and dispatches, wherein the Protestants were, either directly or indirectly, interested, the equality of the religions was to be observed; and if the Protestant states had any thing to advance for the interest of their constitution, they were to declare it by means of the prefiding state to the laudable summoning office of the Circle, which was then to confer with that state, and also at desire to add the declaration given by the prefiding Protestant state, in summoning the Diet of the Circle to the particular heads, to be taken under deliberation: That, should any fuch cases happen in the Circle, in which the Protestant states might be interested, the laudable summoning office of the Circle should consent to hold the necessary conferences relating to it, with the frequently mentioned prefiding state. Heffe Caffel did not choose to adhere long to this previous stipulation, and therefore, till the year 1731, absented itself from the diets of the Circle. In the faid year, indeed, it made its appearance again; but, in 1741, separated a-new.

§. 5. The diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine were formerly held at Worms, but in this century at Frankfort; but the chancery Circle of the archives belonging to it are kept at the directory at Worms.

§. 6. With respect to its situation on the side of France, this Circle is reckoned among the sour anterior and six prejacent Circles of the Empire, and acceded also to the confederacies entered into in the years 1697 and 1702, which were afterwards frequently renewed by certain Circles. As the prejacent Circles, in the year 1697, took upon them, the fetting on foot a triple army of 60,000 men; of these 10,023 fell to the Circle of the Upper Rhine; but it being represented that it could not possibly supply this number on account of the diminution of the states of the Circle, and the miseries it endured from the war, 7000 men were offered; that is to say, two thirds foot and one third horse, if the princely house of Hesse returned again to the Circle; but that otherwise only 5000 men; nay, in the treaty of Nordlingen, in the year 1702, it supplied only 3600 men. In the year 1727, after the stipulated one and a half supply, it kept on foot, in times of peace, one hundred and fifty horse and 2120 foot. In the year 1733, it raised a triple army; viz. two hundred horse and 6023 foot. The Circle captain-office has, in later times, been again brought into vogue; and, in the year 1750, was conferred on Lewis VIII. landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt.

§. 7. This Circle, with respect to its religion, is reckoned among the mixed, and to the chamber judicatory actually presents at present two assessors.

BISHOPRIC

WORMS.

- §. 1. In the year 1752, Homann's heirs published a chart of the bishopric of Worms, which in the Atlas of Germany makes the 93d chart, but has considerable defects.
- §. 2. It lies on the Rhine, being about five hours, or two miles and a half long, and for the greatest part environed by the lower Palatinate, but partly also by the upper county of Katzenellnbogen, and by the territory of Mentz.
- §. 3. This country is for the most part mountainous and woody, but boasts also some fruitful arable lands, meadows and wine. It is likewise plentifully watered; for the Rhine, running through it, receives here several smaller rivers in its course.
- §. 4. The Protestant churches in this bishopric retired in the year 1705 from the Electoral Palatinate to the bishopric of Worms, and live now in an oppressed State. They have no longer any particular church-government of their own, but yet are not subject in ecclesiastical and matrimonial matters to the regency of Worms or catholic officers. The regency nominates the pastors and schoolmasters. One of the Protestant preachers too is inspector of the rest.
- §. 5. In ancient times the Vangiones inhabited this district. In the middle ages it was called Wormefveld, Wormatzfeld, or Wormfergau. That it was formerly the seat of an archbishop has not been proved; but the bishopric belonging to this place is ancient, and one of the bishops of Worms (Epifcopus Vangionum) named Victor, assisted at a council at Cologn, in the year 347. Of the ancient bishops here, however, we have little certainty. The series of the Prelates of Worms, which may be most depended on, begins with Erembert, who was appointed bishop thereof about the year 770.

§. 6. The

§. 6. The arms of this bishopric are a filver key, lying in an oblique posture, with the wards turned upwards, and having on each side four golden stars, in a black field.

§. 7. The bishop of Worms is subject to the archbishopric of Mentz. In the circle of the Upper Rhine he is the summoning Prince and director. In the council of the Princes of the empire he exchanges place on the spiritual bench with the Elector of Wurzburg. His matricular evaluation is two horse and thirteen foot, or seventy-six florins, and to one chamber-term he gives fifty rix-dollars, sixty-four kruitzers.

§. 8. The most worthy chapter of this place, as also the cathedral, has its seat in the Imperial city of Worms, and consists of thirteen Capitulars and nine Domicelli.

§. 9. The princely regency here consists of a president, a chancellor, aulick and regency counsellors and secretaries; the episcopal vicarship, of a vicar-general, official and spiritual counsellors; the aulick judicatory, of a president, an aulick judge, commissaries and counsellors, who are all members of the regency, together with a secretary; and the aulick chamber, of a president, provincial clerk, counsellors, secretary, and a siscal general.

§. 10. In this bishopric are the following places.

1. Stein, a fortress lying on the river Weschnitz, which is the seat of a bailiwick.

2. Nordheim, Hofheim, and Lambertheim Protestant churches and church villages, belonging to the amt or bailiwick of Stein.

3. Neuhausen, a borough, having a procurator, who holds jurisdiction over this and the following boroughs. The Protestant churches here were begun by the catholics, in the year 1699, to be used in common. In this place was anciently a royal court, which Dagobert King of the Franks erected into a church, and bishop Samuel, in the year 847, into a collegiate one. This foundation the Elector palatine Frederick III. suppressed in the year 1565, in the room thereof founding a princely school, or Gymnasium illustre, in which twelve tables are held; but under the catholic Electors all was again taken away. The revenues of this suppressed foundation amounted yearly to between sisteen and twenty thousand storins, and in the year 1706-it was fully ceded by the Elector-palatine to the bishopric of Worms, upon which Francis Lewis, Elector of Mentz and bishop of that place, founded an orphan-house at Worms.

4. Rhein-Turkheim, a borough fituate on the Rhine, the Protestant church belonging to which was formerly a filial of the church of Otthof, but in the year 1730 was added that of Neuhausen. In the year 1699 the catholics also began to make use of it for divine service. In this town the family of de Ron has an hereditary seat.

5. Hockheim, a borough, in which till the year 1730, was a Protestant filial church belonging to the church of Neuhausen, but by the catholics erected into a peculiar parish-church of itself. The ancient cloister here was suppressed in the year 1580, by the Elector-palatine.

6. Lichbenan, formerly a cloister, suppressed by the Elector-palatine, in the year 1570.

7. Dirmstein, a borough and citadel of a bishop. In this place is a ball-wick, a provincial decanate and a Protestant church.

8. Wieffoppenbeim, a village, containing a catholic church.

9. Horcheim, a village, having a catholic church.

- 10. Weissheim, a village containing a filial church belonging to the parish of Horcheim.
- 11. Beuntersheim, a village, having a Protestant church, which, ever since the year 1700, the catholics have also made use of for divine service, and the Protestants at present enjoy it only every sourth week.

12. Laumersheim, or Lammerscheim, and Ormsheim, in Latin Mors, are villages containing churches of the Protestants.

- 13. Roxheim, a village feated on a canal, which falls into the Rhine, where the family of de Ron has an hereditary feat, as also the crane or staple-right thereof, which brings in yearly above 1500 florins.
- 14. Neu-Leiningen, a town standing on a mountain, was in the year 1468, on the death of Hesso, landgrave of Leiningen, suppressed by the bishopric of Worms as superior of the fies; and in the same year one half of it conferred on the palsgrave Frederick. At present the line of Neu-Leiningen is in possession of the other half. The citadel here was laid waste by the French.

The BISHOPRIC of S P I R E.

- §. 1. OF this bishopric also Homann's heirs published a chart in the year 1753, which was taken from the drawing of Bloedner the Wurtemburg engineer, and in the Atlas of Germany forms the 94th chart, but is not without faults.
- §. 2. This bishopric lies on the Rhine, being for the most part surrounded by the Electoral Palatinate, and bounding also in some places on the Margraviate of Baaden-Durlach. It is partly woody and partly mountainous, but enjoys also good arable lands, wine, chestnuts and almonds.
- §. 3. In these territories anciently dwelt the Nemetes. In the middle ages the bishopric formed a part of the Speyrgau. The real origin of it is anknown, though a bishop of Spire, named Jesse, is adduced, who in the Vol. V.

year 348 affished at a council at Cologn. Mention is also made, that Dagobert I. King of the Franks, in the beginning of the seventh century creeted the bishopric of Spire, as it were of new, and appointed Athanasus his chaplain, bishop thereof.

§. 4. The arms of this bishopric are a filver cross in a blue field.

§. 5. The bishop of Spire is subject to the archbishop of Mentz. He is a Prince of the Empire, and in the council of the Princes thereof has a feat and voice on the spiritual bench between the bishops of Eichstatt and Strassburg. At the Diets of the circle of the Upper Rhine he takes the second place. His matricular evaluation is eighteen horse and fixty foot, or monthly four hundred and fifty-six florins. To one chamber-term he gives, on account of this bishopric and the provostship of Weissenburg, one hundred and fixty-nine rix-dollars eight kruitzers.

§. 6. The feat of the cathedral-church and chapter lies in the imperial city of Spire. The highly worthy chapter thereof confifts of fourteen capitulars, and of the Domicelli here there are thirteen.

§. 7. The regency, the epifcopal vicarship, the aulick jurisdiction and aulick chamber are its high colleges.

§. 8. To the bishopric of Spire belong the following places, namely,

1. Philipsburg, a town and fort lying on the Rhine, and sprung out of a borough, named Udenheim, which Emich bishop of Spire purchased in the year 1316, of Henry of Cologn, burgher of Spire. Bishop Gerhard obtained permission of the Emperor Lewis to fortify this place with walls and ditches, and bishop Philip chose it for his residence, causing it in the year 1618 to be fortified. But the combined Electors and Princes, particularly the Elector-palatine Frederick V. as superior, together with the Margrave of Baaden-Durlach, agreed at an affembly fummoned at Heilbrun, to fend thither 4000 horse and foot, with 1200 pioneers, and the necessary artillery. who also on June the 15th, 1618, demanded and took possession of the place, and upon this razed all the fortifications thereof. But as the Elector Frederick was put under the ban, the bishop of Spire, in the year 1623, availed himself of this opportunity, to complete the fortifications, and named the place Philipsburg, in honour of the Apostle of that name. was fortified afterwards in a better and more regular.manner. The town, indeed, belongs to the bishop of Spire, who has also an office here; but is looked upon as a fort of the Empire, and accordingly a governor and commandant are appointed here by it. In the year 1714, at the affembly of the circle-affociation of Heilbron, it was agreed, that the circle of Franconia should suffer its troops here to continue longer, or be relieved by an equal number; upon which the circle also appointed a Protestant chaplain for the Protestant church of the garrison in this place. At the peace of Munster of 1648, France obtained leave to keep a garrifon here, which privilege in the year 1579, at the peace of Niemeguen, ceded to the Emperor. At the peace of Ryfwick, in 1697, Philipsburg with all its fortifications to the right of the Rhine was again ceded to the Emperor and Empire; but it was agreed, that those which stood on the other side of that river, together with the bridge, should be demolished; but to the bishop of Spire were reserved his rights. In 1734 this fort was taken by the French, after a brave defence by Wutgenau the commandant, but restored again in the year 1737. Since that time the works are much fallen to decay.

2. Rheinhausen, a borough lying on the Rhine.

3. Bruchsal, the proper residence of the bishop, and the seat of an upper bailiwick, is a small town lying on the river Salza, in that tract of land called Prurbein. This place the Emperor Henry III. conferred in the year 1056 on Conrad bishop of Spire. Bishop Ulrich II. built here a citadel, and also purchased of Count Conrad of Calve the lordship of the place. Concerning the immediate Imperial soundation here a separate article occurs below. This town was considerably damaged by fire by the French in the years 1676 and 1686. In 1735 the army of the Emperor and Empire had a camp here between Bruchsal and Langenbruck, and before them a line and inundation reaching from Ettlingen in the margraviate of Baaden-Baaden over Bruchsal and Kislau to Ketsch and the river Rhine. In it is a commandant belonging to the order of St. John.

4. Altenburg is the feat of a bailiwick.

5. Upper and Lower Grumbach belong to the bailiwick of Grumbach.

6. Obstatt or Ubstatt is a village lying on the river Craich.

7. Upper-Oewisheim, a village, having a bailiwick-office belonging to the chapter.

8. Langenbruck, a village.

- 9. Kissau, a citadel seated on the river Craich, which the Emperor William conferred in the year 1249 on the bishopric. In it also is a bailiwick-office.
- 10. Rotenburg, a little town and citadel fituate in the Prurbein, and having a bailiwick-office.
 - 11. Weibstatt, a little town seated in the Creichgau.

12. Ketsch, a village, lying near the Rhine.

- 13, Marientraut, a village feated on the Speyerback, and containing a bailiwick.
- 14. Eeidesheim, a little town standing on the Hart, on the banks of which grows a fine wine. In it is a princely bailiwick.
- 15. Rheinzabern, a village feated on the Erlbach, which not far from hence falls into the Rhine.

The Provostship of WEISSENBURG.

THE princely provostship of Weissenburg lies in the ancient imperial city of Weissenburg, or Kron-Weissenburg in the Lower Assace, See vol. ii. p. 597. It was originally an abbey of Benedictine Monks, founded in the year 624, which in the year 664 was considerably improved by Dagobert King of the Franks. Pope Clement VII. erected it in 1546 into a temporal provostship, and in 1546 it was incorporated with the bishopric of Spire. Its arms are a filver castle with two towers, over each of which waves a golden crown, in a red field. The bishop of Spire, as princely provost of Weissenburg, has a feat and voice in the council of the Princes of the Empire on the spiritual bench, and that between Berchtolsgaden and Prum. At the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine, he enjoys also a voice on account of this provostship. He represents it with two horse and fourteen foot, or monthly, with eighty florins. It has been already shewn what belongs to this provostship.

The BISHOPRIC of STRASSBURG.

THE erection of the bishopric of Strassburg is ascribed to the Frankish King Dagobert, and placed in the seventh century. It was sounded in the city of Strassburg, where also the cathedral church and chapter still remain; but the bishop, as the city received the Lutheran doctrine, has sixed his ordinary residence in the town of Zabern, or Elsas-Zabern. Ever since Alsace and the ancient imperial city of Strassburg are fallen under the power of France, the bishop of Strassburg, indeed, with his temporalty, so far as it is situate on the other side of the Rhine, is subject to the territorial jurisdiction of France; but yet with respect to his bailiwicks lying on this side of the Rhine, is still a Prince and State of the German Empire, and as such has as well in the council of the Princes of the Empire on the spiritual bench, as at the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine, both a seat and voice. His ancient matricular evaluation is eighteen horse and one hundred foot, or monthly six hundred and sixteen florins. For one chamber-term he is at present present limited fifty-eight rix-dollars, thirty kruitzers. As bishop he is subject to the archbishop of Mentz. The eleven bailiwicks of his territory are defeated by the limit of the limi fcribed Vol. ii. p. 598.

I shall once more mention the bailiwicks situate on this side of the Rhine, among the territories of the Empire, and which are still subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and, at the same time somewhat improve and complete the account given thereof, Vol. ii. p. 598. These lie in Suabia, and, indeed,

1. In the Ortenau, the amts or bailiwicks of Oberkirch and Oppenau, to which belongs

Oberkirch, a little town and citadel fituate on the Rhine or Rench.

Oppenau, a little town standing on the same river.

Renchen, a borough feated on the same.

Wald-Ulm, a borough.

Schauenburg, a citadel, which is the stem or pedigree of the house of the Brisgau counts of Schauenburg.

Aller Heiligen, a cloister.

In St. Petersthal is an acid water.

2. In the Brisgau is the bailiwick of Ettenbeim, to which belongs Ettenbeim, a little town lying on the rivulet of Ettenbach, together with The villages of Altorf, Munchweiler, &c.

The Bishopric of B A S E L.

- §. I. THE bishopric of Basel lies between the Sundgau, the princely county of Mompelgard, the county of Burgundy, the principality of Neusichatel, and the Swiss Cantons of Bern, Solothurn and Basel, and constitutes a considerable bishopric.
- §. 2. The inhabitants of this bishopric speak partly French, and partly what is called the Patois. They are likewise partly catholic and partly Protestant. The States here consist of the spiritualty, the nobility, and the towns and bailiwicks. Their president is the abbot of Bellelay for the time being. When a tax of 30,000 pfennings of Basel currency is imposed, the spiritualty pays thereto 2675, and the nobility 538; but the rest of it the towns and amts supply.
- §. 3. Its bishopric is founded in the city of Bafel, and, as is supposed, was translated thither from Aug/t; but the true time of its foundation is uncertain, and before the middle of the eighth century we have little to be depended upon relating to it. Its bishop is a Prince of the Empire, and has a feat and vote on the spiritual bench, after the bishop of Briness, as well in the council of the Princes of the Empire as at the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. His matricular evaluation is two horse and fifteen foot, or monthy, eighty-four florins. To the chest of the Circle of the Upper Rhine he pays yearly a flipulated fum of five hundred florins, and to one chamber-term forty rix-dollars, fifty-four kruitzers. He formed also a strict union with the feven catholic cantons of Swifferland in the years 1579, 1655, 1671, 1695, 1712, by virtue of which both parties are to afford actual affiftance to each other in religious and other just causes against all offenders and aggressors, whenever either party should be oppressed and perfecuted on a religious account, or when its subjects should rise up against their sovereign; but at the costs of the party suing for help, and in particular that these places were to help the bishop, and force his apostate fubjects again to the catholic faith and obedience; but in fuch case to undertake no violent means without the counsel, privity, and consent of the catholic places. The highly worthy chapter here confifts of eighteen capitulars and Domicelli.

§. 4. This bishopric has the following hereditary offices, viz. hereditary marshals, which are those of Eptingen at Neuweiler; hereditary cupbearers, which are those of Berenfels at Hegenheim; hereditary chamberlains, which are the Reichen of Reichenstein at Juzlingen, alternately with the Munchens of Munchenstein, and stiled from Lowenburg; hereditary fewers, which are the barons of Schonau at Dassheim; and hereditary purveyors, namely, those of Rothberg at Bamlach and Rheinweiler.

§. 5. The bishop of this place is suffragan to the archbishop of Befançon: His ecclesiastical jurisdiction extends to Schletsladt in Alface. His high colleges are, the privy council, the general vicarship and officialate, the aulic jurisdiction, and an aulic chamber.

§. 6. The principality of Basel consists at this day of two parts.

I. One of these is subject to the jurisdiction of the German Empire, and incorporated with the Circle of the Upper Rhine, to which belong the solution lowing land-estates according to their rank, viz.

1. Bellelay, in Latin Bellelagium, which is an abbey of Præmonstratenses, whose abbot wears a mitre, and is president of the provincial States. To it belongs the provostship of Himmelspforte in the county of Rheinfelden.

2. The provostship or collegiate soundation of Munster in Granfelden, or the Munsterthal, seated both above and below the Felsen. This provostship, together with its subjects, is allied to the canton of Bern, with the right of burgher. By virtue of the stipulation entered into in the year 1711, at Arberg, between the bishop of Basel and the canton of Bern, on account of the Munsterthal, a separation of those of different religions in the provosiship was agreed upon, so that at Seebes (in French Elays) or below the Felsen catholicks only, and above the Felsen only Protestants, were to dwell and enjoy the exercise of their religion.

3. The

3. The provostship of St. Ursitz, in the town of this name.

4. The bruderschaft of St. Michael.

5. The provostship of Idstein on the Rhine in the Brisgau. This consists only of one person, who bears the title of a provost. Near it lies a village.

6. The nobility, to which belong about ten families, which are almost all provided for with places in the country and court.

7. The Burgthal, a village, which the barons of Weissenberg hold in fief of the bishopric.

8. Delsperg, in French Delmont, a town lying on the river Birfa.

9. Bruntrut, or Pruntrut, in French Porentru, a town feated on the river Hallen, in which is the Prince's palace, a college of Jesuits, and a Capuchine cloister.

10. St. Urstz, or St. Ursane, called also Sondersitz, a small town lying on the river Doux.

11. Lauffen, a little town feated on the Birsa.

12. The Delsperger Thal, or seigniory of Delsperg.

- 13. The land of Elfgau, which the bishopric has been in possession of ever since the year 1271.
 - 14. The upper bailiwick of Zwingen, in which lies the citadel of Zwingen.

15. The upper bailiwick of Birfeck, in which is Birfeck, a citadel standing on a mountain.

Arlesheim, a borough seated on the river Birsa, where the chapter has its residence, with

The villages of Reinach, Oberweiler, Alschweiler, &c.

16. The upper bailiwick of Pfeffingen, which the bishopric obtained about the year 1008 of the Emperor Henry II. In it are Pfeffingen, a citadel and village.

Angenstein, a citadel standing on the river Birsa. Count Henry of Thier-stein disposed of this place in the year 1518 to the bishopric of Basel, by which, in 1561, it was given in sief to the physician Wendelin Zipper, whose descendants are still possessed of it.

Esch, a village.

17. The upper amt or bailiwick of Schlingen in the Brifgau on the Rhine, containing Schlingen, a market-town, together with

The villages of Steinstatt, which are seated on the Rhine, and also Muchen or Muchheim.

- 18. The Freyen Berge, to which belongs Freyberg or Franquemont, a citadel standing on the river Doux.
- II. The fecond part has gradually withdrawn itself from the jurisdiction of the German Empire, and united itself to the Swiss confederacy, it contributes also nothing to the imposts of the bishopric of Basel, but yet owns the bishop of that place for its superior. To it belong the towns of

Biel and Neuenfladt, with their territories; as also the seigniory of Erguel, Illsingen and the Thesenberg; concerning which a suller account will be given in Switzerland.

The BISHOPRIC of F U L D A.

§. I. Of the principality of Fulda, Wolfgan Regrwill has delineated a chart, which was engraven by Blaeu. After him John Bapt. Homann published another on two sheets, which in the Atlas of Germany is the 102d. In John Frederic Schannat's Corpus Traditionum Fuldensium we find a chart of ancient Buchau, in Latin Buchonia, which Joh. George Puschner of Nuremberg engraved; and this very Schannat has subjoined a chart to his work, which bears the inscription of Diocesis Fuldensis.

§. 2. The principality is environed by Hesse, the counties of Isenburg and Hanau, the bishopric of Wurzburg, the princely county of Henneburg, and some districts of knights of the Empire, being in its greatest length above thirteen, and in its greatest breadth upwards of ten German miles.

§. 3. It is a mountainous and woody country, but has also rich arable lands and salt springs. The principal rivers which water it are the Fulda, which arises in it, and the Saal, which issues out of the territory of Wurzburg, and to the south runs through a small tract of the bishopric of Fulda. Its inhabitants are for the greatest part Roman catholics, but among them are also some Lutberans. In general we reckon here fixty parish and ninety-sour silial churches, among which nine of the parish and a few of the filial churches are Lutberan, but the rest catholic.

§. 4. This principality forms a confiderable part of the ancient Buchau, in Latin Buchonia, Boconia, Bocouna, Buochunna and Puohunna, which arose out of a great and rough wood, and was divided into six gauns, or pagi; namely, into East and West Grapfeld, Tullifeld, Salagewe, Sinnagewe, Ascfeld, Vucringewe and Baringe. To this rough wood the Abbot Sturm betook himself in the year 742, at the suggestion of St. Boniface, in order to seek out a place for a cloyster. He fixed upon one on the river Fulda, in Latin Fuldaha, over which the merchants of Thuringen used to go to Mentz, and Boniface, in the year 744, obtained permission of the Frankish King, Karimann, to erect a cloyster there, which was founded with Benedictine Monks, and had the said Sturm for its first abbot. Pope Zachary I. in the year 751, conferred on it the privilege of being subject to the chair of Rome alone, and to no other bishop. This privilege was confirmed by King Pepin, about the year 755, and, in the year 769, by Pope Stephen IV. Pope John XIII. in the year 968, conferred on the abbots of Fulda the primacy over all abbots in Gaul and Germany, which Pope Silvester II. ratified in the year 999, adding thereto the liberty of appointing councils, and how the bishops were to appeal to the chair of Rome. The Emperor Otto I. granted unto the abbots the dignity of being archehancellors to the Roman Empress; and Charles IV. confirmed it in such a manner that, by virtue thereof, at the coronation of the Empress, and at all other times whenever she was to appear in the Imperial ornaments, they were to set on and take off the crown. At length, Pope Benedict XIV. in the year 1752, raised the abbey to an exempted bishopric, though with the reservation of the status regularis. But of this the archbishop of Ment complained greatly, affirming himself to be the to ancient metropolitan of the church of Fulda.

§. 5. The title of the bishop of Fulda runs thus, by virtue of the above: Bishop and Abbot of Fulda, Prince of the holy Roman Empire, Arch-chancellor of the reigning Roman Empress, Primate of all Germany and Gaul. The arms of Fulda are a black cross in a field Argent. The high-chapter here consists of fifteen persons.

§. 6. The bishop and abbot of Fulda is a Prince of the Empire, and in the council of the Princes of the Finite has a seat and voice on the spiritual bench after the bishop of Chur. He is also a member of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. His matricular evaluation is two hundred and fifty florins monthly, and to one chamber-term he pays two hundred and forty-three rixdollars, four kruitzers and three quarters.

§. 7. The princely high college here consists of the regency and the feudal court, the spiritual vicarship and the aulic chamber.

§. 8. The Principality of Fulda confifts of the following bailiwicks: viz. I. The bailiwick of Fulda.

Fulda, the capital and residentiary town of the Principality, on the river Fulda, owes its original to the abbey, near which at first a village was erected and afterwards enlarged, and, about the year 1162, surrounded with walls and erected into a town. In it also was a royal palace. The Prince's palace here is a well laid structure. The principal church in it is dedicated to Christ our Saviour. The collegiate-church here, dedicated to St. Boniface, was before called the parish-church of St. Blaise; but, in the year 1650, the chapter of St. Boniface, which, till that time, had continued at Great Borsla on the Werra, was translated to Fulda. In it also is a college of Jesuits, with a gymnasium and papal seminary, and a nunnery of Benedictines. In the year 1734, the Prince and Abbot Adolph, of Dalberg, founded an university here, which, on August 19, was solemnly consecrated.

Without the town, but hard by it, on the bishep's mountain, stood the Vol. V.

Benedicting

Benedictine provostship of St. Mary, which, in the year 1525, was demolished by the unruly peasants, and is now incorporated with the abbey, or bishoprick. John Bernhard, abbot of this place, restored the buildings again; and, in the year 1626, placed Franciscans there. The provostships of St. Michaelsberg, St. Johannesberg, St. Petersberg and St. Andrewsberg, are all Benedictine foundations.

Zu Hora and Niesig are filial-churches belonging to the collegiate and parish-church of Fulda.

Adolphseck, a pheasantry, lying one small hour from the town of Fulda. Heimbach, a village, containing a parish-church, to which belong the shial-churches of Gifel, or Doppengifel, and Mabrezell.

Hosefeld, a village, to whose parish-church belong the filial churches of churches of Ludermunde and Klaserzel.

St. Margarethen Haun, a village, lying on the river Haun, to whose parish-church belong the filial-churches of Wissels, Steinau, Steinhauss, Treisbach and Dipperts.

Neukirchen, a village, seated on the river Haun, to whose Lutheran parishchurch belong the filial-churches of Odensassen, Musebach and Meysebach.

2. The hundred, or criminal, court of FULDA, to which appertains

St. Florinberg, in Latin Mons Sanctæ Floræ, a very ancient church-village, formerly a celebrated place. To this parish-church belong the filial-churches of Welkers, Eichenzell, Lescherode and Brumzell, the last of which is a very old town lying on the river Fulda.

The villages of Bilgerzell, Zirkelbach, Kohlhausen, Ditterhan, Friesenhausen, &c.

3. The bailiwick of SALZZCHLIRF, in which is Salzschlirf, a church-village, having a falt-work.

4. The amt, or bailiwick, of GREAT-LUDER, in which is a falt-work. To it belongs Great Luder, a village, whose parish-church includes the filial-church of Little-Luder. On the Langenberg is a chapel, to which pilgrimages are made.

Bienbach, or Bimbach, a village, to whose parish-church belong the filial-churches of Lower-Bienbach, Lutterts and Malkes.

5. The bailiwick of BURGHAUN, in which is Burghaun, or Burghbaun, a little town and citadel lying on the river Haun, in which is a Lutheran parish-church, to which belong the filial, Roternkirchen, and a catholic-church which was founded in the year 1714. This little town belonged formerly to the barons Schenk of Boyneburg and Ilten; from whom, in the year 1692, it came by exchange to the foundation of Fulda.

Langenschwarz, a village, containing a Lutheran parish-church, to which belongs the filial-church of Slotzau,

6. The

6. The bailiwick of Fursteneck, in which is Fursteneck, a citadel.

Eyterfeld, an ancient church-village, which Abbot Hatta I. obtained, in the year 846, of the Emperor Lewis. To the parish-church here belong the filial churches of Leibolz, Woelf, Arzell, Leimbach, Steinbach, Upper and Under Ufbusen.

Great-Dafft, a village, containing a parish-church, to which belong the filial churches of Soisdorf and Treisfeld.

7. The bailiwick of Geyss, in which is Geyss, a little town, seated on the river Ulster. This place was a town as early as the beginning of the fourteenth century. Near it, on a high mountain, formerly stood the citadel of Rockenstul.

Geismar, a village, having a parish-church, to which belongs the filial church of Ketten.

Spala, a church village.

Rafdorf, anciently Ratesthorp, a village containing a collegiate-church, to which belong the filial churches of Grusselbach and Kirch-hasel. On a neighbouring mountain stands the chapel of Gebulsesberg.

Borfeb, a church-village.

Buttlar, a church-village, where the family of Buttlar hold a citadel in fief of the foundation of Fulda. On a mountain hard by it lies St. Michael's Chapel. To the parish-church of Buttlar belongs the filial-church of Wenigen-Daft.

Brehmen, a village, to whose parish-church belongs the filial-church of Bernbach.

Schleyta, a village, containing a parish-church, to which belong the silial-churches of Motzlar, Zitters and Craluck.

8. The bailiwick of Fischberg was mortgaged to one half, by the foundation in the year 1455, to the counts of Henneberg; and, in 1460, the other half was mortgaged to Fritz of Thann; but, by this last, in the year 1468, to Count William of Henneberg. To his fons, George Erneft and Boppo, the mortgage was renewed, in the year 1551, by the foundation of Fulda, for their lives. After their decease, which happened in 1574 and 1583, the foundation of Fulda indeed annulled the mortage; but, in 1594, renewed it to the house of Saxony for thirty-one years; but, after the expiration of this term, the foundation could not attain the release of the bailiwick, this not coming to pass till the years 1705 and 1707; when also the undisturbed enjoyment of all their religious privileges were secured by the foundation of Fulda to the Protestant churches and inhabitants: but, as in the year 1741, the princely line of Eisenach became extinct, and all their lands, together with their immunities, fell to Ernest Augustus, duke of Saxe-Weymar, this last looked upon himself as privileged to take possession of all the hereditary subjects, rents, incomes, estates, taxes, high and low immunities, venery, &e. which, in the year 1707, were disposed of with out his consent, by John William, duke of Saxe-Eisenach, to the foundation of Fulda, and also in 1741. To this bailiwick belongs Fischberg, a citadel.

Dermbach, or Thermbach, a citadel and borough, which is the principal place of the bailiwick. To the Lutheran parish-church here belong the filial-churches of Upper and Lower Alba. In it also is a catholic-church and a cloister of Franciscans.

Fischbach, a village, to whose Lutheran parish-church the churches of Clings, Diedorf, or Dittdorf, and Emphertskausen belong.

Neidphartshausen, a village, having a Lutheran parochial-church, to which belongs the chapel of ease at Brumertshausen, or Brunartshausen.

Orenhausen, or Urnshausen, a village without any Lutheran parochial-church.

Wisenthal, a village, containing a Lutheran parochial church.

Andenhausen, a village, reckoned by Saxe-Weymar wholly within the Henneberg bailiwick of Kalten-Nordkeim, and of which it took possession in the year 1741.

Zell, an abbey dedicated to St. Maria, but formerly a nunnery of Benedictines.

9. The bailiwick of MACKENZELL, containing the following places; viz. Mackenzell, at first only a cell, but, about the beginning of the ninth century, erected into a convent, and afterwards converted into a fortress, though demolished again in the year 1280, is at present a pleasant village, containing a seat and a chapel of ease subject to the parochial-church of Hunefeld.

Hunefeld has been a town ever fince the year 1295, contains both a collegiate and parochial-church, to the latter of which belong also the chapels of Mickel-Rumbach, Hunhaun, Rosbach, Groffenbach, Moltzbach, Weissenborn, Nuste and Ruckers.

Hattenhof, another parochial-village, to which church belong the foundaries of Rotenman, Kerzell, Dolbach and Buchenberg.

13. The bailiwick of Motten, in which is Motten, a village, containing a parochial-church, to which belongs that of Rothen.

Ehrenberg, a hill, noted for a chapel there dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

14. The amt, or bailiwick, of BRUCKENAU, to which belongs Bruckenau, a town furrounded with walls ever fince the year 1260. Near it is Volkersberg, a hill having a Franciscan convent on it.

Schontra, a village with a parish-church, to which is annexed that of Riedeberg.

Geroda, a village, containing a Lutheran church.

Upper Leutersbach, a parochial-village, to which the chapel of Nieder-Lutersbach is a dependency.

Breidenbach and Miegenfeld, two ancient villages.

15. The bailiwick of HAMELBURG, in which is Hamelburg, a town, feated in a fruitful country on the river Sala, and erected into a town about the year 1242, has a convent of Franciscans in it, and to it belongs the church of Pfaffenhausen.

Nieder-Erthal, a church-village, to which is annexed the chapel of Teurthal.

Nieder-Tulba, a village, containing a canonry, and having annexed to its parish-church the chapel of Upper Erthal.

Hundsfeld,

Hundsfeld, a village, containing a parochial-church with the foundation of Upper-Aeschenbach annexed to it.

16. The bailiwick of SALECK, containing Saleck, a feat, standing on a hill contiguous to the river Sala and close by Hamelburg. In it is a chapel.

Dippach, or Tippach, a parochial-village with the churches of Under Acschenbach, Wartmansrode and Schwertzelbach annexed to it.

17. The amt, or bailiwick, of SALMUNSTER, lies on the river Kins. In it is Salmunster, a small town, seated on the river Kins, and sounded about the year 1320. In this town is a convent of Franciscans.

18. The bailiwick of URZEL, in which lies

Urzel, a village.

Herolz, a church-village, feated on the river Kins.

19. The priory of Blankenau is fituate on the Lutter. In this place formerly flood a fortress belonging to a gang of robbers called Blackenwald; but, in the year 1265, Abbot Berthous destroyed it, and the following year founded a nunnery at the foot of Blankenberg hill, on the spot where the fortress stood; but ever since the sixteenth century this nunnery has been destitute of recluses. To its parish-church belongs that of Kebenzell.

20. The bailiwick of HERBSTEIN, in which is Herbstein, or Herberstein, a small town, well known in the year 1325.

Obf. In the year 1366, Henry abbot of Fulda, disposed (reserving, however, a power of redemption) to the three brothers Frederic, Balthafar, and William, Langraves of Thuringen, the bailiwicks of Salzungen and Lichtenburg, with all their appurtenances. Not long after they too difposed of the whole bailiwick of Lichtenberg and one half of Salzungen to the archbishopric of Mentz, from whom it devolved to the archbishop of Wurtzburg, and afterwards to the house of Henneberg; and lastly, the bailiwick of Lichtenberg came into the possession of the counts of Mansfeld. In the year 1557, the houses of the Princes of Saxony redeemed the bailiwick of Lichtenberg from the counts of Mansfeld, and in 1675, that half also of Salzungen (the other half having never been alienated) which belonged to the counts of Stollberg, to whom it had descended by means of the widow of Albert count of Henneberg, by birth counters of Stollberg: the prefent proprietors of this bailiwick are the dukes of Saxe-Meinungen and Eisenach. In the year 1625, the abbey of Fulda showed an inclination for redeeming these bailiwicks, and in 1723 more strongly infisted on it, which occasioned great disturbances, till the year 1737 both parties agreed to refer it to an arbitration, which arbitration, however, has not taken place. The abbey of Fulda will submit the division only to the aulic council, and the Saxon Princes infift on referring it to the Judices Anstregæ, or a court of arbitrays, nominated by the Sovereigns.

The Mastership of St. JOHN, or the Principality of Heitersheim.

§. 1. THE places in Brisgau belonging to the order of St. John are to be found in the map of Brisgau mentioned before.

- §. 2. The chief prior or grand-master of that order in Germany, who is also usufructuary possession of these places, has been reckoned ever since the time of Charles V. who raised George Schilling grand-prior to that dignity, a Prince of the empire, and he sits in the college of Princes on the ecclesiastical bench, in the middle betwixt the priors of Ellwangen and Berchtolsgaden: he has also a seat and vote in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. In the matricula too of the Empire he is assessed ten horse and eighty foot, or two hundred forty florins per month, and to the chamber at Wezlar fortynine rthler. forty-five and a half kruitzers.
- §. 3. The grand-prior pretends that the first five places under-mentioned were acquired by the order of St. John, and that the property and fovereignty of them have been invested in it for some centuries. Relatively to those places he is subject only to the Emperor and Empire; but the house of Austria accounts him a vassal. The grand-master having in the sixteenth century removed his residence to Heitersheim, was summoned to the Diet of Brifgau, whither he came on certain conditions, upon which he was afterwards decounted a denizen, and the correspondent duties were required of him, in which in the year 1630, he formally acquiefced. Afterwards, indeed, he preferred feveral complaints both to the Emperor and Pope, but without effect. In the year 1665, it was, indeed, agreed that the grand-master should hold the said five places together with the sovereignty of them, but acknowledge the house of Austria as the patron and Dominus directus; and with respect to the other villages as lords paramount that relatively to the two first places he should be a prelate of Upper Austria, and by virtue of the third a noblemen. This agreement, however, was never wholly fulfilled, and the house of Austria has since cancelled it.

§. 4. The places above-mentioned are,

1. Heiterskeim, a market-town, purchased by the order from the Margrave of Hochberg in the year 1297. The Emperor Leopold granted it the privilege of two annual fairs, and ever fince the fixteenth century it has been the place of the residence of the grand-prior.

Ginglingen, a village, transferred to the order by the Margrave of Hochberg in the year 1297.

Brembgarten, a village, which in the year 1313 devolved to the order from the lords of Stauffen as a fief of the Empire.

Griefkeim,

Grieskeim, or Griesen, a village seated on the Rhine, which descended likewise to the order from the lords of Stauffen.

Schlat, a village, which was transferred to the order by Ego, count of Freyburg.

The villages of Ufhausen Wendlingen and Espach or Eschbach.

To the grand-prior belong also certain tythes and other revenues in the vale of Kirchzarten, with a commandery at Freyburg.

The PRINCELY ABBEY of P R U M.

§. 1. THE Benedictine abbey of Prum lies in the forest of Ardenne, betwixt the bailiwicks of Schoneck and Schonberg, in the electorate of Triers, and the duchy of Luxembourg. It was founded in the eighth century by Pepin, King of the Franks, and his spouse. In the year 883 the Normans destroyed it, and about ten years after it was again surprised by those fierce savages, who put many of the religious to the sword. In the year 1017, a canonry was settled in this place. In the year 1343, for its greater security, it put itself under the archbishopric of Triers; and in 1579, by a papal bull, was for ever annexed to the board-lands of the archbishopric, and incorporated with it, which annexment and incorporation was confirmed in 1575 by the Emperor Maximilian II. and thus it was that the Elector of Triers became administrator of this abbey, and the arms he bears as such are mentioned in the archbishopric of Triers.

§. 2. The archbishop of Triers, as administrator of this abbey, sits and votes on the ecclesiastical bench in the college of Princes, before the abbots of Stablo and Corvey; but the precedence betwixt these abbies is contested, and according to some, they take place alternately. The Elector also, with respect to Prum, is taxed in the matricula of the Empire at one horseman and thirteen foot. In the last publication of the usual matricula, Prum pays to the chamber at Wezlar thirty-eight rthlr. sixty-two and a half kruitzers; but others say, that by a particular act of the Empire, dated 1727, the quota of this abbey is only eleven rthlr. sive kruitzers; Prum likewise entitles the Elector of Triers to a seat and vote in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper Rhine, where he fits the last on the bench of Princes.

§. 3. The prior and convent of this abbey have, indeed, a court of justice for civil causes, either personal or within the lower jurisdiction, but with a right of appeal to the court of Triers, whereas the tribunal erected at Prum, by the Elector of Triers, decides finally in all criminal cases, and others pertaining to the high jurisdiction.

§. 4. The

§. 4. The lands and casualties of this abbey since the year 1361, have been divided among the abbot and convent; and this partition holds good in most points to this very day; but the abbey no longer enjoys all the lands and casualties which at that time belonged to it. The lordship of S. Goar on the Rhine, which had been annexed in particular to the abbots lands, was about the year 1557 sold to the Landgrave of Hessen-Rheinfels; and of the sovereignty, and consequently of the taxes of the lordships of Avance, Loncin, Fumay, Teppin and Ravin, the abbey has been deprived by the bishop of Liege and the King of France contrary to the treaties of Ryswyck and Baden. At the time of the above partition the annual produce of the estates allotted to the convent was computed at 4000 gold guldens. The Elector of Triers in a memoir of his presented to the Diet in the year 1722 for an abatement of this imperial circular and chamber assessments, alledges that the whole abbey of Prum, together with rhe remaining lands, did not bring in above 1500 rthler.

This abbey lies on the little river of the same name, having a borough near it, and not far from it stands Nicdar-Prum, which is a nunnery of Benedictines.

By virtue of the above partition

1. The abbot's part confifts of Certain tithes in the church villages of Budesheim, Nicder-Prum, Obzbeim, Rommersheim, Seffern, Wesseldorf, and the villages of Saresdorf and Waxweiler: As also of Certain revenues at Mering, Schweich, Hetzelrode and Willingen, all which places lie on the Mosel, together with

The lordship of Justin, or S. Justine, situate not far from Juliers, but mortgaged.

St. Peters, a cell feated at Kefling.

The lordship of S. Goar, lying on the Rhine; but about the year 1557 this was sold to the Landgrave of Hesse-Rheinfels.

Altrip, in Latin Alta ripa, also standing on the Rbine, being one short mile from Manheom, and a place of great antiquity: of Certain rights and incomes in the town of Rheinbach, in the archbishopric of Cullen; but these also are mortgaged.

A prebendary in the chapter of Munster-Eyssel in the dutchy of Juliers.

2. The convent's share consists of Certain dues and casualties in the borough of Prum.

The mills at Obzheim and Rommerskeim, together with certain dues and casualities at Breresborn, Herlingsdorf, Schwirzheim, Waxweiler, Wesseldorf, Arweiler, Bacheim, Kesselingen, Arnheim in Gelderland, but sold, Morx, Remig, and Humlar.

Murlebach, a church village situate on the Mosel.

Huequigny, a lordship lying near the town of Guise in Picardy. Vol. V.

Awans

Awans and Lonebin, or Louzin, a lordship situate not far from the city of Liege, and of which that bishop has assumed the sovereignty.

Fumay, in Latin Fumacum, a small town and lordship standing on the Maele, of which together with

The lordships of Feppin or Fimpiny, as also of Renin, which are likewise feated on the river Maese, France has usurped the sovereignty in direct violation of the most solemn treaties.

The vineyard of Ferkelt near Mering on the Mosel; but the produce of these is at present paid to the Elector of Triers, as administrator.

The PRIORY of O D E N H E I M,

Or the Religious Foundation of Nobles at BRUCHSAL.

- §. 1. IN the year 1122 Bruno and Poppo, brothers and counts of Lauffien, and the former also archbishop of Triers, founded a convent of Benedictines at Odenheim or Wigoldsberg, referving, however, to themselves and the heads of their family the right of patronage and protection, and this foundation with its feveral clauses received the sanction of the Pope and Emperor. On the extinction of the counts of Lauffien, abbot Berniger, with the privity and by the advice of his convent, in the year 1219, made a tender of the right of patronage and protection to the Emperor Frederic II. and his fuccessors, which the Emperor Lewis conferred on Gerhard bishop of Spire, and Charles IV. in the year 1369, mortgaged it to the bishops of that place for 1000 florins. Under Maximilian I. namely, in the year 1494, this convent was, by permission granted from the Pope, converted into a fecular college of immediate nobles of the Empire, and a prior appointed in lieu of the abbot. In 1507, Philip, bishop of Spire, permitted the college to be removed from Odenheim to Bruchfal, at the same time granting to the prior, dean and chapter thereof, the church of our Lady in that town. This convent therefore, though removed to Bruchfal, a town in the diocese of Spire, is yet still commonly called Odenbeim from the primary place of its foundation.
- §. 2. The prior of Odenheim, who is generally the bishop of Spire, sits and votes in that quality at the Diet among the prelates of the Empire on the Rhine-bench next to the abbot of Keytersheim, and likewise in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. His matricular assessment is seven foot soldiers, or instead thereof forty florins per month, and to the chamber of Wetzlar he pays eighty-one rthlr. sourteen kruitzers and a half.

- §. 3. By virtue of an ancient custom, the chapter levies the contributions on the subjects, and the prior receives a yearly pension. The chapter has indeed found means to get the whole management of the priory into their own hands, excluding the prior from any part of it; and in the year 1729, he made a complaint, that after having advanced out of the treasury at Spire, the imperial circular and Wetzlar affessments for the priory of Odenbeim, he had not been able even to recover his own money, and therefore, as bishop of Spire, renounced the payment of the several taxations with which the said priory was charged.
 - §. 4. The immediate imperial estates of the priory, which of course form a distinct territory from the diocese of Spire, consist of

1. The places with which the first founders of the convent endowed it, and from which the Prince and bishop of Spire, as patron, annually receives a quantity of corn and wine; and the former, besides his pay, every year one florin, ten batzes: these are,

Odenheim, a village feated in Craichgan, or properly in Prurhein, where the priory was originally founded, and still has a bailiff.

Treffenbach and Eichelberg, two villages somewhat east of the former.

2. Of the places afterwards purchased, together with the rights and sovereignty of them by the priory, and of which the patronage and dues have not been transferred to the bishop of Spire, viz.

Robrbach, a castle and village on the river Esfatz, purchased in the year

1385 of the Seckingen family.

Lanskausen, a village not far from Eppingen, purchased in the years 1426 and 1427 of the Menzingen samily.

The Dutchy of S I M M E R N,

J. I. I E S in the Hundfruck or Hunfruck, or Pagus Hunicus of the ancients, the origin of which was in the following manner: Rupert III. Elector-palatine, who also arrived to be King of the Romans, is said before his decease, which happened in the year 1410, to have chosen arbitrators, and requested of them to make the most equitable distribution of his dominions among his four sons, who after his death, obliged themselves faithfully to abide by and promote the execution of such division. This was performed in the same year, and gave rise to four principalites which are absolutely independent, the mutual right of inheritance excepted. Of these brothers Duke Stephen III. had for his share the towns of Simmern, Laubach, Hobenbeim, Argenthal, and all that part belonging to the Elector-palatine in the Hunfruck, together with the castle of Wilsperg, the village of Laubenbeing, the castle of Stramberg, &c. as also the towns of Anweiler, Liveytrucken, Hornbach, Bergzabern, and in a word the present principality of Simmern, and county of Ziveybrucken or Deuxponts. This duke Stephen marrying Anne only daughter of Frederick, the last count of Veldenz and Sponbeim, obtained with her the county of Veldenz and half that of Sponbeim also. In 1444, it was agreed betwixt Frederic his father-in-law and Duke Stephen, that his eldest son Frederic should succeed to his grandfather's part of both the counties of Sponkeim, and also to his father's estates in the Hunfruck, namely, to Simmern; and that Lewis the other fon should posless Veldenz and Ziveybrucken. Frederic III. great-grandson to Frederic duke of Simmern, arriving to be Elector-palatine, granted the dutchy of Simmern to his brother George, and on his death to his brother Richard, and he dying it again escheated to the Elector Frederic IV. who bequeathed the principality of Simmern to his youngest fon Lewis Philip; but on the death of his fon Lewis Henry it again devolved to the Electoral house. On the extinction, however, of this, and in it of the whole Simmern line, Leopold Lewis, Palfgrave of Veldenz, claimed the fuccession to the dutchy of Simmern, which has been continued however under the Elector-palatines.

§. 2. The Elector-palatine, in right of Simmern, fits and votes in the college of Princes, and is joint convocatory Prince of the Circle of the Upper Rhine, of which mention has been made at large in the introduction to that Circle. No particular affefiment of the principality occurs in the matricula.

§. 3. To this dutchy of Simmern belongs

The upper bailiwick of SIMMERN,

Simmern, the capital and feat of the upper bailiwick, lies on the river Simmern, all the three religions have their church here. In 1689, this place fuffered extremely by the French.

Laubach, a small town.

Hoben-Rhine, also called Horrein, a small town.

Argenthal, a little town.

Waldeck, a castle.

Ekrenberg, a castle seated on the Mosel, and wholly surrounded by the Electorate of Triers, of which it is also a fief.

Ravengiersperg and Chumb, two convents, but sequestred in 1566,

The churches of Rheinbellen, Ribern, Pleitsenhausen, Neuenkirch, Guntershausen, and Gemunden have been taken from the Protestants.

Obf. The upper bailiwick of STROMBERG has also been annexed to the Simmern share; and a description of it is to be met with p. of this work. To it likewise belongs the bailiwick of Bockelbeim, though by the Electorpalatine, it was immediately added as an under bailiwick to the upper amt of Creutzenach in the county of Sponheim. This bailiwick was held as a mortgage from the archbishopric of Mentz by Lewis the Swarthy, duke of Deuxponts; but in the year 1471, Frederic I. Elector-palatine, made himfelf master of it, and kept possession thereof. The Elector Frederic IV. united it to the dutchy of Simmern, which he conferred on his own son Lewis Philip. In the year 1663, the Elector of Mentz offering to redeem this bailiwick, Lewis Henry, the last duke of Simmern, consented to hold it of him as a fief, and allowed him the acceptance of homage; but this duke dying in 1673, the Elector-palatine seized on the bailiwick of Bockelheim. This caused the imperial chamber to sequestrate it and appoint an administrator; but in the year 1715 this was taken off by a convention, by virtue of which the bailiwick of Bockelheim continued to the Elector-palatine, who on his part ceded certain places in the upper amt of Creutzenach to the Elector of Mentz. This bailiwick lies along the Nabe, and its principal places are,

Bochelheim, a castle.

Sobernheim, a small town lying on the Nahe.

Montzingen, a little town.

Wald-Bockelheim, Thal-Bockelheim, and Oberstreith, villages.

In this bailiwick are also included

Ebernburg, a castle demolished by the French. This castle belongs to the baron Sukingen, but, together with sour other places, its dependencies, is claimed by the Elector-palatine.

Baumberg, or Alt-Bamberg, a castle lying in ruins on the little river Alsentz, together with a village and a large wood below it, after passing through several possessions, was by the Elector-palatine conferred as a sief on Frederic Michael of Deuxponts in Birkensield.

The Dutchy of LAUTERN.

IN the year 1610, Frederick IV. Elector-palatine, bequeathed to his fecond fon, Lewis Philip, the Palfgrave, exclusive of the principality of Simmern, and one half of the anterior county of Sponheim, likewise the Principality of Lautern, which, in the year 1613, was settled and ratissed. In the compact entered into in the year 1653, betwixt Charles Lewis, Elector-palatine, and the above-mentioned Palfgrave, Lewis Philip, the latter retained, during his and his spouse's life-time, the castle, town and amt of Lautern, with most of the church-lands and all the rights appertaining to the sovereignty of them; but the two upper amts of Wolfstein and Rocken-bausen, together with the town of Otterberg, and the upper and lower jurisdiction, were to descend to his heirs. On the other hand, the Elector-palatine palatine possessed the abbey of Lautern, with the reversion thereof, the convent and priory of Enkenbach, the public cellar at Callfladt, as also a seat and vote at the Imperial and circular Diets held by the Prince of Lautern; and the above-mentioned Lewis Philip, his consort, and their son Lewis Henry, dying, the whole country reverted to the Electoral house. Its particular assessment, either to the Empire or chamber at Watzlar, is not specified. In the Diets Lautern votes before Simmern. This dutchy consists of the upper amt of Lautern, which has been already described in the Circle of the Rhine, as a part of the Palatinate.

VELDENZ and LAUTERECK.

§. 1. IT has been already observed, in the article of Simmern, that Stephen, duke of Simmern, by his marriage with Anne, heires of Frederick, the last count of Veldenz, acquired the possession of that county; and, with the approbation of his father-in-law, fettled on his fon Lewis, furnamed the Swarthy, and his heirs, the counties of Veldenz and Deuxponts, together with some other places, investing him also with the arms and title of Count of Veldenz. Now, though these countries, thus incorporated, are from the residentiary styled the dutchy of Deuxponts, and under this title all the regalia have been conferred on the proprietors; yet its fovereigns, as the Elector-palatine and Duke of Bavaria, used to style themselves only Counts of Veldenz. These territories were jointly possessed, under the title of the dutchy of Deuxpons, by Lewis the Swarthy, as also by his fon Alexander, Lewis II. fon to the latter, and by Rupert II. as guardian to Wolfgang, his brother's fon, till the year 1543, when the faid Duke Rupert, by the mediation of Philip, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, obtained leave for his former ward, Duke Wolfgang, agreeably to a contract figned at Marburg, to transfer unto him, and the male heirs of his body, the castle and vale of Veldenz, with its five villages and the tythes of Brambacher, as also the castle and borough of Lautereck, together with its four villages, the jurisdiction of Gettenbacher, with its appertenances, the convent of Ronigsberg, with its revenues, as also certain revenues arising from the bailiwick of Kichtemberg, and other emoluments: but to this contract a clause was also annexed, that Duke Wolfgang, and his fuccessors, should, as reigning lords, receive the investiture of the whole country from the Emperor and Empire; and, that all its vasfals, though dwelling in the parts affigned to Duke Rupert, should be invested by Duke Wolfgang and his succeffors, as actual sovereigns; and, likewise, that the lands thus alienated should pay their respective contingencies at the Imperial or circular aids into the fovereign's treasury at Deux-ponts. Duke Rupert settled these new acquisitions on his own son George Deux-ponts. G E R M A N Y.

George John, who, in consequence of a treaty of partition, entered into in the year 1556, with the above-mentioned Duke Wolfgang, succeeded in the dominions of the Elector-palatine to the lordship of Lutzelstein and the Elector's portion of the territory of Gutenberg, Absenz, and the wine tenths at Weissenburg and Kleeburg. But, the year 1566, brought a considerable addition to the grandeur of Duke George John, the Emperor creating him a Prince of the Empire with right of a feat and vote in the Diet. All these privileges descended to his grandson Duke Leopold Lewis, who dying in the year 1694, without male islue, was the last of the line of his greatgrand-father Rupert. His territories were claimed by the Elector-palatine, Paligraves of Deux-ponts, Sulzbach and Birkenfeld. At length, in the year 1733, an agreement was entered into between the feveral claimants, by which it was stipulated, that the Elector-palatine should hold Veldenz and Lautereck; and the Paligraves of Birkenfeld and Sultzback possess the county of Lutzelstein betwixt them; and, with respect to the seat and vote in the Imperial and circular Diets, as lord of Veldenz, Charles Philip, the Elector, was to hold these during life, after which they were to be shared alternately, from year to year, by the Paligraves of Birkenfeld and Sulzbach; and thus it has continued ever fince the year 1743, without the least discontent on either fide.

§. 2. The lands which devolved, in the manner above-mentioned, to Duke Rupert, and are now held by the Elector-palatine, form two upper bailiwicks; viz.

1. The upper bailiwick of Veldenz, lying on the Moselle, and being fur-rounded on all fides by the Electorate of Triers. In it is Veldenz, a borough, containing a feat of that name at half an hour's distance from it, together with the villages of Borgen, or Burgen, Dussemont, noted for its excellent Moselle wine; Mullheim, containing a parish-church; Andeln and Kornhausen.

2. The upper bailiwick of LAUTERECK lies on the river Glan, and contains Lautereck, a borough, or small town, seated on the river Glan. The villages of Heinzenhauseu, Lohnweiler, Bersweiler and Weissweiler. Romigsberg, originally a convent, but now a seat.

The DUTCHY of DEUX-PONTS.

§. I. THE present dutchy of Deux-ponts is composed of the ancient county of Deux-ponts and some parts of the preceding county of Veldenz; the last, indeed, constitutes two thirds of the dutchy. In the year 1385, Eberhard, last count thereof, sold half this county to the Palatine house house for 25,000 florins, and the other half he afterwards left to the Elector Rupert the Elder. In the year 1410, this county was affigned to Duke Stephen, who bequeathed it, together with the county of Veldenz, to his fon Lewis the Swarthy. How these territories, thus united, came to be called the Dutchy of Deux-ponts, has been shewn in the account of Veldenz: Under Duke Wolfgang this dutchy fuffered a confiderable difmembrement by his grant of part of the territories of Veldenz and Lautereck to his uncle Rupert. On the other hand, by virtue of the treaty of Heidelberg in the year 1553, and the compact at Marburgh, in 1559, entered into with his grand-father George John, Elector-palatine, the same Duke Wolfgang, on the demise of the Elector Otta Henry, succeeded to one half of the hither county of Sponheim; and a few years before, the above Elector, Otto Henry, had conferred on him the dutchy of Neuburg, which had descended to him by his mother. This last dutchy he settled on his eldest son Philip Lewis, and the dutchy of Deux-ponts on his fecond fon John; but, as the eldest son was, by his father's will, to cede to his brother, Otto Henry, the castle, court and town of Sulzbach, together with the bailiwicks of Hipoltstein and Allersperg, and to his brother Frederick the castle, bailiwick and jurisdiction of Parkstein and Weiden, as also the bailiwick of Flossenburg, in the dutchy of Nenburg, as an appenage; John, the second son, was also to make over to Charles, the youngest of these brothers, one moiety of the county of Sponheim. John, Duke of Deux-ponts, had two fons; viz. John Frederick Casimir and John Casimir. Frederick Lewis descended from the fecond fon dying, in the year 1681, without heirs, the fuccession devolved on the posterity of the third son, John Casimir, whose son, Charles Gustavus, arrived to be King of Sweden; and his son, Charles XI. King also of that Kingdom, succeeded to the dutchy of Deux-ponts and transmitted it to his martial fon Charles XII. The latter being killed at the fiege of Frederickshall in Norway, in the year 1718, this dutchy descended to Duke Gullavus Samuel Leopold, whose father Adolphus John was brother to King Charles Gustavus. He died without heirs in the year 1731, on which Duke Christian III. of Berkenfeld, put in his claim to the dutchy of Deuxponts; and, in the year 1733, by virtue of a compact with the Electorpalatine, obtained it, yielding up to that Prince the under bailiwick of Stadecken.

§. 2. The Duke of Deuxponts enjoys a feat and vote in the college of Princes, as also in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. His matricular affessiment is ten horse and thirty foot, or two hundred and forty florins per month; and to the chamber at Wetzlar, a deduction being made for the bailiwick of Stradecken, he pays one hundred and seventy-two rixdollars and thirty-six kruitzers.

§. 3. The annual revenues of the territories of Deux-ponts are computed at 300,000 florins.

§. 4. The dutchy of Deux-ponts confifts,

1. Of the following parts of the preceding county of Deux-ponts, lying in the Wasgau; viz.

1. Deuxponts, in Latin Bipontum, in German Zweybrucken, the carital, though not large. It is well built and has a fine palace erected in the modern taste. It is also the seat of an upper bailiwick. Of the great church here the Catholics have the choir and the Protestants the nave. The Lutherans have likewise a church. In this town is also a gymnasium. During the thirty years war this town suffered extremely, and, in 1677, no less from the French. In a vale at no great distance from it lies

Schuflick, a pleasure-house, erected by Stanislaus, the dethroned King of Poland, during his residence at Deux-ponts, but now gone to ruin.

Kirkel, a feat.

Hornbach, a little town.

Breidenbach, Contwig, Ernstweiler, Lambshorn and Wiesbach, Limbach, Minbach and Webenheim, Nunschweiler, Rieschweiler, Waldmohr, Walzbeim, all Protestant parishes.

Anweiler, a finall town and the feat of Trieffels, near which lies

Neu-Castell, a seat.

Bergzabern, a fmall town, containing a feat and an upper bailiwick.

Minfeld and Langenkandel, two market-towns.

Guttenberg, a feat.

Kindelbrun and Drachenfels, two castles lying in ruins.

Kleeburg, a market-town, fortified with a wall and a castle, was formerly the residence of the family of Deuxponts-Kleeburg, the sounder of which was John Casimir, third son to Duke John. The Protestants have a church here.

The Protestant churches at Barbelrode, Drusweiler, Frankenweiler, Hunsbach, Leinsweiler, Rott, Wilgarswiesen, Winden.

II. The following parts of the preceding county of Veldenz, and fiefs of the Elector-palatine; viz.

Lichtenberg, a feat, to which belongs

Petersheim, a village.

S. Michelfburg, a feat, and S. Remiginsburg. This place is an upper bailiwick.

The Boffenbacher and Nerzweiler.

Kussel, a finall town.

The Protestant parishes of Achtelsbach, Baumholder, Bossenbach, Conken, Hinsweiler, Niederkirchen, Pfeffelbach, Ulmetz, Wolfersweil.

Meissenbeim, a little town and seat, lying on the river Glan, which is also the seat of an upper bailiwick, is a sief of Ment z.

Odenbach, a borough, standing on the river Glan. The Protestant church here and that of Medart are incorporated.

Vol. V. Gernheim,

Odernheim, a town, situate on the river Glan.

Landsberg, a ruined castle, which is a fief of Worms, gave name to the Landsberg line of the ducal house of Deux-ponts, which begun in Frederick Casimir, son to John I. Below it lies Upper-Muschel, or Moschel, a small town.

The Protestant parishes of Alsenz, Bisterschid, Essenbeim, Einollen, Hundsbach, Niederhausen, Ransweiler and Gangloff, together with Kebborn, Schersfeld, Tuchrod and Celtweiler.

H E S S E.

§. 1. THE most ancient and impersect map of Hesse is that of Dryander. In the year 1586, Gerbard Mercator, by order of the Landgrave William began a map of Lower-Hesse, which was finished by his son John Mercator. This probably was the plan made use of by Blacuw, Junston, Hond, the Waesbergs and Homann in their maps of Lower-Hesse. In the year 1705, the heirs of the latter published Pranner's map of the territories of Hesse-Darmstadt, and all its neighbourhood, in six leaves; but Valk and Keulen have put forth maps of all Hesse. Those of Homann make No 100 and 101, in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. Under the Catti, the Empire of the Francs, and a little before the time of Hemy the Child, the boundaries of this Principality were different. At present the Landgrave of Hesse terminates on the bishopric of Fulda, the Principality of Hersseld, Thuringia and Eichsseld, as also on that of Calenberg, together with the bishoprick of Paderborn and Waldeck, the dutchy of Wesseld, the county of Witgenstein, Nassau Dillenburg, the county of Solms and Upper Isenburg. In these limits the county of Katzenellnbogen and some other territories are not included. The Landgravate of Hesse, considered in itself, is somewhat above twenty German miles in length.

§. 3. The country, for the most part, is hilly and woody, though not without pleasant vallies in it, and here and there good corn and pasture lands are met with, and some parts also produce a plenty of excellent wine, and it abounds particularly in cattle. The mineral Kingdom here is very considerable. The Eber is an aurishuous river, and near Frankenberg a gold mine was formerly worked. Silver, copper, lead and iron are found at present in great quantities in this country; as also allum, vitriol, salt-springs, pit-coal, sulphur, boles, a porcelain-earth, marble and alabaster. It has likewise its baths and mineral-springs, with an uncommon plenty of game and sish. Exclusive of the Rhine, which runs through the upper and lower county of Katzenellnbogen, and the Mayne, which passes also through a part of the upper county of Katzenellnbogen, Hesse is surther watered by the following lowing rivers; viz. the Lan, or Labn, also called the Lehn, Lohn and Labn, in Latin Lanus and Logana, which run into the Westerwalde, in the Principality of Naffau-Siegen near a farm called Labnhaufs, and paffing through part of the county of Witgenstein, enters Helle, where it is rejoined by other smaller streams; namely, the Ohm, Marbach, or Ketzerbach, the Zwesserau, Salzbutte, Wiesseck, Beber, Dill, Wetz, Weilbach, Ems, Elb. Aar, Erl and Muhlbach. After this it falls, near Cobleniz, into the Rhine. The Fulda comes from the bishoprick of Fulda, receives the Eder, which, before it is increased by the Schwalm, is but a small river isluing from Upper Hesse, and at length joins the Werra. This last river, which has its source in the county and Principality of Henneberg, was formerly known by the name of Wifaraba, Wifuraba, Wefara and afterwards Wirraba, or Wirra; infomuch that, contrary to the common opinion, it is not at Munden, where it is joined by the Fulda, that it first has the name of Weser, in Latin Visurgis; the Diemel, which, after watering the bishopric of Paderborn, runs also into the Weser.

§. 4. Hesse, like many other parts of Germany, has states who are summoned to the Diets of the country. Those of Hesse-Cassel are, first, the prelates, who are composed of, First, the commandery of the Teutonic order for Hesse, who resides at Marburg. Secondly, Of the rector and senate of the university of Marburg, by virtue of its conventual lands. Thirdly, of the four provofts of the canonries of Kauffungen and Wetter, and the governors of the hospitals of Haina, Merxhausen, Hospiem and Grunau. 2. The ncbility, who are diftinguished by the five rivers Lahn, Sehwalm, Fulda, Werre and Diemel; but these are without any settled rank among themselves. 3. The towns, which are also divided according to the countries lying on those five rivers, and in each is a summoning-town, as Cassel on the Diemel, Marburg on the Lahn, Eschwege on the Werra, Hersfeld on the Fulda, and Homberg on the Schwalm. Caffel and Marburg fend each two representatives to the general and particular Diets, as also to the smaller and larger committees of the latter. The other towns affift at them only in turns, according to a fettled rotation. To the smaller committees each of these fends two deputies and four to the larger. The town of S. Goar, together with the other towns of the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, fend one to the former and to the latter two. The states of Hesse-Darmstadt consist likewise of, 1. the prelates; namely, the commandery of the Teutonic order at Schiffenberg and the rector and fenate of the university of Giessen; 2. the nobility; and, 3. the towns.

In the Diets both of Heffe-Cusfel and Hesse-Darmstadt presides the here-ditary-marshal, who is always the chief of the noble family of Riedesel of Eisenbach, who also takes place of the universities, being likewise the here-ditary-cup-bearer, which post is held by the eldest branch of the Schenen of Schweinsberg, signs the acts of the Dyct immediately after the hereditary-marshai marshal and before the university of Giessen, though the latter constantly protests against it. In case of general Diets of the whole country of Hesse, they are to be held alternately within the territories of Cassel and Darmstadt: it is also very seldom that a general Diet of either of the provinces is summoned. The sovereign of both houses assemble at pleasure a particular Diet, and then the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel sends orders through his whole country for them to appear by deputies. Cassel is generally the place of assembly for those of Hesse-Cassel, though sometimes they meet at Tressa. The Diets of Hesse-Darmstadt are invariably held at Giessen. In both the sovereign is represented by a commissioner. The Land-Convocations-sage, as they are called, generally relate to free-gists, and are summoned by the marshal on an order from the tovereign.

§. 5. The house of Helle-Cassel forms one of the Protestant religion, and that of Hesse-Darmstadt is Lutheran. Of the collateral lines, Rothenburg is Roman Catholic, and Homburg and Philipsdale Protestants. The subjects likewise vary in their religious professions. It being known, in the year 1754, that Frederick, the hereditary Prince of Hesse-Cossel, had, in 1749, gone over to the Romish religion; that Prince, on the twenty-eighth of October and thirty-first of December, voluntarily drew up, and confirmed by oath, an instrument declaring, that his present and suture children should be brought up, instructed and confirmed only in the Protestant religion; and, that on his accession to the government no manner of alteration should be made with respect to religion as at that time it stood, but that he should preferve every particular relating to it unmolested and entire, according to the flatus anni normativi, as fettled at the treaty of Wellphalia, the prefent ecclefiaftical establishment in the country of Hesse, Schauenburg, Hanau, and all other appertaining to his fuccession and the principles of the Protestant body. This instrument was not only printed and inserted in the eighteenth volume of the AEla Historico-ecclesiastica, but has also for its guarantees the Protestant Princes of Europe, the States of the United-Provinces and the whole Protestant body. In Hesse-Cassel are two superintendents of the Protestants, one at Cassel the other at Allendorf on the Werra; and a Lutheran one at Marburg. Giessen had formerly two superintendents, but this office has fince been divided among the three professors of divinity, infomuch that now the diffrict of Alsfeldt has its superintendent at Giessen equally with that of Marburg. Under these superintendents are inspectors, and next to them metropolitans. These are the principal classes of the clergy, to whom the parith-priefts and schoolmasters are subordinate.

To Hesse-Casses belong the universities of Marburg, and Rinteln and Giessen to the house of Hesse-Darmstadt.

§. 6. Besides the common Latin schools here, at Cassel, Marburg, Giessen and Darmstadt are public seminaries. Cassel, Hersfeld and Darmstadt have likewise gymnasia. Cassel also is a collegium illustre, and Marburg and Giessen universities.

§. 7. In Hesse are manufactories of gold, linen, cloth, hats, stockings, gloves, paper, &c. Cassel, in particular, makes a very beautiful porcelain.

§. 8. The Hyllians are descended from the Catti, who had their particular Princes. The Catti, Chaffi, Chaffi, Haffi and Heffi, are but one and the same name. In 902, under Lewis the Child, Conrad the Elder, together with Gebhard, Eberhard and Conrad the Younger, counts of Heffe, figuralifed themselves by intestine wars; the last became even King of Germany; and it appears, that, in confequence of this exaltation, Heffe was given to Otto his younger brother: at least he had some lands in Longau. From him probably was descended Lewis the Bearded, count of Heffe, and to whom, befides Heffe, the Emperor. conferred a part of Thuringia; but his grandfon Lewis obtained all Thuringia. together with the title of Landgrave, and with Heffe transmitted it to his posterity, of whom Henry Raspe died without heirs in the year 1249. His elder brother, Lewis the Pious, had a daughter named Sophia who was fliled counters of Thuringia and married to Henry V. duke of Brabant. The fruit of this marriage was Henry I. furnamed the Child, who took on him the style of Landgrave of Thuringia and lord of Hesse; and, by Adolphus, King of the Romans, was, in the year 1292, created a Prince of the Empire, and Heffe erected into a Principality, though it infenfibly afterwards came to be commonly termed a Landgravate. One of his descendants, Lewis I. added to Heffe the counties of Ziegenbayn and Nidda, on condition that it should be accounted an accessory sief of Hesse, and that, on the failure of the male line of the counts of Ziegenhayn it should escheat to the Landgrave, which happened not long after; for it appears that John, the last count thereof, was dead in the year 1445. The two eldest sons of this Lewis made a partition of the country of Helle among themselves, by virtue of which one possessed all the country on this side the Spicle, and the other the country along the Lahn, together with the lordships of Ziegenhayn and The latter also, by his marriage with Anne, daughter to Philip, count of Katzenellubogen, annexed that county to Hesse. Philip the Magnanimous, grandfon to Lewis II. was fovereign of all Heffe; and it is from him that all the modern Landgraves derive their extraction. In his will he divided his dominions among his four fons, affigning to the eldeft, William IV. founder of the Cassel line, one half, to Lewis IV. a quarter, and the two others, Philip I. and George I. founder of the Darmstadt line, the other quarter. Philip II. of Rheinfels died, in the year 1583, without heirs, upon which his three brothers thared his territories. In the year 1604 also died without heirs Lewis IV. of Marburg, leaving Marburg and its dependencies to Cassel, and the country of Giessen to that of Darmftadt; but this division occasioned contests betwixt the two families, which were not adjusted till the year 1648. Thus in Hesse are two sovereign families, betwixt whom all the Hellian territories are divided; namely, those of Cassel and Darmstadt; but many articles have continued in common among among them: 1. the feudal power, as likewise the investiture of the Princes of Waldeck, which has ever been performed in the name of both Land-2. The records of Ziegenbayn. 3. The Samthofgericht, or 'jointcourt of justice,' at Marburg, which is held at certain times, and has its judge and affesfors, from whom, in processes of above 1000 gold gulden an appeal lies to the aulic council; and, if exceeding 100, to the court of revision. 4. The court of revision, or appeals, held alternately fix years at Marburg and fix at Giessen, being composed of seven members. 5. The two foundations for nobles of Kauffingen and Wetter, together with the four hospitals of Haina, Merxhausen, Hofheim and Grunau. The two foundations in it have four provosts, who are of the Hessian nobility; the convent or hospital of Heina has also one who is obliged to reside there. The provosts every year deliver in their accounts to commissaries nominated by both sovereigns. 6. The portioning of the Princesses, who, at the same time, make a solemn renunciation of all other claims. The fubjects of both fovereigns contribute to the portion, whether the bride be the daughter of a reigning or collateral Prince. 7. The Dicts of all Hesse, but these very seldom meet. wine and Rhine duty, and share in the Bopparter ward-duty. Hessian hereditary office of marshal, cup-bearer, treasurer and sewer, the first of which is in the family of Riedzeel of Eisenback, the second in the Schencks of Schweinsberg, the third in the Kerlessens, and the fourth belongs to the barons of Dornberg. 10. The arbitrators, in Latin termed judices austregæ, chosen in disputes by the Landgraves who submit to their verdict. 11. The privileges by virtue of which the Landgraves are delegate states, of the Empire. 12. The title, which is nearly the same, both fovereigns assumed to themselves; namely, that of Landgrave of Hesse, Prince of Hersfeld, Count Katzenellnbogen, Dietz, Ziegenkayn, Nidda, Schaumburg, and to which Heffe-Caffel adds Hanau and Heffe-Darmstadt also Isonburg and Budingen. 13. The hereditary brotherhood, betwixt them and the houses of Saxony and Brandenburg. 14. The hereditary succession in the county of Waldeck. 15. The payment of the quota to the Empire. 16. The rank which they and their deputies have alternately enjoyed at interviews and congresses. 17. The vote at the deputation of the Empire.

§. 9. The right of primogeniture was first settled in the Darmstadt samily in the year 1606, and confirmed in 1608 by the Emperor Rodolphus II. and this example was followed by that of Cassel in 1627, and the following year confirmed by the Emperor Ferdinand II.

In both houses are Princes appenaged by compact. Those of Hesse-Cassel are, 1. Philipsale; that is descended from Philip, brother to the Landgrave Charles, and residing at Philipsale. 2. Rothenburg; who, instead of this name given him by the sovereign family, chooses rather to style himself Rheinfels. The sounder of this line was Ernest, youngest son to the Landgrave Maurice, and on whose brother, the Landgrave William V. conferred a sourth part of all the possessions present or future; and by virtue of this they account themselves among the reigning Princes; yet does Hesse-Cassel hold the fovereignty over the places and territories of the Princes of Rothenburg, and also garrisons the forts of Rheinfels, which had given rise to vehement contests, till, in the year 1754, an agreement was entered into that the Landgrave of Heffe-Rothenburg should, for himself and his heirs, renounce all claim to the garrifoning of Rheinfels fort, and refign it to Heffe-Caffel, and also recede from all pretensions with respect to the primogenituredocument obtained of the aulic council. On the other hand, Hesse-Cassel confented that the Landgrave of Heffe-Rothenburg for the advantage of one of his fons then living, might, with or without the Emperor's approbation, make a paternal ordinance and division among his children, by which the ioint inheritance hitherto customary in the Hessian Universal-quart should be fet aside, and the territories concenter in the said Prince, leaving to the other Princes a fixed fum not under 3000 rixdollars; but fuch ordinance not to be construed as a right of primogeniture. The Landgraves of Rothenburg, or Rheinfels, are again subdivided into two houses, one of which resides at Rothenburg, the other at Eschwege. The latter family is also named Wanfrid.

2. The only appenage belonging to Hesse-Darmstadt is Hesse-Hamburg, deriving its name from the town of Hamburg, vor der hohe, but its descent from Frederick, son to the Landgrave George I. Among other rights the Landgraves of Hamburg are always chief rangers in the Marcs of Seulburg and Upper Erlenbach.

3. The arms of Hesse are a shield twice longitudinally divided and three times transversally with a scutcheon of pretence, Japhire; the Hessian lion, pearl, and three diadems ruby. In the first dexter shield, argent, is a patriarchal cross, ruby, for the Principality of Hersfeld. In the second shield, party per fels. diamond and topaz, with a star, pearl, denoting the county of Ziegenbayn. The third field has a lion-rampant, ruby, crowned faphire, for Katzenellnbogen. The fourth field ruby, two lions passant, topaz, for the county of Dietz. The fifth field, party per fels, topaz and diamond, two stars with eight points, pearl, for the county of Nidda. The fixth field, also party per bend, ruby and pearl, within a nettle-leaf on three fegments, in each of which is a carnation, pearl. for the Schaumburg arms. The Landgrave, William added the Hanau shield, which is quarterly; in the first and fourth fields, topaz, three cherrans, ruby, for the county of Hanau; but, in the fecond and third field, topaz, three bends, ruby, for the county of Reineck; likewise a scutcheon of pretence, party per fess, topaz and pearl, for the lordthip of Munzenberg. The Landgraves of Hesse-Darmstadt also add to the arms of Isenburgh and Budingen a shield, argent, two bendelets, diamond. The two collateral Princes of Heffe-Caffel bear the Heffian shield alone, but those of the Darmstadt line add to it the arms of Isenburg. §. 11. The

- §. 11. The Landgraves of Hesse-Cassel, and also those of Hesse-Darmstadt, have each a particular seat and vote in the college of Princes, who share Hesse, and are of the fix princely families, who rank alternately; both of them also sit in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper Rhine; but it has been observed in the introduction to that Circle that Hesse-Cassel has more than once separated from it. The matricular assessment of Hesse-Cassel is 1096 florins, forty-sive kruitzers; and that of Hesse-Darmstadt six hundred and sixty-three florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar, Hesse-Cassel pays four hundred and seventy-two rthler. sifty-sive and a half kruitzers, exclusive of twenty-sive rthler. seventy-nine one-sisth kruitzers for the county of Katzenellnbogen; and Hesse-Darmstadt three hundred and thirteen rthler. eighteen one-cighth kruitzers.
- §. 12. Both Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt have a privy-council. In Hesse-Cassel are two regencies, viz. one at Cassel for Lower Hesse, and one at Marburg for the lesser part thereof; in Hesse-Darmsladt are also the same number, viz. one at Giessen for the bailiwicks in Upper-Hesse, and one at Darmsladt for the upper county of Katzenellnbogen, and part of the country of Epstein, exclusive of the Saint-Hosgericht, or joint court of justice held at Marburg, and the Saint-Revisions or Appellations-gericht, of which mention has been already made; Cassel has no other particular court of appeals at Cassel, and that for Hesse-Darmstadt is held at Darmstadt. Eccletiastical and matrimonial cases come before the consistories, of which there are two for Hesse-Cassel, which are held at Cassel and Marburg; and two for Darmstadt, namely, at Giessen and Darmstadt. For the trial of noblemen or persons of eminence guilty of any great crime, a particular criminal-court is erected, if requested, which is called judicium honoratum, though Hesse-Darmstadt has constantly a criminal-court both at Giessen and Darmstadt.
- §. 13. The imposition and payment of the ordinary and extrordinary taxes have been fettled in a Diet held at Treysa in the year 1576. The countryfeats of the nobility, together with the lands and effects belonging to the priests, schools, and churches are exempt from the ordinary taxes; but for the extraordinary ones, agreed on in a Diet by the States, the four hofpitals only, with their tenants and lands belonging to the priefts and schools are excepted. The contribution of the nobility and prelates is in proportion to that of the country as ten rthler. four albuses to forty-eight rthler. fifteen albuses. The provincial cheft is under the management of four receiversgeneral, who are either elected out of the nobility at the Diet, or on appointing the commission of accounts, and their office is for life. These nominate the collectors. The taxes here are paid in at three towns of receipts. The prelates, nobility and commoners, owners of estates which were originally invested in noble families, (stiled joint-contributors) in that part of Upper Helle belonging to Cassel in the country of Ziegenhayn, part of the bailiwicks of Homberg, Gudensberg and Felsberg, as also those of Doernberg berg and Lingelbach, pay their taxes in at Trevfa, but the towns and villages at Marburg. The other prelates, noblemen and commoners, owners of noble estates, as likewise the towns and villages, pay them at Cassel. The imposts of the towns and villages are remitted to the above places by the collectors, who deliver in their accounts to the receivers-general, the Sovereign and States affembled in a Diet, at which the university of Marburg also assists. In Hesse-Darmstadt the receivers-general are a professor of Giessen, with a nobleman and syndic of the town of Giessen. Both Cassel and Darmstadt have a chamber of demesses. The annual revenue of the Landgrave of Heffe-Caffel is computed at 1,200,000 rthler. and that of Helle-Darmstadt at about half this fum.

§. 14. Cassel and Darmstadt have each their war office: Hesse-Cassel constantly keeps on foot twelve battalions and eight squadrons, which are reckoned to many regiments, as also a troop of Hullars and three hundred matrofles. Helle-Darmstadt maintains a body of horse-guards, two companies of grenadier-guards, two fquadrons of dragoons, two regiments of infantry, and four battalions of regular militia.

§. 15. The ancient country of Heffe was variously divided, as, into the country of Hesse and those parts lying on the river Loina, together with the country on the Loina and the territories on this fide the Spiess; as also into the country on this fide and beyond the Spiesses; into the country on the Werra, the Darn and Daun, i. e. 'the hilly country.' Its prefent division is into that of Upper and Lower Heffe; but in conformity to the political division, we shall first treat of the part appertaining to Hesse-Cassel and then proceed to that of Heffe-Darmstadt, under which we include the county of Katzenellnbogen, but not the principality of Hersfeld; for though the latter be incorporated with the lower principality of Helle, yet Helle-Cassel, being by virtue of it, a distinct State both of the Empire and Circle, a separate narrative of it will be most agreeable, as also an account of the lands belonging to the appenaged Princes of both houses in detached sections. I shall therefore begin with

I. The part of Hesse in the possession of the sovereign samily of Hesse-Cassel, and the appenaged line of Hesse-Rheinfeldt.

1. The part belonging to the fovereign house of

Hesse-Cassel

Is most conveniently divided, according to the five river-districts taken notice of above in §. 4. thus in time

1. The bailiwick of CASSEL.

Cassel in Latin Cassella, and Cassella, the residence of the sovereign, and convocatory town of the province, lies on the river Diemel, being the feat of the privy-council, the regency for Lower Hesse, the court of appeals, the chamber of demesses, the war and mine-offices, and a consistory; is fortified, and stands on the river Fulda, which flows betwixt the old and new town, having a stone bridge erected over it. The old town, which is the largest and most considerable, forms a semi-circle on a hill, and like the lower new-town is old fashioned; but the French, or upper new-town, betwixt which and the old town lies the esplanade, being delightfully planted with rows of trees, is very regular and handsome. The palace of the Prince stands in the old town on the river Fulda, but is a distinct fortification. In the horse-course is the Modellhaus, exhibiting a representation of the grand water-works of the Winterkasten in their present state, and the perfection to which they were to have been carried according to the original plan. In the Kunsthause or Lycæum, is an anatomical theatre, together with the hall of the collegium Carolinum, a museum, a cabinet of antiques and natural curiofities, and an observatory well furnished with instruments. Over the stables is the fovereign's library. The building where all the above-mentioned colleges meet is a noble piece of ancient architecture. The arfenal is full of military stores, with a foundery standing at a small distance from it; and near this the new house of correction.

In the French new-town, Landgrave William VIII. has added to the house in which he formerly lived a fine gallery of paintings. In this upper new-town is also a beautiful church; but the principal church in Cassel is that of St. Martin's abbey in the old town, in which lies the burial-place of the Princes; and near it is a public Latin fchool. In the old town is likewife the Bruderkirche and the garrifon church, and on the ramparts a Lutheran meeting, the first stone of which was laid in the year 1734. The lower new-town has also a church. In Cassel is likewise one of the superintendencies of Hesse-Cassel. The above-mentioned Collegium illustre or Carolinum, was founded by the Landgrave Charles. Barracks have been built for the garrison. The way from the palace-bridge over the leffer Fulda leads to the Prince's parterre, and from hence we proceed to the large green-house, the exquisite marble bath and the Ana, which besides its trees and other embellishments, has in its centre a spacious bason with a hill in it. This delicious place is environed by the great and little Fulda. At Cassel are manufactures of gold-lace, cloth, stuffs, filk and worsted stockings, hats, and other commodities.

The most ancient record in which Cassel occurs is a grant of Conrad, King of Germany, to the convent of Meschede in the dutchy of Westphalia, dated in the year 913. In 945, King Otho accommodated a contest betwixt Hermann duke of Swabia and Conrad duke of Franconia, at which time Cassel was a town, though probably, but a small one. In the year 1239, Hermann the Younger, Landgrave of Thuringia, confirmed its inhabitants in their ancient rights and privileges. In the year 1247, the Landgrave Henry the Child fixed his residence here, commencing it with a ratisfication of its liberties, The Landgrave Henry, surnamed Ironside, greatly contributed to its aggrandizement; and in 1364, sounded a chapter in the parish-church of St. Martin. Thus much of the ancient history of this town.

Before the gate of the lower new-town is the Siechenhof, with a church and summer-house newly erected; as also the Meszinghof, sounded by the Landgrave Charles, in the year 1680, as a brass and copper manufactory; together with a well contrived mint erected by the Landgrave William VIII.

In the Waldau lies the hunting wardrobe.

Sensenstein, seated on an eminence betwixt Cassel and the wood of Kausffunger, was once a castle, which the Landgrave Hermann sortified in the year 1368, when Otho duke of Brunswick made a fortress of the castle of Sichelstein, which lies not far from Munden. In the year 1438, the Landgrave Lewis I. conserved it as a fief on Sittig of Berleps; who, in 1461, gave it in exchange for his family seat of Berleps and the post of hereditary treasurer of Hesse. In the year 1667, John Dieterich count of Kunwitz obtained this house as a fief from Hesse-Cassel, and his descendants are still in possession of it.

Kaussingen, an abbey for nobles, sounded in the year 1019 as a nunnery of Benedictines by Conjunda consort to King Henry II. formerly known by various names, as those of Capungum, Confunga, Consengen, Confunga, Confungan, Confungan

2. The bailiwick of BAUNE.

The pleasure-house of Freyenbagen lies at the end of a road leading from Cassel, which is planted on each side with trees. At the foot of Flabicht wood, two short hours from Cassel, stands Weissenstein house, belonging to the Sovereign; but above it on Winterkasten or Karlsberg, as it is called, is the incomparable cascade begun by the Landgrave Charles, but not yet sinished. On each side are eight hundred steps leading up the mountain, and at the top is a grand pyramid of huge stones arranged in a transverse and vertical position, which are surmounted by a Hercules of copper, and is thirty feet high. The prospect here is inexpressibly fine. The cascade has four platforms to it, with a spacious bason in each. Near the upper bason is a splendid grotto of large rough hewn stones which look as if only placed upon one another. In the fecond is a rock confifting of heaps of stones disposed in a most beautiful confusion, and under it is a giant reclined on his back, and ejecting a stream of water fix inches in diameter, to the height of above forty feet, whilft the crystalline water falls nearly perpendicular winding through apertures which are almost imperceptible, in innumerable meanders. The descent of the cascade on each side the bason confifts entirely of large square stones over which the water runs about an inch in height; and a little way forward, over a thin sheet of lead about three inches broad, precipitates itself from one platform-stone to another, having the appearance of a crystalline mirror; but by a spectator standing at the bottom, when the fun plays his beams upon it, the brilliancy cannot be viewed without admiration. The water for this work is brought from feveral streams up the mountain, and collected in a reservoir one hundred feet deep, and of a very confiderable circumference.

3. The bailiwick of Heckershausen. In it

Wilkemsthal, a palace belonging to the Prince, and so named by the Landgrave William VIII. its original name being that of Amelienthal.

4. The bailiwick of Lichtenau, in which, near Lichtenau, the Losse has its source, and below Cassel salls, near Romeroda, into the Fulda. In Hirschberg rises the river Wohra, which below Eschwege, near the village of Nierde Hohne, runs into the Werra. In it is Lichtenau, a small town situate in a cold, and consequently not a very fertile country. In the years 1521, and 1637, it was destroyed by fire.

Formerly, at the distance of one half mile from it stood the seat of Reichenhach in Niedforst, which in the year 1225 devolved to Lewis, Landgrave of Hesse and Thuringia, and asterwards to the counts of Ziegenhayn, from whose samily the counts of Reichenhach are descended, to whom this bailiwick once belonged.

5. The bailiwick of Spangenberg lies in Riedforst; in it are some vineyards, and a fine plain running along the Fulda. Its villages lie low, near streams which abound in fish. The Pife, Psife, or Pfeife rises in the village of the same name, and after receiving the Esse near Spangenberg falls into the Fulda.

Spangenberg, an ancient castle seated on a hill below it, and also on an eminence stands the little town of Spangenberg, which so early as the year 1309 was in some degree of prosperity.

Heyda, or Zur Heyden, once a convent of Cistercians, but now a feat belonging to the Prince, lies on the Fulda near the village of Altenmorschen.

Betwixt the villages of old and new Morfeben is a bridge which ferves as a highway over the Fulda; and near Connefeld, another village, is a vaft rock of a beautiful white alabaster.

6. The

6. The bailiwick of Melsungen lies on both fides the river Fulda, and contains the other half of the Ricaforfics, having little corn-land; but near Enlanguage are some soal mines which are worked Erlesberg are some coal-mines which are worked.

Melfungen or Melfungen, a feat of the Prince's, having a finall town, which in 1195 and 1383 was cruelly destroyed. Near it is a bridge over the Fulda, lying in a road much frequented. The noble families of Nordeck, Worms, and Korff have their feats here.

Breitenau, once a convent of Benedictines, stands on the river Fulda, with fome vine-grounds near it. Above Breitenau this river takes two remarkable circuits among the mountains; and one short half mile below is joined by the Eder.

The bailiwick of FRIDEWALD borders in the principality of Hersfeld, its villages are but few, but in it is a very profitable wood, which forms a part of Sullinger forest. In it also are quarries of stone, and it abounds in fish. In this amt or bailiwick lies Dreyen-bill.

The feat of Fridewald was purchased in the year 1422 of three noble families, namely, of the Milnrod, Reckenrod and Altenberg, by the Landgrave Henry III. who rebuilt it for a hunting seat. In the year 1551, an alliance was concluded here betwixt France, Saxony, Brandenburg and Hesse. Near the seat stands a town.

The bailiwick of Haringen, belonging to this prefectureship, lies on the river Werre.

- 8. The bailiwick of HAUNECK is environed on all fides by the territories of Fulda and lies on the river Haun. In it is the Stoppelfkill noted for its height and roundness, but still more for its excellent quarries; and on it stands the ruined castle of Hauneck.
- 9. The following estates and bailiwicks on the river Fulda, the owners of which are all nobles and states of the country, viz.

Altenfeld, belonging to the Treuschbuttlar family.

Barchfeld, belonging to that of Stein.

Berneburg, to that of Hundelshausen and Bidefeld.

Binsfurt, to that of Baumbach.

Dippach, belonging to the family of Vultee.

Elbersdorff, to that of Boineburg, named Hohenstein.

Friemen, to the family of Buttlar.

Frulingen, to that of Diede and Mesenbugk.

Hambach, to the family of Boineburg, called Hobenstein.

Harmutsachsen, to that of Hundelskausen.

Hasselback, to that of Hundelskausen.

Hattenback, to that of Hattenback.

Heisenstein, to that of Romrod.

Helgeroda, to that of Donop.

Holzhain, to that of Romrod.

Holzhausen, belonging to the family of Treuschbuttlar.

Imskausen, to that of Trott.

Kirchheim, to that of Baumbach.

Kuhmansheyde, to the family of Romrod.

Kleinsee, to that of Vultee.

Liebenz or Locbens, to that of Trott.

Luderbach, to that of Capella.

Ludwigseck, to that of Riedesel.

Lutzelwich, to the family of Habell.

Obs. The Principality of Hersfeld, the capitol of which is the convocatory town of the district of Zulda, will be treated of in the fequel.

II. The country lying on the Werra, to which belongs

1. The bailiwick of VACA.

Vach or Fach, a little town standing on the Werra, over which it has a bridge of stone, and at a little distance is joined by the Ulster. Its situation in the road betwixt Leipzig and Francfort on the Mayn renders the produce of its toll-house very considerable.

2. The bailiwick of Leutenhausen lies on the mountain of Dreyen.

3. The bailiwick of Waldkappel stands on the river Wohra. In it is Meissner-bill, accounted the largest and highest in Lower Hese, and which, exclusive of its coal-pits produces a variety of excellent physical herbs.

The little town of Waldkappel, feated on the Wohra, was wholly burnt down in the year 1637; the lords of Boineburg and Hundelshausen have also a share in it.

4. The bailiwick of ALLENDORF is feated amidst high and rocky mountains, among which those of Goburg and Hobeberg on the frontiers of Eichsfeld are the most remarkable. This bailiwick produces some wine.

Allendorf, on the Werra, a town and superintendency of the Protestants, was destroyed in the year 1637 by fire; near it, in the Sedan, are the great

i. e. Bar--

falt-works, which are of more ancient standing than the town itself, mention being made of them in an instrument of the Emperor Otho IId, bearing date in the year 973; the houses built there belonging to a particular community.

The bailiwicks and estates of the WERRA DISTRICT, the owners of which are Nobles and States of the country, viz.

Armenschwerd or Ermschwert, belonging to the family of Buttlar.

Arnstein, belonging to the family of Bodenhausen.

Zur Aue, to that of Eschwege.

Grafendorf, to that of Keudel.

Kubenthal, to the family of Berleps.

Netra, to that of Boineburg.

Neuenrode, to that of Bischofshausen.

Reichenfachsen, to those of Boineburg and Eschwege.

Rohrda, to that of Meysenbugk.

Schwebda, to that of Keudel.

Stidenrod, to the family of Buttlar.

Volkershausen, to that of Verscur.

The town of Wanfried to that of Keudel.

Wichmanshausen, to that of Bioneburg, and Ziegenburg, to that of Buttlar.

III. The country along the Dimel, in which lies

1. The bailiwick of GREBENSTEIN, reaching to the Fulda; and being a good corn-country.

Grebenstein, a small town feated on a high eminence on the Ese, near it formerly stood a castle, of which a house still remains. On the bridge here is held in the open air the Bruckengericht, or bridge-court, which is not less singular for its customs than place of holding it, every defendant being obliged to deposite a fine, which on his acquittal is returned him, and the plaintiff condemned in double the sum.

Immenbausen, a small town on the skirts of Rheinbards forest, was destroyed by fire in the years 1385, 1603 and 1631. The first Protestant fermon preached here was with the approbation of the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous. The family of Stockhausen have two mansion-houses in this place.

Not far from hence is an iron mine, for the improvement of which some iron-works have been erected on the river at Veckerhagen. The highest part of the high mountain of Stauffen in Rheinhard, is called Bartelskopf, ' Bartholomew's head.' Garne-hill, not far from it on the Munden fide, is also of very confiderable height.

Karlfdorf and Mariendorf are two villages built by French refugees under the protection of the Landgrave Charles.

2. The bailiwick of Sabbaburg, commonly called Zapfenburg, lies in the Walde or forest of Rheinkard, the length of which is four German miles, and its breadth one, or one and a half, with a stud of the Prince's in it. Sabbaburg, a hunting seat belonging to the Prince, lies on a high hill, and from it a straight road has been cut through the forest to Fromerskausen, and continued with some small windings to Cassel, having a row of trees planted on each side.

The Gicfelwerder, an island standing in the Weser, formerly made a part of the county of Werra. On the death of Sieg fried count of Bomeneburg in the year 1141, in whom the Northeim line became extinct, this place with many other estates of the inheritance descended to Kermann count of Winzenburg, and he dying in 1151 without male heirs, devolved to Duke Henry the Lyon. In the year 1462 the Landgrave Lewis IV. took possession of it. This place has a court and toll-house.

3. The bailiwick of LIPPOLDESBERG on the Wefer, originally a convent dedicated to the Virgin Mary, contains iron-mills.

4. The bailiwick of Walhausen, contiguous to the foregoing.

5. The bailiwick of Helmershausen.

Helmerskausen, a small town lying on the Diemel, had once a convent. In the year 1465 the Landgrave Lewis IV. made himself master both of the town and the adjacent castle of Kruckenberg.

Karlshaven, a town built by the Landgrave Charles at the conflux of the Diemel and Weser, has a harbour, and an hospital for invalids. This town was formerly called Syburg, and a canal has been dug from hence as far as Grebenstein.

6. The bailiwick of Trendelburg or Drendelburg, a small town, having an old castle standing on the Diemel.

Langenthal, Deissel, Lamerden, Sielan, Eberschutz, Hummen and Stamme, are all large villages.

7. The bailiwick of HOF-GEISMAR, which is so called from Hof-Giesmar, a very ancient town containing two parishes, and seated in a sertile country. Near it is a good medicinal spring. Within its marc lies Schonberg a ruined castle, to which once belonged a lordship comprehending Hof-Giesmar, Trendelburg, Helmershausen, Gieselwerder, Lippoldsberg, and other places. In the year 1429 the male line of the lords of Schonberg failing in Henry, the Landgrave Lewis took possession of part of the lordship, and in 1462 a violent war breaking out in the electorate of Mentz, he also made himself master of that part which had till then been in dispute betwixt the houses of Brunswick and Mentz, ever since which this sine country has been annexed to Lower Hesse.

8. The

8. The bailiwick of Zierenberg is noted for its many high hills, as namely those of Dornberg, Behrenberg, Schreklenberg, Gudenberg, Valkenberg.

The town of Zierenberg, in ancient records termed Tyrenberg, stands on an eminence betwixt Dornberg and Behrenberg near the river Warme, over which it has a bridge of stone. In the year 1538 this town was burnt down, and also suffered greatly again by fires in the years 1636, 1637, 1639, 1646, 1651 and 1653.

Schartenberg, an old castle.

9. The bailiwick of Wolfhagen is included in the district of Diemel, the river Erpe, on which it lies, running into the Diemel.

Wolfhagen, a town standing on a hill, which has frequently been destroyed by fire.

Weydelberg, near the limits of Waldeck, once a very strong castle, but long since demolished.

10. Burkhasungen Vogtey, or only Hasungen, lies in Habichtswalde, being composed of the ancient Benedictine convent of that name, the edifice of which stood on a high rocky mountain, as also of five villages.

11. The following are bailiwicks and estates, the proprietors of which are Nobles and States of the country, viz.

Burguffel, belonging to the family of Uffel,

Defenberg, to that of Spiegel. Elberberg, to that of Buttlar.

Elmerskausen, to that of Malsburg.

Eschenberg, to the same.

Haueda, to that of Pappenheim.

Helmarshausen, to the family of Spiegel.

Hof, to that of Dallwig.

Hohenborn, to that of Malsburg. Kemperfeld, to that of Spiegel.

Liebenau, a small town bordering on the Paderborn territories to that of Pappenheim.

Meimbressen, to that of Wolfe of Guttenberg.

Niederelfingen, to that of Malsburg.

Rothwesten, to the family of Calenberg.

Schachten, to that of Schachten.

Sieberhausen, to the family of Malsburg.

Wettesingen, to that of Calenberg, and Wulmerssen, to that of Stockhausen.

IV. The district of Schwalmflusse, comprehending

The amt or bailiwick of Gudensberg, in which is a high hill of no great circumference called Langenberg, and near it rifes the river Ems, which divides this bailiwick into two parts. This amt reaches from Habichtswalde and the amt of Wolfhagen along the bailiwick of Frifzlar belonging to Vol. V.

H

Mentz,

Mentz; is also a part of the Principality of Waldeck to the Eder, consists of spacious and very fruitful levels intermixed with craggy eminences but no mountains.

Gudensberg, a finall town, destroyed by fire in the years 1312, 1382, 1389, 1586 and 1640. On two high rocks near it once stood two castles called the great and little, the lesser of which was the seat of the Gudensberg family.

Geismar, a village, known so early as the eighth century, and probably the place in which stood the large oak so grossy perverted to religious worship, and for that reason dug up and destroyed by order of Boniface.

Niedenstein, a very ancient town, having formerly a castle on a craggy rock.

Metz, a village feated betwixt the little brook of Matze and the river Rhine, and supposed to be the Mattium, or Mattiacum, of the ancients, is the principal place of the Matzi, or Matti.

Mershausen, one of the four high hospitals of Hesse, as they are called, was originally a convent; but, in the year 1538, was appointed by the Land-grave Philip to be a receptacle for distressed and infirm women.

2. The bailiwick of Felsberg lies to the north fide of the river Eden; being for the most part a level and fruitful country, has some woods, and on the south-east fide of the Eder is hilly. In this bailiwick the rivers of Schwalm and Eder join.

Felsberg, a small town, half of which was burnt down in the year 1640. The commandery of Marburg has a mansion-house and farm at this place. On a high rock near the town stands the castle of Felsberg, in which Philip the Magnanimous was born.

Betwixt the forests of Quiller, Beurholz and Harlerberg, on a very high and craggy rock, stands Heliinberg house, now in ruins; and beneath it, on a separate hill near Quiller forest, lies the Chartreuse, which was originally a nunnery named Eppenberg; but the Landgrave Lewis III. on its sequestration, rebuilt it under the title of the Karthaus. Afterwards the Landgrave Maurice sitted it up for his residence. This place commands the finest prospect in the whole country.

3. The bailiwick of Homberg is large and fertile, and has also some iron works. The E/ze, which issues from the mountains adjacent to the amt of Rothenburg, traverses this bailiwick and joins the Schwalm.

Homberg, furnamed in Hesse, and the convocatory town of the Schwalm district, lies on the Esze. In the year 1536, the Langrave Philip the Magnanimous united the old and new town here. This place has very frequently suffered by fire, particularly in the years 1317, 1356, 1372 and 1523, as also in 1640, when the Imperialists burnt it. Here are two Rittersitze, or noblemen's seats. Its castle, which stood on a high and single eminence near the town, was taken by the Imperialists in the year 1636; but being recovered by the Hessians in 1648, was by them demolished.

Folkenberg₂.

Falkenberg, a feat and farm fituate at the foot of the Mosemberg.

Wabern, a village, of which the abbey of St. Peter, at Fritzlar, has the tythes. In it is a palace with a falconry built by the Landgrave Charles.

4. The bailiwick of BORKEN confifts of eight villages.

Borken, a small town, wholly destroyed in the year 1469, suffered also extremely in the thirty years war.

Kundesburg and Kalbsburg, formerly strong holds of robbers.

Great-Englis, a village, near which Friderich, duke of Brunswic, King elect of the Romans, was defeated.

- 5. The county of Ziegenhayn had its own counts, whose origin has not yet been set in a clear light. In the year 1437, John, count of Ziegenhayn, ceded this county, together with its appurtenances, as a sief, to Lewis I. Landgrave of Hesse, and received it again as an hereditary male sief. John, the last count of Ziegenhayn and Nidda, dying about the middle of the sisteenth century, the samily of Hesse took possession of both counties and of the marc of Fulda. To the county of Ziegenhayn, exclusive of certain amts and towns in Upper Hesse, belong the following bailiwicks, which lie on the river Schwalm.
 - 1. The bailiwick of ZIEGENHAYN.

Ziegenhayn, once the residence of the counts, but small, lies in a morass wholly environed by the Schwalm, and was intended to have been made a regular fortification, but is not compleated. The Landgrave Maurce enlarged and improved the old seat. In this place are kept the archives of both the sovereign families of Hesse, and Cassel has also a stud here.

Frillendorf, a large village, having a court of justice.

Spiescappel, a decayed monastery, betwixt which and Leimsfeld lies Spiez, which is thought to be the centre of Hesse, and was formerly the Diet town. In this place is a watch-tower, but without either gate or steps; and near it is the forest of Kornberg, otherwise called das Loch, as also the Kriegerholz. The ancient castle here of Landsburg stands on a mountain by itself near the village of Michelsberg.

2. The bailiwick of Schonstein reaches to the Keller, a high mountain contiguous to the borders of the country of Waldeck.

Treysa, the principal place of the county stands high on the river Schwalm, over which it has a bridge of stone. It is one of the towns of receipt, and some Diets were formerly held here. In the year 1646 this place was laid in ashes by the Imperialists.

Jespurg, a large village.

3. The bailiwick of Neukirchen contains Neukirchen, a small town, seated on the rivulet of Grenf.

Ottra and Rolfhausen, both bailiwicks.

Schwarzenborn, the most ancient town in this county, was destroyed in the year 1636. It lies betwixt Knull and Eisenberg, two mountains of a very extraordinary height.

6. The upper bailiwick of Aula, in which are the high mountains of Nuel, Eisenberg and Minzenberg.

Zimmerfroda, to that of Lowenstein.

In UPPER HESSE,

V. THE district situate on the river Labn, and forming a part of the upper Principality of Marburg.

1. The bailiwick of MARBURG is of considerable extent. The neighbouring territory of Gladenbach and Caldern abounds in slate, and near Webrshausen are sound mines of silver, copper and iron. This bailiwick receives its name from Marburg, the capital of Upper Hesse, and the convocatory town of the Labn district, which is also a town of receipt and stands on a hill near the river Lahn. Above it is a fortified castle, which was once the residence of the Landgrave of Hesse. In this town is sometimes held the Samthofgericht, and for fix years the Samt revisions, or appellations gericht, alternately with It is also the feat of the second regency in Hesse-Cassel and of the fecond confistory, as likewise of a Lutberan superintendency and an university founded there, on the thirtieth of May, 1527, by the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous, which was ratified on the fixteenth of July, 1541, by the Emperor Charles V. and, in the year 1653, endowed by the Landgrave William VI. with the vogteys of Singlis near Homberg, Nordhausen near Cassel, Fritzlar and Homberg. In this town is also an academy for classical learning, together with three Protestant churches, one of which is French; and the Lutheran church of St. Elizabeth, in which that faint and several of the Landgraves of Hesse lie interred. The monument of St. Elizabeth is plated over with filver gilt, furrounded with a profusion of pearls and other gems. In this church is also to be seen a stately alabaster monument of Augustus, Count von der Lippe, who was the first provincial Lutheran commander. The German house is the residence of the provincial commander of the Teutonic order for, Hesse and the commander of Marburg, and near it stands Elizabeth's hospital, the care of which St. Elizabeth recommended to the above order. The provincial commander, by the convention of Cassel, in the year 1681, is chosen alternately from each of the three religions. this commandery belongs the manour of Schwalbeim, at Upper-Widdersheim, in the bailiwick of Stormfels, as also the manour of Rodbeim, lying both within the territories of Darmstadt, together with many other revenues at different places. The Prince of Hesse has also a fine stud here. Markurg, from a village, was raifed to a town about the beginning of the thirteenth century. In the years 1261 and 1319, it was wholly destroyed by fire. In 1529, a folemn but fruitless conference was held here betwixt Luther and Melanthon on one fide, and Zwingel and Oecolampad on the other. Towards the close of the year 1645, and the beginning of 1646, this town and castle were taken after a surious cannonading by the troops of Cassel, which.

which the Princess Amelia Elizabeth, at that time regent of Cassel, had sent against it.

Without the bare-footed gate stands the beautiful manour of Schwan, in Latin Villa Cygnea, which belongs to the fovereign.

The bailiwick of CALDERN, in the village of that name, in which formerly stood a nunnery of Cistercians, and the revenues of which are at present appropriated to the university of Giessen, has a court of its own.

The bailiwick of Reitzberg.

The bailiwick of LOHRA, in the extensive village of the same name.

The bailiwick of EBSDORFFER, in which formerly stood the premonstratenfian nunnery of Hackborn, which John von Schernschlotz converted into a seat; on whose death without heirs, in the year 1593, it devolved to the Landgrave of Hesse.

The bailiwick of WITTELSBERG, with the ruined castle of Frauenberg, beneath which lies the village of Bortskausen. At Frauenberg is settled a community of French Protestants.

The bailiwick of GREAT-SEELHEIM.

2. The prefecturate of Kirchbain. In it is Kirchbain, a small town, lying on the Wohra, with a seat belonging to the noble family of Winter.

3. The presecturate of RAUSCHENBERG, formerly belonging to the county of Ziegenhayn. In it is Rauschenberg, a small town, near which stood a castle destroyed in the year 1646.

Auf der Schwob, a village inhabited by a colony of French.

4. The prefecturate of WETTER, its seat at Wetter, a small town, having once an abbey of nobles, the revenues belonging to which the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous applied to the augmentation of the portions of daughters of ancient noble families. This place, together with Kauffungen, another sequestrated abbey, is under the direction of sour noblemen. In the year 1659, it was almost wholly destroyed by fire.

The old mansion of Melnau, which has lain long since in ruins.

VI. The following prefecturates are not included in any of the former river-diffricts, but accounted feparate; viz.

1. The prefecturate of ROSENTHAL. In it

Rosenthal, a small town which, in the year 1464, reverted to Hesse from the archbishop of Mentz, but, in 1495, was consumed by fire.

2. The prefecturate of Gemunden on the Wohra, formerly belonging to the county of Ziegenhayn. In it is Gemunden on the Wohra, a small town, lying in a vale on that river.

Schiffelbach, a village, containing a seat.

3. The prefecturate of FRANKENBERG, in which, in the forest of Auler, was once a gold mine. In the year 1590, some rich veins of filver and copper were discovered in it. This forest also yields a lead ore.

Frankenberg, a town of great antiquity, lying on the Eder, is divided into the old and new town. The former is faid to have been erected, in the fixth century, by Thierry, King of the Francs. Charlemaine fortified it against the ravages of the Saxons, conferring several privileges on it. The new town is of no longer date than the year 1336, being, in 1556, united under one magistrate with the old. This town has frequently suffered by fire; namely, in the years 1476, 1557 and 1067, and in every respect is greatly decayed.

St. Georgenberg, a convent near the town, was sequestrated, in the year 1567, by the Landgrave Lewis the Elder.

The bailiwick of Geismar, in which is Wolkersdorf, a hunting-seat belonging to the Princes, and Louisendorf a town chiefly inhabited by French emigrants.

The bailiwick of RODENAU.

The bailiwick of Hessenstein; containing Hessenstein, a very ancient seat, standing on a mountain named Silburg. Frankenau, a small town.

4. The prefecturate of HAINA lies betwixt Upper and Lower-Hesse; and the prefecturate of WILDUNGEN, in the county of Waldeck.

Haina is one of the four high hospitals in Hesse, and stands on the Wobra, formerly having a convent of Cistercians; the commencement of which was at Aulesberg, in the county of Zigenhayn, the monks being sent thither from the convent of Altenhamp; but, in the beginning of the thirteenth century, were removed to Hegene, or Haina. The Landgrave Philip the Magnaminous, in the year 1527, founded an hospital in this town, which, in the year 1553, was confirmed by him, as also again in 1555 by his sons the Landgraves William, Lewis and Philip. In it sour hundred poor and sick are well taken care of and maintained. The governors of this place, who must be nobles, being on the spot, are nominated alternately by the two Princes of Hesse. To this hospital belong the villages of Battenhausen, Dodenhausen, Hadenherg, Huttenrode, Alten-Haina, Lolbach, Kerskart, or Kirschgart, Elenrode, Halgehausen, as also the villages of Hauren and Danroda, together with certain farms, tythes and rents in several villages, and jurisdictions at Frankenberg, Wildungen, &c.

VII. The following bailiwicks and estates, the proprietors of which are nobles and states of the country; viz.

Amenau, belonging to the family of Baumback.

Burgel, to that of Fleckenbuhl, surnamed Burgel.

Dreys, or Treysa on the Lumda, to the family of Michlinge.

Eichmuhl, to that of Worms.

Ellershausen, to that of Drach.

Elnhausen, to that of Vultee.

Fiddemuls on the Wohra, to that of Seyboltsdorf.

Fridelhausen on the Lahn, to that of Doring.

Germershausen, to that of Heidewolf.

Hatzbach, to that of Knoblauch.

Holzdorf, to that of Rothsman.

Holzhausen, to that of Rau.

Netz, to that of Gall.

Niedling, to that of Dernback.

Nordeck, to that of Rau.

Plausdorf, to that of Winter.

Radenhausen, to that of Radenhausen.

Riddenau, to that of Dernbach; and Schonstatt, to that of Milchlinge.

Schweinsberg, the patrimonial house of the Schenken of Schweinsberg, hereditary cup-bearers of Hesse. This place lies on the river Ohm, and near it is a small town, to which, in the year 1332, as also to Frankfort, the Emperor, Lewis of Bavaria, granted municipal privileges. To the Shenk samily belong likewise, on the river Lahn and in the dominions of Hesse-Cassel, the following bailiwicks and places; viz.

1. A bailiwick called DAs EIGEN, comprehending three villages.

2. FRONHAUSEN, likewise a bailiwick.

3. UPPER-WEYMAR, a bailiwick containing twelve villages.

4. The bailiwick of Weitershausen, including three villages, the two last of which are named the Raitzberg.

Treysbach, belonging to the family of Drach.

Virmund, or Virmont, feated on the Eder, the original house of the counts of Virmont, but now belonging to the Dallwig family, together with Wohra, belonging to that of Dallwig.

2. The Quart of Lower-Hesse, and the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, lying in the possession of the Landgrave of Hesse-Rheinfels. The Landgrave Maurice, of Hesse-Cassel, on the seventeenth of March, 1627, resigning the government to the Landgrave William V. his son by his first marriage, it was stipulated, that he alone should be the ruling Prince over the whole country; and that, on the other hand, his father's sons, by his second marriage, should come in for a fourth of the present and suture lands. The right of primogeniture thus introduced was not only confirmed in the compact concluded on the seventeenth of October, 1627, betwixt the houses of Cassel and Darmsladt; but also, on the first of February, 1628, received the sanction of the Emperor Ferdinand II. On the first of September an agreement was made at Cassel, betwixt the Landgrave William V. and his brothers, concerning this Quart, by which the former ceded to the latter, and their male-heirs, certain feats, towns, lordships, lands, vassals and farms, with all their appurtenances, as also the fourth part of the taxes of the country; and, on the twentieth of February, 1629, enjoined the subjects of this Quart to perform to his faid half-brothers the hereditary homage, and all other fervices due from faithful vasfals to their legal lord. But in this convention it was likewise stipulated, that, whilst the line of Hesse-Cassel existed, there should be only one fingle government; and, that to Landgrave William, as the only Prince and fovereign at that time of the country, and his lawful male-heirs, purfuant to the right of primogeniture, every branch and article of the princely dignity and prerogative, in this Quart, thus transferred, should belong and remain; as, namely, the jus episcopale and its appurtenances; the summoning of Diets; the isluing edicts; the grants of fairs and companies, the roads, the mint, the tolls, the Imperial, provincial, military duties, and those on honors, together with the right of succession, appeals, &c. regarding this sovereignty and the prerogatives implied thereby. The vassals of this Quart are to perform homage to the reigning Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, who, for the maintenance and exercise of these powers thus reserved, appoints, reservat-commissaries.

The lower county of Katzenellnbogen, as well as the upper county, in the year 1479, on the decease of Philip, the last count, devolved to the house of Hesse, for Henry IV. Landgrave of Hesse, being nominated heir and successor by that count, as husband to his only daughter Anne, on the death of his father-in-law delayed not to take immediate possession of the upper and lower county of Katzenellnbogen; which, to the great difcontent of the counts of Nassau, who strongly claim it, has ever fince been annexed to the Principality of Hise. The landgrave Philip the Magnanimous fettled on his fon, Philip II. the lower county, who dying in the year 1583, George I. Landgrave of Heffe-Darmstadt, took possession of the lower county of Katzenellnbogen. By an agreement entered into on the fourteenth of April, 1648, betwixt the houses of Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt, this county reverted to the former houses, and, as the Rothenburg branch, by virtue of the compact of the year 1627 and 1628, was entitled to a fourth part of what thus accrued to the fovereign house of Hesse, by the compact made with Hesse-Darmstadt; another convention was entered into on the fecond of August, 1648, betwixt these houses: Hesse-Cassel, with reserve of the fovereignty, ceding hereditarily to the Landgraves Frederick and Ernst of Rothenburg the lower county of Katzenellnhogen, of which, on the twentythird of December, the Landgrave Ernest took possession according to the stipulated division. The subsequent contests, betwixt William, the five Landgraves of Hesse-Cassel and Ernst, Landgrave of Hesse-Rheinfels, were adjusted by a convention on the first of January, 1654, at Ratisbon, and this convention, confirmed by an act of the Diet in the same year as a pragmatical VOL. V.

matical fanction, perpetual ordinance and family compact in the house of Hesse-Cassel. Lastly, in the year 1754, the two houses entered into an agreement relatively to the right of placing a garrison in the fortress of Rheinfels: the right of primogeniture, and some other articles, the contents of which are specified in the Introduction to Hesse. Having premised these particulars I now proceed to give a particular account of

1. The lower Quart, as it is called, of Hesse, to which belongs

1. In the district of Fulda.

The prefecturate of RUTHENBORG, which lies on both fides that river, being near four German miles and a half in length, and abounding in corn, fheep, wood and mart, together with fome wine, copper and iron.

Rothenberg, or Rothenburg, a town, divided by the Fulda into the old and new; the former of which is near the Prince's palace and contains a church. In the latter is the Prince's amt-house and the abbey-church, as it is still called: but the revenues of the latter were, by Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous, assigned to the maintenance of superanuated clergymen.

2. In the diffrict of Werra is,

1. The prefecturate of Sontra, also fertile. In it

Soutra, a small town, standing on a hill near the little river of that name; the business of its inhabitants, tillage and grassery. In the years 1263, 1387;

1558 and 1634, this place was destroyed by war and fire.

Boineburg, formerly Bomeneburg, a ruined castle, which the Landgrave Henry I. received as an Imperial sief from the Emperor Adolphus of the house of Nassau; but by his descendants conferred as a sief on the noble samily to which it gives name; is not to be consounded with the old castle of Bomeneburg, which stood near Nordheim.

Dannenberg, the patrimonial house of the Baumbach family.

2. To this district in some measure belongs the presecturate and town of Tressure. This estate had formerly lords of its own who bore the same name; but Hermann von Tressure committing violences of all kinds, the neighbouring country, the Princes of Mentz, Saxony and Hesse sent a body of forces in conjunction against the town; ever since which it has belonged to those three Princes, who have each their particular streets and officers in it.

The town of Treffurt stands on a hill near the river Werra, and contains in it a Protestant church subject to the Saxon superintendency of Langen-falza. Most of the inhabitants too are Protestant Lutherans.

In this prefecturate are the four villages of Falken, Großzen-Borsla, formerly containing a collegiate-church, Schnelmanskausen and Wendehausen, as mentioned before.

3. The bailiwick, or prefecturate, of WANFRIED: containing Wanfried, a small town, lying on the Werra, and having a seat, which is the residence of a collateral branch of the house of Hesse-Rothenburg. The river Frieda, which rises near Eichsfelde, here joins the Werra.

4. The

4. The prefecturate of Eschwege lies chiefly betwixt the Werra and the lofty mountain of Meisier, comprehending under it twenty villages. In it is Eschwege, a town of very great antiquity, and containing a palace, as also two parish-churches. In the years 1499, 1555, 1559, 1593 and 1637, it was consumed by fire. This town was for a considerable time mortgaged to John Casimir, Prince of Anhalt. The stone-bridge here lies in a road which is much frequented.

To this prefecturate likewise belong the bailiwick of Beilstein and Germeroda, the latter of which was formerly a convent.

5. The prefecturate of Ludwigstein, which is small and divided by the rivulet of Gelster, contains Ludwigstein, a castle, seated on a hill on an elbow of the Werra.

Wigenbausen, a little town, watered by the Gelster, which at this place falls into the Werra.

Obs. The towns of Eschwege, Witzenhausen, Allendorf, as also the castles of Furstenstein, Arnstein, Wansried and the fortress of Allendorf, belonged once to the county of that name, as this formed a part of the Nordheim inheritance and the dutchy on the Weser. In the year 1264, Albert, duke of Brunswick, gave these places as a ransom to Henry, Margrave of Meissen, by whom he had been taken prisoner. Henry transferred them to Sophia of Brabant and her son Henry the Child, by which means it devolved to the Principality of Hesse.

6. The presecturate of Neuen-Gleichen has its name from two ruinous mountain-castles standing on a very high eminence opposite each other and called Gleichen. Old-Gleichen, which lies to the east, belongs to the family of Uslar, but the sovereign thereof is the Elector of Brunswick. New-Gleichen is subject to Hesse, and of this town it is that I now treat.

The amthouse here, otherwise called Wittmarshof, lies in a pleasant valley on the river Garta.

Exclusive of the parochial-villages of Sattenbausen and Etzenborn, as also of the village of Mackenroda, in this prefecturate likewise stood Bremke, Gelligehausen, Wolmerskausen and Bennigehausen, which are distinguished by the appellation of mixed villages, being subject to the dominion of Brunswick Luneburg, and in the bailiwick of Allen-Gleichen, which belongs to the Uslar family.

7. The lordship of Plessa, which is surrounded by the territories of Brunswick, had anciently lords of its own. Of these Dieterich, lord of Plessa, the last of his line, dying in the year 1571, Hesse-Cassel took possession of the lordship, or rather the presecturate, of Bovenden, as a vacant sief; but the houses of Brunswick strongly protested against it, and Duke Wolfgang of Grubenhagen also seized the presecturate of Radolf shausen, which till that time had been possessed by the lords of Plessa, incorporating it with the Principality of Grubenhagen. The road too leading through the presecturate prefecturate of Bovenden belongs to the Elector of Brunswick. On account of this lordship the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel surnishes the Emperor with one horseman, or twelve florins per month, being assessed to the chamber at Wetzler in eight rixdollars, nine kruitzers and three quarters.

Of the ancient castle of Plessa we still see some ruins on a high mountain beyond Eddigehausen. To this lordship also belongs

Bovenden, a large village, lying on the Leine, which thrives by its vicinity to the town of Gottingen. This place contains two ennobling estates, exclusive of a presecturate and toll-house.

The villages of Augerstein and Eddigehausen, in which is a manor belonging to Count Reiershausen, together with Upper-Billingshausen, Spambeck and Holzeroda, near the last of which formerly stood a town named Moseborn,

In this lordship is likewise reputed the conventual presecturate of Hockel-beim, lying not far from Nordbeim, and being originally a castle, which, in the year 1242, was converted into a monastery for ladies by the three brothers, Poppo, Gottschalck and Ludolph, lords of Plessa; but the revenues belonging to it were afterwards, by the landgrave William the Wise, assigned for the relief of clergymen's widows. This place was the burial-place of the lords of Plessa.

II. Of the lower county of KATZENELLNBOGEN a map was published by Homanu's heirs in the year 1745, which makes the one hundred and fifth in the Atlas of Germany. This county lies in the Wetterau, amidst the territories of Triers and the Palatinate, Mentz, Nassau, Idstein, and that of the four joint-lords. In it are several fine woods and mineral springs. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture and the making of wine, and some places have also woollen manusactories. It has been observed above that the sovereignty of this county belongs to the samily of Hesse-Cassel, to which, by virtue thereof, belong also the episcopal revenues, together with the Imperial, circular and other taxes; for the levying of which it has a commissary.

The whole county is divided into three prefecturates: namely,

1. The prefecturate of RHEINFELS. In it is

S. Goar, commonly called San& Gewer, the capital of the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, and lying on the west side of the Rhine, in which, near this place, is a water-sall. In the town-church is performed the Roman Catholic service. The toll here payable by vessels passing on the Rhine rises high, and is received in common by the two sovereign samilies in Hesse. In the year 1561, the greater part of this town was consumed by fire. Near it stands

Rheinfels, a fortress, seated on a high rock, being originally a convent known by the name of Mattenburg, which, in the year 1245, or 1246, was converted into a castle. In 1647, the troops of Hesse-Cassei made themselves masters of this place; but, on a compact made in the year 1648, restored restored it, together with Katz, to the house of Hesse-Rothenhurg, reserving, however, the privilege of putting a garrifon into it. By virtue of a decree of the Dyet of Ratisbon, passed in the year 1654, the right of garrisoning this fortress was adjudged to the house of Hesse-Rothenburg alone, but with a clause that access to it, in unavoidable exigencies relating to the Empire, should, without denial or opposition, be permitted to the reigning house of Hesse-Cassel, but without prejudice to the family of Rothenburg and its garrison. In the year 1692, this place was gallantly defended by a Hessian garrifon against the French, who were obliged to raise the fiege thereof: after which its fortifications were improved. Heffe-Caffèl continued in possession of Rheinfels till the peace of Ryswick, when it was agreed, that that Prince, with a refervation of its right, should deliver it up to the house of Hesse-Rheinfels, which was to provide it with a garrison of its It was garrifoned, however, by some companies of Imperialists till the breaking out of the war for the Spanish succession, when the Emperor transferred the garrisoning and defence thereof to the house of Hesse-Cassel; which fo enlarged and firengthened it that, in a folemn declaration, the Landgrave affirms to have expended on it, from the year 1692 to the year 1716, 1,120,438 rixdollars. But this fortress being, by the peace of Baaden, in the year 1714, put on the same sooting as it had been by that of Ry/wick, the house of Hesse-Cassel was obliged, in the year 1718, to evacuate it. In 1734, it recovered the possession of it; and at length, in 1754, the family of Heffe-Rheinfels formally renounced, in favour of Heffe-Cassel, the right of garrisoning this fortress, as also the quartering of troops in the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, and all portion or interest in the monthly contributions appropriated for the maintenance of the garrison. After a suspension of one hundred and one years, the Protestants have this year performed divine service in their chapel.

Goarskausen, or Gewerskausen, a small town, situate on the east side of the Rhine, sacing St. Goar. In its church the Lutherans and Protestants meet alternately. Near it, on a very high rock, stands

Katz, or Neu-Katzenellnbogen, a castle erected in the year 1393. This place has shared the same sate with the fortress of Rheinfels.

2. The prefecturate of Reichenberg. In it

Reichenberg, a castle, seated on a high rock, which in the thirty years war was several times taken and burned. It is at present inhabited by a civil officer, and the Lutherans perform divine service in it.

Nastat, a large village, near the Muble in Nastatt heath. In it are some farms belonging to nobles, and the three several religions enjoy the public exercise of their religion here. Not far from it, near a mill on the river Muble, called Schwaiz, is a mineral spring.

Gronau, or Grunau, originally a convent of Benedictines, stands on the rivulet of Claus, which runs into the Muble. In the year 1535, this convent was converted into a hospital for women by the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous, and is one of the four high hospitals of Hesse.

3. The prefecturate of Hohenstein: containing Hohenstein, a ruinous castle, seated on a mountain on the river Aar, and formerly a place of strength.

Langenschwalbach, a large village, not far from the Aar, and divided into the Upper and Lower Schwalbach. In the former is a Roman Catholic church, in the latter a Lutheran and Protestant one. Several Jews also reside here. Its mineral springs too are famous, but the best of these is the Weinbrunn, which rises in a meadow.

Schlangenhad, or Karlsthalerhad, a celebrated medicinal bath in the Electorate of Mentz. Its waters are cold when drawn, and for common use must be warmed. The Elector of Mentz having a share in it keeps a steward here.

The fief of Gerolsleiner consists of a castle now lying in ruins, a church-village of twelve or sisteen vassals, the villages of Upper and Lower Fischbach, twenty-four hides of land at Pfohl, together with some tythes and casualties. This sief was formerly in the possession of a family to which it gave name; but in William, Frederick, and Heidrich of Gerolstein, this line became extinct, the former dying in the year 1569 and the latter in 1573. Hereupon the fief fell to the Landgrave Philip II. as proprietor of the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, who incorporated it with the demesses thereof, a small part excepted, which he granted as a fief to the family of Nordeck. When the lower county of Katzenellnbogen escheated to the house of Hesse-Rheinfels, that house received the Gerolslein part, which at that time belonged to the family of Hesse-Darmstadt in exchange for its part of the town and presecturate of Umstadt.

II. The part belonging to the reigning house of Hesse-Darmstadt.

The reigning house of Hesse-Darmstadt, as before observed in the Introduction to Hesse, has two governments; viz. one at Darmstadt and the other at Giessen.

1. The government of Giessen belongs to the family part of

UPPER HESSE,

Together with the annexed county of Nidda, and the lordship of Itter.

N the former of these lies

1. The upper prefecturate of GIESSEN.

Giessen, anciently Giezen, or Giezin, is a fortified town on the river Lahn, having an old castle and arsenal. In this town, alternately with Marburg, is held the joint court of appeals. It is likewise the seat of a regency, a consistory and a superintendency, and has also an university of Lutherans Lutherans founded here on the seventh of October, 1607, by the Landgrave Philip V. and for which, on the nineteenth of May of the same year, the Emperor Rodolph II. granted a charter. This university is possessed of lands and incomes in the towns of Giessen, Grunberg and Alsfeld; as also at Marburg and Kaldern in the territories of Heffe-Caffel. But the last of these, Hesse-Cassel, in the year 1746, notified to the Darmstadt family its intention of redeeming, for its own university of Marburg, by virtue of the convention in the year 1648, corroborated by an act of Dyet, in 1650; and the university of Marburg having, in due form of law, deposited 42,265 pounds, as the redemption-money, it laid an arrest on the universitylands and incomes belonging to Giessen, which were to have been redeemed. In this town is also a classical academy and two churches. That Giessen, fo early as the beginning of the fourteenth century, was a town, appears, exclusively of other proofs, from an instrument of Landgrave Otho's, drawn in the year 1325, granting to the inhabitants of the fuburbs thereof the fame rights with the townsmen. The share which the Palsgraves of Tubingen, and the lords of Minzenberg had in this town, devolved, on their extinction, to the family of Cassel. In the year 1530, the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous caused the town to be fortified; but, in 1547, it was dismantled by order of the Emperor. In the year 1560, the works notwithstanding were repaired, and have fince been enlarged and improved.

Great Linde, a village, having a market, was formerly walled and had a castle, which was demolished in the year 1248.

Stauffenberg, a small town, with an old castle belonging to it, now lying in ruins.

The bailiwick of LOLLER, containing four villages.

The bailiwick of Heuchelheim, to which belong five villages.

The bailiwick of STEINBACH, confifts of four villages.

Obs. Within this prefecturate lies Schiffenberg-house, with its fields, meadows, gardens and woods. It is a commandery belonging to the Teutonick order of Hesse. To it also belongs the manour of Neuhos, near Leygestern, together with divers revenues at several other places.

2. The prefecturate of ALLENDORF.

Allendorf, furnamed an der Lumde, was erected into a town in the year 1370. This place suffered extremely by fire in the years 1479, 1603, 1634, and 1728.

3. The prefecturate of GRUNBERG:

Grunberg, which stands on a hill, is of great antiquity having formerly been a royal villa, if not under the Merovinian Kings at least under those of the Carlovinian. In the days of the first Landgraves of Thuringia it was a town, which, in the year 1195, was laid in ashes by the troops of Mentz. Its decay is owing to the fires in 1370 and 1391, the wars, and particularly that in the seventeenth century.

The bailiwick of GRUNBERG, comprehending also that of Merlau, has nineteen places belonging to it.

The bailiwick of NIEDER-OHM, having five places under its four burg-gemunde amt, contains seven places.

The village of Burggemunde was formerly called Gemunde an der Strafz.

5. The prefecturate of Homburg on the Ohm. In it

Homburg on the Ohm, having a castle standing on a hill contiguous to the town walls. In the year 1597 a great part of this place was consumed by fire, and in 1635, 1641 and 1646 it suffered by war.

Thirteen villages.

6. The prefecturate of Alsfeld.

Alsfeld, in ancient records styled Adelsfelt and Alsfeylt, a town of great antiquity, lying near the river Schwalm, has an old castle belonging to it, together with two churches, and is the first town in Hesse which received the confession of Augsburg, being formerly more wealthy and populous than at present.

Altenburg is a ruinous castle, seated on a mountain, together with nine villages.

The bailiwick of KIRDOF, containing

Kirdof, a small open town.

Lebrbach, Erbenhausen, Ober, Kleen, Wahlen, Arnshain and Bernsburg. These six places constitute the bailiwick of Eieser, of which the Schenks of Schweinsberg are proprietors, who holding half of it as a sief of Nassau-Saarbruck, the court is held annually, or oftener, in the council-house of Kirdorf, in the presence of the Prince of Hesse-Darmsladt's amtman, or justice and steward at Alsfeld.

The prefecturate of Romrod, containing Romrod, a finall town, having a castle.

A hunting-feat and fourteen other places.

The bailiwick of Schwarz, to which belong four villages.

7. The prefecturate of GREBENAU contains Grebenau, a small town, its charter no older than the year 1605. Five villages.

8. Lauterback, a small town, the suburbs of which belong to the territory of Riedesel.

9. The prefecturate of ULRICHSTEIN lies in the Wetterau, and in it begins a high, long and cold ridge of mountains called the Vogelsberg, Fugalisberg, or Fickelsberg. In it is

Ulrichstein, a castle, seated on a mountain, with an open town, to which the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, in the year 1347, granted all the privileges of the town of Friedberg.

The bailiwick of Bobenhausen, containing the large village of Boben-bausen, with eight others.

The bailiwick of Felda, confisting of fix villages.

10. The

10. The prefecturate of SCHOTTEN lies in the Wetterau. In it is the fource of the river Nidda. It has also a park and a hunting-seat, called Falder-haus, which stands on a hill.

Schotten, a small town on the Vogelsberg, which obtained its municipal privileges in the year 1354.

Five other places.

11. The prefecturate of NIDDA lies in the Wetterau. The county of Nidda, on the death of Engelbard the last count thereof, devolved to the counts of Ziegenhayn, and on the extinction of these descended together with the county of Ziegenhayn to the house of Hesse. The town of Nidda lies in a fruitful country, and the whole presecturate abounds in fine woods, game, and fish. It has also some glass-houses and salt-works at Salzbausen not far from Nidda, established in the year 1593. In it is Nidda, anciently called Nythe, a town lying on a river of the fame name, and having a castle.

Nidda, and the bailiwick of FAUERBACH, with ten places belonging to it. The bailiwick of RODHEIM, confifting of five places.

That of BURCKHARDS, containing ten.

That of CRAINFELD, with four, among which is Crainfeld, formerly Creginfeld, a very ancient village.

- 12. The prefecturate of STORMFELS, in which lies the mountain-castle of Storm or Sturmfels, the village of Upper-Widdersheim, containing the manor of Schwalbeim, which belongs to the Teutonick order, and three other villages under the justice. In this prefecturate also lies the bailiwick of Rodbeim, mentioned above.
- 13. The prefecturate of Lisberg lies in the Wetterau, being formerly a particular lordship under lords of its own, but on their failure descended to the counts of Ziegenhayn and Nidda, as next heirs; the last of these sold it to the Landgrave Lewis the Peaceable. In it is Lisberg, formerly Liebsberg, an old castle seated on a mountain, with a large village belonging to it.

Schweickertshausen, and three other villages.

14. The prefecturate of BINGENHEIM lies in the Wetterau, and makes what is called the Fulda Mark. This country is level and fruitful. In the fixteenth century Hesse-Darmstadt purchased this presecturate of Nazau-Saarbruck. To it belongs Bingenheim, a castle having a fine village, to which, in the year 1357, the Emperor Charles IV. granted the privileges of a town. In its council-house are held every year in the princes name, three particular courts called Centgericht.

Echzell, a large village standing in the most fertile part of the whole Wetterau. In it are two estates belonging to the noble samilies of Giesman and Pretlack.

Vol. V. K Berstatt,

Berstatt, a large church-village.

15. Peterweil, a castle and parochial village one hour and half from Homburg Vor Der Hobe, both of which belong to Hesse-Darmstadt and Solms Rodelheim, but the patronage of the parish to the latter only.

16. The prefecturate of Roszbach lies betwixt the towns of Homburg on Der Hobe and Friedberg. In it is

Upper-Roszbach*, a finall town, of which the Elector of Trier was a part owner till the year 1666.

Lower-Roszbach, a village.

17. The prefecturate of Butzbach in the Butzbach, containing Butzbach, an old town feated in a clayey and swampish but fertile plain. In it is a stately seat with a sine parterre. From the counts of Falkenstein this place descended to the lords of Epstein, and afterwards to those of Katzenellnbogen, Konigstein, and Solms. In the year 1478, Henry, Landgrave of Hesse, succeeded by the death of his father-in-law Philip count of Katzenelinbogen to a fourth part of Butzbach; the Konigstein share was in the year 1595 sold to the Landgrave Lewis and his heirs, in 1623, on the differace of the count of Solms-Braunsels, the Emperor conferred that part belonging to the counts of Solms on the samily of Hesse-Darmstadt, and though this last by the treaty of Westphalia was restored to the house of Solms-Braunsels, yet was it afterwards disposed of to Hesse-Darmstadt, which thus became sole proprietor of the whole town and presecturate. It suffered greatly by fire in the year 1603.

Munster, a large village, with five others annexed to it.

Philipseck, a palace belonging to the Princes of Hesse-Darmstadt, and feated on a mountain producing good wine; was built by the Landgrave Philip III. betwixt the years 1626 and 1628. This palace lies above Munster, in the parish of which it stands.

18. The prefecturate of Kleeberg in the Wetterau belongs to the house of Hesse-Darmsladt, and Nassan-Weilburg. Hoben-Solms had formerly one eighth of it, which in the thirty years war devolved to the samily of Hesse-Darmsladt. This shares the precedence alternately for two years, and Nassan-Weilburg for one, or are Baumeisters. Each has an officer under him for holding the prefecturate court, from which an appeal lies to the Baumeister; after that both regencies deliberate in concert, whether the appeal be to be admitted or not, and in the former case agree on a sentence. To this presecturate belongs Kleeburg, a village with a ruinous castle standing on a mountain; together with the villages of Upper-Kleen, Brandoberndorf, and Ebersgons.

19. The presecturate of HUTTENBERG, situate in the Wetterau, was formerly incorporated with Nassau-weilburg, but in the year 1703 detached itself from it.

^{*} This place will be rendered for ever memorable by the glorious victory gained here ever the French by the immortal King of Pruffia, on the 5th of November 1757.

Hesse-Darmstadt, having for its own particular share Langgons, Kirchgons, Pohlgons, Allendorf, Annerodhausen and Leygestern.

20. The prefecturate of Konicsberg in the Wetterau, was in the year 1350, together with Hohen-Solms, fold by Philip Count Solms to Henry Landgrave of Hesse, and till 1629 continued joined with Solms; but in that year both houses divided the temporal jurisdiction amongst them, by which the present prefecturate of Konigsberg devolved to Hesse-Darmstadt alone, whilst the ecclesiastical affairs continued in common. In the year 1638, Solms assumed the community of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the prefecturate of Konigsberg and Hesse-Darmstadt reserved the like in that of Hohen-Solms. To it belongs Konigsberg, a little town containing a ruined castle, with eight villages.

21. The prefecturate of BLANKENSTEIN, in which are mines of filver, lead, mercury and vitriol. In it is Blankenstein, the mansion-house of this prefecturate, above which formerly stood a castle, which was demolished in the year 1646.

Gladenbach, a large village, with twenty-one other villages.

22. The prefecturate of Biedenkopf. In it

Biedenkopf or Biedencap, a small town standing on the Abills, and samous for its iron-works and soundery. In the years 1635 and 1647 this place suffered by fire.

Homert/hausen, near which is a filver mine.

Thirteen other places.

23. The country of Breidenbach contains the Under Gericht, of which Heffe-Darmstadt has three eighths, the family of Breidenbach two, and that of Breidenstein three. These are

The bailiwick of Melsbach, in which are the villages of Klein-Gladen-bach, Wissenbach, Achenbach, Upper-Dieden Weisenbach, Wallausim Elsbach.

The Schmidgericht, in which are Breidenbackhinter Dem Kirchhof, Wallau-unterm Weg, and Wolzhausen.

The Erbgericht, including Wallau im Heimbach, Breidenbach vor Dem Kirchhof, Lower-Dieden, Quotshausen and Lower-Horle.

The Upper Gericht, to which belong

The bailiwick of Lixfeld, of which Hesse-Darmstadt has five sixteenths, the family of Breidenbach two, and that of Breidenstein nine. The places included in it are, Simmersbach, Upper-Horle, Lixfeld, Frochenbausen and Gonnern.

The bailiwick of UPPER-EISENHAUSEN, of which Heffe-Darmstadt has three eighths, the family of Breidenbach two, and that of Breidenstein three; the places in it are, Upper-Neider, Eysenbausen and Steinsprus.

The bailiwick of Roth in the village of Roth, one fourth of which belongs to Hesse-Darmstadt, and three fourths to the samily of Breidenstein.

24. The prefecturate of BATTENBERG. In it

Battenberg, a very old town on the river Eder, which has frequently suffered by fire, particularly in the year 1653, when it was almost totally destroyed. This place was formerly the residence of the counts of Battenberg.

Hatzfeld, a very ancient but finall town feated on the Eder, its castle the patrimonial feat of the family of Hatzfeld.

Leyfa, a village, also very ancient, and noted for the fignal defeat of the Saxons there in the year 779 by the Franks. In this country formerly stood.

The Gau of Lieft, Likeh, or Likeft. Battenfeld, and eight other villages.

25, The Lordship of Itter lies on the river Eder in the Itter Gau (the Pagus Nithersis, or Nitherses of the ancients) being principally environed by the territories of Waldeck, but in some parts borders on those of Historian This lordship receives its name from the river Itter, which issuing from Enle, or according to others from Corbach in the country of Weldeck, falls into the Eder near Herzhaufen. It is in most parts mountainous, but yet not unfruitful; enjoying also plenty of wood, game, sheep, and sish, and having in particular a very profitable copper-mine. The origin of the ancient Dynastæ of Itter is obscure. The most ancient of them yet known is Folemar earl of Itter, who lived about the year 1120. In the 14th century this lordship was divided betwixt the brothers Heynemann III. and Adolphus, who renewed their alliance with the principality of Hesse, and placed themfelves together with their castles and lordships wholly under the protection thereof, in the very same manner with the castles and estates properly belonging thereto, by which means they became States and Dennisons of that Principality.

On the decease of Heynemann III. his widow Margaret with her daughter Cunigunda, in the year 1357, fold one half of her husband's part of the lordship of Itter to Henry, Landgrave of Hesse, for nine hundred marks of filver; and at the fame time made a formal renunciation of that part which had belonged to her deceased husband's brother Adolphus of Itter; the other half of the share of Heynemann she also disposed of the very same year for nine hundred marks of filver to Gerlach archbishop of Mentz. The last male of the Itter line, and probably a grandson of the said Adolphus, was Erasmus, who died in the year 1443. The Elector of Mentz did not long retain his share of Itter, mortgaging it in 1359, to Otho count of Waldeck and his fon Henry; but the house of Waldeck likewise under-mortgaged it to the Wolfs of Gudenberg, into whose hands, in the same manner, came also the Hessian share in the year 1383. Thus they had possession of both parts till the 16th century, when in the year 1542, the share belonging to the Electorate of Mentz was redeemed by the counts of Waldeck, and in the year 1562, that of Hesse by its Landgrave. In 1586, the Elector of Mentz also signified to the counts of Waldeck his intention of redeeming his share, which was accordingly done in the year 1588; but the Landgrave Lewis of Marburg laid down the mortgage money, and thus held, on redemption, the Mentz share of the lordship of Itter. In the year 1589, he also purchased for 7000 guilders that part of the lordship of which the family of Lowen-sein, and afterwards those of Gogreben, had been proprietors, which included the Stenerberg and the village of Itter; and in 1590, he bought of the counts of Waldeck for 1600 Spanish dollars, or Rhenish gold guilders, one half of the parith of Eimelrode, with some other revenues. Of the sief of Itter, which is dependant on Corvey abbey, the Wolfs of Gudenberg, and the family of Malsburg obtained the reversion in 1441; and on the death of Erasmus of Itter succeeded to the possession, holding it even to this day. The arms of Itter are a triangular shield with a crowned lion rampant, the tongue projecting and the tail erect, the whole being surmounted with an open helmet, and having for its crest a stag's head.

The lordship of Itter at present constitutes a presectureship, to which belong the following parishes and places, namely,

1. The parish of Vobl, containing

Vohl, a market-village standing on the river Asel or Esel, being the seat of the presecturate, as also of a metropolitan. The Landgrave George the Mediator, having been appenaged with the lordship of Itter, resided in the seat erected here in the year 1665.

Bastorf, Asel or Esel, and Marienbagen, properly Merbenhagen, all villages.

2. The parish of Obernburg, in which are the remains of the old castle of Itter, the original patrimony of the lords of Itter; the village of Thal-Itter, together with the village of Itter, standing both on the river Itter, as also the village of Obernburg, having formerly a castle.

Near Itter castle formerly stood a fortress named Steuerburg.

- 3. The mine-town of Thal-Itter, near the village of that name; the charter of which was bestowed on it by Ernest Lewis the Landgrave. This place has a particular church of its own lately erceted there, together with a pastor, who is paid by the officers and others belonging to its rich copper mine. It is also a mine-amt of the Prince's.
- 4. The parishes of Kirchlotheim, comprehending the villages of Kirchlotheim, Schmidtlotheim, Altlotheim, Herzskausen, Harbskausen and Buchenberg, anciently Buchemer.

5. The village of Lower-Orken, which is incorporated with the parish of Upper-Orken, in the territories of Hesse-Cassel.

6. The parish of Upperwerbe, in the village of the same name, lies on the little river Werba.

7. The parish of Horinghausen is distinct from the former, being wholly surrounded by the Waldeck lands. It consists of the village of Horinghausen, and a district which is two hours in length. In this village the family of Wolf have a feat, with some jurisdiction.

8. The parish of Eimelrode lies four hours north-west from the other parishes parishes of the lordship of Itter amidst the territories of Waldeck; and to it belong the villages of Eimelrode or Emmelrode, Hemmigbausen and Deisfeld.

26. Other bailiwicks and estates, besides the preceding ones, the owners of which have a seat among the States. These are the following, namely,

r. That of Riedesel. The noble family of Riedesel of Eisenbach holds some bailiwicks under Hesse-Cassel, for which it does homage to the Landgrave, and is reckoned among the number of the States; the inhabitants also, in cases above thirty guilders, have a right of appeal from their bailiwicks to the provincial court of Hesse. These bailiwicks are,

1. Lauterback cantred, or hundred, bordering on the prefecturate of Romrod, and including

Lauterbach, called das Werth, together with fix villages.

2. The bailiwick of ENGELROD lying contiguous to the prefecturate of Utrichflein, containing twelve villages.

3. The bailiwick of UPPER-OHM, lying betwixt the prefecturate of Ulrichstein, Burggemunde and Grunberg, and comprehending fix villages.

- 2. The Rabenau or Londorf Grund, bordering on the amts of Homburg an der Hoke and Grunberg, and belonging to the Nordeck of Rabenau. This district contains eight villages.
- 3. Busecker vale, lying betwixt the prefecturates of Giessen, Allendorf, and Grunberg, forming part of the Solms-lich estate, and including also the villages of Old-Bufeck, Great-Bufeck, Rorfroth, Reyskirchen, Burkhardffelden, Albach, Oppenroth, Rodgen and Bevern, with near five hundred vassils. This district belongs to the coheirs of Bujeck, which are divided into the lines of Buleck in Buleck, Munch-Buleck and Brand-Buleck. Niercr and Gen-Erben in the vale of Buleck, together with the other inhabitants and vaffals, have for fome centuries past acknowledged the house of Hesse as their fovereign, and have punctually performed to it all the fervices due from vaffals to their lords. In the year 1576, in a folemn convention, they acknowledged the perpetual fovereignty of the house of Helle, and that it belonged to them by descent; and though in 1702 the subjects in Buscekvale and Middle-Rkine, and in 1704 the nobility laid a complaint before the aulic council, that the coheirs in Buseck-vale had illegally put themfelves under the fovereignty of the house of Hesse by virtue of the compact in the year 1576, and though the aulic council were for annulling this compact, yet on the 19th of January 1725, it was enacted by the Emperor Charles VI. that for the future the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt should invest the coheirs in Buseck-vale in the Emperor's name, but that they should be subject to him, and conform to the compact of 1576.

4. The bailiwick of Frohnhausen, bordering on the prefecturate of Battenberg, and containing the villages of Frohnhausen and Upper Alphe.

5. The manors of Angered, in the prefecturate of Aldsfeld, belonging to the family of Noding.

Bisses, in the presecturate of Bingenheim, belonging to that of Nagel. Burkhardsfelden, in Buseck-vale, belonging to that of Lowerfeld.

Dernbach, in the prefecturate of BLANKENSTEIN, to that of Dernbach.

Elmshausen, in the presecturate of BIEDENKOPF, to that of Doring.

Gleimerhayn, in the prefecturate of Alsfeld, to that of Schenck Hermanstein, in the prefecturate of Konigsber, to that of Schenk.

Kestrich, in the prefecturate of Ulrichstein, to that of Schenck.

Little-Linnen, in the upper prefecturate of GIESSEN, to that of Brede.

Langenhain and Ziegenberg, in the prefecturate of Butzbach, to that of Diede.

Rulberod, in the prefecturate of Homburg and Der Ohm, to that of Schenck. Schmitte, in the prefecturate of Nidda, to that of Schenck.

Storndorf, in the prefecturate of ULRICHSTEIN, to that of Seebach.

Troke, in Buseck vale, to that of Troke.

Winerod, in Buseck vale, to that of Munch, and Ulff, in the prefecturate of STORMFELS to that of Pretlack.

The Princely House of HESSE-HOMBURG,

Possesses in the Wetterau, two miles from Franckfort, and at the foot of a chain of mountains called the Hohe, the town and presecturate of Homburg vor der Hohe.

This prefecturate in the year 1622, Lewis V. Landgrave of Heffe-Darmfladt configned to his brother Landgrave Frederic, founder of the present house of Hesse-Homburg, and his heirs, together with all its incomes, profits and estates, powers and jurisdictions of all kinds, in lieu of a yearly pension of 20,000 dollars which had been fettled on him in 1606; the ruling-house still referving certain stipulations, such as the attendance of the clergy both in the prefecturate and town at the general fynod, the examination of them, the wine-tax, the toll, and the protection and necessary consequences thereof, together with all fecular fiefs, as it had done before in the prefecturate and town of Homburg vor der Hobe, and that the house of Hesse-Homburg, should in the name of the ruling-house, levy the imperial and provincial taxes which have been granted at the Diet, and of which an account shall be given to it, causing them to be paid to the ruling-house, and likewise should collect the land and woollen duties, and those on liquors, till the reigning-house should settle on it incomes of an equal amount. The ruling-house has also retained the passage and quartering of foldiers, the new military tax, appeals, protection, pass-ports, and other prerogatives. By virtue of which the subjects in this town and prefectu-late are to do homage to the ruling-house, which for the security of its rights, has a refervat-amtman or bailiff in the town and prefecturate of Homburg. In the year 1668 a new compact was first concluded, by which, on the death of a ruling Landgrave of Heffe-Darmstadt, the house of Homburg was to renew the obligation, but on the decease of a Landgrave of Helle-Homburg the subjects were to do homage to the new Landgrave, and at the same time swear to the Reservata appertaining to Hesse-Darmstadt. In the year 1671 George Christian, Landgrave of Homburg, transferred both the town and prefecturate to Heffe-Darmstadt, which, accordingly continued in possession thereof till his death, and that of the Landgrave William Christother of Bingenbeim, on which, in the year 1681, the town and prefecturate of Homburg were by compact ceded a fecond time to the Langrave Frederic II. of Homburg. The year 1707 produced a new convention, in which the fovereignty of the town and prefecturate of Homburg were annexed to the house of Darmstadt, but with a clause that no prejudice should be done thereby to the house of Homburg in such articles as related to any branch of the fovereignty which by the decrees were expressly granted to it, and that nothing should be transacted in opposition thereto. In the same instrument Hesse-Darmstadt declares, that when the rest of the Darmstadt lands shall wholly or in part be charged with the quartering and maintaining of foldiers; the prefecturate and town of Homburg shall, according to the established rule in the other prefecturates of Darmstadt be chargeable only with fifteen complete rations; furthermore, the house of Hesse-Homburg is lord and forester in the high marc, as also in those of Seulberg and Erlingbach. The house of Hesse-Homburg, by founding a new town, encouraging a fettlement of two French colonies, and erecting four farms here, has increased the inhabitants and revenues of this prefecturate above one half, all of whom comfortably support themselves by the manufactures which the above-mentioned industrious people introduced, and yield an appearance of commerce and wealth which it never knew before. In it are the following places, namely, Homburg vor der Hohe, a town, containing a palace for the Prince's residence. The Landgrave Frederic II. likewise added a handsome new town to it. Both the Lutherans and Protestants enjoy the public exercise of their religion here. The Prince is proprietor of three prefecturates in the territories of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, exclusive of other personal rights and revenues, for the management of which a branch of the Prince's chancery is appropriated. In the year 1721, an alms and orphan-house were erected in the new town, by order of the Landgrave Frederick James. Not far from the town, along the road to Braunsels on the Hohe, are seen several very deep trenches, and particularly one place surrounded by them which is called Saalburg.

The villages of Sculberg, Koppern, Gunzenheim and Upper-Steden.

Friderichsdorf and Dornholzhausen, colonies of French refugees.

II. Under the regency of Darmstadt is

The upper county of Katzenellnbogen, together with part of the lordship of Epstein.

The upper county of Katzenellnbogen borders on the Rhine, the Mayn, the Palatinate and Mentz, as also on the counties of Yenburg and Erbech. In it lies a part of the mountainous road of Odenwald, and Bannforst at Dreyeich, p. 89. With respect to the latter, it is to be observed that the counts of Katzenellnbogen, so early as the year 1265, had claimed the privilege of hunting in the imperial forest of Dreyeich, but on an arbitration it was given against them in favour of the house of Falkenstein, and thus it continued till the 16th century, when the upper county of Katzenellnbogen devolving to the house of Hesse, and the presecturate of Kelsterbach being likewise sold to it in the year 1642, the count of Yenburg receded from the privilege of hunting in the territories of Hesse-Darmstadt, but retained the sees which in this upper county of Katzenellnbogen had ever been levied by the lords of the hunting-lands of Dreyeichen, and are still paid by such places belonging to Hesse-Darmstadt as lie within the hunting precincts, and even by the town of Darmstadt itself.

This county abounds in corn, wine, almonds and chestnuts; how it fell to the house of Hesse has been shewn above. It includes

1. The prefecturate of Darmstadt, confisting of three cantreds.

In the first cantred lies,

Darmstadt, a town seated on a river of the same name, in a fruitful and pleasant country. This place was not only chosen for the residence of the former counts of Katzenellnbogen, but also by George I. Landgrave of Hesse, and his successors; and gives name to the branch of the Hessian house, to whom it belongs. The landgrave George I. erected a new palace here, which was enlarged by the Landgrave George II. in 1629, and other additions and repairs made to it in the year 1664 by the Landgrave Lewis VI. Landgrave Ernest Lewis began a very stately palace here, but this has not yet been completed. In the town is a regency, a court of appeals, a consistory, a criminal court, and a grammar-school. It contains also a church, which is the burial-place of the princely family. In the year 1330, William IV. count of Katzenellnbogen, by permission of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, fortified Darmstadt with a wall; and the Landgraves Lewis V. and VI. added new suburbs to it, near which is also an orphan-house.

Bessungen, a village.

2. To the fecond cantred, which lies on the Bergstrasze, belongs Eberstatt, a large village seated on the Bergstrasze.

Pfungstadt, and eight other villages.

3. To the third cantred belongs feven villages, namely, Arbeiligen, Braunskard, &c. Kranichstein, Gebborn, and Sensfeld.

Vol. V. L 2. The

2. The prefecturate of Kelsterbach joins to the Mayn. In the year 1600, Count Henry of Yjenburg fold this prefecturate for 356,177 florins to the house of Hesse-Darmsladt. To it belongs Kelsterbach, or Keltersbach, a village and castle seated on the river Mayn. Langen, a large village, in which was formerly held, in the month of May, before the church, the annual court of venery, as it is now at Dreyeci.

The villages of Egelsbach, Morfelden, Wolfsgarten and Walldorf.

3. The prefecturate of Russelsheim lies on the Mayn and Rhine. In it is the tract of land called Im Ried, as also the Geraver land, in Latin Pagum Gerau. To it belongs Russellyheim, a large village, containing a castle, which stands on the river Mayn. In the year 1534, this place was consumed with fire; and, in 1689, suffered the like calamity from the French.

Freystatt, a new town, seated on the Rhine, not far from Bischofsheim, and built by the Landgrave Lewis in the year 1745. Among other privileges this place has an asylum for debtors, and the three religions are tolerated in their public worship here.

Great-Gerau, a small town, the charter of which was, in the year 1398, granted by the Emperor Weneflaus. This place is the seat of the hundred court.

Trebur, in Latin Triburium and Triburia, a large village, formerly containing a magnificent royal palace. Under the Carlovinian Kings fome Diets and councils were held here.

Nanheim, Bauschbeim, or Konigsstedten, and eight other villages, together with Rhinfelder, Kellerey, and two farms.

4. The prefecturate of Dornberg, containing

Dornberg, a large village, with a feat; by the chapter of Wurzburg included in the county of Befzingen, on which, in the year 1013, it was conferred by Henry II. This place was anciently a fief of Henneberg; but, in the year 1521, the enfeoffment thereof was ceded to Hesse.

Dornheim and Leheim, two large villages.

Ebrfelden, near which, in the year 1632, Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, caused a pillar of free-stone, fifty-six feet in height, to be erected, crowned with a lion-rampant on top.

Hofheim, one of the four high-hospitals of Hesse, founded in the year 1553, by the Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous, for poor and infirm women.

Stockstadt on the Rhine, and other places.

Grebenbruch, Lusthausen and Wasserbiblis, all manors belonging to the family of Kronberg.

Bensheimer, Hainer and Riedhausen, manors belonging to the convent of Erbach in the Rheingau.

5. The prefecturate of JAGERSBURG, in which lies fagersburg, a feat of the Princes, and four other villages.

6. The prefecturate of Zwingenberg lies on the Bergstrasz, in it is the celebrated mountain of Malches, in Latin Melibocus, which is one of the highest in all Germany. It is a received opinion that from the name of this mountain and the Catti, who dwelt on it, that is from the Catti Meliboci and Cattimelibocia, the name of Katzenellnbogen has by gradual corruption been derived. This prefecturate consists of two cantreds, or hundreds.

1. To the first belongs

Zwingenberg, a town, fituate on the Berg-firafze. In this place originally flood a castle, to which, in the thirteenth century, was added a church; and soon after, namely, in the year 1273, the Emperor Radolph I. built a privileged town here. In 1693 the greatest part of this place was destroyed by the French, but again rebuilt to advantage.

The villages of Auerbach, Bedenkirchen and Hochstatten, together with Auerberg, a ruined castle.

2. In the fecond hundred are twelve villages; namely, Alsbach, Malchen, &c. Bickenbach and Jugenheim belong in common to Hesse-Darmstadt and Erbach.

7. The prefecturate of Lichtenberg contains thirteen places; viz.

Lichtenberg, a castle lying in ruins on a hill near Odenwalde.

Reinheim, a town, seated on the river Gernsprenz.

Ernsthofen, Uberau and Upper-Ramstadt, three large villages.

Georgenhausz, a village belonging to the family of Harthausen.

Frankenstein, near Frankenbausen, a ruined castle, standing high, and the original house of the noble family of that name.

8. The gemeinschaft, or community, of Umstadt, in the Odenwalde, confits of fixteen places, being possessed by Hesse-Darmstadt and the Elector-Palatine. Hesse-Cassel formerly had also a share in it; but, in the year 1708, this was transferred to Hesse-Darmstadt. In it is Great-Umstadt, a very ancient town, but formerly larger than at present.

Near it stands the village of Klein-Umstadt.

Bremsbach, Lower-Kein/pach and other villages.

9. The lordship of Epstein, belonging to Hesse-Darmstad, lies, at no great distance from the conflux of the Rhine and Mayn, being seated amidst the territories of Mentz. This district abounds in grain, wine and wood. Godfrey VII. lord of Epstein and Munzenberg, and count of Dietz, in the sisteenth century, sold one half both of the lordship and town to the Landgrave William of Hesse.

Epstein, a small town, with a seat, of which the Elector of Mentz is a half proprietor, in the year 1318, was raised to a town by Lewis of Bavaria.

The four forest-villages of Langenbain, Lorsbach, Massenbeim and Wallau.

L 2 Delkenbeim,

Delkenbeim, or Telkenbeim, a market-town, created such, in the year 1320, by the Emperor Lewis.

Diedenbergen, Nordenstadt, and seven other villages, with some detached manours.

- 10. The prefecturate of Branbach and the parish of Katzenellnbogen, belong properly to the lower county of Katzenellnbegen, and on the extinction of the male-line of the counts thereof, devolved, as did also the whole county, to the house of Hesse. The Landgrave Philip the Magnanimous fettled it, together with the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, on his fon Philip; and, at his decease, the parish of Katzenellnbogen, as at that time belonging to the prefecturate of Hobenstein, fell to the Landgrave Lewis of Heffe-Caffel; Philip's widow remaining in possession of the presecturate of Braubach. This lady likewise dying, Maurice, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, acquired, by inheritance and exchange, two thirds of that prefecturate, and Hesse-Darmstadt, simply by inheritance, one third. By virtue of a compact made in the year 1627, the house of Darmstadt acquired the whole lower county of Katzenellnbogen, together with the prefecturate of Braumbach and the parish of Katzenellnbogen. The last of these, in the year 1643, being affigned by the Landgrave George as a mortgage to his brother John for a debt of 40,000 rixdollars. In 1648, by a new convention, Hesse-Cassel obtained the lower county of Katzenellnbogen and the prefecturate of Braubach, exclusive of the Cassel part and the parish of Katzenellnbogen: It was likewise stipulated that the prefecturate of Braubach and the parish of Katzenellnbogen should, on the decease of the Landgrave John, and his male heirs, return without any opposition, either by word or deed, to the Cassel line, who, on the other hand, was at its option to restore what it enjoyed at that time in lieu of them, and to liquidate all debts, mortgages and affignments of the Landgrave George, which were payable out of it. Thus Heffe-Darmstadt, together with a third which was before in its hands, arrived likewise to the possession of the two thirds of the presecturate of Braubach belonging to Hesse-Cassel, as also of the whole parish of Ketzenellnbogen. In the year 1747, Heffe-Caffel was for recovering the faid two thirds of the prefecturate of Brankach and the parish of Katzenellnbogen; but Hesse-Darmstadt maintained that all right to fuch an exchange was legally expired by prescription; and thus the matter ended. In it is
 - 1. The town and prefecturate of BRAUBACH.

Braubach, a town, seated on the Rhine, in the year 1288, received a charter, equal to that of the town of Oppenheim, from the Emperor Rodolph. In a vale running along the Rhine is the seat of Philipsburg, which was erected about the year 1568 by the Landgrave Philip the Younger, on a rock yielding mines of copper and silver. Above the city stands the castle of Marxburg. In its neighbourhood are likewise some mineral springs, the most noted of which is the Dinkholder.

The villages of Dachsenbausen and Gemmerich, together with the manours of Hinderwald and Falkenborn.

Ems, a large village, more than once confumed by fire, is faid formerly to have enjoyed municipal privileges. Near it are the celebrated baths of Ems, two of which belong to Hesse-Darmstadt and three to Nassau-Dietz. Each of these proprietors have a handsome house near them, exclusive of other private buildings.

Kammenau, or Kemnau, a village belonging both to Hesse-Darmsladt and Nassau-Diet \approx .

2. In the parish of Katzenellubogen is Old-Katzenellnbogen, a market-village, having a castle, seated on a mountain and being the patrimonial house of the ancient counts of Katzenellnbogen. In its neighbourhood are some mines of iron.

The villages of Klengelbach, Allendorf, Ebertskausen, Schonborn, Utper-

Mittel and Lower-Fisbach, as also Gudenacker on the river Lahn.

Obs. Hesse-Darmstadt possesses a part of several villages belonging to the Vierberrischen Gebiets, or four-lords-districts, which lie in the lower county of Katzenellnbogen.

Obs. That to the house of Hesse-Darmstadt belong, at and in the Imperial city of Wetzlar, the patronage and protection, the toll and right to Carlsmand, or Calsebmitt-house, as has been shewn at large, from ancient records, in a respectful memorial addressed to his Imperial Majesty. Hesse-Darmstadt is also patron of the village of Freyenseen, near Grunberg; in the territory of Solms-Laubach, enjoys the tolls and patronage, and holds several courts in the village of Melbach, which lies two hours from Friedberg and Bingenbeim, and, in conjunction with Solms-Braunsels, appoints a judge, who twice a year holds a court-leet at the parsonage. To it also belongs the sovereignty of Florstatt with several other prerogatives.

PARTICULAR maps of the Principality of Hersfeld have been published by Bleau, Jansson, Waesberg, Schenk and Valk. This district borders on Upper and Lower Hesse. The diocese of Fulda in it lies along the river Fulda, which improves the natural fertility of its soil. The names of Herosfelde, Herolvesselde, Herveld on Herocampia, by which we find it anciently called, shew the appellation of Hersfeld, now universally said to be more proper than Hirchfeld, which obtains also, with some tome perfons though without any grounds. It was originally an Imperial abbey of Benedictines, founded in the year 736 and largely endowed by Pipin and Charlemain, Kings of the Franks. In the year 1370, the Landgrave Hermann, of Hesse, took the town of Hersfeld under his protection. In the year 1415, the Landgrave Lewis II. made an agreement for it and other articles; and, in 1421, on some schemes of the abbot for curtailing its privileges, issued forth a warrant of protection for it, dispatching also, at the same time, to the abbot a letter full of reproaches and menaces. In the year 1525, this place did homage to the Landgrave Philip. In 1606, Otho, eldest fon to the Landgrave Maurice, was elected administrator of the abbey, in which honour he was succeeded by the Landgrave William V. Lastly, at the treaty of Westphalia, the town and abbey of Hersfeld, with all its appurtenances, both ecclefiastical and secular, and cither within or without the district; as, namely, the priory of Gellingen, for instance, was transferred to the house of Hesse-Cassel as an hereditary temporal Principality and Imperial fief; ever fince which that house has inserted it in its arms and titles. By virtue also of this cession, the house of Hesse-Cassel, in the year 1654, took seat and voted in the college of Princes; and, by means of this Principality, is likewise entitled to the like privileges in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. His contingency for it to the Empire is two horse and nine foot, or fixty florins. This Principality, as incorporated with Hesse, is included in the district of Fulda; Hersfeld being its convocatory town. It confifts of the following prefectureships and places; viz.

Hersfeld, the capital of the Principality and lying on the Fulda, and containing a palace, a cathedral, a town-church, a gymnasium and a wealthy hospital.

Eichen, or Eichkof Bingarten, and Hattenbach, two feats with manours belonging to the Prince.

The bailiwicks and priories of Johannesberg, feated on the Haun, Petersberg and Blankenheim, the last of which stands near the Fulda betwixt Hersfeld and Rotbenburg, but both the other on hills in the neighbourhood of the town of Hersfeld.

The bailiwicks of the diffolved deanery, together with Tann and Rehrbach. The prefecturate of Lower-Aula, which is the largest in all this Principality.

The prefecturate of GEYSZ.

The prefecturate of LANDECK, so called from an ancient castle which also gave name to the adjacent forest of Landeckerberg, is likewise one of the largest and its produce answerable to its extent, containing, besides other places,

Schlenklengsfeld, a very confiderable village. The prefecturate of KREUTZBERG, in which is Kreutzberg, a large village, feated on the Werra. Near it stands

Philipsthal, which is the refidentiary feat of an appenage branch of Heffe-Caffel. On its fide too formerly flood the convent of Kreutzberg, which having been conferred by the Landgrave Charles on his prother

Philip, he rebuilt it in its present form and gave it his name.

The prefecturate of Frauensee, on the other side of the Werra, and which is but fmall. This prefecturate was formerly a convent belonging to the biflioprick of Hersfeld; but afterwards one half of it descended, by virtue of a mortgage, to the house of Hesse, which obtained the other half by the treaty of Weltphalia. The manfion-house here stands on a natural dam betwixt two large lakes.

Gellingen, once a priory, lies together with the prefecturate of Frankenbausen, in Thuringia, being a fief belonging to Schwarzburg-rudelstadts.

Schildschlag, a feudal bailiwick for Buchenau.

Obf. The parish of Ufboven, in the inspection of Langen-Salza, in *Thu*ringia, is a fief of Hersfeld; and for this reason the pastor, on his collation, must make his appearance before the consistory at Cassel.

The county of Sponheim, or Spanheim, lying betwixt the Rhine and the Mosel, in the countries formerly called Nobgau; Hunstruct, Trackgan and Bedgau was anciently divided into the hither and farther, the former of which properly bears the name of Sponheim and belonged to East-Franconia; but the latter, which is also called the county of Starkenburg, to Western-Franconia, or West-Rich.

§. 2. The first count of Sponkeim, known with any degree of certainty, was Elerhard; who, in the year 1044, founded a church on the mountain of Feldberg, not far from Kreusznach, and lived till the year 1065. He styled himself Count of Naumburg from a castle of that name belonging to him. Count Stephen of Sponkeim, who converted the church of Sponkeim into a convent, was probably his fon; and Megenhard, or Meinhard, Stephen's fon, continued the Sponheim line; and having completed the convent there, made an order, that the eldest of his sons, and, on his death, the eldest of his iffue, who was also lord of Kreusznach, should be patron and theasurer of the convent. His eldest son, Count Godfrey, succeeded to the county appenaged to his brother Crafto, together with the castle of Koppenstein and its dependencies; but these afterwards became a part of the convent of Sponbeim, Crafto being abbot thereof. It is not improbable that Count Eberhard was son to this Godfrey, and that he had for his sons the Counts Gerlach and Simon; as, also, that this Simon was father to Count John of Sponheim and Starkenburg; though all this stands in need of further enquiry and confirmation. Thus far, however, is certain, that the faid Count Yohn was the founder of all the fucceeding counts; he was likewise proprietor of the hither and farther county, and refided at the castle of Starkenburg on the Mosel. His spouse, Adelkaida, was sister to Henry, the second count of Sayn, who appointed his four fons heirs to his territories. These brothers agreed on a partition. John II. the eldest, obtained the castles of Starkenburg and Ellenbach, or Allenbach, together with Wendich, Winningen and Truize, as also the castles of Sponbeim and Dill; that is, about one third part of Sponheim: and, of the Sayn inheritance, the county of Sayn and other territories. On his first born fon, Godfrey, he conferred the county of Sayn, and he was the founder of all the subsequent counts of Sayn and Witgenstein. His fecond fon, Henry, continued the Starkenburg line of the house of Sponheim. Henry, brother to John II. obtained the lordship of Heinsberg; and Simon II. the other brother, the lordships of Kreuszenach and Bokelheim, together with a joint share of the castles of Sponbeim and Dill, and the administratorship of Sponheim and Schwabenheim, as also a portion with his brother Henry of Heinsberg in the Sponheim estate; namely, in Kastelaun, Neve and Kirchberg, and confequently two thirds of the Sponbeim lands. In three of his fons commenced three distinct branches of the house of Kreuszenach; viz. the John, Henry and Eberhard line.

§. 3. Simon IV. great-grandson to the above Count Simon II. left an heiress, by name Elizabeth, who married the Palsgrave Rupert Pipan, and after his death conferred one fifth of the anterior county to her father-in-law King Rupert, Elector-palatine and his heirs; and, in the year 1416, renewed this grant in favour of her coufin Lewis, Elector-palatine. The other four fifths of the anterior county devolved, on her decease, to Count John VI. of the Starkenburg line; and he also obtained the whole Sponbeim estate, excepting one fifth of the hither county, which he procured by the Bainheim partition in the year 1425, from the fons of his father's fifter Bernhard, magrave of Baaden, and Frederick, count of Veldenz. On his decease, in the year 1437, the margrave James, son to the former, and the above Count Frederick, entered, with respect to the farther county, into a perpetual coparceny with one another; and, at the fame time, into another with the Elector-palatine concerning the hither county. Anne, daughter and heiress of Frederick, count of Veldenz, on her marriage with Stephen, duke of Simmern, brought him two fifths of the hither and one half of the farther county, which are still possessed by the Simmern line. Otho Henry, the Elector-palatine, dying in the year 1559, and the Electorate thus escheating to Frederick III. duke of Simmern, one fifth of the hither county, of which the Electoral house had been proprietor, became thus annexed to the two fifths of the same county which the dukes of Simmern had been in possession of; by which means the new Electoral house was now proprietor of three fifths of the hither county; but, pursuant to the convention of Heidelberg, ceded one half of the farther to Wolfgang, duke of Deuxponts, and George John, duke of Veldenz; the former of whom, by virtue of an agreement made in the year 1556, became fole proprietor of it. The Elector, Frederick IV. bequeathed the Electorate to his eldest son Frederick V. settling on his other son, Lewis Philip, the territories of Simmern and Lautern, with three fifths of the hither county of Sponheim; but his fon and fuccessor, the Elector Charles Lewis, receded from this partition, and, by a compact made at Retisbon in the year 1653, procured to himself one fifth of all ecclesiastical and civil revenues of the town and prefecturate of Kreutznach; and fome years after obtained a part also of the sovereignty over the county of Sponheim by virtue of the fifth part, which had been ceded to him, which was renewed in the Kreutznach agreement. Thus, till the year 1673, the hither county continued under three lords, when Lewis Henry, the latt duke of Simmern, dying, the three fifths of the anterior county, which were before held by the count-palatine, devolved to the Electoral house only, to which also they at present belong. One half of the hither county, which, as above-mentioned, had devolved, in the year 1566, to Welfgang, duke of Deuxponts, was inherited by his younger fon Charles, who, from Birkenfeld, the place of his relidence, was likewife styled Duke of Birkenfeld. Charles Otho, his grandfon, by his eldest fon, George William, dying without male-heirs, in the year 1671, his grandson, Christian II. by his third son, Christian I. succeeded to one half of the hither county of Sponheim, as also to Bischweiler; and, by his wife Azatha Catherine, brought to his house the county of Raptlopstein. His fon, Christian III. duke of Birkenfeld, in the year 1733, acquired likewise the dukedom of Deuxponts and, of the Veldenz inheritance, the county of Lutzelstein in Alface, together with a vote for Veldenz in the Imperial and circular Diets, alternately with the Elector-palatine.

§. 4. Thus it appears that,

I. Of the hither county of Sponheim,

I. The Elector-palatine possesses three sists. For the sists which the Electoral house acquired by the counters Elizabeth, it never paid any distinct matricular assessment; but for the two sists annexed to it by the Simmern line, it surnishes three horse and ten foot, or seventy-six storins per month. Its quota to the chamber at Wetzlar is one hundred and eight rixdollars and twenty kruitzers. In that part belonging to the Elector-palatine is Kreutznach, or Creutzenach, in Latin Crucenacum, and more anciently Crucinianum, or Crucianiacum, a well-built town, divided by the river Nahe into the old and new. This place, is properly the capital of the county of Sponheim and the feat of an upper prefectureship. Under the first Emperors of the Franks was a palace here. In the year 1065, the Emperor Henry IV. made a grant both of his palace and other possessions at Kreutznach to the bishop-rick of Spire; but, in 1241, Conrad, bishop of Spire, sold these for 1100 silver marcs to Conrad, count of Sayn.

Vol. V. M

On a hill near the old town stands the castle of Kautzenberg, which was demolished by the French in the year 1689.

About half an hour from the town, up the river Nabe, at the entrance of a most delicious valley, are the Elector's two new falt-works. That on the left going up the river, and built in the year 1729, is called the Karlshalle; but the other, which was founded in the year 1743, and called Theodore's halle, lies to the right, being much the largest.

Langenlohnskeim and Upper-Hilberskeim, villages.

Spankeim, or Sponheim, a large village containing a feat. Near it is also the Benedictine abbey of St. Martin, to which it gave name, which was begun by Count Stephen in the year 1101, and finished by his son Megenhard in 1123, at which time it was also confecrated.

Diffbodenberg, a convent seated at the influx of the Glan into the Nahe, where, in 1541, an agreement was concluded betwixt John, duke of Simmern, and Duke Rupert, as guardian to Wolfgang, duke of Deuxponts.

Obs. Neu-Baumberg, Schonberg, Dalberg and Solzheim, once belonging to the upper prefecturate of Kreutznach, were made over to Mentz by the Elector-palatine in the year 1715.

2. The Prince of Baaden-Baaden two fifths; for which, and one half of the hither county, he is affeffed in the matricula in fix horse and twenty foot, or one hundred and fifty-two florins, having also a particular vote in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. In these two fifths are

1. The upper prefecturate of Kirchberg, lying on the Hunfruck.

Kirchberg, a small town, with a castle, had anciently counts of its own, but fo early as the thirteenth century has been in the possession of the house of Sponheim.

Densen, the ancient Dumnissum.

2. The prefecturate of Sprendlingen.

3. The prefecturate of NAUMBURG, formerly called Neuenburg on the Nahe. The castle of that name was the residence of Count Eberhard of Stonbeim, who also borrowed his title from thence.

II. Of the farther county the Palfgrave of Deux-ponts Birkenfeld poffesses half, for which he is taxed in the matricula at two and a half horse and eight foot, or fixty-two florins; the other half belonging to Baaden-Banden. In this part are,

1. The prefecturate of BIRKENFELD, containing Birkenfeld, a town. The duke of Deux-ponts, on his acquistion of half of the county of Sponheim, made this his place of refidence, bearing it also in his title.

- 2. The prefecturate of Allenbach or Ellenbach, lying betwixt the rivers Nahe and Glans.
- 3. The prefecturate of WINTERBURG, lying not far from Sponheim, and formerly belonging to the Kreutznach line. 4. The

- 4. The prefecturate of Erstein or Horstein, together with a town of the same name.
- 5. The prefecturate of Koppenstein, fituate on the river Simmern, and once constituting a part of the hither county.
- 6. Dill, a half prefecturate feated on the river Biber, and formerly in the possession of the Kreutznach line.

7. The prefecturate of KASTELAUN, in which is a castle of the same name, belonged at first also to the Kreutznach line.

8. Trarbach, anciently Tranerbach, a town lying on the Mosel, and some ing a joint presecturate. The parish-church here is common both to Roman catholics and Lutherans. In it is also a Lutheran gymnasium. This town is a sief of Trier, and was once a good fortification, which was further defended by Grevenburg sort. In the year 1703, it was taken by the assist, and in 1704, both the town and sort; but in 1734, the French making themselves masters of them, the town was dismantled and the fort demo-lished. Its neighbourhood is a fine wine country.

Opposite the town, on the other side of the Mosel, France, after the treaty of Nimeguen, erected a fort called Montroyal; but the demolition of it was made an article of the peace of Ryswick.

9. Starkenburg, a castle seated on the Mosel, and formerly a residence of the counts of Sponheim.

10. Emkirch, a large village standing on the Mosel, and a sief of the Elector-palatine's.

11. Traben, a church village fituate on the Mosel.

12. Wolf, a convent and village on the Mosel.

13. Crover or Crever, otherwise Reich, i. e. 'a kingdom or empire,' is fo called as belonging formerly to the Kings of the Romans and Emperors only. This district consists of six villages, which are Crove, Reybel, Kinbeim, Erden, Kinderbeuren and Bengel. It belongs in common to the Paligrave of Birkenfeld and Baaden-Baaden, but chiefly to the former. The Elector of Iners has also a share in it.

The MARGRAVATE of NOMENTE.

IES in the dutchy of Loraine, and in the years 1735 and 1736 was ceded, together with that dutchy to France, notwithstanding which Francis Stephen, the late duke of Loraine, and now Emperor, retains in quality of Margrave of Nomeny, his seat and vote in the imperial Diet, as also in that of the circle of the Upper Rhine, as a personal privilege. In the acts and matriculas of the Empire all Loraine, without any exception, is included in the Circle of the Upper Rhine; but it is only on account of the Margravate of Nomeny that he is a member of the college of Princes and the Diet of the upper Circle of the Rhine, and that he pays the stipulated sum of 1000 slorins. Since the cession, however, of this Margravate to France all payments on account thereof, due either to the Empire, Circle or Chamber at Wetzlar have been discontinued.

The PRINCIPALITY and COUNTY of S A L M,

I E S on the Wasgau mountains betwixt Loraine and Lower-Alface, and in contradistinction to the lower county of Salm, within the dutchy of Luxemburg, is also called the upper county of Salm. John and Simon, ions to John, count of Salm, divided the ancient county of Salm into two equal portions. Paul, the last male descendant of the former left a daughter named Christina, who, on her marriage with Francis of Loraine, count of Vaudemont, brought him one half of the county of Salm, together with other estates of her father's. Johannetta, only daughter and heires to the beforementioned Count Simon, in the year 1459 annexed one half of the county to her husband, John Wild and Rhinegrave, from whom was descended the Wild and Rhinegrave Philip Otho, count of Salm. Neufville, who in the year 1623 was raised to be a Prince of the Empire. His fon Leopold Philip, Charles Wild and Rhingrave, together with other Princes of Salm, lord of Vinstingen and Anholt, was in 1654 admitted into the college of Princes. His fon Charles Thierry Otho, Prince of Salm, in the year 1668, obtained from the directory of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine at Worms, a testimonial that the princely county of Salm (for so it is termed in the Prince's petition and the testimonial of the directory) was and should continue an immediate imperial county and member of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. In his fon Lewis Otho became extinct the ancient line of the Princes of Salm, on which John Philip Dominic, Joseph Albert, his brother, Philip Joseph and Nicholas Leopold, sons to his father's brother, and all great grandsons to Frederic the Great, founder of the Flemish collateral line of that of Salm, agreed in a partition of the lands and titles of Salm. The last line was named the Houghtat or Salm zu Salm, and the two former the Leutz-Loes or Salm-Kirburg. These two lines, in the year 1743, divided the lands which had devolved to them into two equal shares, voting alternately in the Diet as Prince of Salm. Its affeffment in the imperial matrisula is two horse and four foot, or forty florins per month; and to the chamber chamber at Wetzlar it pays twenty rthler, twenty-five kruitzers and one-fourth; but this taxation is not as yet adjusted.

In the county of Salm are the following places, viz.

Salm, a large village, having a castle near it.

Unsere Frau Zum, a pilgrimage seated on a hill near a lake, where the river Saar has its source.

Breusch, a village.

Blessa, Gesell, Gutbrunn or Sassi, together with one half of Wagenback; and of Steinthal and Deutsch Rumpach one third.

Exclusive of this county, the Prince of Salm is proprietor of the lord-ships of Nefville or Neuwiller, on the Saar; Ogviller, as also of Pouligny and Bayon.

One half of the lordship of Vinstingen or Finstingne (not Vinstringa, in French called Fenestrange, lying on the Saar) devolved to the Wild and Rhinegraves by Johanna daughter of Nicholas count of Saarwerden, who held it in right of his wife Barbara, eldest daughter to the last lord of Vinstingen.

The Prefecturate of WILD-GRAVATE or KIRBURG, lying on the Nahe, devolved to the Prince of Salms from the Kirburg estates by the judicial acts of 1696 and 1701. Kirnburg or Kirburg castle, lying on a mountain, was destroyed by the French in the year 1735. A part of the little town of Kirn belonged once to the Rhinegraves Dhaun.

The large village of Windeskim, not far from Alzey, a town belonging to the Elector-palatine.

A part of the upper prefecturate of Meddersheim on the Nahe.

Obs. Their share of the Prince of Salm in the succession of the Dhann family will be specified in the sequel.

Of the PRINCIPALITY and House of N A S S A U, in General.

§. 1. THE Principality of Nassau, in general, lies in the Wetterau, and occurs in the splendid map of the Wetterau, designed by Stetter and engraved by Visscher, and partly also afterwards imitated by Homann Sitette. He has also favoured the public with an excellent distinct map of this principality published by Visscher's widow. Homann's map consisting of a part of the Wetterau, is the hundred and fixth of the Atlas of Germany. The length of the whole Principality is computed at twelve and the breadth at seven German miles. Though it is too, for the most part, woody and mountainous, yet is it not without fine arable and meadow lands. The Wester-walde in particular affords a rich pasturage, whence graziery and its appurtenances are there very effential articles.

§. 2. The descent of the house of Nassau from Otho lord of Lamenberg (mentioned before) who lived in the 10th century, has been placed in a new light by John James Reinhard, in his concise treatises, vol. ii. p. 100. The counts of Nassau were particularly possessed of considerable places and lands about Nurnberg, and in the year 1360, Count John fold the town of Alterf, with eighteen villages and other estates to Albert, Burgrave of Nurnberg. They have also very early acquired great estates in the Wetterau, and were likewise hereditary governors of the Rhine, and cup-bearers to the archbishop of Mentz. The founder of the present Princes of Nassau was Count Henry I. furnamed the Wealthy, who equally left to his two fons Walram and Otho I. the whole county of Nassau, with its feudal, patrimonial, and hereditary lands. In a compact of partition made in the year 1255 they held the patrimonial house and prefecturate of Nassau, with other family privileges, in an indivisable community; but the other part of the county they divided. Weilburg, Wisheden and Idstein, became Walram's part, and Otho I. had Siegen, Dillenburg, Herborn, Beilstein, Hadamar and Ems.

Walram, fon to Adolphus became King of the Romans, and his fon Gerlach acquired Burg and the town of Weilnau, together with a part of this lordship, leaving two sons behind him, namely, Adolphus and John I. the former of whom succeeded to Wishaden and Idstein, but his line came to a period in 1605, in the person of John Lewis. John I. by his first wife had Mchrenberg, Gleiberg, and Huttenberg; and by his fecond, the county of Saarbruck, exclusive of the prefecturate of Kirberg, which he also added to his house. His fon Philip augmented it with Kirchheim, Stauff, Polanden, and Reichelskeim. He likewise had two sons, namely, Philip II. and John II. the former of whom succeeded to Mahrenberg and Gleiberg, and the latter had the county of Saarbruck for his possession, whilst Kirchheim, Stauff, and Polanden, together with other places, were held in common. John Lewis, son to John II. by marriage acquired the county of Saarwerden and the lordship of Lahr, but his line failed in his son John IV. Philip I. continued the Weilburg branch, and his great-grandfon Philip III. had for his two fons Elbert and Philip IV. who in the year 1574, on the decease of the above-mentioned John IV. inherited Nassau, Saarbruck and Saarwerden, together with half the lordship of Kirchheim. This Philip IV. died without issue, but Lewis II. Son to Albert, succeeded the before-mentioned John Lewis of the Wishaden line, leaving three fons behind him, namely, William Lewis, John and Ernest Casimir, the first of whom obtained Ottweiler, Saarbruck, and Usingen; the second Idstein, Wishaden, and Labr, which lands, on the death of his fon George Augustus, in 1721, fell to the descendants of his eldest brother. The portion of the third was Weilburg, the Nasjau

Nassau part of Mebrenberg, a third of the county of Saarwerden and a part of Homburg. William Lewis, of Nassau-Saarbruck, left three sons, viz. John Lewis of Ottweiler, Gustavus Adolphus of Saarbruck, and Walrath of Usingen; the two sons of the first, Frederick Lewis and Charles Lewis, died without heirs in 1723 and 1728; but the son of the third, namely, William Henry, Prince of Nassau-Usingen, left two sons, who were the sounders of the two present ruling lines; namely, Prince Charles of the Nassau-Saarbruck-Usingen, and Prince William Henry of that of Nassau-Saarbruck-Saarbruck. On the 23d of September 1735, a partition was agreed on betwixt them, by which the last gave to the former all the inherited and escheated land on this side the Rhine, and to the latter those lying on the other side of that river.

It was also determined, that these two parcels of land should not be any further divided among the descendants on either side, but that the succession should continue in both lines, according to the right of primogenitureship.

The Weilburg line, founded by Ernest Cosimir, still existing.

The offspring of Otho I. and the partitions made among them are specified above.

At present the only remaining line of the descendants of Otho, is that of Nassau-Dillenburg-Dietz, which stiles itself of Orange, and is hereditary Stadtholder of the United Netherlands.

§. 3. Of the principal line of Walram, John I. was created a Prince by the Emperor Charles IV. so early as the year 1365; but his descendants termed themselves only counts. In the year 1688, the Emperor Leopold ratified the grant of the dignity of Prince to that line, on which Walrath of Nassau-Usingen, George Augustus of Nassau-Idsein, and, lastly, also in 1737, Charles Augustus of Nassau-Weilburg assumed the same, which by the first and last has been transmitted to their descendants.

Of the Otho chief line the first Princes were John Lewis of Nasjau-Hadamar, Lewis Henry of Nassau-Dillenburg, William Frederick of Nassau-

Dietz, and John Francis and William Maurice of Nassau-Siegen.

The title of the Princes of the old Walram line is, Prince of Nassau, Count of Saarbruck and Saarwerden, and lords of Labr-Wishaden and Idstein. Their arms are for Nassau, with a lion topaz in a field saphire semee of billets topaz; for the county of Saarbruck, Azur a lion pearl semee of crosslets pearl; for the county of Saarwerden, diamond a spread-eagle argent; for Mors, topaz a sess diamond; for Weilnau, topaz two leopards passaut ruby; for Mebrenberg, emerald a saltire cross topaz semee with crosslets topaz; for Mablberg, topaz a lion sable; for Labr, topaz on a sess ruby.

The younger branch of the Otho family depends wholly at present on Prince William V. of Orange, and Stadtholder of the United Provinces, whose title, with respect to the Nassau territories, is that of Prince of Nassau, Count of Katzenellnbogen, Vianen and Dietz, and Lord of Beilylein;

his arms for Nassau are, saphire a lion topaz, semee of billets topaz; for Katzenellnbogen, topaz a lion rampant ruby; for Vianen, topaz on a sess pearl; for Dietz, ruby two lions passant topaz.

§. 4. The Princes of the old Walram line have as yet no feat or vote in the college of Princes, being members only of that of the Wetterau Imperial counts, and from these they have long since detached themselves. In the Circle of the Upper-Rhine they have sive votes, namely, for Weilburg, Usingen, and Idstein, which is lodged in the ruling Prince of Nassar-bruck-Usingen; and for Saarbruck and Ottweiler, which is annexed to the ruling Prince of Nassar-bruck-Saarbruck. The Princes of the younger branch of the Otho samily acquired a feat and vote in the college of Princes in the year 1659, and have two other votes, which are both inherent in the Stadtholder of the United Netherlands, who has also two votes in the Diet of Westphalia.

§. 5. In the circular contributions of the Empire, Nassau-Weilburg pays for a Roman month forty-two florins forty kruitzers. Nassau-Saarbruck-Usingen, for Usingen, twenty florins thirty-three and a half kruitzers; and for Idsein eighty-two florins forty kruitzers; and consequently in the whole one hundred and three florins thirteen and one third kruitzers. Nassau-Saarbruck-Saarbruck, pays for Saarbruck, thirty-four florins thirty-three and a half kruitzers; and for Ottweiler twenty-seven florins thirty-three one third kruitzers, in all fixty-two florins fix kruitzers and two thirds.

Of Nassau-Dillenburg and Siegen some account has been given above. Nassau-Dietz, in the partition of Loraine, made in the year 1654, is assessed at fixty-three 1554, is assessed at fixty-three 1554, is assessed at fixty-three 1554, is for instance. The matricular taxation towards the chamber of Wetzlar, is for Nassau-Usingen, Idslein and Wisbaden forty-four rix-dollars sixty-one and a half kruitzers. Nassau-Saarbruck for Weilburg thirty-five rix-dollars seventy-three and a half rthler. for Nassau-Saarbruck and Ott-weiler twenty-six rix-dollars eighty-two kruitzers, and Nassau-Dietz sorty-one rixdollars seventy-nine and a half kruitzers. Concerning Nassau-Siegen and Dillenburg, see above.

The COUNTY of N A S S A U-D I E T Z.

§. 1. THIS country lies on the river Lahn, being formerly called the Golden County, on acount of its fertility. It is a fief of Trier, having been granted to the archbishop of that city by the Emperor Frederick III. in so absolute a manner that the possession of this county was to hold it as a fief of the Elector of Triers, as it had before been held of the Emperor and Empire.

§. 2. This county constitutes a part of the stile of the Landgraves of Hesse, but whether they have any share at all in it, or whether Ems. Reickenberg, Nahstede, Hohenstein, and other places, in reality belong to it, is still matter of debate.

To this county belongs

1. The prefecturate of DIETZ.

Dietz, in Latin Dietia, or Detia, the capital of this prefecturate, lies on the Labn, over which it has a bridge of stone, being divided into the old and new town: the Prince's palace here stands on a hill. The Protestants have two churches in it, and the Lutherans one.

Oranienstein, a seat of the Prince's on the Lahn, about one quarter of an hour distant from Dietz: on its site originally stood the nunnery of Thier-stein or Durstein.

The villages of Old-Dietz and Freien-Dietz.

2. The prefecturate of HANSTETTEN. In it

Hanstetten, a village and seat lying on the Aar, formerly belonged to a Nobleman, but at present to this Prince.

Schuffen, properly Schiessheim, also a village.

The village of Deuborn and Eufingen, together with that of Gnaden, which was formerly a Ciftercian nunnery, but is now a church and fchool fituate betwixt the prefecturates of Kirberg and Camberg.

3. The prefecturate of Kirchberg or Kirberg, belonging both to Nassau-Dietz and Nassau-Idstein, or Usingen. In it is Kirchberg or Kirberg, a walled country town, containing about eighty burghers, exclusive of three mansion-houses of Nobles, and Haringen, Nauheim, Neshach and Ohren.

4. The prefecturate of CAMBERG, of which Nassau-Dietz and the elector of Triers are joint proprietors.

5. The prefecturate of Nassau, one half of which is in the possession of Nassau-Dietz, a fourth in that of Nassau-Usingen, and the other fourth belongs to Nassau-Weilburg. Exclusive of a number of villages in this presecturate is Nassau, a small town situate on the Labn, the church of which is used in common both by the Lutherans and Calvinists.

On the other fide of the river facing the town, and on a high mountain, formerly stood Nasfauberg, a place of very great antiquity, and the original house of the Nasfau family, but now a fief of Triers. Not far from it lies Stein, the patrimonial house of the barons of that place.

Dausenau or Taussenau, a large village situate on the Lahn.

6. Nassau-Dietz, possesses also a part of the Ems baths, of which men-Vol. V. tion has been made in the prefecturate of Braubach, lying in the parish of Kirderf, which is but at a small distance from the lordship of Schaumberg, and hes contiguous to

The prefecturate of Lamberg, which comes in the next fection.

The lands of Naffau-IV eilburg.

These lie not together, nor are they all of equal goodness; but the yearly produce of them to the Prince exceeds 100,000 rix-dollers.

§. 3. These lands include,

1. The county of Nasjau-Weilburg, on the Lahn, having a filver and copper mine-work, and abounding in flone mixed with iron, and woods. In it is Weilburg, a handsome town, standing on an eminence on the river Laba, over which it has a bridge of stone. The Prince's palace here contains some very elegant apartments, with a fine garden belonging to it, and a chapel answerable to the whole. All the roads near the town lie in a direct line, and are planted on each side with a row of trees.

In the neighbourhood is a large Menagerie, with a pleasure-house; and on the other side of the Lahne, lies an estate of the Prince's called Webrholz.

Selters, a village fituate on the Lahn, near which is a mineral spring; but this is not to be consounded with the celebrated medicinal springs of Lower-Selters.

Freinsfels, a village, where once stood a feat called Sonnenberg.

Escherskausen, a village. One half of the castle here, together with its appurtenances, was purchased in August 1724 by Prince Charles, of Sabina Lamberta, baroness of Friesens, descended of the Esch samily; and the archbihop of Worms invested him with it at a legal male-fies.

Philipplein, a castle seated on a mountain, but lying in ruins.

2. The prefecturate of Weilmunster. In it lies

Weilmunster, a country town standing on the Weilbach. This country affords not only a great deal of iron ore, but has also some silver and copper mines.

The villages of Lutzeldorf, Langenbach, &c.

3. The prefecturate of LAINBERG, fituate on the Lahn, confifts of Lahnberg, a country town, and three villages, held in common by Naffau-Weilburg and Nasjau-Dietz.

4. The prefecturate of MEHRENBERG, once a lordship, which Prince

Your I. count of Naffau obtained with his first wife. In it is Mehrenberg, a country town, and Barig, a village.

The prefecturate of Kleeberg, belonging both to Nassau-Weilburg and Hesse-Darmstadt, has been mentioned above amongst the possessions of Hesse-Darmstadt.

6. The prefecturate of HUTTENBERG was formerly also held in common with Heffe-Darmstadt, but on a division of it in 1703, Nasfau-Weilburg had for its particular share the villages of Lutzelinden, Harafleim, II-chemm, Lewer-Kirm, Dornholzbaufen, and Rechtenbach. Prince John I. count of Nafau obtained this presecturate with his first wife.

7. The prefecturate of GLEIBERG descended likewise to the same Prince after the fame manner. In it is Gleiberg or Geiburg, a large village, containing a feat.

Krofderf Salzboten, and other villages.

2. The large country town of Reichelskeim, fituate on the river Horlet, not far from the prefecturate of Bingenheim, belongs to Hesse-Darmshadt. This town lies in the marc of Fulda, forming a fiel thereof. It was annexed to the house of Nasjan by Count Philip V. and the yearly income of this place is about 3000 florins.

3. A part of the parith of Kirderf.

4. A part of the prefecturate of NASSAU, which one year with another, is reckoned to bring in 4500 florins.

5. A part of the Vierberrisch.

- 6. Naffan-Weilburg, and Naffau-Idlein or Ufingen, jointly possess in the Wetterau, the Zweykerrische, as it is called, to which belong the villages of Mylen or Muhlen on the Muhlbach, as also Enlightesen or Edightsen, Lysonn, Strut, Weltert, Rudlen farm and Schonau, which last was tormerly a convent of Benedictines.
- 7. The lordship of Kirchheim and Stauff lies on the high ridge of mountains called Donnersberg, running betwixt the prefecturates of Aizev and Lautern, and the counties of Leiningen and Falkenslein. It is planted with oak, beach, and chestnut-trees. This prefecturate was annexed to it by Philip I. and consists of the prefecturates of Kirchheim and Stauff, containing, exclusive of twenty villages, the following places, viz.

Kirchheim-Poland, a small town, and the seat of a presecturate. In its neighbourhood stood Poland-house, now a farm.

Heuberg, a manor near the preceding town, part of the revenues of which were in the year 1686, fold by the owner Christopher John von Friesenbausen to Lewis William, baron of Stauff, who in 1700 again disposed of them to Count John Ernst, of Nassau Weilburg, who in the year 1706 purchased of the barons of Stauff the whole manor, together with the little estate of Bischeim.

Rothenkirchen, which is a sequestrated convent.

Dannfels on Donnersberg; having abundance of chestnut-trees in its neighbourhood.

Stauff, a prefecturate and feat.

Gellheim, formerly Gillenheim or Gellenheim, a country town, celebrated in history for the victory gained there in the year 1298, by Albert of Austria over Adolphus of Nassau, who losing his life on the spot, was hastily interred in the then neighbouring convent of Rosenthal. A monument, however, was erected to him on the field of bartle, with this infeription: Adolphus à Nassau, Rom. Rex, interficitur apud Gellinheim.

N 2 ment,

8. Of the lordship of Saarwerden and the vogtey of Herbitzheim, which will be further treated of in the sequel, Nasjau-Weilburg, by a division made in 1745, obtained one third, in which part are very rich salt-springs; but it has been agreed betwixt Prince Charles Augustus and France, that they should not be worked; France paying yearly a sum of money to Nassau-Weilburg, and surnishing from its adjacent works a certain quantity of salt, which the Prince sells to his subjects at a stated price. The principal place in that part belonging to Nassau-Weilburg and the seat of the presecturate is

Neu-Saarwerden, a town lying directly opposite to Bockenbeim, and built quite new from the ground towards the beginning of the present century.

9. Of the prefecturate of Homburg, which will occur hereafter, one third belongs to Nasjau-Weilburg, which house has also a share of Wollstein.

The Countries belonging to NASSAU-SAARBRUCK-USINGEN.

Of these the greatest part lie contiguous, and produce about 120 or 130,000 florins per annum. They consist of

I. The county of Nassau-Usingen, in which is

1. The Prefecturate of Usingen. In it

Usingen, a town feated on the Usbach, with a handsome palace, once the residence of the Princes of Nassau-Usingen, Near it in the year 1751 was erected a large Menagerie.

Gravenwisbach, commonly called Grunwisbach, and other villages.

2. The prefecturate of Weilnau, anciently a particular lordship.

New-Weilnau, a large village, with a feat on the Weilbach.

Old-Weilnau, a village, containing a ruined castle.

Landslein, an ancient castle, situate on the Weilbach.

2. The joint part of the prefecturate of WERHEIM.

3. The lordship of Idstein, a very mountainous and woody tract, little cultivated.

The Nassau-Idsein line failing in the year 1721, in the person of Prince George Augustus, this lordship fell to Frederick Lewis Count of Nassau-Ott-weiler, and Charles Lewis Count of Nassau-Saarbruck, and on the decease of the latter in 1723, the former became sole proprietor thereof: But he also dying in 1728, it devolved to the Princes of Nassau-Usingen, Charles and William Henry, who, in 1736, agreeing on a division, Prince Charles obtained the lordship of Idsein. To it belongs

1. The prefecturate of IDSTEIN, containing

Idstein, a small town, honoured with a palace of the Prince's and a gymnasium of Lutherans.

Wurstorf, and other villages.

Walrabenstein, a castle lying in ruins, and a small village.

Walsdorf, a fequestered nunnery.

2. The prefecturate of Wehen. In it

Weken, a large village containing a feat.

Bleidenstatt, a large village fituate on the Aar, and having a college of regular canons subject to Mentz.

Adolphseck, a village lying on the Aar, near which, among high and wild mountains, stands a ruined castle.

3. The prefecturate of Burg-Schwalbach. In it

Burg-Schwalbach, a small town containing a feat, erected by a Count of Katzenellnbogen.

Holefels, a castle standing on a mountain.

The prefecturate of Kirchberg or Kirberg is held jointly with Naffau-Dietz, and has been already described above.

IV. The lordship of Wishaden lies on the Rhine, being a good wine country. It appears to have descended to the Counts of Nassau immediately from the Emperors of Germany, as an Imperial lordship; and appertained to them at the beginning of the 13th century. In the division made by the Princes Charles and William Henry in the year 1736, it devolved to the former, together with the rest of the Idstein inheritance; and contains Wishaden, a handsome town, populous and thriving by its celebrated warm baths, and by being the feat of the regencies of Idstein and Usingen. The Prince's palace here was built in the beginning of the prefent century. The Mattiaci fontes calidi of Pliny, and the Mattiacæ aquæ mentioned by Ammianus, are apparently no other than the warm baths of this place, the country being at that time inhabited by the Mattiaci. Wishaden was certainly known to the Romans and the Heidenische maure, or heathen well, which runs through the present town of Wisbaden to the Heidenischen berg, appears to have been a work of that nation; and a part of the boundaries of this town are derived from the lined trenches (fosse palis sudibusque munitæ) thrown up by Drusus in the modern Wetterau, opposite to Mentz, for the covering of the Rhine. In the days of the Kings of the Franks, in this town was a royal court, Curtis regia, or Saal, i. e. a hall, of which the Saalgasse, or Hall-street, still bears the name. In the year 1318, it held out a vigorous flege against the combined forces of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and Baldwin archbishop of Triers, who were obliged to decamp from before it. In 1547, it was burnt down, and fuffered greatly in the wars of the 17th century, particularly in the year 1644. This place has been confiderably improved by Prince George Augustus.

Biberich, a village fituated on the Rhine, with a feat belonging to it erected by Prince George Augustus, and embellished by Prince Charles, and at prefent the usual residence of the Prince of Nasjau-Usingen. Exclusive of its delightful situation this place is large and stately.

Schierstein, a church village; its wine is held in great repute. Nirnberg, a manor of the Princes; producing also good wine.

Moskach, a large village.

Dotzheim, Erbenkeim, Berstatt, Kloppenheim, Nauroth, all large church villages.

Sonnenberg, a large village with a castle lying in ruins.

Charenthal, a manor-house belonging to the Prince; but originally a nunnery.

5. A part of the Zweyberrischen.

6. A part of the parish of Kirdorf. 7. A part of the prefecturate of NASSAU:

3. A part of the Vierberrischen.

Obf. The Vierkerrischen, of which mention has been more than once made before, is a territory belonging separately to Nassau-Usingen, Nassau-Weilburg, and Hesse-Darmstadt. It lies north of, and partly within, the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, consisting of several villages and farms.

9. The lordship of Labr or Lobr in the Ortenau. Henry von Gerolseck, lord of Lahr, dying in the year 1426 without male heirs, this lordship devolved to John count of Mors and Saarwerden, who married his heiress Adelheida; and on the failure of that line descended, by means of Catharine heires of Saarwerden, to Count John Lewis of Nassau; but it was afterwards claimed by Gangolf and Walther, another branch of the lords of Gerolfeck, and after a process carried on from the year 1532 to 1625, the contesting parties agreed that Count Lewis of Nasjau should hold the lordthip for himself and his heirs; but that on the other hand he should discharge a debt of 24,000 florins due to the Margrave of Baaden Hochberg; and likewife pay to James lord of Hoben-Gerolfeck and Sulz, who absolutely renounced all claim to it, 100,000 florins, exclusive of two other fums, for which he ceded one half of the lordship of Lahr as a fecurity. This payment devolved to Margrave Frederick V. of Baaden and Hochberg, as heir to his wife, the last heiress of Gerolfeck; and the interest not being paid, the Margrave, in the year 1659, on application to the Emperor, obtained an order that he should be put in possession of the lordship of Lahr as a security till fuch time as the interest due on it, which had continued unpaid ever fince the year 1654, should be discharged. Accordingly Baaden-Dourlach held this lordship till the year 1726, when the house of Nassau redeemed it. The Princes of Baaden, however, still bear it in their title. In the division of this lordship, it fell to Count John of Nassau-Idstein, on the failure of whose line, it escheated to Nassau-Usingen; and in 1735, Prince Charles of Nassau-Saarbruck-Usingen became proprietor thereof. It brings in anmually about five or fix thousand florins, and contains Labr or Lobr, a fmall town lying on the river Schutter, which in the year 1676, was laid in ashes by the French, the other places of this lord-ship undergoing the like fate.

The church villages of Dinglingen, Hugfwevher, Altenheim, as also the village of Mictersheim, together with the little scat of Butensleig, and some other places.

The Snarbruck Lands belonging to NASSAU-SAARBRUCK.

Most of these are to be seen in the second leaf of Homann's map of the course of the Rhine, where it runs betwixt Basel and Bonne.

1. The county of Saarbruck lies in the Westreich, bordering to the west and fouth on Loraine, eastward on the upper prefecturate of Deuxponts, together with the lordships of Bliescastel, Ilingen, and Ottoveiler; northward it joins to the jurisdiction of Lebach in the Vierberrische and the presecturate of Schauenberg in Loraine, as also in other smaller territories. It is for the most part fandy and woody, with here and there fome good corn land in it, but abounds in iron and pit-coal. The river Saar and the road leading out of Germany to France furnish this county with great advantages for trassic. The do Irine of Luther was propagated all over this country towards the close of the 16th century, and though catholicism began only at the time of the French reunion to diffuse itself into certain parts, yet it has still retained the superiority. This country had once counts of its own, on the extinction of whom, in the year 1380, it devolved to Count John of Nassau, by his marriage with Johannetta heiress of Saarbruck. On the failure of the Nasfau-Saarbruck and Ottsveiler lines, in 1722 and 1728, it escheated to Nassau-Usingen, and by the partition in 1735 was affigured to Prince William Henry. All that the house of Nassau holds as a fief from the Empire is an independent possession and toll-right. In it is Saarbruck, a town lying on the river Saar, which was fet on fire and its walls destroyed by the Imperialists on their recovery of it from the French in the year 1676; but was again rebuilt, and now consists of about two hundred houses with a Lutheran and Calvinist church. The Prince's palace here, which is not without grandeur, was erected by Prince William Henry.

S. Johann, a town lying opposite to the preceding, on the other side of the Saar; and which, exclusive of its being equal to it in extent, has a rampart and moat. Ever since the reunion the catholics have been in possession of the old church here, and since the year 1727 a new one has been erected for the Lutherans. These two towns communicate by means of a bridge.

S. Arundel, or S. Arnual, once a canonry, lies half an hour's diffance from Saarbruck: its revenues are applied to the support of the Lutheran churches, pastors, schools, and poor.

A com-

A commandery of the Teutonic order, feated at a quarter of an hour's distance below Saarbruck, under the sovereignty of Saarbruck, but belonging to the provincial commander of Loraine.

Wadgassen Valdegass, an abbey of Præmonstratenses, situate on the Saar. Its subjection to the sovereignty of Saarbruck was resigned to it both by a decree of the chamber at Wetzlar in the year 1722 and also by a compact in the year 1728. Within the county it contains five villages, as also some others without.

A confiderable number of villages likewise on both sides the Saar.

2. The lordship of Ottweiler borders, to the north, on the prefecturate of S. Wendel, in the electorate of Triers and the prefecturate of Schauenburg in Loraine; to the west on the same and the county of Saarbruck; southwest on the lordship of Bliescastle, and eastward on Deuxponts. It is a good corn country, contains several woods and pleasing successions of hills and vallies, being watered by the river Blies. Towards the close of the sixteenth century Lutheranism was introduced here, but during the French re-union Popery began to lift up its Head, though it has never been able to attain the ascendency. This lordship has long constituted a part of the county of Saarbruck, and, in the year 1380, devolved, together with that country, to the counts of Nassau; since which it has undergone the like revolutions. It is an Imperial free Property, and the toll-right here only is a fief of the Empire.

Ottweiler, a small open town, situate among mountains, and containing an old castle and a Lutberan and Catholic church; the latter of which lies in the suburbs. It is the seat of an upper presecturate, and near it stood the convent of Westmunster.

Neukirchen, a feat, standing on a hill, with a village of the same name. Divers small and large villages.

3. The county of Saarwerden lies in Westreich. Towards the west and north it borders on Loraine; fouthward on the lordships of Vinstingen and Lutzelsein, and eastward is bounded by the lordships of Bitsch and Diemeringen. It boafts a fruitful foil, which has plenty of wood and produces good wine, being divided by the river Saar, which runs quite through it. This territory had once its particular counts; but, on the failure of them, in the year 1527, devolved by marriage to Count John Lewis of Nassau Saarbruck. Not long after the bishop of Mentz assumed it with a view of conferring it as a fief on his cousin the duke of Loraine, which produced a complaint from the house of Nassau to the aulic council, who, in the year 1629, decreed, that Nassau should resign the towns of Bockenbeim and Old-Saarwerden, as also the fiefs of Metz, and retain all the villages as its own free and proper possession. Hereupon Loraine forcibly made itself master of the whole country, together with all the villages and the vogtey of Herbitzheim; but, by an accommodation concluded at the Diet all was again restored restored to Nassau, Snarwerden and Bockenbeim excepted. Of this share in the county of Saarwerden, which belongs to the Nassaus, and brings in about 27,000 florins, Nassau-Saarbruck, in a partition made in the year 1745 required two thirds, and Nassau-Weilburg one third. Of the latter we have already treated; and in the former is

Hartkirchen, anciently only a village, but raised to a town in the year 1746, and at present the seat of the Prince's presecturate.

Lorenzen, a village, in which the Prince has a feat.

IV. The vogtey of Herbitzheim lies below the county of Saarwerden on both fides of the river Saar. It is composed of a number of villages, the revenues of which were once payable to the nunnery of Herbitzheim. At present it lies in ruins, and the counts of Nassau-Saarbruck act as administrators of the convent; but in the 16th century, the whole devolved to the house of Nassau. Of this vogtey two thirds belong to Nassau-Saarbruck.

V. The prefecturate of Homburg lies in the Wasgau, being seated amidst the lordship of Bliescastel and the territories of Deuxponts, and the palatinate; five ninths of it belong to Nassau Saarbruck-Saarbruck, and sour ninths to the house of Nassau-Weilburg; the principal place of which is Homburg, a town founded in the year 1682. The ancient castle here was razed in pursuance of the treaty of Baaden.

VI. The joint district of Wolftein or Welflein belongs to Naffau-Saarbruck and Naffau-Weilburg.

VII. The prefecturate of Jugenheim, with a town of the same name.

VIII. The Kellerey of Rosenthal, situate in the lordship of Kirchheim, the yearly produce of which is about 3000 florins. In it Rosenthal, once a convent.

The COUNTY of WALDECK.

§. 1. OF this county a map has been taken by Meurs, which is to be feen in Ortelius and Mercator; Schenk and Valk have also each of them published one; but that of professor Nicolai published by Homann's heirs in 1733, and which is the hundred and fourth in the Atlas of Germany, far surpasses them all.

§. 2. This county, towards the north, borders on the diocese of Pader-born; eastward on Hesse, and the prefecturate of Fritzlar in the Electorate of Mentz; southward also on Hesse, and westward is bounded by the dutchy of Westphalia. Its length is computed at about fix miles, and its breadth at five.

§. 3. This county abounds in grain and cattle, having also large woods, and the mountains in it contain iron, lead and copper, and even some gold, which is esteemed equal in value to that of Hungary. Of the gold which Vol. V.

is gathered out of the Eder, the Prince has caused medals to be struck, and a magnificent side-board to be made. Some parts also afford marble, alabaster, slate and turs. In the neighbourhood of the town of Wildungen, and also at Reignerskausen, Reizenbagen, and Kleinern are eminent springs.

§. 4. This county contains thirteen towns and a market-village. The States here are composed of the nobility and towns; among which the principal are the three called the deputirten Stadte. It is only on extraordinary occasions that the whole body of the States are convened; but those of the nobility and the three deputy-towns meet on ordinary occasions. The greater part of the inhabitants are Lutherans, and the rest Protestants; with some Roman catholics intermixed. The manufactures here are a coarse cloth, barragon, callimanco, dimity, ratine and other stuffs; as also paper, and great quantities of iron-ware for exportation.

§. 5. The house of Waldeck is very ancient, being derived from the counts of Schwalenberg. It was formerly divided into the lines of Wildung and Eisenberg; the latter of which, in the year 1682, was created a Prince of the Empire; but this title became extinct in the very first Prince, George Frederick, who dying without heirs in the year 1716, the Emperor conferred it on count Frederick Anthony Ulrich of the Wildung line, but the females continue only countesses.

§. 6. The title of the Waldeck family is, Waldeck Prince of the Sacred Roman Empire, count of Pyrmont and Rappoltstein, lord of Hoheneck and Gerolseck, &c. The arms for Waldeck are topaz a diamond star-fashion; for Pyrmont, pearl a cross-anchored ruby; for Rappoltstein, pearl three thields ruby; for Hoheneck, pearl three eagles heads, or according to others ravens heads sable, crowned; and for Gerolseck, argent semee with billots faphire, a crowned lion ruby.

- §. 7. The Prince of Waldeck has not yet obtained a feat and vote in the college of Princes, but, on the other hand, he has withdrawn himself from the college of the counts of Wetterau. At the Diet of the circle of the Upper-Rhine held in 1719, Waldeck was admitted to a seat among the Princes; but he also sollicited the precedence before Idstein, Saarbruck and Ottweiler. In the year 1741 he was on the point of separating himself from the circle of the Upper-Rhine. The matricular affessment for Waldeck is four horse and eighteen foot or one hundred and twenty florins per month, and to the chamber at Wetzlar this county pays sixty-seven rixdollars seventy-four kruitzers.
- §. 8. In the year 1438 this county was conferred as a fief on Hesse-Cassel. The disputes relating to the investiture thereof were adjusted in the year 1635, by a compact which was ratified by the 15th article of the peace of Osnabruck, §. 14. The right of primogenitureship was first introduced here by Count Christian Lewis, in the year 1697.

§. 9. Exclusive of the privy-council and court of fiels the Prince also has a regency, a chamber of finances, and a forest-court, and likewise court of law, which two last are both composed of the same members, who also in conjunction with the general and one superintendent form the consistory. From the court of law an appeal lies to the chancery. Over the presecturates here preside sour judges and six amtmen, who are subordinate to a land-drost, or rural-chief-justice.

- §. 10. The county of Waldeck is thought to bring in above 100,000 ruthlr. per annum to the Prince, and that not improbably, it being one of the most considerable counties in the whole Empire, and preferable even to not a few of the principalities. The Prince's circular contingency is two companies of foot, but he generally maintains three more.
 - §. 11. To the county of Waldeck belong
 1. The following towns in their order, viz.

Corbach, the capital of the country, and the first of the three deputy-towns. It is also the seat of the high court of justice, and consists of the old and new town, each of which has its church. In that belonging to the new town is a most stately monument of marble and alabaster which takes up one side of the choir, and was erected by the republic of the United Provinces to Prince George Frederick of Waldeck, who was field-marshal of their forces. In the new town is also a gymnasium of six classes and seven masters.

Lower Wildungen, a town standing on a hill, and the second deputy-town, being both larger and better built than Old-Wildungen. In it is a Latin school containing five classes, as also an orphan-house. In the choir belonging to its church, the republic of Venice has erected a fine alabaster monument to the memory of Josias, Prince of Waldeck, who commanded their armies with great reputation.

In its neighbourhood are some mineral brunns or springs, as namely, the Stadt-brunn, the Thalbrunn, and those of Reizenhagen and Reinershausen.

Mengeringhausen, the third of the deputy-towns, lies on a small river which runs into the Twiste, and not far from it is a well provided hospital of Leiborn.

Sachsenhausen, a little town.

Rhoden, a small town standing on an eminence, with a feat of the Prince's: About one quarter of an hour north of it stands the chapel of Old-Rhoden, containing in it a Gottos-acker, or burial-place for the town.

Sachsenberg, a little town.

Landau, a town standing on a hill, and supplied with water by means of an engine.

Freienbagen, a small town, having formerly a free court of justice erected by Charles the Great, and conferred as a fief by the Emperors Wenceslaus and Sigismund on a family of Corbach, in quality of free counts.

Waldeck, a little town feated on a hill and separated by a valley from a rock, on which stands the old castle of Waldeck, which has lately been fitted up to receive a garrison. Part of the records of the principality are kept here. This place serves also for a prison.

Zuschen, a little town seated on the Lesser Elbe; the Protestants are more numerous here than in any other part of the country.

Furstenberg, a small town standing on a hill.

Old-Wildungen, a little town standing on a hill, with a castle in it called Friderichstein, and separated by a valley from the Lower-Wildungen.

Arolfen, a regular built thriving town, lying not far from the river Aars. The Prince's palace here, of which Prince Frederick Anthony Ulric was himfelf the architect, makes a grand appearance. All the above-mentioned offices and colleges, the chief court of justice excepted, are held here. Exclusive too of the Lutheran church here, the Protestants and Catholics have also theirs. The town itself stands delightfully at the end of a noble avenue of fix rows of trees, which is 2000 paces in length.

II. The nine following prefecturates, viz.

1. The prefecturate of EISENBERG, so called from the palace of that name which stood on a mountain not far from Corbach, but at present lies in ruins. In it are several losty mountains, particularly towards the borders of Westphalia, where, at the mountain of Hohe Poen, issues the little river Dimel. Not far from Adorf is the remarkable rock called Cappenstein. This is the largest of the presecturates, as containing in it no less than twelve parishes. The places of eminence in it are,

Adorf, a church-village, containing fome very profitable iron-works.

In its neighbourhood is also a copper-mine.

Flechtorf, another church-village, containing an alms-house for a hundred persons.

Shacken, a Lutheran abbey for ladies, the abbess of which is always of the Waldeck family; betwixt this place and Goddelsheim is another copper-mine.

Schwalefeld, a village seated on the rivulet of Itterbach; near it stands the castle of Schwalenberg, now commonly called the Burg.

The patronage of the Lutheran church in the village of Dudinghausen in Westphalia, together with all the concomitant powers and rights, belongs to the house of Waldeck. In the free-county of Dudinghausen it is also proprietor of three villages, namely, of Eppe, in which is a catholic congregation; of Hillershausen, which is wholly catholic; and of Lower-Schleidern, which is incorporated with this presecturate.

Obs. In the Grund Astinghausen in Westphalia the villages of Nordernau and Lichtenscheid, the latter of which is also called Astenberg, are likewise subject to the dominion of France; but in the other villages belonging to it, the princely house holds the district-court.

2. The prefecturate of Arolsen, containing five parishes.

3. The joint prefecturates of EILHAUSEN and RHODEN, the former of which which contains one parish, the latter two. On the Urbe, which waters them both, are some copper-works.

- 4. The joint prefecturates of LANDAU and WETTERBURG, in the first of which are four parishes, in the latter two, with some valuable copperworks.
- 5. The prefecturate of Waldeck, containing in it some mountains of a prodigious height, and being particularly remarkable for the rock of Weisselein. In this prefecturate are six parishes, and among them

Bergheim, a country-town, belonging entirely to the Waldeck family.

Kleinern, a church-village, having two chalybeat springs.

6. The prefecturate of Wildunngen, which is also mountainous; particularly the Keller, near the borders of Hesse, which is of an extraordinary height. On the river Urst are some copper-works. This presecturate confists of five parishes. The amtmen of this and the foregoing presecturates have over them a rural-judge, under the title of Schultheifs.

7. The prefecturate of Lichtenfels, containing three parishes.

The COUNTY of

HANAU-MUNZENBERG.

- §. 1. THE map of this county taken by Zollman was published in the year 1728 by Joh. Christ. Homann, and makes the one hundred and third in the Atlas of Germany.
- §. 2. It lies on the Wetterau, being furrounded by the Electorate of Mentz, the diocese of Fulda, the lordships of Rieneck Isenburg and Solms, as also by the territories of Hesse-Homberg, Burg-Friedberg, and Frankfort. In length it is above nine miles, but its greatest breadth may be easily travelled over in two or three hours. Some parts of it lie separate.
- §. 3. The soil here is remarkably fertile in wine, grain, fruits and vegetables, all which are excellent in their several kinds. In it also is a copper and silver mine, both which are very rich, as also some Cobolt-works and salt-pans of considerable produce. Great advantage is likewise made here of the woods. This county lies chiefly on the Maine, into which either jointly or separately run all the smaller rivers by which it is watered. Among these the chief are the Kinzig and Nidda, the latter of which is joined by the Nidder.
- §. 4. In this county are five towns and ninety-fix villages, exclusive of its share in four other towns and two villages. In the 16th century it embraced Lutheranism, but in 1594, count Philip Lewis introduced the Protestant religion religion here: There are, however, still both Lutherans and Catholics in it, who are permitted the free exercise of their religion. Hanau has an university, and at Schlutern is a gymnasium. Trade and manufactures flourish here, particularly at the town of Hanau, under the description of which a larger account of them shall be given.

§. 5. The proprietors of this country first stiled themselves Nobles of Hanau. Reinbard, grandfon to Henry lord of Hanau, who lived about the year 1195, obtained a part of the Munzenberg estate with his wife Adelheida. Reinkard II. was the first count of Hanau, this dignity being conferred on him and his heirs by the Emperor Sigismund in the year 1429. His youngest fon Philip I. count of Hanau, who, by virtue of an agreement entered into in the year 1458, held one third of the county of Hanau, and among other territories in it, the castle town and presecturate of Babenhausen, acquired also in the year 1481, a part of the lordship of Lichtenberg, as his wise's portion; the house of Hanau became divided into the lines of Munzenberg and Lichtenberg. The former of these failed in the year 1642, the latter, by virtue of a compact concluded in 1610, succeeded to the county of Hanau-Munzenberg, and by the affiftance of Amelia Elizabeth, regent of Heffe-Cassel, but a branch of the Hanau family, reunited the whole county, which had been dismembered from it in the wars of those times. In acknowlegement of this good office, the Counts Frederick Casimir, John Philip, and John Reinbard, in the year 1643, entered into a convention with Heffe-Cassel, importing that on the failure of the male line of Hanau, the whole county of Hanau-Munzenberg, together with the property thereof, should devolve to the house of Hesse. But the reversion of the Imperial siefs of Hanau having been granted to the house of Saxony, in the year 1625, by the Emperor Ferdinand II. and renewed and confirmed by the fucceeding Emperors; the two houses, in 1724, came to a compromise that Saxony should cede to Hesse all its claim to the Imperial fiels in Hanau-Munzenberg, but that in fuch a manner that Saxony should on certain occasions, petition for and receive the fiefs from the Emperor, and afterwards invest the house of Hesse-Cassel, but that on the failure of the male line of Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Philipsdale, the Imperial fiefs of Hanau-Munzenberg should return to the immediate lords, they on the other hand refunding to the heirs of Hesse the whole equivalent paid for it. This equivalent, exclusive of 70,000 ruthlr. paid down at the fignature of the agreement, was on the subsequent extinction of the Hanau family settled at 600,000 ruthlr. in ready specie, as also a yearly revenue of 12,000 ruthlr. in lands and vassals. In the year 1728, this agreement was confirmed by the Emperor Charles VI. In the year 1735, Frederick King of Sweden, renounced the fuccession to Hanau-Munzenberg, in favour of his own family. In 1736, the whole male line of Hanau failing in John Rheinard, count of Hanau, the Landgrave William VIII. took possession of the county of Hanau-Munzenberg, and in the year 1754 transferred it to Prince William, eldest son to the hereditary Prince Frederick; but reserved to himself, during his life, the enjoyment and exercise of the sovereignty, and made an order that on his decease the said Prince, or the eldest and first begotten of his offspring should take upon him the sovereignty of this county, and that on his accession to that of Hesse-Cassel, the said county should again be inalienably annexed to that principality under one sovereign.

- §. 6. The ruling count of Hanau-Munzenberg is a member of the college of the Imperial counts of the Wetterau; but the Landgrave William VI. feparated himself from them, and, in 1741, also from the circle of the Upper-Rhine. In the Imperial matricula this county is affessed at two hundred and thirty florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar pays one hundred and fixty rixdollars, twenty-nine and one quarter kruitzers.
- §. 7. The income arising to John Reinard, the last count of Hanau, from his several territories, is said to have amounted to above 500,000 florins.
 - §. 8. This county confifts of the following towns and prefecturates:
- 1. Hanau, the capital of the county, lies in a large plain on the river Kinzig, which near this place runs into the Mayne. It is composed of the old and new town, both of which are fortified. The old town, which from time immemorial has belonged to the Hanau family, received its charter, in the year 1303, from King Albert, but is not handsome. The palace in it, called the Burg, which is an Imperial fief, makes a good appearance, exclusive of its fine flower-garden. Both the Lutherans and Protestants have each their particular church here. The gymnasium illustre, or university, was built by Count Philip Lewis. The Jews dwell in a particular quarter, and are allowed schools. To this old town belongs a large suburb. The new town is not only of greater extent than the old, but the streets straight, broad and clean, and most of the houses on both sides regular. It was built, in the year 1597, by the Protestant Walloons or Flemish Refugees, to whom fuch great encouragement was given, that both in peace or war they pay to the fovereign only fervifgeld, and some of the gabels, custom and toll excepted. They have also their own magistrates, and the disposal of all the town-offices, of which only the members of the French and Dutch congregations are capable, though at prefent the German Protestants constitute one half of the inhabitants and the Lutherans a fourth. The Dutch and French church here are contiguous, being separated only by a wall. Here are also several woollen manufactures, particularly of a stuff called Grogrun, as likewise of stockings, both filk and worsted, callico and porcelain; but Hanau is more particularly famed for great quantities of roll-tobacco, which are made up here. A wax bleachingry has also been set up here, but the greatest article in its imports is timber, which is brought down the Mayne from Lobenstein, Tronach, Lichtenfels and other places; as also rough and cast-iron, meal and corn. Every person in this town has free liberty of trading as he pleases. 2. The

2. The prefecturate of Bucherthal, the forest of Hanau, or Heegwald, as also Bulau, were, in 1277, exchanged by the abbey of St. Peter's ad Gradus in Mentz. The former of these is but small, the latter very large. All the woods about Hanau are in general independent demesses, but the right of venery in them is a fief, subject to the Elector of Mentz, excepting one small, narrow wood, and the privilege of hunting on one side of it, which is a fief belonging to the Empire. In this prefecturate are sourceen towns and villages. The most remarkable places in it are Philipsruke, a beautiful feat, lying about one half hour's distance from the town of Hanau, near the village of Kestatt, or Kesselstadt, on the Mayne. This feat was built by Count Philip Reinhard, but received very great improvements from his brother and successor Count John Rheinhard. The village near it is a demesse, but the toll on the Mayne is a fief of the Empire.

Dornigheim, a county-town and a demesse; but the vogtey, or government of it is a fief of the abbey of St. Jacob's berd, near Mentz.

Runpenheim, a church-village on the other fide of the Mayne, over which the most frequented ferry lies at this place. It is a fief of the Elector of Mentz, but belonging to the Biebermark, has an officer appointed over it. The barons of Edelsheim have a fine estate here, which they were invested with in the year 1689, by the family of Hanau.

All the other places here are demesnes; as Hochfadt, a small town, containing a Lutheran church.

Wachenbuchen, a little place, in which formerly the lords of Hanau had a refidence, and whence also a fine spring-water is conveyed to Hanau by means of iron pipes.

Mittelbucken, a country-town, which, together with the mansion-house there, was purchased, in the year 1567, by the convent of Seligenstadt.

Bruchkobel, a village which, though in the year 1368 it obtained a municipal charter, like Hanau, from the Emperor Charles IV. yet still contains a village.

Rosadorf, a village, in which a lord of Hanau, in the year 1235, fettled the first Monks of the order of St. Anthony, whom he invited hither from Vienne in France.

Rudigheim, a village, containing a Protestant and Lutheran church. The latter has a chapel at Lower-Rodenbach, in the same presecturate, dependent on it.

4. The prefecturate of WINDECKEN. In it is Windecken, formerly called Wunecke, a small town, containing a castle, seated on the river Nieder. This place is a fief belonging to Bamberg. In the year 1288, King Rudolph I. granted it the same privileges with the city of Frankfort. Till the year 1436, the lords of Hanau generally resided here.

Eichen,

Eichen, a village-jurisdiction and fief of the Elector-palatine.

Lower, or Great-Dorfelden, a village and demesne, but the castle is a Saxon semale sief. In the year 1368, the Emperor Charles IV. granted it a charter like that of Hanau, but it has continued a village.

Markobel, a large village, enjoying particular privileges, had indeed a charter, like unto that of Hanau, granted it in the year 1368 by the Emperor Charles IV. but was not made a town. This place is a demendent

The Kellerey of Naumburg was formerly a distinct prefecturate, which the counts of Hanau, in the year 1561, purchased of the chapter of Limburg for 18000 florins, and mortgaged, in 1643, to Hesse-Cassel. Prince George of Hesse-Cassel arriving to the possession of it, considerably improved the feat of Naumburg, which had formerly been a convent of Benedictines. To this prefecturate belong also the villages of Erbstatt and Horingen.

4. The prefecturate of Bornheimerberg, or Bergen, contains fifteen towns and villages.

Bergen, the capital place of this prefecturate, contains a Protestant and Lz-theran church, and its neighbourhood produces excellent wine. The Schelms of Bergen have a fine estate here.

Bischofskeim, or Bischeim, a town also famed for its good wine.

Bockenheim, a large village, whither the Protestant Dutch and French inhabitants of Franckfort, in the year 1638, obtained permission to go to worship. In this village is also a Lutheran church.

Seckback, a town, containing a Lutheran church; and near it also a Protestant one. The Schelms of Bergen have two estates of nobles here.

Eschersheim and Ginheim, two large villages, purchased in the year 1478 from the convent of Seligenstadt.

Vilbel, a very large village, feated on the Nidda, and held jointly and equally with the Elector of Mentz.

Praunbeim, a village shared in the same manner with the house of Solms-Rodelbeim.

5. The prefecturate of RODHEIM consists of four towns and villages, which were purchased in the years 1578 and 1595. To it belongs Rodheim, a large country-town, one half of which is a very ancient demesse, but the other was purchased, in the year 1578, of Christopher, count of Stolberg and Konigstein. In the year 1362, the Emperor, Charles IV. permitted Ulrich, lord of Hanau, to fortify Rodheim, at that time only a village, granting to the inhabitants the same municipal privileges with the city of Franckfort.

Lower-Eschbach, a village, containing an independent and ennobling estate. Holzhausen, or Burgholzhausen, a town which the counts of Stolberd, as heirs of Epstein, sold, in the year 1578, to Hanau, with power of redemption, but in 1595 hereditarily. During the thirty years war, Reigersberg, chancellor of Mentz, was invested by the Emperor and Empire with Vol. V.

two thirds of a place of this name, and in 1645 procured also two thirds of this to be granted to him; on which, in 1649, he purchased the other third of Count Frederick Casimir. His descendants disposed of it to the barons of Ingelheim; but, in the year 1741, the Landgrave William VIII. of Hesse-Cassel, demanded, as actual count of Hanan-Munzenberg, the restitution of the two ceded thirds of Holzbansen, pursuant to a clause in the treaty of Westphalia, and immediately put himself in possession thereof.

6. The prefecturate of Dornerm, confisting of four towns and villages; viz.

Dorheim, a town, feated on the Wetter, and purchased hereditarily in the year 1578 of Christopher, count of Stolberg and Konigstein. The barons of Hiltzhausent have an estate here.

Naubeim, a town, containing falt-works of considerable value. In the year 1436, the house of Hanau were sovereigns of this place, but, in 1478, purchased the whole of the convent of Seligenstadt; as also, by degrees, the falt-works, betwixt the years 1566 and 1590, from the salt-company; tince which it hath made such improvements in them, that, though wood is there in no great plenty, and no salt made in winter, yet it produces yearly 30,000 achtels, or about 4000 bushels.

7. The prefecturate of ORTENBERG, containing one town and fix villages, ever fince the year 1527, has been a fief of the Palatinate; but the tovereignty of it, together with several rights and incomes, were, in the year 1578, purchased by Stolberg and Isenburg. In it is Ortenberg, a small town, seated on the Nidder, and containing an old castle. One third of it belongs to Hanau and two thirds to Stolberg. In the year 1476, Philip, count of Hanau, purchased this place of the two brothers, Godfrey and John, lords of Epstein and Munzenberg.

S. The joint-prefecturates of STEINAU and SCHLUCHTERN.

1. To that of STEINAU belongs

Steinau, a little town, containing a feat. This place is a fief belonging to Fulda, and has a Protestant and Lutheran church. In the year 1290, King Rudolph conferred on it the same privileges with those of Gelnhausen. The road-toll here is an Imperial fief.

Seidenrod, a village.

The prefecturate of Schlucktern includes one town and ten villages. One half of the courts are a fief of Wurzburg.

Schluchtern, an open little town, lying on the river Kinz, which at this place receives the Elembach. The college here was formerly a convent of Benedictines, in Latin called Cænobium Solitariense, and the rector of it still bears the title of abbot. Till about nine years before the treaty of Passau he was always a Lutheran, but since that time has been a Protestant. In the year 1626, the counts of Hanau received a mandate from the Aulic Council to quit the convent, and in 1628, made a formal surrender of it to Wurzburg. In the year 1649, it was agreed that the Elector of Mentz, as bishop of Wurzburg, should restore it to Hanau, in consideration of 5000 shorins; but afterwards, in lieu of that sum, the salt-pits of Orb were made over to it. Hereupon Count Frederick Casimir ceded it to the Protestants, and assisted them in the conversion of it into a college.

Wallrod, a church-village.

9. The prefecturate of BRANDENSTEIN contains the old ruined castle of Bergenslein as a fief of Wurzburg, and also four villages of its own; but, in the year 1719, was mortgaged to Hesse for 100,000 florins.

10. The prefecturate of Schwarzenfels confifts of the town and ruined castle of Schwarzenfels, together with nine villages, which were more gaged, in the year 1643, to Hesse-Cassel. The road-toll to Sterbsritz is an Imperial sief, and one half of the village of Junkersbach belongs to Fulda.

II. The joint-prefecturates of BIEBERGRUND and LOHRHAUPTEN.

r. That of Biebergrund confifts of eight places, one half of which were original demesses, and the other half purchased, in the year 1684, of the Elector of Mentz, to whom they are still acknowledged as siefs. The principal place in it is Bieber, a thriving town, containing near it a mine of copper and filver, as also some works of iron and cobalt, in which the latter mineral is prepared into a most beautiful smalt.

- 2. The prefecturate of Lobrhaupten confifts of three places, all which are demens; and near the town of that name lies the fource of the river Lobr.
- 12. The prefecturate of OLD-HASZLAU, with the places of free jurifdiction in it belonging to Hesse. The former of these contains five towns and villages, and is a fief of Wurzburg. It is also a good wine country. In it is Old-Hassel, or Haszlau, a town.

The free-court prefecturate, seated at the foot of the mountain of Welmitzheim, or near Alzenau, was formerly held in common by the counts of Hanau and the Elector of Mentz. On the death of the last count, in the year 1736, the Elector was for taking the whole into his hands; but it continued on the former footing till Hesse-Cassel, by the partition agreed on in the year 1748, took sole possession of it, as a secondary set of Mentz, the parish of Somborn excepted. The Elector of Mentz has also reserved to himself the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of this Catholic parish. The villages of Hanau, in the prefecturate of Old-Hassel, belonging to it, are

Somborn, the church-village, near which is the manfion-house of Trages;

Old-Mitlau, Neusasz, or Neusasse, Bernbach and Harbach.

13. The prefecturate of BABEN, or BOBENHAUSEN, lies on the opposite side of the Mayne, and belonged formerly to the lords of Munzenburg; on the extinction of whom, in the thirteenth century, it descended, together with the town of Schafbeim, to Reinbard, lord of Hanau, whose consort, Adelheida, was sister to the last lord of Munzenberg. In the year 1372, Ulrich, lord of Hanau, received of his patrimonial estate here the castle and town of Babenhausen, with all their appurtenances, as a sief belonging to the crown of Bohemia; and, by the investiture, it was enacted, that, on the failure of the male-line of Hanau, the daughters and their proper heirs should inherit; and, on failure of such, the nearest relations and their heirs. The extinction of the house of Hanau gave rise to a contest betwixt the houses of Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt, whether the prefecturate of Babenhausen belonged to the county of Hanau-Munzenberg or Hanau-Lichtenberg; but in the year 1754 they came to an agreement. The principal places in it are Babenhausen, or Bobenhausen, a small town, containing a castle, seated on the river Gernsprinz. This place was for some time the residence of the counts of Hanau, and had originally a mint; but both these were afterwards removed to Hanau.

Dudenhofen, a town, two thirds of which belong to the prefecturate and one third to the counts of Schonborn, nevertheless as a fief of Mentz.

Schafheim, a large village, to which, in the year 1368, the Emperor Charles IV. granted a charter of the same kind with that of Hanau, but it has not risen to be a town. This place, by virtue of the seudal law of Fulda, is a sief of the Palatinate. On the death of the last count of Hanau, Hesse-Darmstadt took possession of this village, as also of Schlierbach and Dietzenbach.

- 14. Assenbeim, a little town, containing a castle, lies at the conflux of the Nidda, constituting the Wetter, formerly a part of the old Munzenberg estate. Hanau has half of it, the remainder belonging to Solms-Rodelheim and Isonburg-Wachtersback.
- 15. The prefecturate of Munzenberg forms also a part of the ancient Munzenberg inheritance; but, in the year 1684, descended to Hanau from the Elector of Mentz. This prefecturate is an Imperial fief. To it belongs Munzenberg, a finall town, having an old castle on the Wetter. Three eighths of it appertain to Hanau ever since it acquired the Elector of Mentz's part in exchange for Konigstein. Of the remainder the house of Solms is proprietor. The ancient family of Munzenberg became extinct in Ulrich II. about the year 1236 or 1250; when his sisters divided the Munzenberg lands; and thus one sixth of them devolved to the house of Hanau, Adelbeida, daughter of Ulrich I. lord of Munzenberg, by his sirst wife, being married to Reinhard, lord of Hanau.

Treysz, a village, one half of which is a fief of Fulda belonging to Ha-nau, and the other to Solms-Braunfels.

Heuchelheim, a small village, of which Hanau, after acquiring the Mentz part in the year 1684, now enjoys seven twelfths, and Stolberg-Rosla five. This village is an Imperial fief.

The town and castle of Rieneck and the village of Schaibach, in the county of Rieneck, one fourth of which is held by Hanau as a fief of Ment:

Gelnbausen, a town, seated on the river Kinzig, was formerly an Imperial town; but, in the year 1349, the Emperor Charles IV. mortgaged it to Gunther, count of Schwarzburg. This mortgage Count Henry of Schwarzburg disposed of, in the year 1435, to the Elector-Palatine and Hanau; which transfer was confirmed by the Emperor Sigismund in the same year, and also by the Emperor Maximilian in the year 1499; the latter of whom further borrowed on this mortgage the fum of 6000 Rhenish guilders of Philip and Reinhard, counts of Hanau. This long mortgage of the town afterwards gave rife to a dispute, whether it still continued an immediate and free Imperial town. The Elector-palatine and the counts of Hanau urged their right to it as mortgagees and patrons; notwithstanding which, in the year 1734, the Aulic Council declared the town immediate, but without prejudice to the rights of the mortgagees; and accordingly, in the year 1735, it took'its feat and voted in the college of Imperial towns. On this the mortgagees moved for a fecond hearing against the sentence of the Aulic Council; but the town, already exhausted by the length of the former process, and other grievances, rather than run itself into fresh expences, the iffue of which was uncertain, in the time of the Emperor Charles VII. fubmitted itself entirely to the two mortgagees; and, in 1746, Heffe-Cassel, as proprietor of the county of Hanau-Munzenberg, purchased the Elector-palatine's part for 12,000 florins. The castle near the town, which is faid to have been erected by the Emperor Frederick I. for his residence about the year 1144, belongs to certain coheirs.

18. The share of Hanau, in the Dreyicher Wildbann, is derived from the Munzenberg inheritance, which, towards the middle of the thirteenth century, on the failure of the male-line of Munzenberg, devolved to Hanau, by Adelheida, heiress to Munzenberg. A further account of this Wildbann, or chace, will occur under the county of Yenburg, which holds it in common with the county of Hanau.

The Lordship of

HANAU-LICHTENBERG.

§. 1. HE lordship of Lichtenberg lies, for the most part, in Upper-Alface. An accurate delineation of it may be seen in the beautiful map of Alface, as published by Homann's heirs, which makes the ninety-eighth in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. This lordship formerly enjoyed lords of its own, who failed in the year 1481 in the person of James, lord of Lichtenberg; on which Anne and Elizabeth, the surviving daughters of his brother Lewis, made a partition of the estate among themselves. The former of these was married to Philip the Elder, count of Hanau, who thus became proprietor of one half of the lordship of Lichtenberg; and his great-grandson, by his marriage with Margaret Louisa, daughter to James I. count of Ochsenstein and Bitsch, arrived, in the year 1560, to the possession of the other half, devolved from Elizabeth. On the extinction of the male line of Hanau-Munzenberg, in the year 1642, by the decease of Count John Ernst, the Lichtenberg line, by virtue of a compact made in the year 1610, and the support of Hesse-Cassel, obtained the whole county of Hanau-Munzenberg; to which was transmitted not only the third, ceded to Count Philip I. but also the lordship of Lichtenberg. In the year 1680, Count Frederick Casimir of Hanau made over to his cousin, Count Philip Reinhard, and the male-heirs of his body, the lordship of Hanau-Lichtenberg, but retained the prefecturate of Babenhausen as an ancient part of the county of Hanau-Munzenberg. This count dying without heirs, and being fucceeded in the county of Hanau-Munzenberg, by Count Philip Reinhard, the latter conferred the lordship of Hanau-Lichtenberg on his brother Count John Reinhard, who surviving him also became possessor of the county of Hanau-Munzenberg. His daughter, Charlotta Christina Magdalena Johanna, was married to Lewis, hereditary Prince of Hesse-Darmstadt. The male-line of Hanau failing in this Prince, in the year 1736, the lordship of Hanau-Lichtenberg escheated to the house of Hesse-Darmstadt.

§. 3. The greatest part of this lordship lying in Alface, it has, together with that province, been unhappily dismembered from the German Empire and passed into the dominion of France; but a part of it still lies within the territories of the Empire; and for this the house of Hesse-Darmstadt pays, by agreement, to the Circle of the Upper-Rhine, the yearly sum of five hundred florins; to the chamber at Wetzlar source rixdollars, and thirty-eight kruitzers and a half.

§. 4. That

§. 4. That part of this country which is subject to the French, I omit as described before, and therefore shall only mention the presecturates which still continue annexed to the Empire. These are,

1. The prefecturate of LICHTENAU, which lies in Swabia, on the east fide of the Rhine, and contains

Lichtenau, a large handsome village, formerly a town:

The church-villages of Bodersweyher, Leutelsheim, commonly called Leben-Lutzen, Linx, Freystatt and Bischenam Hohen-steg, in which the last count of Hanau built him a very fine seat.

2. The prefecturate of WILSTADT, which together with the foregoing lies on the river Kinzig, and includes

Wilftadt, a confiderable village.

The church-village of Eckarts Weyber, Old and New-Sandkorf, Legelf-burst, Bolzburst and Auenbeim.

The Lands belonging to the Princes of SOLMS.

§. 1. THESE lie in the Wetterau, and of the particular fituation, extent, and nature of each, a description shall be given in the sequel.

§. 2. The counts of Solms are supposed to be a branch of the counts of Naffau, and thus probably are descended from Otho brother to King Conrad I. whose hereditary estate appears from records to have lain in this country and at Weilburg. In this ancient house are two principal branches, namely, that of Solms-Braunfels and that of Solms-Lich. The former of these was once divided into the three collateral lines Braunfels, Hungen and Greifenstein. The two first of these are become extinct, but the latter, which is still existing, was in the year 1742 created a Prince of the Empire. The Solms-Lich line has two collateral ones, namely, 1. That of the Lich-Lich branch failed, but of which the branch of Lich-hohen-Solms is still in being. 2. That of Solms-Laubach, of which 1. the branch of Laubach-Laubach is no more. 2. The branch of Laubach-Sonnewald is divided into the two collateral lines of Sonnewald-pouch and Sonnewald-Sonnewald. 3. The branch of Lauback-Baruth has three other branches belonging to it, namely, Baruth-Affenheim, Rodelheim, Baruth-Wildenfels, and Wildenfels-Laubach, Wildenfells-Utph, Wildenfels-Wildenfells, and Baruth-Baruth; the branches of Solms-Laubach-Sonnewald, and Solms-Laubach-Baruth, which with their collateral lines have their estates in Lusatia and the Electorate of Saxony.

§. 3. The common title of this house is count of Solms, lord of Mun-zenberg, Wildenfels, Somenwald, &c. and the arms for Solms are topaz a lion faphire; for Munzenberg, party per fels topaz and ruby; for Wildenfels, topaz a rose-diamond; for Sonnenwald, diamond a lion pearl.

- §. 4. The house of Solms has a matricular affessment of two hundred and fifty-one florins in the following divisions, viz. Hohen-Solms pays for Solms forty-eight florins; for Lich twenty-four florins; for Braunfels one hundred and twenty florins; for Rodelheim twenty-four florins, and for Laubach thirty-five florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar, Hohen-Solms is taxed at thirty-feven ruthlr. twenty-one kruitzers; Braunfels at fifty-nine ruthlr. forty-five kruitzers; Rodelheim at eighteen ruthlr. fifty-three kruitzers, and Laubach in the like sum. The Princes and Counts of Solms belong to the college of the Imperial counts of the Wetterau, and have four votes in it, as also a like number in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine.
- §. 5. From the seniorship customary in this house are excluded the Saxon counts of Solms. The senior, for the time being, is always the seoffee, but this does not take place in all the siefs. The lines of Braunsels and Hoken-Solms are Protestants, Sonnenwald is Catholic, and all the rest profess Lutheranism.
- §. 6. With respect to the distinct ruling-houses, the possession of Solms-Braunfels are,
- 1. The greatest part of the proper county of Solms, which lies on both sides the Lahn, and borders on the territories of Nassau and Hesse, and the district of the city of Wetzlar, being six hours in length and sour broad. This county abounds in grain and cattle, and has every where iron-mines which employ several sounderies and other works. Its mines of copper and silver are not sought after; but its woods, though declining, are still an article of great profit. This county was formerly divided into the vordure and hintereland. In the former are the presecturates of Braunfels and Greisenslein, the latter of which contains also those of Hohen-Solms and Konigsberg, which belong to Hesse-Darmstadt. The name of the hintere-land is still in use here. This county is also divided according to its rivers, into the Lahnthall, the land on the Solms and the Mutt, the Wetzthal, Ulmthal, Dillthal, Lempthal, and land on the Aar and Kins. In the last of these stood Ardehe-Gau. The Prince's presecturates here are,
- 1. The prefecturate of Braunfels, containing two towns, one convent, twenty villages and three mansion-houses. The most remarkable places in it are,

Braunfels, the Prince's palace, which stands on a very high hill, and is of great strength, according to the ancient manner of fortification, and contains in it one church, which also serves the inhabitants of the town. Without it is the town, which is called Thal, as also a place called S. George which lies beneath it. The palace and town are supplied with water by works erected at the foot of the mountain. In the 17th century the town was twice destroyed by fire.

Leun,

Leun or Lein, a finall town feated on the Labn, but very ancient, being known so early as the year 912, and in 1664 it obtained its charter as a town. In the year 1752, one half of it was destroyed by fire, but it has been since handsomely rebuilt. This place contains an ennobling estate.

Altenburg, or Altenberg, a Præmonstratensum monastery, instituted for ladies, stands on a hill near the river Labn, and was formerly the residence of the counts of Solms, during which it was called Dalbeim. Near it stood a village of the same name. Not far from this convent is annually held the highest court of the county of Solms, and according to ancient custom, in the open air, unless in rainy weather, when the convent is the place for it.

The villages of Upper and Lower-Biel, the former of which is a church-village.

Burg-Solms, a church-village, in which once flood the original house of the counts of Solms.

Upper-Dorf, formerly Upper-Solms, but more anciently Sulmissiem, a village annexed to the former parith, once made a great deal of wine.

The church-villages of Bonbaden and Croftelbach, together with an old fort; and Upper-Wetz, in the neighbourhood of which are some appearances of a filver ore, as also Naubern; but of this, as likewise of the village of Lower-Wetz, a part belongs to Nassau-Weilburg.

Schwalbach, or Little-Schwalbach, a village containing a medicinal spring. Munchholzhausen, a village mortgaged to the barons of Schwalbach.

Schwebbach, Homburg and Magdalenenhausen, or Meinkausen, farms belonging to the lord of the country.

2. The prefecturate of Greifenstein, in which is one town, twenty-two villages, and two mansion-houses belonging to farms, viz.

Greifenstein, a little town containing a castle, which was once very strong, but now lies in ruins.

Edingen, a village with a farm, belonging to the lord of the country.

Katzenfurt, a village seated on the Dill, and said to take its name from the Catti.

Dabbausen, a large village containing a parish-church, had formerly some copper-works, and thrives at present by means of a colony of industrious French refugees.

Greifenthal, a village containing also a French congregation.

The church villages of Dilbeim, Kolfelbausen webrdorf, in which is a feat belonging to the lord of the country; Asselar, Ulm Biskirchen, or Bischofekirchen.

Heisterberg and Elgershausen, farms belonging to the sovereign of the country.

II. A part of the ancient lordship of Munzenberg, being a very fruitful country about four hours in length. To it belongs,

I. The prefecturate of Hungen, which from the year 1592 to 1678, Vol. V. Q belonged belonged to a particular line of Solms-Braunfels, and contains in it one town, a convent, and nine villages. Its most remarkable places are,

Hungen, a small town seated on the Horloff, the charter of which was conferred on it in the year 1361. The count's palace here is large and built in a good taste. It contains also an old palace, at present called the Brankof, and a mansion-house conferring the degree of Nobility. Without the town is a park for deer.

Langsdorf, a large village having a parish-church, and an ennobling mantion-house.

The church-villages of Bellersheim, in which are three ennobling castles;

Muschenheim, also containing an ennobling castle, and Villingen.

Arnsburg or Arenspurg, a rich abbey of Bernardines, seated on the Wetter, and originally the residence of the lords of Munzenberg, during which it was called Altenburg, but in the year 1149, Cuno, Lord of Munzenberg, conferred it on the church as a convent. Its annual revenues are said to amount to no less than 30,000 florins; to it belongs the village of Wick-slatt, together with the sarms of Kolnbausen and Dorfgull. It has also estates at Franckfort, Friedberg and Mentz. In ecclesiastical affairs it is subject to the archbishopric of Mentz.

2. The prefecturate of Wolfersheim, containing Wolfesheim, a finall town: the old castle here has been converted into a large stately church.

Weckeskeim, a village containing a chapel of ease.

Obernhofen, a church-village, containing an ennobling mansion-house.

3. The prefecturate of GAMBACH, in which is Gamback, a country-town containing a parish-church, and which suffered by fire in the years 1703, 1715, and 1717.

Griedel, a church-village, containing an old castle belonging to the sovereign of the country, as also an ennobling estate.

The church-villages of Holzheim and Dorfgull.

Gruningen, a finall town, which, a few houses excepted, was destroyed in the thirty years war.

4. The community of Munzenberg.

Of the small town of Munzenberg, Solms-Braunfels possesses and one half of the village of Treysz-Munzenberg.

The house of Soems-Hoen-Solms. Belonging to it is

I. A part of the proper county of Solms, confisting of the prefecturate of Hoen-Solms, and containing one town and nine villages. The vasials here are all Lutherans, the inhabitants of the residence excepted, who are Protestants. By an agreement made in the year 1638, the house of Hessel Darmstadt has retained a share of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of this prefecturate.

Hohen-Solms, the refidence of the counts, and an antique structure standing on a high hill, beneath which lies a finall town called Inthaic. Both the castle and town are siefs of Hessi.

The castle of Old Hohen-Solms, commonly called Altenberg, stood one quarter of an hour from Hohen-Solms, but in the year 1349 was entirely destroyed.

The church-villages of Altensletten and Altenkirchen, known in the year 912, as also Blasbach, containing a quarry of good marble.

II. A part of the former Lordship of Munzenberg, once belonging to a particular line of the house of Solms, which failed in the year 1718. This territory contains,

1. The prefecturate of Lich, confisting of one town and seven villages, the inhabitants of which are all Lutherans. In it is Lich, a town feated on the Wetter, the charter of which was conferred on it in the year 1306, by the Emperor Albert. This place contains a collegiate church founded in the year 1307; the castle belonging to it is very old; and near this town are some ennobling estates.

The parith-villages of Munster, Wombach, or Wohnbach, the latter of which was mortgaged by it to Solms-Laubach and Sodel; the last of these parishes is in the gift of the convent of Ilmstadt, but the house of Solms nominates the vogt or justice. At Sodel is also an ennobling estate.

2. The prefecturate of Lower-Weisel, in which are four villages, the inhabitants Protestants. In it is Lower-Weifel, a parochial village, in which are both the prefecturate-house and a commandery.

Eberstadt, also a parochial village.

3. A part of the community of Munzenberg, of which Solms-Hohen-Solms possesses 4.8 ths.

The house of Solms-Laubach, comprehending

1. The prefecturate of LAUBACH, containing one town and fix villages. In it is Laubach, a town created such in the year 1419, and the residence of the counts. Not far from it rises the river Wetter. Its neighbourhood also affords a good fuller's earth.

The parish-villages of Wetterfeld and Ruppertsburg.

Freyenseen, a parish-village, formerly an Imperial town, to which the Emperor Charles V. in the year 1555, granted a municipal charter and patronage, which was also conferred on it by the Emperor Leopold in the year 1659, and by the Emperor Charles VI. in 1713. With respect to its Liberties, this place is subject to the protection of Hesse-Darmstadt; but agreeably to the convention of Marburg in 1639, acknowledges only the counts of Solms-Laubach for its lords, and as such performs homage and other duties to them. The counts, on their side, have also promised to preserve them in the quiet enjoyment of all their rights, privileges, immunities, usages and acceptance of the public offices, as namely, those of the burgo-matter, architect, bellman, huntsman, and shepherds.

Q 2 ufage

2. The prefecturate of UTPHE. In it

Utplie, a large village, fituate on the Horlof, and containing the feat of the counts.

Treysaborlof, a church-village.

Inhryden, a village.

3. A part in the community of Munzenberg, consisting of 5 parts in the town of Munzenberg.

1. The prefecturate of the house of Solms-Rodelheim, formerly belonged to the lordship of Kronenburg, and came to count John the sounder of the line of Solms-Lich by his wife. It contains one town, five villages, and one princely seat. In it is

Rodelbeim, a large country-town lying on the Nid, and containing the feat of the counts.

The village of Praunheim, one half of which belongs to Hanau, and the village of Lower-Urfel, which Solms-Rodelheim holds jointly with the city of Frankfort.

2. The prefecturate of Assenheim, formerly belonging to the lordship of Munzenberg. In it

Assemble in, a small town, having a castle seated at the conflux of the Nidda and Wetter. The castle, which belongs solely to Solms-Rodelheim, in the year 1696 was sitted up as a residence with very elegant improvements. Of the town some parts also belong to Hanau and Isenburg-Wachtersback.

The villages of Offenbeim and Barnubeim.

Peterweil, a village and feat, of which Hesse-Darmstadt has a share, but the advowson of it belongs solely to Solms.

New-Herberg, together with a farm and an inn. This house has also an estate in the Imperial city of Frankfort, and holds the town and castle of Burg Graffenrod, in conjunction with a count of Elz, but its share in it is contested by Solms-Braumfels.

The County of K O N I G S T E I N,

IES in the Wetterau along a Ridge of Mountains called the Hoke, and was at first an appurtenance belonging to the county of Nuringes, which afterwards descended to the lordship of Munzenberg. In the thirteenth teenth Century, on the failure of the male line of the Munzenberg family, the five fifters, who were married to the houses of Hanau, Falkenstein, Weinsberg, Schonberg and Pappenheim, succeeded to the whole Munzenberg estate, which they at first governed in common, till four of them, namely, Weinsberg, Schonberg, Pappenheim and Hanau, made over their parts to the counts of Falkenstein, Hanau referving to itself one fixth. The Falkenslein line also became extinct, and the inheritance of its lands descended likewise to five fisters, who were married in the houses of Solms, Sayn, Virneburg, Epstein and Yenburg; among whom a partition was made, by means of which the house of Epstein acquired one third of the whole inheritance, and particularly the Konigstein seat, in which a lord of Epstein fixing his residence, took the title of count of Konigstein. Elemhard, the last count of the Epstein line, who died without heirs in the year 1535, made, with the confent of his fifter Anne, wife to Botho, count of Stolberg, a will, which was confirmed by the Emperor Charles V. in which he named their third fon, Count Lewis, fole heir; but in case he died before him, the fuccession was to devolve to Philip, the fifth son; and in the like case to Christopher the eighth. On his decease Count Leavis possessed himself of this county, though his mother had expresly reserved the right of inheritance for herself and her other children in case her brother should alter his will or nominate strangers heirs, or her sons who had been appointed heirs should die without male-issue. Count Lewis died in the year 1574 without male-iffue, on which his brother Christopher became proprietor of Konigstein; but he also dying without heirs in the year 1581, the seventh brother, Count Albert George of Stolberg, and Christopher, younger fon to his brother Henry, seized on the county of Konigstein; but Daniel, Elector of Mentz, made himself master of all the lands which had belonged to the late Count Christopher of Stolberg, a few places only excepted which remained to the counts of Stolberg. That Elector had procured to himself a commission for seizing, in the Emperor's name, rendering tributary and holding, till further orders, the house and cattle of Konigstein, together with those parts of the lordships of Epstein, Falkenstein and Munzenberg, which the counts of Konigstein, and after them the Counts Lewis and Christopher, had held as fiefs of the Empire and Emperor, and by the deaths of those counts were become vacant and escheated to the Empire. In the year 1590, the counts of Stolberg found themselves under a necessity of compromising matters with Mentz, and of ceding to it nearly the whole of the Epstein inheritance, which is commonly (though according to Stolberg erroneously) called the county of Konigstein; the Elector of Mentz engaging to pay them, at feveral times, 300,000 florins: Lut foon after the counts of Stolberg declared the compact unjust, and complained at the Elector of Mentz had not fulfilled it; and the process, which ensued hereupon, is still depending before the Aulic Council.

In the mean time the Elector of Mentz, by virtue of that part of the nominal county of Konigstein, of which he possessed himself, votes in the Diet of the Upper-Rhine, as also does the house of Stolherg for the sinall part remaining to it. Both are likewise members of the college of the Imperial Wetteran counts; but the Elector of Mentz has separated himself from it. Of the assessment for Konigstein, in the matricula of the Empire, Mentz pays eighty florins and Stolherg twenty. The contingency of Mentz towards the chamber at Wetzlar, is included among the general sums payable by that Elector, but that of Stolherg is discontinued.

The Elector of Mentz's part confifts of the upper prefecturate of Konigflein, in which is Konigstein, a small open town and a demessie: but its castle, which flands on a high rock, is a fief of the Empire.

Upper-Urfel, a little town and a demesse, which, in the year 1625, suffered greatly by fire. Near it is the Kreuzkcapelle, or Chapel of the Cross, to which, on the days of the invention and exaltation of the cross, crowds of pilgrims resort.

The Kellercy of Neuenhayn, the places of which were, on the death of Count Christopher of Stolberg, seized by the Elector-palatine as administrator of the convent of Limpurg; but, in the year 1650, he ceded them to Mentz.

Neuchbayn, a parochial-village.

Sulzbach and Soden, free Imperial villages, in which the Elector of Mentz and the Imperial city of Frankfort, jointly appoint the chief magistrates. The last of these has some salt-pits and a medicinal bath.

The Kellerey of Vilbel, which is held in common with that of Hanau.

The little town of that name lies on the river Nid.

The Kellerey of Epslein, to which belongs one half of the town and castle of Epslein and the other half to Hesse-Darmsladt. The castle in it is a sief belonging to Mentz, but the town is a demesne.

The Kellery of Rockenberg lies along the Wetter. In it is Rockenberg, or Rockenburg, a parochial-village and castle, situate in a rocky territory on the Wetter, and a demessie. Near it stands Marienschlosz, a nunnery of Cistercians.

The Stolberg part of the county of Konigstein is divided betwixt two houses.

1. The princely house of Stolberg-Gendern possesses.

Geudern, or Gedern, a town which is the Prince's refidence.

Ranstatt, a town, together with the villages of Volkerskeim and Usenborn.

2. To the count of Stolberg-Rosla belong

Two thirds of the town and castle of Ordenburg.

Of the town and castle of Munzenberg, 20

Five villages and 5 of the village of Henshelbeim.

The COUNTY of

UPPER-YSENBURG,

§.1. LIES in the Wetterau, and is well represented in the above-mentioned map of the county of Hanau. It is called Upper-Isenburg, or Isenburg, by way of distinction from the county of Lower-Isenburg, in the Palatinate; and consists properly of the lordship of Budinger, which, in the year 1442, was raised to a county. Exclusive of the Reicksfort at Dreyeicken, which lies on the south side of the Mayne, this county extends from the presecturate of Buckerthal, in the county of Hanau as far as Vogelsberg. It is a fine corn country, containing also good pasturage, and some parts of it likewise produce wine. In it too are some considerable woods. That of Budingen in particular is one of the best Imperial siefs belonging to the counts of Isenburg. These counts have likewise purchased the post of great-forrester of Gelnhausen. The country is watered by several little streams; as, namely, the Kinzig, Semen and Nidder.

§. 2. The counts of Isenburg, whose residence and estate lay in the territories of the Middle-Rhine, are descended from Henry, lord of Isenburg, who lived in the thirteenth century. His fons, Lewis and Gerlach, being the founders of the Isenburg-Budingen and Isenburg-Grenfau lines. Count Lewis married Helwiga, eldest daughter of Gerlach, last lord of Budingen, and by her inherited part of the lordship of Budingen, and his descendents, as coheirs, or by purchase, are in possession of other parts of it: that is to fay, towards the beginning of the fourteenth century, on failure of the male-line of Budingen, the whole succession became divided among Isenburg, Braunek, Breuberg and Trimburg, as husbands of the four daughters of Gerlach, the last lord of Budingen; but the house of Brauneck failing in the year 1390, its part, by virtue of a stipulated succession, devolved to the other three heirs; and, on the subsequent extinction of the male-line of Breuberg, the lord of Isenburg and a lord of Epstein being married to the two coheiresses of Breuberg, who were counterles of Wertheim, one half of the Breuberg share devolved to the lord of Henburg and the other half to Epstein, and is still in the possession of the house of Stolberg. Trimburg also dying afterwards without heirs, his share, by coheirthip and purchase, became divided among the houses of Isenburg, Rodenftein and Hanau. The last of these has also purchased another part, and Heffe-Darmstadt holds the Rodenstein estate by right of conquest.

The house of Isenburg is at present divided into two lines; via. that of Isenburg-Offenback-Birstein, of which Isenburg-Philips-Eich is a collateral branch. The former of these, in the year 1744, was created a Prince of the Empire; the latter still continues counts. 2. That of Henburg-Budingen, which is divided into Henburg-Budingen, Henburg-Weerholz.

§. 3. The present counts of Henburg style themselves counts of Henburg and Budingen. Their arms are pearl two bars diamond; and the Budingen coat, which is saphire, a lien topaz, is not borne by the house of Henburg.

§. 4. The four ruling lines of the house of Henburg sit in the college of the Imperial counts of Wetterau, and also in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. Of this county's matricular affessment Henburg-Birstein pays sixty-nine florins, sitty-six kruitzers; Henburg-Budingen twenty-three florins, forty-two kruitzers and a half; Henburg-Wachtersback, twenty-two florins sixteen kruitzers; Henburg-Meerbolz, sourteen florins, nineteen kruitzers and three quarters, and Hesse-Darmstadt twenty-eight florins. Towards the contingent of the Circle, the several houses of Henburg surnish two companies. To the chamber at Wetzlar, Birstein pays forty-seven rixdollars, thirty-sive kruitzers and a half; Budingen, sixteen rixdollars, sive kruitzers and a half; Wachtersback, sisteen rixdollars, eight kruitzers; Meerbolz, nine rixdollars, fixty-four kruitzers; and Hesse-Darmstadt, for Isenburg, twenty-five rixdollars, thirty-three kruitzers and three quarters.

§. 5. Of this county

The princely line of Isenburg-Birstein possessies,

1. The district of Birstein, containing

Birstein, a town with the Prince's palace in it and very good iron-mines in its neighbourhood.

2. The district of Reichenbach, which is a fief of Fulda. In it are

The villages of Upper and Lower-Reichenbach, with some others. Several grievances presented by the vassals against the lords were, in the year 1654, redressed by a decree of Fulda.

3. The district of Wenings. In it is Wenings, a small town, containing a seat of the Princes.

4. The district of Selbold, containing

The church-village of Langen-Selbold, in which formerly was a convent, and noted for good wine, particularly for that fort called Eisenberg.

5. The district of Langen-Diebach borders on the prefecturate of Bucker-thal in the county of Hanau. In it is Langen-Diebach, anciently called Katzen-Diepach, a country-town.

6. The upper prefecturate of Offenbach, in which is Offenbach on the Mayn, a small town, belonging to the Bieger-Mark, and containing a palace which was once the residence of the Isinburg line till its extinction in the year 1718, as also a German Protestant, a French Protestant and a Lutheran church, the first stone of the last of which was laid in the year 1739. In this town too are several slourishing manufactures.

Hayn-zur Dreyeichen, or im Hayn, a little town, feated about three hours from Frankfort. Its castle was formerly called Hagen, and was the residence of the lords of Hagen, who asterwards, in the year 1174, removing to Munzenberg, assumed the title. This place is the centre of the old Imperial forest of Dreyeichen, in which the ancient Emperors used frequently to hunt. It formed a confiderable parcel of the Imperial demefnes about the Rhine and Mayn, and comprehended within its circuit a great part of the Rheingau. The places in it, which still pay the fees for the Dreveicher chace, being in ancient records and narratives placed in the Pagus Rheinensis. It also included a large part of the ancient Mayngau and Niedgau; and within it, at present, lye the woods of Bieg, Roder, Diepurg and the marcs of Anheim, as also the villages in them, which pay their yearly hunting-tax to the forest-offices at Dreyeichen, belonging to the two lordships of Henburg and Hanau. With respect to the ancient superintendency at Hagen or Munzenberg, or the patronage over the Imperial forest of Dreyeichen, on the extinction of the male line of the lords of Hagen or Munzenberg, who had held it as a fief of the Empire, it descended all but one fixth, which Hanau referved, to the house of Falkenstein, and afterwards jointly to Sayn and Isenburg; but, in the year 1648, Count Lewis having made an absolute purchase of the part of Sayn, which had been before mortgaged to him, he procured the Emperor's patent as fole forrester. This country continues still, in a particular fense, to be termed Das Reich. i.e. the Kingdom, or Empire.'

New-IJenburg, a new and regular built town, founded by a colony of French Refugees.

Sprendlingen, or Sprenglingen, a country-town.

Philips-Eich, the residence of an appenaged line of Isenburg.

Geinsheim, a village, seated on the Rhine, the government or patronage of which is lodged in the house of Isenburg, but as a sief of the convent of St. Jacob's-Berg at Mentz.

The Line of the Counts of Isenburg-Budingen.

To it belongs, 1. The district of Budingen, containing Budingen, a small town, but the capital of the whole county, which obtained its charter in the year 1353. The palace here has a fine parterre, contiguous to which is the orphan-house, in which a woollen manusacture is carried on. The free-school here was founded in the year 1606 by Count Wolfgang Ernest. Exclusive too of the new suburb, without the town lies also a place called

Great-Dorf, in which is an ennobling mansion-house, and not far from it a seat with a park for deer, and salt-works. In its neighbourhood also grows a good fort of wine. Vol. V.

R

Hernhag,

Hernhag, a place built by the Herrnhuters, or Moravians, on an estate which is exempt from all imposts or services whatever; but by a subsequent order of the Prince, in the year 1750, all persons resusing to renounce that sect were to depart the place.

Christinenhof, a mansion-house containing a farm belonging to the Prince.

2. The district of Dudelskeim, or Dilskeim, containing Dilskeim, a church-village, of which the half belonging to this district is called Oberndorf.

3. The district of Mockstatt is properly a fourth of the coheritage of Staden, the juridical and usufructuary possession of which, devolved in the year 1662, entirely to this house, but the district itself is a fiel of Mentz. In it are

The villages of Upper and Lower-Meckflatt and Heegheim; in the first of which is a collegiate foundation dedicated to St. Martin and St. Donatus.

The Line of the Counts of Isenberg-Wachtersbach.

1. The district of Wachtersbach contains Wachtersbach, a small town, containing a residentiary castle.

Streitberg, Spielberg, Witgenborn and other villages.

2. The district of Wolfsborn, in which is the church-village of that name with many others.

3. Ronneburg, an old castle standing on a very high hill.

4. The district of Assenbeim, to which belongs the share of this house in the town of Assenbeim, which has been mentioned twice already.

The Line of the Counts of Isenburg Meerholz.

1. The district of Meerkelz, in which is the hill of Rauenberg, at the foot of which lie the following places; viz.

Meerholz, or Morholz, a village, seated on the river Kinzig, and the residence of the counts, with a mansion-house in it belonging to the Gunderod family.

New-Haffel, or Haflau, a village.

2. The diffrict of Grundau, a good wine country. In it are

The villages of Lower-Grundau, Liebos, Rotenberg, Rodt, Neue-Herberg, an inn and the hunting-seat of Jetterbach. At Middel-Grundau, a village dependent on Budingen, Isenburg-Meerko'z has two free estates; one purchased from St. Peter's abbey, at Mentz, and the other from Hesse-Darmstadt.

3. The district of Eckardskausen. In it

Eckardshausen, or Eckertshausen, a large church-village.

Marienborn, a feat of a line of Henburg, which failed in the year 1717, was originally a nunnery. Near it is a farm-house and other buildings, which a congregation of Moravians have settled.

Of

Of the WILD and RHINE-GRAVES in general.

§. 1. THE county and lordships of the Wild and Rhine-graves are to be feen in the second and a part on the first leaf of Homann's map of the course of the Rhine, betwixt Basel and Bonn, lying dispersed.

§. 2. The number of Wald, or Wild, or Rau-graves, in Latin called comites saltuarii, forestarii, silvestres & hirsuti, was formerly greater than at present, and they were so called from their rude and woody territories: See Baron Senkenberg's Meditat. fasc.i. page 6. Conrad, the founder of the Wildgraves in question here, lived in the twelfth century, and his brother was Emich, Raugrave of Bomenburg, from whom are descended the Raugraves, whose estates were Old and New-Bamberg, or Baumberg, Stolzenberg, Simmern, Stromberg, &c. which are now in different hands. Gerhard, fon to the Wild-grave Conrad, had a fon named Conrad, who also had two fons, Emich and Gedfrey. In the former of these commenced the ancient line of the Wildgraves of Kirburg, and God/rev was the founder of that of Dhaun; but in the year 1349 or 1350, the latter failed in the person of the Wild-grave John; on which, agreeably to a convention and the confent of the Wild-graves of Kirburg, in the year 1555, the effects, lands, titles and arms belonging to it devolved to the Rhine-grave house, Hedwig, fister of John, the last Wild-grave, being married to the Rhine-grave John I. The Kirburg line came to a period in the year 1409, by the decease of the Wild-grave Otho, and his father Frederick having, in the year 1355, entered into a compact relating to the succession with John III. who was also married to Adelheida, daughter to the Wild-grave Gerhard II. the whole estate of the Wildgraves, whether property or fiefs, fell to the Rhine-grave family, whose origin is deduced from the Rkine-grave Adelbeim, who lived in the eighth century; but its genealogical register, which begins with the Rhinegrave Sigfrid, who lived in the twelfth century, is the most authentic voucher. John VI. now both Wild and Rhine-grave, who died in the year 1499, left two fons, of whom the eldest gave origin to the second line of Hanau, and John, the youngest, was the patriarch of the second Kirburg The latter, in the year 1688, failed in the fifth degree, in the perfon of John X. but the former, which was propagated by Philip Francis, fon to Philip, became, by his three fons, divided into three other lines, Frederick the eldest founding Salm; John Christopher, the second, that of Grumbach; and the third fon, Adolphus Henry, the particular line of Dhaun. Of the Salm line, which, by Philip Otho and Frederick Magnus, fons to Frederick, became divided into the princely line of Salm and the collateral one of Flanders; the latter of which now enjoys the estate and title of the former, and is subdivided into those of Hoog/Iraat and Loes; an R 2 account account has been given in p. 84. The Grumbach line has been continued by John, fon to John Christopher, and his grandson Adolphus; whose son, Leopold Philip William, was the sounder of this particular line of Grumbach, as his other son, Frederick William, was of that of Stein. The particular Dhaun line sailed, in the year 1750, in Frederick William.

§. 3. Ever fince the Rhinegrave house devolved to the possession of the Wildgraves estates, all its branches have borne the title and arms, as Wildgraves of Dhaun and Kirburg, Rhinegraves of Stein, and Counts of Salm, though each in reality possesses but one of these counties. They also stile themselves from the lordships of Pinstingen and Puttlingen. The samily arms of the Wildgraves are diamond a lion rampant, crowned pearl; and of the Rhinegraves, topaz, a lion ruby, with a crown saphire; for Kirburg they bear ruby three lions topaz; for Salm, ruby two salmons pearl, with sour crosslets; for Vinstingen, a fess pearl.

- §. 4. Every reigning house sits and votes both in the college of the Imperial counts of the Wetteran and in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. In the matricula of the Empire, their assessment is four horsemen and twelve foot, or ninety-six florins; but other estimates make it only seventy-sive florins, forty-sive kruitzers, which are divided in the following manner, viz. Stein pays twenty-three florins, Grumbach nineteen florins sisteen kruitzers, Dhaun twenty-one florins thirty kruitzers, and Diemringen twelve florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar, Dhaun is taxed in sisteen in the rix-dollars eighteen kruitzers and a half, Grumbach in seven rix-dollars sisty-four kruitzers and one fourth, Stein in a like sum; Salm for Kirburg, in ten rix-dollars sixty-two kruitzers and three fourths; Dhaun for Kirburg in six rix-dollars sixty-two kruitzers; Grumbach for Kirburg, in the same sum as Stein is for Stirburg.
- §. 5. The Wild and Rhine-grave lands are principally fiefs, some of which are held of the archbishops of Mentz and Triers, some of the Electorpalatine and the house of Deuxponts, and others of the abbey of St. Maximin near Triers, and that of Tholey near Ottweiler. At the treaty of Venery, in 1698, a perpetual compact of fuccession was entered into betwixt the Elector-palatine, the princely house of Salm, and the Wild and Rhine-grave house. The part of marshal they hold as a fief of the Elector-palatine. The fiels held in common by the Wild and Rhine-graves are conferred jointly by them; they have also a joint court of fiefs, in which the eldest branch prefides. Edicts relating to the whole country are issued in the names of all the lords collectively, who also jointly nominate an ecclesiastical inspector. By the lineal conventions made in the years 1514, 1520, and 1696, and the family contract of 1695, no head of a line can directly or indirectly alienate any part of the joint lands and estates without the consent of the rest of the proprietors; and though fuch alienation be admitted, yet shall a right of redemption remain to every head of a line without distinction of degree.

The Line of the Counts of GRUMBACH, possesses,

1. The lordship and prefecturate of Grumbach on the river Glan, which runs into the Nahe. In this territory are found amethysts, agate, cornelians and mocha-stones.

Grumbach, the capital, is a municipal town feated in a valley not far from Lautereck, and above it on a rock is the residentiary seat of the line of Grumbach.

Sulzbach is a village in it, and the place of interment of the Grumbach family.

2. Of the estate of the late line of Kirburg, the house of Grumbach, pursuant to an act of partition made in 1701, possesses,

The lordship of Tronecken, or Dronecken, which lies on the Hunsruck, constituting a prefecturate of fourteen villages; two of which are Catholic and twelve Lutheran. Its yearly produce is computed at about 2400 florins. In it we shall take notice of Tronecken, a feat and village situate on the rivulet of Tron.

Talfang, a market town, in which the Lutheran vassals of this lordship have their church. The tythes of this place are payable to the abbey of St. Maximin at Triers, which has assigned one third to the convent of St. Anne in Triers and the Romish priests of this town.

The Line of the RHINEGRAVES of STEIN, possesses,

1. The Rhinegraveate of Stein, or as it is also called the county of Rhine-grafenstein, lying on the Nabe. In it is Rheingrafenslein, once the residentiary castle, and standing on a high rock on the Nahe. It was formerly a very strong and formidable place, but in the year 1688, the French, incensed at the simmers of the Rhine-grave Frederick William, demolished it. Near this castle formerly stood the Affenstein, or Ape-stone.

Munster-am-Stein, a small village lying between the castle on the other fide of the Nabe, and containing falt-works.

Under, or Gau-Gresweiler, or simply Grebweiler, seated near the little river Appel, on the demolition of the castle of Rheingrafenstein, became the residence of the Wild and Rhinegraves of Stein, who in the year 1747 built there a very stately seat. This little place was endowed with so many privileges and so greatly improved by the counts John, Charles Lewis, and Charles Magnus, that it is now grown to a little town. In the year 1501, the Palsgrave John purchased three fourths of it from Frederick Derne, and in 1553 sold it again to Carsilius Beyer of Bellenhosen, who also made a purchase of the other fourth from the samily of Gronenberg, whose descendants fold it absolutely and hereditarily to the Wild and Rhine-graves for 10,000 florins. In 1698, the Elector-palatine divested himself of the hereditary light of hunting here.

Hochsteten, Lower-Hausen, Munster-Appel, Upper-Hausen, Alsenz and Winterborn, in all which the Elector-palatine enjoyed the right of hunting and villenage; but in the year 1698 resigned them.

2. Of the inheritance of the late lines of Kirburg this house by a decree of partition made in the year 1701 obtained.

1. The lordship and prefecturate of WILDENBURG on the HUNSRUCKE, and a fief of Triers; its produce about 1700 florins per annum. In it is Wildenburg, a cattle standing on a high hill in a forest, and built in the beginning of the 14th century by the Wildgrave Frederick. The little village which once stood in the valley below it is at present destroyed.

The villages of Keffeld, Schauen, Bruchweiler, Seiszweiler, Veitzrath, Kirschweiler, Breiderthal, Sonnschied, Hottenbach, Ellershausen, Upper-Hussenbach, Herborn, Aszbach, Stipskausen and Hirschfeld.

2. The precinct of Worstatt in the upper prefecturate of Alzey in the Palatinate, which annually brings in about 1300 florins, and exclusive of the large village of Worstatt contains also those of Eichloch, Steinbockenheim, and Wendelsheim, in all which places the Elector-palatine had a right of hunting, till in the year 1698 he resigned it for other considerations.

The DHAUN Line, possesses

1. The Wildgravate of Dhaun on the Hunfrucke, along the river Simmern, near its influx into the Nahe. To it belongs Dhaun, a fine feat standing on a high hill near the river Simmern, where the family of Dhaun, which is at present become extinct, resided. Near it formerly stood the Wildgrave castle of Brunkenstein-am-Rothenburg, but a lord of Oberstein having made himself master of it, the Wildgrave Frederick, at length caused it to be razed.

St. Johannesberg, a church situate near Dhaun, and the place of interment of the Wild and Rhine-graves of that family. Baldwin, archbishop of Triers, in the year 1342, conferred the house of St. Johannesberg, as a sief on the Wildgrave John of Dhaun on his demolishing the castle of Brunkenstein, which however was not long after rebuilt.

2. A part of the Kirn, a small town seated on the Nahe.

3. Of the Kirburg estate, the line of Dhaun, in the year 1701 inherited.

The villages of Flonheim and Uflhofen, and in exchange received Bornheim and Upper-Saulheim, all lying within the upper prefecturate of Alfey, belonging to the Palatinate; but the Elector, in 1698, renounced his right of hunting in these grounds. The annual produce of them is above 3000 florins. In it lies

The

The lordship and prefecturate of DIEMRINGEN or DIMMERINGEN in Westreich in the county of Saarwerden. In the year 1718 the Dhaun line took possession of it, though both the house of Grumbach and also that of Stein laid claim to one third. Diemringen, the principal place in it, is a market-town.

4. In the principality of Salm, one half of Blessa, Gesell, Gutbrunn, Sassi, and Wagenbach; but of Steinthal and Deutsch-Rumpach only one third.

- 5. The lordship of Puttlingen, in French Putelange, in Westreich, being an old fief of the bishopric of Mentz, and which from the barons of Erickingen, devolved to the Kirkburg line of the Wild and Rhine-grave house, on the extinction of whom the Dhaun line succeed to it. That line failing in the year 1750, in the person of Frederick William, the Rhinegrave houses of Grumbach and Stein put themselves into possession of one half of the country, and the other part devolved to the Princes of Salm-Salm and Salm-Kirburg. The last of these insisted on the whole estate, whilst the former required only one half, and the grounds of their claim were these: The right of community implies a right of inheritance and fuccession to the fiefs; both the houses of the Wildgraves were in community with the extinguished line, confequently both are entitled to the inheritance and the fuccession to the fiefs without any regard to the degree of confanguinity. But this claim, derived from community, the Princes of Salm will not admit, and in some respects even call in question the community of the two Rhingrave families, affirming that in the inheritance the degree of confanguinity is to take place of all other confiderations. The process is still depending.
- Obf. 1. The upper prefecturate of Meddersheim on the Nabe is jointly held by the Prince of Salm-Kirburg and the Rhinegrave of Grumbach and Stein.
- 2. Of the Wild and Rhine-grave's share in the lordship of Rhaunen which is environed by the posterior lordship of Spanheim some account has already been given.
- 3. The lordship or county of Morchingen, by the French called Morange, by the Germans Lorraine, was brought by Johanna or Johannetta, daughter of Simon Count Salms, to her husband John V. Wild and Rhine-grave, and afterwards descended to John VII. sounder of the Kirburg line. On the failure of its male branches the Wild and Rhine-grave house endeavoured to retain the lordship, but by a decree of the Council of State of Luneville, in the year 1729, it was adjudged to the descendants of the daughters of John Casimir and George Frederick, counts of Kirburg Morchingen. The principal place in it is a market-town.

Of the COUNTY and HOUSE of L E I N I N G E N in general.

§. 1. HE best view of the county of Leiningen is to be had in Homann's map of the archbishopric of Worms. It lies in the ancient Wormsgau, not far from the Upper Rhine, and even partly on it, and is mostly environed by the Palatinate, excepting that part which borders on the lordships of Kirchheim and Stauf and belongs to Nasjau Weilburg. A small part also joins the territories of Worms and Spires. The soil here is very fertile, abounding in wood and game, and having also copper and iron mines, with good quarries of stone.

§. 2. The first count of Leiningen, of whom we have any certain account, is Emich, who lived in the 12th century. Of another Emich, perhaps his son, a record is still in being in which he stiles himself, by the Grace of God, a phrase used by his descendants. In the beginning of the 13th century Frederick count of Leiningen inherited from his brother Sigismund lord of Altorf, the county of Dachsburg, which had descended to the latter as the portion of his wife Gertrude daughter to Albert the last count of Dachsburg. In the years 1317 and 1318 a partition of the Leiningen estates was made betwixt Frederick IV. and his brother Godfrey, so as to give rise to two separate houses.

Of the antient family of the Counts of Leiningen, and that of Westerburg which succeeded it.

§. 1. THE ancient house of Leiningen derives its origin from the above-mentioned Count Frederick IV. and obtained from the Emperor the dignity of Landgrave, at that time synonimous with that of Prince, in which Hesse was confirmed by the Emperor Frederick III. But in 1467 the Landgravate house of Leiningen failed on his decease. He left, however, a fifter behind him named Margaret, who was married to Reinhard II. lord of Westerburg, and succeeded to all her brother's lordships, most of which were patrimonial. But the Elector-palatine and the bishop of Worms reassumed all the male fiefs, which the, at present, extinct line of Leiningen had held of them; and Margaret the heires unable to affert her claim against her competitor Count Emich VII. of the younger or Hartenburg house, put herself under the protection of the Elector-palatine and in return turn for his affishance made over to the electoral-house a considerable part of the patrimonial estates. From the years 1468 to 1608 the counts of Hartenburg made no further pretensions to the Landgrave Helse's succession; but in the last year renewed them. From 1618 to 1627 a process was carried on with great vehemence by both houses; and in 1705 it broke out anew with the same animosity.

The Westerburg house, which, in the manner above-mentioned had succeeded to the name and estate of the old Leiningen line is descended from the house of Runkel, for Sigfrid, lord of Runkel in the year 1226 made a convention betwixt his two fons, who were the founders of the Westerburg and Runkel lines; but a perpetual variance prevailing among them, whilst they held the estate in common, in the year 1288 they came to a partition, by which the old line obtained Westerburg and Schadeck, and Runkel became the portion of the younger. In the year 1290 the former acquired by marriage the lordship of Schauenburg on the Lahn, and a part also of Kleeberg and Huttenberg; and in the year 1467, Reinhard II. of Westerburg, by his spouse Margaret, arrived to the possession of the lordships of the ancient house of Leiningen, at that time but just become extinct. His sons Philip George and Reinhard IV. agreed on a division of the estates; Leiningen to fall to the share of the eldest; the second to have Schauenburg and Kleeberg; and Westerburg and Schadeck to descend to the youngest. In the year 1557 they also entered into an act of succession, by which the daughters were excluded. The two first lines failing, their possessions escheated to the last, which ever fince the year 1694 is again become divided into two lines, namely, the Christopher line founded by Christopher Christian, fon to Count George William, and the George line which began in George. The residence of the sormer of these is at Grunstadt, and that of the latter at Westerburg; though these places being held in common, both lines have their respective houses at them.

- §. 2. The title of this house is Count of Leiningen, Lord of Westerburg, Grunstadt, Upper-Brunn and Forbach, and Baron of the Sacred Roman Empire. The arms of Leiningen are saphire, three eagles pearl, and the crest a lindentree; those of Westerburg, ruby, a cross topaz scene with crosslets, and the crest a red-wing.
- §. 3. This house votes at the general Diet among the Wetterau counts of the Empire, and likewise in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper Rhine. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire is two horse and four footmen, or forty florins per month; but in another place I find it only thirty-six florins twenty-six kruitzers. To the chamber of Wetzlar it pays forty rix-dollars thirty-four kruitzers and three fourths.
 - §. 4. Its possessions are,
 - 1. A part of the county of Leiningen, of which
 - I. Both the present lines jointly possess Vol. V.

Grunfladt, a pretty large town with streight streets in it and handsome houses. This place lies in a plain near a high mountain. In it are two residences belonging to the counts which were built since the decay of the old Lciningen seats, and called the Upper and Lower-Courts. The former of these belongs to the George line, who rebuilt it quite anew. The latter, of which the Christopher line is owner, was formerly an abbey, but purchased of the abbot together with all its appurtenances, which at that time were very considerable. The ancient great church here is in the hands of the Lutherans. The Protestants, after much opposition, have obtained permission by consent of the two lines and the burghers to build themselves a church; and in 1673 the exercise of their religion was also granted to the Roman Catholics. In 1703 a Capuchin convent was erected just without a gate of the town. In the suburbs is an orphan-house, and to the town belongs a large tract of corn-land and vineyards, which with its markets and fairs give it a very thriving traffic.

Hunningen, anciently Monasterium Hegenense, and a convent of Auguslines, lies in Leininger vale, and ever fince the year 1450 has been called Hayn. This convent was founded in the 12th century, and at the time of the Reformation the Monks one and all voluntarily embraced Lutheranism. The Latin school here was brought to a period by the thirty years war. The county-pastors and schoolmasters are now paid out of the revenues of the convent. To it belongs Neuhof, a neighbouring mansion-house, with its grounds.

Wattenbeim, a village mortgaged to the family of Blumenkron.

The church-villages of Munchweiler and Gambach, which in the year 1705 Count Wieser possessed himself of under a pretext of their being allodial, and which has occasioned a process before the aulic council.

Hoch-Speyer, a parochial village, of which only two thirds belong to the joint-tenure, but the house of Leiningen-Hartenburg, taking possession of them, a process commenced also for this part before the aulic council.

Quirnheim, a village held as a fief by the Merz family. To it belongs the farm of Busbar, or Euschweiler.

Obs. The inhabitants of Rodenbach were formerly subject to Leiningen-Westerburg, but the Elector-palatine has assumed the sovereignty over them.

II. The Christopher line possesses

Old-Leiningen, a castle standing on a high hill in the vale of Leiningen, and which was destroyed by the French. Beneath it in the vale lies a church-village of the same name.

Hertlingshausen, a village, in which once was a nunnery, but it went to ruin long before the Reformation.

The Hintere Gericht, as it is called, comprehending the church-villages of Dieffenthal, Ebertsheim, and Wachenheim, in which is an old ruined castle and an ennobling mansion-house, together with the villages of Mertesheim.

testeim. The chapel in the last of these since the year 1680 has been in the possession of the Capuchines.

Kirchheim, Sauffenkeim, and Bifferskeim, three church-villages.

Neukof, Wilhelminhof, and the manfion-house near the castle of Old-Leiningen, belong to the reigning samily.

III. The George line is fole proprietor of

New-Leiningen, a little town, lying in the vale of Leininger, and held in common with the bishop of Worms, whose half it possesses as a sief. In this place once stood a castle which was demolished by the French.

Affelbeim, Albsbeim, Lautersbeim and Monsbeim, all parochial-villages.

Obrigheim, a confiderable village.

A great number of farms on the Matzenberg and in the vale of Leininger, as also Nackerhof and those of Peckenhausen.

The Lordship of W E S T E R B U R G.

- §. I. THE best view of it is taken in the third leaf of Homann's map of the dominions of Hesse-Darmstadt and the lands adjacent. This Iordship lies in the *Westerwald, betwixt Montabaur, a presecturate of the Elector of Triers and the territories of Nassau, being about two hours in circumference.
- §. 2. In it are fine pastures and consequently excellent sheep and horned cattle. It produces also rye, barley, oats and pulse, with plenty of very fine earth-nuts, as also all kinds of fruits. The woods here are thinned, but it has a remarkable mine of wood-coal, which suffices of itself to furnish the neighbourhood with suel. The colour, filaments and twigs of the coal manifest it to be real wood, and the depth of the vein is about twenty feet. It breeds deer and other game, and its rivers abound in trout and cray-fish, its ponds in pike, carp and other kinds.

§. 3. This lordship commenced, in the year 878, together with the abbey of Gemunden. Of the lords of Wellerburg an account has been given above.

§. 4. The lordship contains

* That is according to the present extensive import of the word Westerwald; for, originally, the lordship of Westerwald, consisted only of the three church-villages of Emmerichenhayn, Marienberg and Neukirchen, belonging to the Nassau family; but these names have been extended to the neighbouring countries. The ancient name of Westerwald was Nistria, which it derived from the river Nister, and by degrees was altered to Wyler, and at length to Wester.

1. The joint part of both the houses, which confists of Westerburg, which stands on a mountain and received its charter from the Emperor Adolphus of Nassau. One third of it belongs to the Christopher line, and the George line owns the other two thirds, besides its very ancient castle; and the former, in lieu of its share, is sole proprietor of the seat of the counts which stands in the town. Here is still a Burgsitz, or fortified house, known by the name of Steinknut. In the vale lies a large suburb called Lebrgasse.

II. The separate part of the Christopher Line, includes,

Wilmenroth, a parochial-village; Berzhann, a large village, and Gersassen, a village, with a mansion-house in it belonging to the lord of the country, together with a part of Gerkenroth.

III. The part separately belonging to the George Line contains,

1. The jurisdiction of Gemunden, including

Gemunden, a large parochial-village with a yearly fair. To this church anciently belonged twenty-four prebendaries, who were instituted in the year 878.

Winnen, a village; in it a mansion-house belonging to the Count. Wengeroth, a village, in which the count has a delightful villa.

Nirnbaufen, a small village.

2. The upper territory, to which belong the villages of Hergeroth, Halbs and Stablhofen.

§. 5. In this lordship are also reckoned

Weltersburg, or Waltersberg, a walled country-town, of which both houses are joint-proprietors. This place was formerly a lordship belonging to the house of Sayn, and which, by virtue of a marriage, in the year 1355, descended in part to the house of Westerburg. The town itself enjoys some privileges, though the inhabitants are subject to the right of villenage, and contains a church which is incorporated with the abbeychurch of Salz. Its castle, which stood on the summit of a mountain, lies at present in ruins; but in the town are two burghauses.

St. Leonard, a chapel lying in its neighbourhood and on the frontiers of this lordship, being very famous and much resorted to.

The lordship of Schadeck on the Labn, opposite to the town of Runkel, belongs also in common to the two lines. It consists of the ancient castle and town of Schadeck, both standing on a hill, and of several estates and manors.

The

The castle here was built about the year 1250, in the time of the seuds betwixt the two lines of Westerburg and Runkel. It is the usual residence of the dowagers. The town has its own parochial-church. The greatest part of this lordship, with respect to its sovereignty and pasturage, is common also to the counts of Wid-Runkel; and within this common tract is an ancient sepulchral-church called Wenigen-Vilmar, in which both Schadeck and Runkel inter their dead. Near it is also the place where, in May, the Schultbeissen and Schoffen, or principal civil-officers, hold a court in the open air. The whole lordship is mortgaged for 1000 slorins.

Obs. The lordship of Forbach, which constitutes a part of the titles of the house of Leiningen-Westerburg, lies in Westerburg, not far from Saarbruck.

The youngest Line of the house of Leiningen.

§. 1. The youngest line of the Leiningen house of Leiningen-Hartenburg is descended, in the manner above-mentioned, from Count Jeffery, or Godfrey, whose great-grandson, Emich VII. on failure of the male-stock of the old line, claimed the inheritance of their lands; and from that time both he and his house assumed the name of Dacksburg, which had been borne before by the old Leiningen line. John Philip and Emich X. fons to his grandson, Emieb IX. founded two lines; the former that of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Hartenburg, and in Emich X. commenced the other, called Leiningen-Daehsburg-Heydesheim, or Falkenburg. The first of these lines became divided in Frederick the Great and Charles Lewis, fons to Count John Frederick, into the Durkheim and Bockenheim branches; but the second into three, by means of the fons of Count Emich XI. by two venters; George William propagating the still existing branch of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Heyde-Sheim; Emich Christian that of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Dachsburg, which, in the year 1708, came to a period in his fon Charles Frederick; and John Lewis the branch of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Guntersblum, which also still exists.

§. 2. The prefent title of this house is Counts of Leiningen and Dacksburg, lords of Aspremont, Oberstein, Bruch, Burgel and Reipolzkirchen, &c. The arms for Leiningen are saphire, three eagles pearl, a bridge ruby and three columns ruby; for Dacksburg, pearl, three lions ruby sence, with eight lillies; and for Aspremont, ruby, a cross pearl.

§. 3. This house enjoys one vote in the college of the counts of the Wetterau, and likewise in the Diets of the Upper-Rhine. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire is nine horse and nine footmen, or seventy-two florins; but in another list it stands only at fifty-nine florins twelve kruitzers, which are divided in the following manner; viz. for Hartenburg thirty florins, for Heydeskeim twelve florins, and for Guntersblum seventeen florins, florins, twelve kruitzers. The contingency of this house to the chamber at Wetzlar is twelve rixdollars, fifteen kruitzers and a half.

§. 4. The principal places belonging to it, in the county of Lei-ningen, are

Hartenburg, anciently the refidentiary feat, and still the distinguishing title of this line.

Durkheim an der Hart, a little town, which the counts making their residence the public offices are kept there.

Limburg, originally a convent of Benedictines, but destroyed by Count Emich in the year 1503, during the palatinate war, and afterwards the revenue belonging to it sequestrated.

The villages of Frankenstein, Hochspeyer and a part of Steinbach.

Great and Little-Bockenbeim, villages belonging to a collateral-line, which takes its title from them, and is also proprietor of Bechtheim and other villages.

Heydesheim, or Hedesheim, a village, containing a seat of the counts.

Butesheim and Guntershlum, lying not far from the Rhine, Ilversheim, Dolgelsheim and Walertum, all villages belonging to the line of Leiningen-Duchsburg-Guntershlum.

Obf. The places in Upper-Alface, belonging to this house, are mentioned in vol. II. p. 601. The lordship of Bruch lies in the dutchy of Berg.

MUNZFELDEN, Minsfelden, Mensfelden, an Imperial castle and village lying betwixt Dietz and Kirchberg, two towns belonging to branches of the house of Nassau, which has been already mentioned in the fourth Volume. Trier and Nassau-Usingen (not Dietz, as in those places) are joint owners of it, the former of two thirds and the latter of one. That part at present belonging to the Elector of Triers, was formerly included in the lordship of Schadeck; and thus became the property of the counts of Leiningen-Westerburg; but has since been ceded, with reserve of redemption and the contributions, to the house of Waldeck, from whom it has passed to the Elector of Triers; and the house of Leiningen-Westerburg no longer receives the contribution. This territory gives a seat and vote in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. Its quota to the Circle is sifty-four kruitzers.

§. 1. THIS county is to be met with in the fifth and third leaf of Homann's maps of Hesse-Darmstadt and the land adjacent, and borders on the presecturates of Battenberg and the estate of Breidenbach, Biedenkopf, belonging to Hesse-Darmstadt, the Principality of Nasjau-Dillenburg, and the dutchy of Westphalia. Its length about sour German miles and a half, and its greatest breadth somewhat above three.

§. 2. Some parts of it are very mountainous, yielding plenty of wood, and mines of filver, copper and iron, which last being melted in the founderies of Bausser, is sent to the flatting-mills at Laaspher and Saszmannshausen. It deals largely in grafiery, but produces little grain, and that chiefly oats. The rivers Lahn and Eder, the sources of which are in the territories of Nassau-Dillenburg, not far from the borders of Wetgenstein, run through this county into the abovementioned prefecturates of He//e.

§. 3. The present counts of Sayn and Witgenstein are descended from Godfrey, count of Sayn, whose sons, John and Engelbert, sounded two lines. The John line obtained the county of Sayn, and the portion of the Engelbert line was the lordships of Homburg and Vallendar. Count Salentin Engelberty grandson, succeeded the last count of Witgenstein in right of his wife Elizabeth, daughter of the said count and heiress to his territories; and all the present counts of Witgenstein are his descendants. See p. 666. On the prospect of the failure of the John line in Count Henry, in 1593, Count Lewis of the Engelbert line, with his concurrence and that of the lords of the fiefs, made an order that the reigning lords should be only two, and George, his eldest son, was to have the feat and prefecturate of Berleburg, together with the lordship of Neumagen; and that the second son should inherit the county of Witgenstein and the lordship of Vallendar; but that, on the extinction of the John line, the county of Sayn should devolve, by consanguinity, to his line, and that Count William should enjoy it; the county of Witgenstein, together with that of Vallandar, to go to Lewis, his third fon; all which fell out accordingly at the decease of Count Henry, in the year 1606. Thus the county of Witgenstein became divided into the two houses of Sayn-Witgenstein of Witgenstein, and Sayn-Witgenstein of Berleburg.

§. 4. The title of the Witgenstein house is Count of Sayn, Witgenstein and Hohenstein, Hohenstein*, lords of Homburg, Vallendar, Neumagen, Lohra, Klettenberg, &c. but the counts of the house of Berleburg style themselves Counts of Stayn and Witgenstein-Berleburg, lords of Homburg and Neumagen, &c. Their arms for Sayn are, ruby, a lion rampant, guardant, double-queve topaz; for Witgenslein, pearl, two pallets diamond; for Homburg, ruby, a castle argent.

§. 5. Each house has a distinct vote both in the college of the Wetterau counts of the Empire and in the Diet of the Upper-Rhine; but their precedence is a subject of debate among them. To the matricular taxation of this county, which is one horse and four foot, or twenty-eight florins, Witgenstein pays sixteen florins, forty-eight kruitzers; and Berleburg eleven florins, twelve kruitzers.

§. 6. The joint revenue of the county of Witgenstein and Berleburg, and the lordship of Homburg, is computed at 50,000 rixdollars.

The house of Sayn-Witgenstein, of Witgenstein, possesses,

1. The county of Witgenstein, in a limited sense, which constitutes only the greatest part of the county of Witgenstein in its more extensive meaning; and in which, besides the town of Laasphe, the clergy, civil officers and other freemen, are three hundred and thirty-two vasials. The ordinary produce of this county amounts to 2100 rixdollars per annum, and the extraordinary to six hundred. This county contains Witgenstein, a residence of the counts, which is seated in a high mountain and is the patrimonial-house of the ancient counts of Witgenstein. Below it lies

Laasphe, a little town, situate on the Lahn.

The thirty-eight villages and farms of this county are divided into the four districts of Banf, Faydingen, Arfelden and the vogtey of Elsoff; to the latter of which belong the three villages of Elsoff, Alertshausen and Bettel-hausen, it being separated from Battenberg, a presecturate of Hesse-Darmstadt, by the river Elsoff. A part of the lands of the Witgenstein, which are vasfals to this vogtey, lie on the other side of the Elsoff, being subject to the jurisdiction of Hesse. Battenberg was once a part of the county of Wit-

^{*} The county of Hohenstein was by the Elector Frederick William of Brandenburg granted, in the year 1649, to John, count of Witzenstein, in the manner he had possessed it; but, in 1609, re-assumed by the Elector Frederick, who, in the year 1702, was pleased to notify to Count Augustus of Witzenstein, that he would liquidate all the debts of the samily of Witzenstein, and others of a longer date chargeable on it; pa at once the sum of 100,000 species rixdollars, besides another 20,000 advanced by Count Augustus to his sather Count Ouslavus, for discharging some debts with which the county was encumbered. The counts of Witzenstein, however, still continue to assume the title and arms of Hohenstein, Lohra and Klettenberg.

genstein, but in the thirteenth century was mortgaged to the Elector of Mentz, who, in the year 1715, transferred it to Heffe.

2. The lordship of Vallendar; but the sovereignty of this lordship belongs to the house of Triers. The part and rights of the counts of Witgenstein in it have been mentioned before. The present proprietor is a collateral branch of Witgenstein.

The house of Sayn-Witgenstein Berleburg possesses,

1. The nominal county of Berleburg, which is, properly, only a part and a prefecturate of the county of Witgenstein. This county contains Berleburg, a small town, lying on the little river of Berlen, which near it runs into the Eder. In the town is a fine palace and two other houses belonging to the count.

Twenty-two villages.

2. The lordship of Neumagen on the Mosel, but the sovereignty is in the hands of Triers. This lordship produces excellent wine.

3. The lordship of Homburg is on all sides environed by the dutchy of Berg and the county of Mark. An account of which hath been already given.

The COUNTY of FALKENSTEIN,

- §. I. TERMINATES, to the north, on the upper prefecturate of Alzey in the palatinate; westward, on the under prefecturate of Landsberg, belonging to Deuxponts; southward, is bounded by the dutchy of Lautern, and, eastward, by the county of Wartemberg and the lordship of Kirchbeim in the territories of Nassau-Weilburg; from which it is separated by Donnersberg, a ridge of mountains which is covered with oak, beach and chesnut-trees.
- §. 2. The genealogy and history of the ancient lords of Falkenstein is very obscure, Philip of Polant, who lived from the year 1239 to 1275, first assumed this title from Falkenstein castle; and by his wife, a coheires of Munzenberg, inherited a great part of the Wetterau and other lordships. His descendants divided themselves into two lines, the sounders of which were the two brothers Cuno II. and Philip VII. Of the first line was Philip X. who dying in the year 1407, his lands fell to his cousin Vol. V.

Philip XI. whom the Emperor Wenceflaus had before, namely, in the year 1397, created a count, and who was the first and last of his family who bore that title. On his decease, in 14.10, he was succeeded by Warner, youngest brother to Philip X. and archbishop of Trier; and from him the Falkenficin estate descended to the sisters children of Philip X. These sisters were Luitgard, married to Eberhard, lord of Epstein; and Agnes, spouse to Otho, Count Solms, by whom she had two daughters, one of whom was married to Rupert, count of Virneburg, whose grandfon, William, took the name of Falkenstein; and in him commenced the second branch of that family. Margaret, one of his daughters, was married to Melchier, lord of Dhaun; and the other, called Margaret, to Cuno, count of Manderscheid. Wirich, fon to the former, had three fons; namely, Philip, John and Sebastian. From John was originated the third Falkenstein line, and his daughter, Sidonia, whose husband was Axel Lowenkaupt, in the year 1579, renounced her father's inheritance; and her brother Emich, lord of Daun, having no iffue, nominated for heirs the Sebastian line abovementioned; and on its failure, that of Philip, who successively became proprietors of the county of Falkenstein; but, on its descent to William Wirich, of the last line, he sold it, in the year 1667, to Charles III. duke of Lorrain, who bestowed it on Prince Charles Henry of Vaudemont; on whose decease, Leopold Joseph Charles, duke of Lorrain, put in his claim to it against the houses of Lowenhaupt and Manderscheid; but, in the years 1724 and 1727, they came to an agreement. In the year 1731, the whole county, without any referve, was adjudged by the Aulic Council, to his fon Duke Francis Stephen, afterwards Emperor; and, though in the years 1735 and 1736, he ceded the dutchy of Lorrain to France, yet it was with refervation of the county of Falkenstein, and he compromised matters with the houses of Lowenhaupt and Manderscheid.

§. 3. The arms of this county are a wheel. In the matricula of the Empire it is affeffed at two horse and four foot, or forty florins per month; and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays fifteen rixdollars, fixty-seven kruitzers and a half. The present Emperor, by virtue of this county, votes in the college of Princes as Margrave of Nomeny; and likewise in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine.

§. 4. To this county belong the following places; viz.

Falkenstein, a little town, lying below the castle, and whence this name is derived, but now fallen to ruins.

Winweiler, a little town, containing a castle, and being the seat of an upper presecturate. In its neighbourhood is a fine lake.

Imsbach-Alzenborn, St. Alban, Dill-Kirchen and Lower-Kirchen, all villages.

A part of the church-village of Steinbach.

The villages of faxweiler and Upper-Sulze, otherwife Sulzheim, not far from from New-Leiningen; Ilbesheim, which lies on the Gleichen; Freimersheim, not far from Alzey and Odernheim, together with Upper-Grehweiler, formerly Upper-Dorf, situate near Lower-Grehweiler, a seat of the counts; as also Hilsheim, or Hildesheim, of which only half belongs to it; Dalheim, not far from Oppenheim; Harxheim an der Steige, near Lower-Ulm; Eickelsheim, lying within a small distance of New-Baumberg; Bibelsheim, not far from the former; and Die lange Meil; together with Several farms and woods on the Hunfruck, about Winweiler and Falkenstein.

The LORDSHIP of

REIPOLTZKIRCHEN,

§. 1. LIES on the Hunfruck, betwixt the two upper prefecturates of Lautern and Lautereck, in the Palatinate, and a part of the dutchy of Deuxponts.

- §. 2. This lordship belonged formerly to the house of Hohenfels, which, in the year 1602, failed in the person of Wolf Philip of Hohenfels, whose spouse, Amelia of Daun-Falkenstein, in 1603, left the lordship to the children of her sister Sidonia, counters of Lowenbaupt. The families of Lowenbaupt and Manderscheid, sold three fourths of it to a count of Hillesheim: and, in the year 1725, on a contest with Count Charles Julius of Lowenbaupt, who was for making use of the jus retractus; and the vassals of the lordship siding with the latter, he was confirmed in the possession of it by an act of the Aulic Council.
- §. 3. This lordship confers a seat and vote in the Diets of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine, but not in the college of the counts of the Empire at the Imperial Diet. Its matricular assessment is one horse and four foot, or twenty-eight florins; but by stipulation it pays to the contingent of the Circle six hundred florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar its taxation is forty-two rixdollars, twenty-one kruitzers.
- §. 4. The castle of Reipoltzkirchen, which gave name to the lordship, lies on a mountain. It contains also feveral villages.

The Lordship of K I R C H I N G E N.

§. 1. THE county of Kirchingen, by the French called Creange, lies in Westreich, but some part of it is subject to France.

§. 2. It was formerly a barony, when, in the year 1617, the Emperor Matthias raised it to a county. In George and Wyrich, sons to Count John V. commenced the two lines of Puttling and Kriching. The male-line of the former became extinct in the year 1681, and the latter in 1697. Anna Dorothy, daughter to Count Albert Lewis of Kirchingen, was married to Count Edzard Ferdinand of Ostfriese, and their son, Ferdinand Ulrich, left a daughter, named Christina Louisa, who marrying with Count John Lewis Adolphus of Wiedrunkel, the county of Kirchingen devolved to the house of Wiedrunkel; though it is also claimed by the houses of Solms-Braunsels and Ortenburg, both of which bear it in their title.

§. 3. The count of Kirchingen votes in the Diets of the Upper-Rhine, but not in that of the Empire. Their matricular affeliment is two horse and four foot, or forty florins; but since the dismemberment of Puttlingen, it has been reduced to one half. In the usual matricula, relatively to its rate to the chamber at Wetzlar, it is yet taxed the same as formerly; viz. for Kirchingen, Count Christopher, thirteen rixdollars, forty-six kruitzers and a quarter; for Kirchingen, Count John Lewis, thirteen rixdollars, forty-six kruitzers; but only the latter of these taxations take place.

§. 4. Its principal place is Kirchingen, a little town, feated on the river Nidda.

The COUNTY of W A R T E M B E R G.

§. 1. JOHN CASIMIR, of Wartemberg, was created a count of the Empire in the year 1699, and, in the year 1707, his estate, as an allodial-lordship, was raised to be a county thereof.

§. 2. The reigning count of Wartemberg enjoys a feat and vote both in the Circle of the Upper-Rhine and the college of the Wetterau counts of the Empire. His matricular affessment is seven florins, twelve kruitzers; and and to the chamber at Wetzlar eighteen rixdollars, seventy kruitzers and a half.

§. 3. The feat of Wartemberg is faid to lie near Kaiserslautern, a town fituate in the Palatinate. The other estates and places which compose this county, are the following; viz.

Mettenheim, a residence of the counts. It lies in the midst of the upper prefecturate of Alzey, belonging to the Elector-palatine.

Ellstatt, situate not far from Frankenthal.

Marienthal on the Donnersberg, situate not far from Falkenstein.

Fischbach, lying betwixt the upper prefecturate of Lautern, and belonging to the Elector-palatine and the dutchy of Deuxponts.

Robrbach, Afpach, Imsbach and Fischbach, all lying betwixt the county of Bitsch and the dutchy of Deuxponts.

Symbook Hoter and Loren Hilliams S-

Sembach, Upper and Lower-Hehlingen, &c.

The Lordship of

B R E T Z E N H E I M,

§. I. LIES on the Nahe, below Kreutzenach, and was formerly held as a fief of Cullen by the lords of Dann, before they acquired the county of Falkenslein. In the year 1642, William Wyrich, of Dann, count of Falkenslein, with the confent of the lords of the fief, sold it to Count Alexander of Velen, who, in the year 1665, was admitted not only to the Circle of the Upper-Rhine but also into the college of the counts of Westphalia, at the Diet of the Empire. Alexander Otho, Count of Velen and Bretzenbeim, dying without issue, in the year 1733, the Elector of Cullen took possession of this lordship for himself and the archbishopric; but, in the year 1734, conferred it on the count of Pyrmont as a male-fief. On his decease, in the year 1744, the Elector of Cullen again took possession of the lordship, and at present enjoys the vote in the Circle-diet.

§. 2. The arms of this lordship are, ruby, a crackelin topaz. In the matricula of the Empire it is affessed at fix storins, and in that of the Circle at eight; and its quota to the chamber at Wetzlar is three rixdollars, thirteen kruitzers and a half.

§. 3. The inhabitants are a mixture of Lutherans and Catholics. In the year 1651, both parties entered into a compact, which, with some explanations, was renewed in the year 1723, and confirmed by Count Alexander Otho of Velen.

§. 4. To this lordship belong

Bretzenheim, a castle seated on the Nahe, but in 1688 the greatest part of it was destroyed by the French.

Winzenheim, a village lying not far from Kreutzenach.

The villages of Kireckenbach and Breidenbach near Wallenstein, and the Wagenstadt near Leberwangen.

The Lordship of DACHSTUL

Lies betwixt the prefecturates of Sarburg and Grimburg, which belong to Trier, and the German prefecturate in the dutchy of Lorrain. It belonged formerly to the lords of Falkenstein, of whom it was purchased in the year 1644 by Philip Christopher, of the family of Sotern and Elector of Trier, who transferred it to his family as a fidei commissium. By Maria Sidonia, heiress to her father Count Philip Francis of Sotern, this lordship devolved to her husband Notger William, count of Oettingen-Baldern. It confers the title of vogt in the Diet of the Circle, but not in that of the Empire. Its assessment in the Imperial matricula is one horse and one footman, or fixteen florins; and to the chamber of Wetzlar ten rix-dollars seventy-three kruitzers.

The Lordship of OLLBRUCK

Lies in the upper part of the archbishopric of Cullen betwixt the prefecturates of Andernach and Konigsfeld, and belongs to the house of the barons of Waldbott-Basseniam of Ollbruck-Barnheim, but forms however no state of the empire, and on this account its vote at the Diet of the Upper Rhine, by virtue of this lordship, has been contested and denied by other States, infomuch that it never obtained a formal assent. This lordship, however, is thought worthy of being rated in the matricula of the Empire at one horse and one sootman, or sixteen slorins; and to the chamber at Wetzlar is taxed in seventeen rix-dollars forty-five kruitzers.

The Imperial City of WORMS.

Worms, in Latin Wormatia, and in the middle ages named Guarmacia and Gormetia, as also Vangonia; and by Marcellinus, Vangio; by Antoninus, Bormitomagus; and by Ptolemy, Borbetomagus; was the capital town of the Vangiones. It lies in the heart of the diocese to which it gives name, not far from the Rhine, and near the place where the Eishach and Giessenbach fall into it. This city has undergone many missfortunes, for to omit its fires, earthquakes and other calamities, in the year 407 it was destroyed by the Vandals, in the year 451 and 938 by the Hunns, in 891 by the Normans, and in 1689 by the French, but has always rifen with advantage from its ashes. The magistracy here is Lutheran, and the city itself is accounted one of the free Lutheran Imperial cities, with toleration and freedom of worship to the catholics. The soundation stone of the new Lutheran church was laid in the year 1709: The Lutherans are also in possession of the old church as it is called, St. Magnus's now in ruins, and St. Leenard's a little way without the city. The Protestants have also a church here. To the Catholics belongs not only the cathedral, which since its destruction, by the French has been rebuilt with great magnificence, but likewise sour collegiate and the like number of parish-churches in or near the city, a Jesuit's college, a gymnasium, now under the direction of the same order, three convents and three nunneries. The bishop's palace here was built quite new in the year 1719 at the expence of bishop Francis Lewis.

The Kings of the Francs appointed counts and dukes over it. From time immemorial it has been termed a free Imperial city, and is so styled in some records of the Emperor Charles IV. bearing date in the years 1355 and 1356, and in the register of the cities of 1386, and was also acknowledged such in the year 1479 in the Diet at Nurnburg; and by the Emperor Maximilian I. in formal instruments of 1507 and 1508. It has hitherto filled the fourth feat on the bench of the Imperial cities of the Rhine, and likewife votes in the Diet of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine. Its matricular affestment to the Empire is feventy-five florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays one hundred and eighteen floring thirty-four kruitzers. The bithops of Worms have often contested its independence, and by excommunication and even military hostilities extorted conventions; among which that of the year 1519 is particularly remarkable; in that in fuits exceeding fifty guilders, an appeal lies from the city-court to that of the bishop; but, if before the appeal be entered upon, the appellant shall petition for the removal of his cause to the Emperor or the Aulic Council, the bishop must comply, and it is he who transmits the papers. The bishop also pretends to the collation of the magistrates, and to homage from them. It is likewise well known, that exclusive of a toll on the Rhine, he levies several other gabels and imposts there, though the city itself is under the protection of the Palatinate.

There is scarce any place so famous for interviews of Sovereigns, nuptials of Kings and Princes, and other solemnities. In the years 1495, 1521, 1545, and 1578 Diets were held here; and this was the place in which the Reformation began in 1525. In the year 1743, a treaty was concluded here betwixt his Britannic Majesty, the Queen of Hungary, and the King of Sardinia.

Near it grows that Rhenish wine, which, for its deliciousness, is called Our Lady's milk.

The Imperial City of SPIRE.

Spire, in Latin Spira Civitas, and Nemetum, or Nemidona, derives its name from a small river rising near Hochspeyer, and which after watering this city falls into the Rhine. It was a town before the birth of Christ. Even its prefent name is of very great antiquity; but in buildings it is throughout a very modern city: For after its total destruction by the French in the year 1680, and lying waste ten years, on the peace of Ryswick it was rebuilt, though not completed. The choir of its cathedral is beautifully repaired, but the fuperb marble monuments of eight Emperors and three Empresses here were broken to pieces by the French, who also opened and pillaged the vaults and threw about the bones of the illustrious dead. This church has a large revenue, but its expences are also large. Exclusive too of three other foundations, in the town are feveral catholic parish-churches, convents and nunneries, and among the former a college of Jesuits. In it is also a German house. The Lutherans, who out-number all the other inhabitants here, have two churches and a gymnafium. Its magistrates likewise are Lu-Spire was taken from the Romans by the Francs, and is one of the original Imperial cities. In the Diet of the Empire it has the fifth feat among the Imperial cities of the Circle of the Rhine, and votes in the Diet of the Upper-Rhine. In the matricula of the Empire it stands only at twentyfour florins, but to the chamber at Wetzlar pays one hundred and eighteen rix-dollars thirty-four kruitzers. In the year 1443, Lewis the Elector-palatine took it under his protection. Bishop Lotharius Frederick resided eleven weeks in this city, and his fuccessors were for accounting it their place of refidence; but this the city constantly opposed. A new bishop before his entrance into the city redresses all its complaints; and afterwards, sitting on horseback in the open air betwixt the two outermost gates, which during the ceremony are shut, with one hand in his left breast, he pronounces a bleffing on the city, then binds himself not to infringe the privileges of it, but rather to uphold and increase its liberties, and to live in quiet and harmony with it. He then makes his public entry, and the citizens pay homage to him. Among others, a Diet held here in 1529 was peculiarly remarkable, as having given rife to the name of Protestants. Before the destruction of this city by the French the Imperial chamber was held here.

The Imperial City of Frankfort on the Mayn.

Frankfort, properly Frankenfort, the usual place of the election and coronation of the Kings of the Romans, and the place also where the States of the Rhine Circles meet, as likewise one of the four Legestadts in Germany, and celebrated celebrated also for its commerce, lies in a delightful, healthy, and fertile country along the Mayn, by which it is divided into two parts, namely, into Frankfort and Sachjenhausen. The former of these being the largest is fubdivided into twelve wards, and the second into two. Both are reckoned to contain about 3000 houses large and small, and not a few of them incdern. Some of them too are rather stately palaces, as the Compositel and Fronkof, the Trierskof, the Cullenhof, the German house, an august edifice fituate near the bridge over the Mayn, the Hille-Darmiladthof, the palace of the Prince de la Tours, and the hotels of the counts of Solms Schauenburg and Schonborn. The three principal squares in it are the Romerberg, the Lieben Frauenberg, and the Rofzmarkt, or horse-market. On the first of these stands the town-house, or Romer as it is called, being an old fashioned edifice, the back front excepted, which is modern. The fore-part of it is fupported by arches, under which in the fair time are toyfhops of all kinds. Over these arches is a hall where the Emperor usually dines after his coronation, and into which opens the chamber where the election of a new Emperor is canvaffed. In the back part are the city offices, and the diet-chamber of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine, as likewise that of the dictature of the Circle. Among the archives of the town-house is kept the celebrated Goiden Bull of the Emperor Charles IV. which is a parchiment book of forty-three quarto leaves, containing the fundamental inftitutes of the Empire, written in Latin capitals; which famous piece is kept in a casket of gold. On the Liebfrauenberg stands the house of Frauenstein or Braunfels, in which the Emperors formerly lodged, and all the houses from Liebfrauenberg to Romerberg were included in the Emperor's quarter. In the fame place is also the change. The horse-market is laid out in walks and rows of trees. On the hay-market is the main-guard, which is a handsome building, and over against it the riding academy. In the town are three arsenals, the principal of which stands at the end of the Zeil facing the Jews street. The magistrates and city officers profess Lutheranism, that being the established religion, but most of the churches, and those too the chief, are in the hands of the Catholics. The Protestants are also very numerous here. The Catholic foundations and convents are subject to the archbishopric of Mentz. In the cathedral of St. Bartholomew is a fmall chapel where the Emperor is elected. The churches of St. Leonard and our Lady are both collegiate. There is also here a convent with a church of the order of St. John, together with another of Carmelites, Dominicans, and Capuchins, and two catholic chapels. The Lutheran churches and convents here are the church of the discalceated, which is the great church; that of St. Catherine, where in 1522 the first Lutheran fermon was preached, and to which is annexed a nunnery of ladies of noble birth; the church of the white women here, is so called from the convent belonging to it, inflituted for ladies and other young women of good birth; VOL. V.

St. Peter's church, together with the chapel of the Glauburg; the hospitalchurch, St. Nicholas's church and two decayed ones, as also the church on Saschenbausen. Here is likewise a seminary of divines sounded by Dr. Pritius and completed by Dr. Munden. The Protestants not being allowed a place of worship in the town go to Bockenbeim, a town situated at a small distance; but it is faid that they will be permitted to build a church just without the town. The Lutheran gymnasium here contains seven classes, and stands contiguous to the church of the bare-footed Friars, and in it is the city-library. The alms, orphan, and work-house here is a well contrived building, and under good regulations, which are strictly executed. Near it stands the house of correction. The hospital of the Holy Gbolt is one of the wealthiest foundations in the whole city. In this diocese are two conventual houses for nobles, viz. one at Limburg and the other at Frauenstein; to the former are properly admitted only fuch, who in other Imperial cities are termed patricians, and though at prefent comprehended under the burghery, vet are mostly descended of very ancient and honourable samilies, regularly keep up their genealogical registers, follow no trade, live on their means, and may marry only into noble families. They have their particular statutes agreed upon among themselves, one in the year 1585, the other in 1636, both which were confirmed by the Emperors. The provofts are chosen annually and the place of their meeting is at Limburg house, the arms of which are the same with those of the counts of Limburg, the number of chequers excepted. The fociety of Frauenstein or Braunfels house confifts of nobles and graduates. In this town are also other noble families, descendents of the ancient noblesse of Brabant.

Its convenient fituation, and the two celebrated fairs held here every year render it, with respect to traffic, one of the principal places in all Germany. Of its manufactures those of filk, erected by two public spirited traders of the name of Firnhaber, make the greatest figure. Those also of tobacco and porcelain are not inconsiderable. The fews ever since the year 1462 are confined to a particular quarter, and in all things subject to the magistracy.

The ancient dukes of the Francs had a palace here, in which for some time Charles the Great resided; and on its site now stands the church of St. Leonard's. The emperor Lewis also built a palace on the banks of the Mayn, some grand remains of which are still to be seen in the Saalhof. The city itself has ever been immediately under the Empire and Emperor. In the Diet it holds the sixth place among the Imperial cities of the Rhine, and also votes in the Diets of the Upper-Rhin. Its matricular assessment to the Empire is sive hundred storins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar six hundred and seventy-six rix-dollars, twenty-six kruitzers and three-sourths. But these rates, how burdensome soever they may appear, its vast trade enables it to discharge with ease, as indeed it was principally on that account that they were imposed. The magistracy here consists of a Schultkeissen, or judge, the bench bench of Scoffen, or aldermen, and that of the fecond bench of the council, together with the third, which is composed of artificers and tradefinen, and which is also summoned in matters of general concern, and executes the offices relating to the police; but the direction of important affairs is lodged in the two former, out of whom the two burgher-masters are annually chofen. Law-suits here are determined by the Schoffens and Syndics. The members of the confistory are two Schoffen, the Senior ministerii, the two oldest pastors, and two civilians.

The city is fortified, and maintains feven companies of foldiers as its contingent to the Circle, together with two more as a garrifon. Its bridge over the Mayn is four hundred feet long, and contains fourteen wide arches.

The territory of this city as represented in Homann's correct map of it, No 107 in the Atlas of Germany contains, exclusive of the great number of feats and farms in it, Bornheim, Hausen, and Upper-rod three villages, formerly subject to the court at Bornheimerbergs, but by a treaty concluded with Hanau in the year 1481, transferred to the city of Frankfort.

The church-village of Lower-rod, three fourths of which belonged to the city, and one to the Teutonic order.

Not far from it stands the Upper-Forstkaus of Frankfort on the forest of Frankfort, which, as Mr. Buri of Yjenburg Birflein has shewn at large, belongs to the forest of Dreyeicher, and accordingly both the city of Frankfort and its dependencies have ever paid certain particular duties to the lords of that forest.

Over the free Imperial villages of Sulzbach and Soden (in which is a warm bath and some falt-pits) Mentz, as count of Konigstein, and the city of Frankfort as protector and patron, jointly appoint a chief magistrate.

Lower-Urfel, a village, of which Solms-Rodelkeim has also a part.

Bonames, also called Bomes, a little walled town situate on the Nidda. In it is a fief belonging to the bishop of Fulda.

Lower-Erkenbach, a church-village.

Durkelweil, or Dortelweil, a church-village situate not far from the Nidda.

The Imperial City of FRIEDBERG.

Friedberg, a town on the Wetterau, stands near the Ushach on the ridge of hills called the Hohe, in a very fertile country. It was formerly larger than at present, being a free Imperial Lutheran town, and in the Diet holds the twelfth feat on the bench of the Imperial towns of the Rhine. It also fits and votes in the Diet of the Upper-Rhine. In the matricula of the Empire it stands at twenty-four florins, and its rate to the chamber at Witzlar is twenty-nine rix-dollars twenty-nine kruitzers. In the year 1349, the Empror Charles IV. mortgaged it for 10,000 florins to the counts of Schwarzburg, but with a referve of its dependence on the Empire. This mortgage in the following century passed from Schwarzburg to the Elector of Mentz, the lords of Epslein, the counts of Henburg, and the city of Frankfort. The three first of these made over their share to the Imperial burg or castle of Friedberg in this town, which the Emperor not only confirmed, but enjoined the city of Frankfort also to recede from its part in favour of the burg. This was followed by an agreement betwixt the burg and town, that on the election of a new burggrave, when confirmed by the Emperor, the town, as an acknowledgment of the mortgage, thould do him homage in some open place. In the year 1706 the town notified to the burg that it would redeem the mortgage, and offered to pay down the money; but the burg alleged the mortgage to be irredeemable. The burggrave and the fix magistrates in it, who are nobles, are also members of the general council and that of the States; and when any affairs relating to the Empire and Circle come on the carpet, notice is given to them of it by the magistracy, that they may jointly agree concerning the person to be deputed and the nature and extent of his powers.

The Imperial Town of WETZLAR.

Wetzlar, a town feated on the Labn, which at this place receives the Wetzbach, and on the other fide the Dill; has two fuburbs belonging to it called the Langgasse and the Neugasse. The magistracy here, with the greatest part of the burghers, are Lutherans. Exclusive too of the cathedral or city-church, which is held in common with the catholics, they have a chapel and a grammar-school here, in a building which was originally a Franciscan convent. The church of the hospital of the Holy Ghost, belonging also to the Lutherans, is rebuilding. The Protestants have likewife a church here. The Catholics have not only the use of the cathedral, but also a Franciscan convent, with a church and a Jesuits college. In the town-house are held the meetings of the Imperial chamber, which in the year 1693 was removed hither from Spire. In 1714, a motion was made for its removal from Wetzlar to some other place, but was over-ruled; and in the year 1751 the chamber itself represented to the Diet at Ratisbon the impossibility of its continuance here, and at the same time signified that Frankfort on the Mayn was, of all others, the most proper and commodious place for its refidence; notwithstanding which, this also has produced no alteration. The German house here belongs to the commandery of Hesse and possesses revenues of divers kinds in that country. Wetzlar was an Imperial town to early as the days of the Emperor Frederick I. and has ever fince continued fuch in the Diet. It fits the 13th on the bench of the Imperial towns of the Rkine, and also votes in the Diets of the Upper-Rhine.

Its affessment in the matricula of the Empire is thirty-two florins; but it no longer pays any thing to the chamber. Near the Wetzler stands the castle of Carlsmund or Talschmitt. Hesse-Darmstadt, as a protector of the city, keeps a company of soldiers here, and has a representative in the council.

* * * * *

The following lordships, though within the Circle of the Upper-Rhine, have neither vote nor feat in its Diets.

The Lordship of SCHAUMBURG.

This lordship, which lies on the Lahn opposite the county of Holzapfels is to be seen in the maps of the lower county of Katzenellnbogen, belonging to the principality of Nassau and others. In the year 1279, it passed from the house of Limburg on the Lahn to that of Westerburg; but in 1656 Agnes countess dowager of Holzapfel purchased it of Count George William of Leiningen-Westerburg, redeemed it from seudal subjection to Cullen, and settled it as an absolute property on her daughter Elizabeth Charlotta, consort to Adolphus Prince of Nassau-Dillenburg, and with their daughter Charlotta it devolved to her husband Prince Lebrecht of Anhalt-Bernburg-Hoym, whose descendants are still in possession of it. Its Imperial assessment is two florins forty kruitzers; and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays seventy-sour rix-dollars, but is without so much as a vote in the Diet of the Circle. To it belongs Schaumburg, a feat on a high hill not far from the Lahn. Cramberg, Steinsberg, and Biberich, villages.

The Lordship of OBERSTEIN.

Which lies on the Hunfruck along the Nahe. Its present owner is the count of Leiningen-Dachsburg-Heidesheim, and its assessment on the matricula of the Empire is seven florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays ten rix-dollars seventy-three kruitzers. The principal place in it is Oberstein, a little town situate on the Nake. On a mountain also stands a castle.

Holzbausen, a village on the Ohm betwixt the Hessian presecturates of Marburg and Homburg and the upper presecturate of Amoneburg, and belonging to the Electorate of Mentz, stands in the matricula at one florin thirty kruitzers.

Obs. The Gorz branch of the house of Schlitz, who were formerly admitted among the immediate noblesse of the Empire, in the year 1742 solicited a seat and vote among the estates of the Circle of the Upper-Rhine, but met with a denial,

S W A B I A.

Of SWABIA in general.

F the maps of Swabia and its Circle, Mr. Eberhard David Hauber, in the year 1724, published a very rational, exact and complete history; which about three years after appeared, with additions and amendments, in his Discourse on the Present State of Geography. From thence we learn, that the first maps of Swabia are to be seen in Munsler's Cosmography; that the second, which Ortelius has inserted in his Theatrum, were published in the years 1579 and 1591, by David Selzlin, or Selzl, and have been copied by John Buchsenmacher and Daniel Manasser; that the map put forth by Jodochus, Henry Hondius and William Blacuw was something better, and reduced, without alterations, to a smaller scale by Christopher Weigel, and improved by John Janson: that this is the map which Waesberge, Peter Schenk and Gerhard Valk afterwards published under their own names; and, lastly, that from the map of Blaeuw and Janson, Jacob Sandrart composed his of Swabia.

§. 2. Swabia lies, to the west and east, betwixt the rivers Rhine and Lech; to the south, it terminates on Switzerland, the Bodensee * and the Austrian

^{*} Of the Bodensee, which is also called the Lake of Constance and Bregenz, and by the vulgar the German Sea, and in Latin, Lacus Bedamicus, or Potamicus, a map was published by John George Schinbain, in the year 1578, and in 1675 by another artist, with the fignature of A. A. S. J. and this has been engraved by one of the name of Hamp. A draught of it is also Austrian lordship of Arlberg; and northward is bounded by Francenia and the Palatinate. The country lying betwixt the lake of Constance, is Leeb and the Danube, on both sides of the Iler, is by the Wurter of in contradistinction to their country called Schwabenland, Upper-Swabia, or Alemannia, though others hold Upper-Swabia also to be the country situate betwixt the Iler, Danube and lake of Constance; and that lying along the Leeb and Danube to be the Lower-Swabia.

§. 3. The highest parts in Swabia are the Alb, or Alp, and the Solwarzwald, or Black-forest; the former of which is still somewhat higher than the latter. As these mountains traverse the greatest part of Swabia, from fouth to north and from west to east, and from them issue most of the rivers which, after watering the country, lofe themselves in the Rhine, or Danube, it will be proper to give a more circumstantial account of them. The Schwarzwald, in Latin Silva Nigra, extends from fouth to north to the end of the diffrict of Neuenburg, in the dutchy of Wurtemberg; and eastward almost close to the Alb. Its southern part is called the Upper, and its northern part the Lower-Schwarzwald. Its eastern boundary, from Pforzheim to Nagold, is formed by the river Nagold, which separates it from a tract of land called the Gau. From Nagold its direction lies along the Horb to Sulz, and from thence to the Neckar; which river, together with the Danube, Enz., Nagold and Kinzig, derives its fource from this chain. The western side of them, which lies towards the Rhine, and particularly that part situated in the territories of Wurtemberg, rises at once with such steepness that, even from Baaden and Alface, it carries with it the appearance of a very high mountain; whereas the declivity, on the east side, is gradual. The Schwarzwald has probably been so called from the thick forests of fir with which it is covered; and, according to the defcription given us by Julius Cæsar of the Silva Hercynia, in his Bellum Gallicum, was the begining of it. The inhabitants subtist chiefly by graziery, wood and pitch, which they trade in for exportation. In many parts in it there are also two kinds of land; viz. first, that called Baufelder, which is like the common ploughed fields; fecond, the Mahfelder, which is rendered fertile by the

to be seen in Bucelin's Descript. Constantiae source of prosena; and Matthew Scutter likewise has published one of it. This lake lies betwirt Swabia and Switzerland, and derives its name from the old Castrum Botami, Poteni or Potini, which in the time of the Carlovingian Emperors was an Imperial palace. The castle here is to this day called Bodman, or Bodmen, and is the original place of a noble family. The lake itself is above seven Ge man miles in length, and receives the Rhine, which runs into it below Rheineck, issuing again out of it near Constanz, or rather Stein. Towards the north-west, or rather Swabia, it forms two bays; in one of which is the island of Meinau with the towns of Mersburg and Ueberlingen on it; and this is called the Bodmer, or Veherlinger-jee, in Latin Lacus Acronius. The other lake, in which lies the island of Reichenau, is divinguished by the name of the Under, or Zeller-see, in Latin Lacus inferior, or Venetus. The steldom frozen. Betwirt Lindau and Bregenz is found in it a kind of salmontrout called with the second second following method. The peasants lay billets of fir, about fix feet long, at a proper distance, and betwixt them vine-branches covered with sods, which are pared off the same field. One of these heaps is called a ross, or borse; and the number of them is proportioned to the dimensions of the field. These they kindle, leaving them to consume slowly, and the ashes and earth are scattered over the ground, to which they communicate an extraordinary fertility; but this lasts only for three or sour years. It is then lest for some years fallow, and yields good grass, till it becomes again sit to undergo the above operation **.

We shall defer the description of the Alb, or Alp, till we come to Konigsbronn, in the lordship of Heydenbeim, where the Brenz issues at the foot of it. From thence this mountain passes on to Upper-Kocher, where an arm of the river Kocher rifes; and then westward to Heubach, near which the Rems has its fource. From hence it runs fouthward beyond Degenfeld to Dunzdorf, where it has but a very steep road over it; and from Dunzdorf it extends itself to the Fils, and, together with the above road, beyond Geislingen to Wiesensteig, where the Fils has its source. In these parts and near the market-town of Hobenflatt, the mountain is at the highest. the north-west it extends itself still further to Neidlingen and Weilheim, taking a compass round Teckberg through the Linninger Thal to Guttenberg, where it has a long acclivity, and where also the Lauter takes its rife; after which it passes westward to Neiffen, and from thence opens into a valley two German miles long, where the Ems has its fource. From hence this mountain winds round by Neuhausen and Achalm toward Pfullingen, and from thence to Hechingen, Hohenzollern and the castle of Albeck, not far from Sulz, fome leagues along the Neckar, till it approaches very near to the Schwarzwald. From this place it runs again eastward towards Ebingen, and then by a gentle deflection to the Danube, giving rife to the river Lauchart and Lauter. From Steifzlingen through the lordship of Justingen it forms a circuit by the way of the convent of Ur/pring, where the Aacb rifes towards Sondheim Blaubeuren, and in conjunction with the Blau proceeds to Herlingen near Ulm, at about one hour's distance, and then to Albeck. From hence it passes on to the source of the Lontel, and on one side of it to the Brenz, and with that river to Konigsbronn. The whole direct length of the Alb from Konigsbronn to Ebingen, makes between twelve and thirteen German miles, but its breadth in many parts is only two and never exceeds four. The Alp, or fouth fide, declines gradually towards the Danube; and on the east towards the Brentz; whereas, on the north and west sides, it shoots up at once in such a manner as to form a ridge of very high mountains. Many parts of it afford a fine spring-water, whilst others have only rain; and the principal part of its woods are beech, with little or no sir. It feeds also very large flocks of sheep.

§. 4. The county of Swabia, in Latin Sucvia, derives its name from the Suevi, who were so called from their long hair, which they braided and tied like a Schweif, or train. This Tacitus mentions as a peculiarity belonging to them by which a Swabian was known. The Suevi at first dwelt betwixt the Weser and Oder, but afterwards crossed the Elbe to the Mayn and Danube; and, in the time of Julius Cafar, to the Neckar and Rhine. They inhabited fo large a part of Germany, that feveral nations were included among them; as the Senones, Hermunduri, Quadi, Marcomanni and others, some of whom passed through Gaul into Spain. In the fifth century, the country of the Swabians received its name from the Allemanni; but on the defeat of the latter by the Franks, in the year 406, near Zulbich, in Latin Tolbiacum, a town in the Electorate of Cologne; and Allemannia thus falling under the dominion of the Franks, the name of Swabia again came into use, and the Kings of the Franks placed dukes over the country. Charles the Great abolished these dukes and appointed Cameræ Nuntii as governors of Swabia, who continued under his fuccessors. King Conrad I. to please the Swabians, restored the dukedom and nominated Count Burchard duke of Swabia. This dignity was at first confined to no particular family, but the Emperor, Henry IV. having conferred it on his fon-in-law Frederick of Hokenhausen; who, in the year 1094, arrived to the actual possession of it, rendered it hereditary to his descendants. These new dukes were also dukes of Franconia, and enjoyed the sovereign power both in temporal and spiritual matters, being not only invested at the public Diets with hereditary posts of the Empire, but also with their own offices of state, which were always filled with the noblest families in Swabia; as the Palfgrave of Tubingen and the lords-stewards of Walburg, and before them with the counts of Maurstetten and Weissenborn, the cup-bearers of Winterstetten, the chamberlains of Kennat, the marshals-counts of Dillingen; and after them the counts of Wurtemberg, the great huntimen of Aurach, and others. But as both, from the beginning and during the continuance of the ducal government there were in Swabia a great number of other powerful counts and lords, by whose advice and consent, Burchard, the first duke, and his successors, down to Frederick of Hohenstaufen, had been placed over the dutchy of Swabia, it is not probable that they refigned their independency and submitted themselves as vassals to the duke: but though they honoured these dukes with their attendance at his court, though the religious foundations were under their protection, and though, besides civil fervices, they also accompanied them in their wars, fighting under their banners, and even took an oath of allegiance and fidelity to them, vet were they originally free, and continued, together with their lands and Vol. V. lordthips, lordships, immediately dependent on the Empire. Thus the dukes of Swabia could not affume any territorial fupremacy over them, nor require aids or imposts without the Emperor's permission and order. The Princes, counts and lords were also to fit with them as affishants in the administration of justice in a konigsthule, or King's-bench. The high regalia, and profits accruing therefrom in the countries and lordships of the Swabian Princes, counts and lords, for a long time appertained, in a great measure, only to the Emperors and Kings, who appointed provincial-stewards, and these again deputy-stewards, for the levying and management of them; but, in process of time, the Princes, barons and lords, by grant, mortgage, tale and preservation, have got them into their own hands. Over the Imperial foundations and convents here, the Emperors and Kings nonlinated In the free Imperial cities were Imperial governors, criadministrators. minal and civil judges, flewards, curators, &c. whilst over the Imperial villages and the freyen Leuten, or 'free people,' the procuratores pradiorum regalium prefided:

§. 5. Of the dukes of Swabia, of the family of Holenstaufen, feven have fat on the throne as Kings of Germany and Roman Emperors. (See Introduction to Germany, §.2.) Of these Conrad III. was the first and Conrad IV. the last. They have also possessed the hereditary estates of the Guelphs in Swabia, among which was particularly the hereditary earldom of Alterf, as left in inheritance by the last of the youngest branch of the Guelphs, Guelpho VI. at first to his brother's fon Henry the Lion, duke of Bavaria and Saxony, but afterwards to his fifter's fon the Emperor Frederick, as duke of Swabia, of the house of Hohenfleufen, and on his unfortunate death, in the year 1190, to his fon the Emperor Henry VI. But though these dukes of the Hohenstauffen family foon rose to great power and were possessors of very considerable countries and lordships both in and out of Germany, so their declension was equally precipitate. Philip, duke of Swabia, had amassed vast sums, by which he obtained the Imperial crown. The Emperor, Frederick II. was obliged to give up feveral hereditary lands, and his fon, Courad IV. was put under the bann of the Empire by his competitor the anti-emperor William, earl of Holland, and declared to have forfeited both the dutchy of Swabia and all his lands and lordships in Germany; which severity received the sanction of the Pope. His fon Conrad, by the Italians named Conradin, after many fruitless endeavours to recover his hereditary dutchy of Swabia, lost his head at Naples in the year 1268; and in him ended the ducal line of Hohenstaufen. The hereditary estates here had been before alienated, and the dutchy escheated to the Empire. Though several Princes, counts and lords affumed to themfelves many Imperial lands in Swabia, King Rudolph compelled them to a restitution. Ever since the extinction of the dukes of Swabia, the superintendency and management of the Imperial casualties, profits and revenues, as also of the Imperial villages and estates still re-· maining maining there; and likewise, ex commissione & delegatione Cassarea, of all the reservata and regalia formerly belonging to the dukes, have been committed to Imperial stewards and administrators residing in Upper and Lower-Swabia.

§. 6. Over the country of Swabia, as in other provinces, have been appointed Advocati provincia generales, procuratores regni seu Imperii, & prafecti provinciales; whose office is, in such parts as belong not to the inheritance of the dukes of Swabia, but are immediately subject to the Empire; besides a general attention to the dues of the Empire and Emperor to collect, by means of their deputies, the Imperial regalia, casualties and revenues in the territories of the Princes, counts, lords, abbies, convents and towns, and pay them in to the Imperial treasury. Such procurators are known to have existed in Swabia so long ago as the tenth century, and till the begining of the fifteenth they were fometimes two; viz. one in Upper and one in Lower-Swabia. In the year 1379, the Emperor Winceslaus made a second mortgage of the two Imperial procuratorships in Upper and Lower-Swabia, to Leopold III. duke of Austria, on a loan of 40,000 gulders, which terminated at last in his actual possession of them, and he held them for several years; but, in the year 1386, on the death of Leopold, the dukes of Austria were divested of these procuratorships, which, for many years after, inflead of being mortgaged, were almost annually filled by a new procurator. In the year 1415, the Emperor Sigmund, at the council of Constanz, with the consent of the Empire, again mortgaged them to Hans, 1 ord-steward of Waldburg, for 6000 Rhenish guldens; but these lords-stewards were obliged gradually to augment the mortgage-money to 13,200 florins. The Emperor Frederick III. on his accession to the government, enabled his brother Albert, duke of Austria, to redeem the procuratorship from those noblemen, and gave him in writing the jurisdiction over it. To this the lordsteward was obliged to consent; and, in the years 1452 and 1453, James, at that time lord-steward, entered into a compact, by which he was no longer to exercise the procuratorship, either in his own name or in that of the Empire, but in behalf of Duke Albert, and to term himself his procurator. In this fituation the procuratorship of Swabia continued for many years, both on account of the non-payment of the mortgage-money and the revolt of Duke Albert, in the year 1460, against his brother the Emperor Frederick, who, in the year 1463, put him under the ban of the Empire. Thus the procuratorship devolved to Hans, James's son; and, though at the same time Sigmund, duke of Austria, made application for it in the year 1464, to the Emperor Frederick, and obtained his permission for the redemption of it, yet he entered not upon it till the year 1473, Duke Albert of Bavaria having, by the Emperor's indulgence, undertaken the faid redemption; but at the same time he again mortgaged it for a like sum to the lordsteward Hans, or John, who held it, together with the castle of Ravensburg, till the year 1486, when the Arch-duke, Sigismund, paid him down the mortgage-money: {fee vol. iv. in the Description of the Austrian countries in Swabia) but at prefent all that properly remains of these procurators in Upper and Lower-Swabia, is, that the Imperial towns of the Ueberlingen, Lindau, Biberach, Ravensburg, Wangen and Pfullendorf, every year, under the title of an acknowledgment, make a prefent, either in money or wine, to the procurator at Alterf or Ravensburg; and that the Imperial, Protestant churches of Lindau, Weingarten, Salmansweil, Ochfenhausen, Roth, Weissenau, Baindt and Buxheim still pay protectionmoney. Thus the present procuratorships in Swabia, which are called the procuratorship of Altorf and Ravensburg, should by no means be confounded with the ancient procuratorships in Upper and Lower-Swabia; the very name of the latter scarce remaining: but the management of the procuratorship of Altorf and Ravensburg (vid. vol. iv. in the Description of the Austrian countries in Swabia) has been transferred to the Imperial procurators in Upper and Lower-Swabia.

§.7. The procuratorship of Swabia is also to be distinguished from the free Imperial jurisdiction in Upper and Lower-Swabia, on Leutkircher-heath, and in the Gepurs*. Its origin there is of the same date with the ancient placita, or malla publica & provincialia, and came into use even under the dukes of Swabia, who enjoys also the power, in the name of the Emperor and Empire, of taking possession and giving grants of them. The ancient judges of the country were styled Landrichter auf der Heid, or 'Judges on the heath, when the court was held on the heath of Leutkirch; and Landrichter in der Gepurs,' or judges in the Gepurs,' when the court was held in some other court-towns in the Purs; as at Lindau, Wangen, or Ravensburg. In the year 1425 Volk Systrid was the first country-judge who styled himelf Landrichter auf der heid, and in der pirs; which title was also

* Of the heath of Leutkircher fome account has been given in vol. iv. in the Description of the Austrian countries in Swalia. Gepurs, Purs, Pirs, Eursz, Pursch, or Bursch, signifies hunting; being derived from the word Birfen, or Burfeben, to hunt. All over Leutkircher-heath the neighbouring inhabitants enjoy what is called the libera venatio, or "free right of hunting." How far this privilege, from which the jurifdiction takes its name, reaches beyond the heath of Leutkir, ber, is not easily determined, but probably only to the tract of land belonging to Upper-Algaus and the woods and lordships on that side of Arlberg. From time immemorial also there have been other free Bursche, or "hunting districts," in Upper and Lower-Swalia; which still continue such though wholly independent of the liberty of Leutkircher-heath; as, namely, the free-hunting-diffrict on the Danibe, which extends to above ten hours in length, and is divided anto the upper common hunting-grounds lying betwint the Danube; viz. into the Rifz, Buchauer-heath, Mirsteig and Canzag; and into the lower common hunting-grounds situate between the Danube, containing Blau and Aach: the Freye bursch, or "free hunting-grounds," of Bosserhard, near Mem-mingen, comprehending the greatest part of the district of Memmingen and others. This district lies betwirt the Gunz and the Iler. The freye burfel at and about Warthaugen, lying betwirt the Rifz and the Danube; the Rethroeil freye burfeh, near and about Rothweil; the freye burfeh, lying round the Imperial city of Weil, on the Neckar and Schwarzwald; near Tuhingen, or in the valley of Steinlacher; near the city of Aalen near Donauwerth in the Reichspflege, i. e. "the Imperial-canton; near Balingen; at and about Ehingen; in the woods of Hohenzoller-Hickingi. on, Holzern and Zolkrberg; and the common hunting-grounds, called Mandat, which lie about the town of Gmand. adopted adopted by the judges of the lord-steward and those of Austria, 'till Hans-Thunower, towards the beginning of the fixteenth century, and also about the time when the provincial-court, on the heath of Leutkircher, was extended further on the Austrian fide, took upon himself, in imitation of the governor, the title of Landrichter in Upper and Lower-Swabia, on the heath of Leutkircher and in the Gepurs. Though the original feat too of this provincial-court was on Leutkircher-heath, and its jurisdiction formerly limited to that and the Bursch, without any pre-eminence above any other particular courts; and, even at the time when the procuratorship fell to the house of Austria, like the other Imperial courts in Swabia, was of small importance, dignity and power; and many of the Imperial states in Swabia, as Princes, counts, barons, prelates and Imperial cities were exempted, without limitation, from all provincial-courts, except in the case of denying or protracting justice; yet the judges on the heath of Leutkircker and in the Bursch, from the end of the fifteenth century, when the appointment of country-courts, together with the procuratorship of Swabia, fell in some measure into the hands of the house of Austria, began to give quite another form to the provincial courts, intorducing both the cafus reservati and denying appeals to the Aulick-courts, and even extending both their power and boundaries, which occasioned great clamours among the Princes and States of the Circle of Swabia; notwithstanding which, to this very day, the provincial-court enjoys the following extensive jurisdiction: that is to fay, it begins at the Imperial town of Lindau, which lies in its immediate district, and the intermediate country betwixt that and the lake of Constanz, as far as Morspurg, belongs to it. From thence the franchises of this court extend themselves over the lake to Constanz; but this city denies its authority. After this its boundaries become the same with those of Swabia and Switzerland; and thus, including also the island of Reichenau, it extends to Ratolphzell, Tengen and Stulingen. Next follows the county of Bondorf, together with the landgraviate of Baar; the upper and lower earldom of Hochberg, particularly the Imperial city of Rothweil and the town of Villingen. From thence the limits of its jurisdiction extend themselves along those of Wurtemberg to the Imperial town of Gnund, Oettingen-Baldern and Donauwert are also included in them; and from this place they proceed to Reuthe on the Brucke. The lordships on this fide of Arlberg having been exempted by the Emperor Ferdinand, in the year 1555, from the jurifdiction of the provincial-courts, contrary to the univerial complaints of the nearest Imperial towns; particularly of Lindau, Ravensburg, Wangen, Yfni and Leutkirch. The boundaries are continued from Reuthe to Tannheim, then to the lordship of Konigseck-Rothensels, and from thence to Lindau, till they even divide the lordship of Bregenz from the neighbouring districts. Exclusive too of this lordship, to it likewise belongs the earldom of Hohen-Embs. The provincial-court has a concurring jurifdiction risdiction with the states of the Empire lying in its district, unless any state can prove an immunity. All causes also belonging to towns in the first instance, and all immediate and mediate members of the Empire in Swabia within the district of the provincial court are brought before it. Appeals were before and even under the first Austrian judges, brought only to the Aulic-Council alone; but ever since the year 1530 to the Austrian chamber, and at last it was stipulated by the Emperor Leopold in the capitulation of his Election, that any part aggrieved shall, without let or hindrance, have free appeal from this provincial court, either to that of the Emperor or the Imperial chamber.

The tribunals on the heath of Leutkircher and in the Purs have anciently had four particular court-towns, all lying within the Purs, namely, Leutkirch, Wangen, Lindau and Ravensburg; but the government of them falling into the hands of Austria instead of Lindau, the Imperial markettown of Aitorf has been made a court-place, and instead of Leutkirch the town of Y/ni. In each of these four court-towns a country-court is held twelve times a year, viz. at the beginning of each month at Altorf, then at Ravensburg, and at last at Ysni. Each reigning arch-duke of Austria, as fovereign of the Imperial country-court, appoints the judge over it; and the person nominated to that office is certified to the four country-towns for their approbation, till when he enters not on his office. The affesfors or affistants here are four Stab or Statthalters, of which each court-town appoints one in particular to prefide in the absence of the Imperial judge. In the three Imperial towns this officer is generally a burgomafter, or one of the council; and at Alterf the Flecken-Ammann, or justice of the town. Each court-town has also its particular affesfor, of whom there are twelve in all; who are appointed by the usual magistrates of the court-towns, but are always chosen out of the council or college of justice, or out of the most fubstantial citizens, strict regard being had to their virtue and abilities. The fee of a coadjutor for each juridical fession is only six kruitzers. The Recorders of the provincial courts are generally the Chancellors of the three Imperial cities; and at Altorf, the clerk of the court. The perquisites of the provincial court, though by no means confiderable, yet fuffice notwithflanding to defray the charge without any grievance to the agents.

§. 8. Besides this provincial court many others of the like origin and antiquity have been established in Swabia; and some of them even yet exist, as namely, the free Imperial courts of Rankiweil in Mushen, mentioned in vol. iv. in the description of the Austrian Swabia. In Thurgau, which at the close of the 15th century was ceded to the confederates at the treaty of Basil, and in their name is held monthly at Frauenfeld; at Nellenburg, (See vol. iv. in the description of the Austrian Swabia;) at Schackebuch, in the county of Heiligenberg; and also in the county of Kempten and at Octtingen. Of the ancient provincial court here, and the subsequent Imperial Aulic Court at Rothweil a sufficient account will be given under the article of that town.

§. 9. In the middle ages Swabia was divided into a great number of Gaus, in Latin Pagi, the names of some of which are still in use, as the Algau, Alpengau, Argau or Ergau, the Argengau, Baar, Brenzgau, Brettachau, Brettigau, Brisgau, Burgau, Cletgau, Craichgau which (properly lies betwixt Swabia and the lower Palatinate, and contains the lesser Gaus of Schimechgau, Enzingau or Enzgau, and Salzgau) Donogau, Glensgau, Hegau, Jaxtgau, Ilergau, Rochengau or Rochergau, Linzgau, Murgau or Murachgau, Nagoldgau, to which once belonged also Walgau, Nebelgau, Niebelgau, Ortenau, Rheingau, das Ries, Schussengau, Sulmgau, Thurgau, Wirmgau or Wiringau, Zabernachau or Zabergau, Zurichgau, &c.

§. 10. The greatest part of Swabia belongs at present to the Circle of that name; a considerable part also to that of Austria, (See vol. iv. in the description of the Austrian countries in Swabia;) and a lesser part to the Upper Circle of the Rhine, (See above the description of Strasburg, Fulda, Nassau, and Hanau-Lichtenberg;) a small tract also of the dutchy of Neuburg along the Danube projects beyond the Circle of Bavaria into Swabia; and this forms the districts of the dutchy of Swabia. The nobility immediately dependent on the Empire are also possessed.

Of the CIRCLE of SWABIA in particular.

§. 1. THE Circle of Swabia, which, though it comprehends not all, yet contains the greatest part of Schwabenland, was first reprefented in a map by Nic. Sanfon and his fon William, which was the baffs of all the fueceeding maps of this Circle, published both in Helland and Swebia; though not without making some use also of that drawn by Peter Willius, which was published by Matthew Wagner in the year 1689, and was again republished with additions in 1714 by Bartholomai; and was copied by Leopold without acknowledging the name of its author. Another general map also composed by Huncer was published by George Bodeuker, and afterwards by Stridbeck. In the year 1704 de l'Isle put forth a map which was very different from all the preceding ones, and an elegant copy of it was published by Welff. This was succeeded by Captain Michael's larger and more accurate map of this country which was printed by Seutter on nine leaves: but that also admitting of some amendments, professor Hafe contracted it with his corrections; and in this form it was published in one leaf in the year 1743 by Homann's heirs. Though the professor's map is undoubtedly the best we have at present, yet does it in some respects stand in need of the same kind offices which he performed to Captain Michal's. The newest large map of eight leaves by Kolleffel, engraved by Pteffel fince the year 1750, is to be liad of Homann's heirs. This map is more complete and accurate than that of Captain Michal's; but as mathematical precifion is particularly wanting in it, profesor Hase's map must be confulted along with it. And these jointly give the truest representation of the Circle of Swabia which has hitherto appeared.

§. 2. This Circle borders on the Upper Circle of the Rhine, the Palatinate of Franconia, Bavaria and Austria, as also on Switzerland. The countries belonging to it contain about seven hundred and twenty-nine square German miles.

§. 3. The States of Swabia, according to the five benches into which they are divided in the Diet, are,

1. Ecclefiastical Princes and abbots, namely, Constanz, Augsburg, Ell-wangen and Kempten, the two last of whom are alternately changed every Diet.

2. The temporal Princes and abbots, these are Wurtemberg, Baaden-baaden, Baaden-Durlach, Baaden-Hochberg, Zollern-Heckingen and Haiger-loch, Zollern-Sigmaringen, the abbies of Lindau and Buckau (which are changed alternately every Diet, but the bench of prelates protest against their precedency) Aversberg on account of Thengen, Furstenberg-Heiligenberg, Oettingen for the place of the same name, Schwarzenberg on account of Sulz Lichtenstein, and Furstenberg-Stublingen.

3. The prelates, namely, Salmansweil, Weingarten, Ochsenhausen, Elckingen, Yrsee, Ursperg, Kayserskeim, Roggenburg, Roth, Weissenau, Schussenried, Marchthal, Petershausen, Wettenhausen, Zwiefalten and Gengenhach; as also abbesses, namely, Hegghach, Gutenzell, Rothmunster and Baindt.

4. Counts and barons, as the Landcomthurey, or Commanderies, Alfch-hausen, the three lines of the house of Oettingen-Wallerstein, which enjoy only one vote; Furstenberg-Moskirch; the Elector of Bavaria on account of Wiesensteig; Furstenberg for Baar; Furstenberg for Hausen in the Kinzinger-thal, Montfort, Truchsesz-zeil and Wurzach, together with Truchsesz-Wolfegg and Waldsee, Truchsesz-Scheer, Durmetingen and Trauchburg; Konig-segz-Rothensels, Konigsegg-Aulendorf (which the houses of Konigsegg and Truchsesz represent by turns) the Elector of Bavaria for Mindelbeim, Furstenberg for Gundelsingen, Baaden-Baaden for Eberstin, the lines of Marx-Fugger and Hans-Fugger, as also of Jacob-Fugger, Hohenems, Wurtemberg for Justingen, St. Blasii for Bondorf, Traun for Egloss, Stadion for Than-bausen, Hohen-Gerolzegg and Taxis for Eglingen.

5. The free Imperial towns, namely, Augsburg, Ulm, Eszlingen, Reutlingen, Nordlingen, Hall, Neberlingen, Rothweil, Heilbronn, Gmund, Memmingen, Lindau, Dinkelsbuhl, Biberach, Ravensburg, Kempten, Kaufbeuren, Weil, Wangen, Yini, Leutkirch, Wimpfen, Giengen, Pfullendorf, Buchhorn, Aalen, Bopfingen, Buchau, Offenburg, Gengenbach, Zell in Hammersbach.

The

The three last of these stile themselves the united towns; as Esclingen, Nordlingen, Hall, Heilbronn, Memmingen and Lindau are called the fix correfponding towns.

The lord(hip of Rechberg and the town of Donauwerth are indeed called over at the Diet; but the former of these is annexed to the manor of Donau Viertels, and of the latter the Elector of Bavaria is fovereign.

- · §. 4. The Princes summoned to the Diet of the Circle are, the bishop of Costanz and the duke of Wurtemberg, but the latter is sole director: He previously, however, communicates to the former the deliberations which are to come before the Circle: The Diets of the Circle are commonly held at Ulm, and in time of peace twice a year. Each of the five benches has its director, but without any peculiar privilege above the rest of his order. The directors of the five benches fet their feals to all the recessus, or acts of the Circle, and other dispatches. The bishop of Costanz is the perpetual director of the bench of ecclefiaftical Princes, as the duke of Wurtemberg is of that of the temporal Princes. The directors of the benches of prelates and counts are chosen only for life. Ulm, indeed, is perpetual director of the bench of the Imperial towns, but Augsburg always votes first. The leffer affemblies here confift always of ten States of the Circle, including the two Princes nominated thereto, who frequently meet during the general convention of the Circle, when matters of too great prolixity for the general affembly are to be discussed; and then they are stiled the ordinary deputation. The chancery and record-office belonging to the Circle are at Stutgardt, the refidence of the directory of Wurtemberg.
- §. 5. This Circle, as fituated towards France, is one of the anterior Circles of the Empire as they are called, and it not only entered into an afforciation with the Circle of Franconia at Nordlingen in the years 1691, and 1692 and 1700, but also with the other anterior Circles in the year 1697, and in 1702 with those of the Upper-Rhine, Palatinate, Austria and Franconia, and afterwards frequently renewed it. It has also stated Diets, in conjunction with the Circles of Franconia and Bavaria, for the affaying of coin. In the year 1681, the military force of the Empire, by a decree of the Diet, was fettled in time of peace at 40,000 men, and the quota of the Circle of Swabia alone came to 1321 horse, and 2707 foot. A like asfeffment was also passed for the Circles of Upper-Saxony, Burgundy, Lower-Rhine, Westphalia and Lower-Saxony, with which it was also put on an equality in the year 1707 at the divition of the 300,000 florins, which was the fum granted for that purpole, its proportion was rated at 31,271 florins fifty-eight kruitzers, five deniers. The number of troops in this Circle constantly kept on foot confist of four regiments of infantry, each composed of twelve companies, one regiment of dragoons and one of cuiraffiers, each confisting of eight squadrons. The commander of the Circle is stilled General-feldmarshal,

Vol. V.

§. 6. With respect to religion this Circle is reckoned among the mixed ones. At prefent it nominates to the Imperial chamber two affeffors, one of whom is Catholic the other Lutheran. When a Catholic affesfor dies, his death is certified by the Imperial chamber to the bithop of Coffanz, who acquaints the Catholic States with it, who either unanimously or by a majority of votes electione of the persons proposed to them by the bishop, or refer the nomination to him; and the bishop, afterwards, in either case, presents the perfon to the Imperial chamber. But when a Lutheran affestor dies, the Imperial chamber notifies it to the duke of Wurtemberg, who thereupon further certifies it to the Margrave of Baaden-Durlach and the city of Ulm, by a writ from the Imperial chamber, upon which, in conjunction with the other Protestant States and members, they hold a meeting for the nomination of another person, who upon that is proposed to the duke of Wurtemberg; and the latter again not only presents to the Imperial chamber the persons thus nominated by this body of Protestant States, but also when he cannot concur with their nomination, may, as summoning Prince of the Circle, prefent another, or when he approves the persons nominated to fill this dignity, prefents them, both in his own name and that of the Protestant States to the Imperial chamber, leaving the choice to those who are the best judges of their abilities.

§. 7. Under the Emperor Frederick III. the Circle of Swabia was, for the fake of the peace of Germany, divided into four quarters, which division still continues, and on many occasions has been found to be beneficial. The head of the first is the duke of Wurtemberg, of the second the Margrave of Baaden, of the third the bishop of Costanz and the abbot of Kempten, and of the fourth the bishop of Augsburg.

The BISHOPRIC of C O S T A N Z.

§. 1. HE lands and estates of the bishopric of Costanz or Costnitz, belonging to the Empire of Germany, lie in Upper-Swabia on both sides of the Bodensees, or lake of Costanz. In the year 1717, the bishopric employed three estates of the Circle of Swabia to examine into the state of its lands and inhabitants, and those of the abbey of Reichenau lying within the territory of the Empire, and to form a table of them. According to this examination this Circle has within the Empire, two cities, seven villages, twenty-two hamlets, nineteen manors, 1632 vassals, who are for the most part only vine-dressers and day-labourers, 1458 houses, 2562 vines, 9160 measured corn-fields, 4634 in manus-maade (that is, as much meadow as one man can mow in a day) and 2121 of measured wood. Meadow-grounds and ploughed-lands turn to very little account here; the foil being wholly clayey, sandy, or marshy, and subject to inundations. In the towns and villages the only trade carried on is in wine, but this amounts to nothing confiderable, in what is exported to the neighbouring countries. In the above-mentioned table nevertheless are omitted two Imperial districts belonging to the bishopric which shall be treated of hereafter.

- §. 2. The bishopric of Costanz or Costnitz, derives its name from the city of the same appellation, which has been described above, (See vol. iv. in the description of the city of Constanz or Costnitz,) and was removed hither from Wind feb, the place where it was founded, being in Switzerland fix German miles from hence; but when this happened, and particularly whether about the year 570, though the bishop's see was in the 16th century removed to Mersburg or Morspurg, is not sufficiently evident. The cathedral of the Bleffed Virgin stands in the city of Costanz; but the episcopal palace near it lies wholly in ruins. Its chapter confifts of twenty canons and four expectants. The jurifdiction of the cathedral is, indeed, by means of the Reformation and the diffolution of feveral orders of Monks and Knights, and even of some convents, confined within narrower bounds than formerly, but is still the largest in all Germany; for it extends itself over the greatest part of Swabia and Switzerland, comprehending within its bounds twenty collegiate churches, and upwards of one thousand parishes, which are either entirely or in part Roman Catholic, two hundred and twenty-nine convents, and in general fifty-one rural-deaneries, as appears from an account of the state of the diocese transmitted to Rome in the year 1712, and there printed. The bishopric itself, however, is subordinate to the archbishop of Mentz.
- §. 3. The bishop of this city stiles himself as follows, viz. By the Grace of God Bishop of Costanz, Lord of Reichenau and Oehningen. By others he is termed The Most Noble Prince and Lord, &c. The arms of this bishopric are cross, a pearl in a field ruby. It has four hereditary officers belonging to it; namely, that of hereditary marshal held by the barons of Sirgenstein, that of hereditary chamberlain by the barons of Ratzenried, that of hereditary cup-bearer by the barons of Zweyer, and that of hereditary steward by the barons of Segesser. The bishop himself is perpetual chancellor of the university of Freyburg in the Brisgau, as also their judge in the first and second instance.
- §. 4. This bishopric has ever been an immediate State of the Empire, and as such the bishop votes in the Imperial Diet among the Princes, sitting on the ecclesiastical bench betwixt the bishops of Straszburg and Augsburg. He belongs to the Circle of Swabia, and particularly to the third quarter; of which, in conjunction with the abbot of Kempten, he is the head. He is also a joint summoning Prince of the Circle; but whether in this respect he be equal to the duke of Wurtemberg, or the latter has some small pre-eminence over him was a long contest, which produced many folid pieces on both fides. In the year 1521, by the Imperial matricula, the quota of the bishopric of Costanz was fourteen horse and sixteen foot, or four hundred and eight florins. In 1545 it was affessed one half less; but in 1567 was raised to ten horse and thirty foot, or two hundred and forty florins: the cathedral, however, till the year 1683, paid only the smaller assessment of feven horse and thirty foot, or two hundred and four florins, both towards the taxes of the Empire and those of the Circle of Swabia. On account of the abbey of Reichenau, which has been incorporated with the bishopric, in the year 1545 a particular affeilment was made at two horse and four foot, or forty florins. In the year 1683, the whole taxation of the bithopric, and the abbey of Reichenau also included, was reduced by the Imperial matricula to one hundred and eight florins, to which eight florins fifty kruitzers being added for the lordship of Ittendorf, purchased in 1649, the whole amount of the bishopric's contingent is one hundred and fixteen florins fifty kruitzers. A further reduction was applied for, but opposed by the whole Circle. To the Kammerziele, or Imperial chamber at Wetzelar, the bithopric, together with the abbey of Reichenau, was in the year 1726, rated at one hundred and twenty-one rix-dollars fixty-one kruitzers and a half. The ancient taxation of the bishopric in the papal treasury is 2500 florins; but in 1704 only four hundred and ten were paid for the confirmation of bishop John Francis.

§. 5. The colleges of this bishop are, the ecclesiastical council, the court-council, and the treasury. His officers are the Upper-Vogte, or Chief-intendant, together with the Amtmanner, or Prefect.

§. 6. The bishop's board-revenue, according to a report made from the chapter to the court of Rome in the year 1712, amounted only to 20,000 florins.

§. 7. We now proceed to

I. The most remarkable places belonging to the bishopric, which are as follow, viz.

Mersburg or Morspurg, a city lying on the Bodensee and the usual refidence of the bishop, containing a seminary for secular clergy and a nunnery of Dominicans. This town is said to have been conferred on the bishopric by the counts of Rordors. In the year 1647 the palace here was burnt down by the Swedes. Its neighbourhood produces plenty of wine.

Obf. Near the city stands a cross in the lake, on which is an inscription importing that the lake in that part is two thousand nine hundred fathoms broad, and one hundred and eight deep.

Markdorf or Marchdorf, a little town in which was formerly a collegiate church, at present converted into a nunnery of Franciscans. Near the town stands a convent of Capuchins.

Ittendorf, an Imperial Iordship, purchased by the cathedral of the city of Neber-

Ueberlingen in the year 1649, on account of which it pays a distinct affestment as registered in the matricula of the Empire.

Reichenau, in Latin, Augia dives, or major, an abbey of Benedictines standing on a pleasant island of the same name in the Zeller-see, and first erected by St. Pirminius in the year 724. This abbey was formerly very rich, and an immediate free Imperial foundation, the abbot of which enjoyed the dignity of Prince, as also a seat and vote in the Diet of the Circle of Swabia. But ever fince the beginning of the 15th century it has greatly declined, and at last, namely, in the year 1535, was incorporated with the cathedral of Costanz, and in 1540 wholly ceded to it, so that from that time the revenues of its ancient abbots are devolved to the bishop, who has converted it into a bailiwick; but the abbey has lately used great endeavours, in opposition to the Pope and the cathedral of Costanz, to affert its privilege of being a State of the Empire, and for procuring its incorporation to be declared illegal. Its arms are a cross gules in a field argent; and its taxation in the matricula of the Empire was formerly one horseman and four foot, or twenty eight florins, which in the year 1545 was raifed to two horse and four foot, or forty florins, as may be read above, §. 4. In the year 1712, the bishop of Costanz follicited for a vote in the college of Princes by virtue of this abbey, but met with a repulse. This bishop stiles himself Lord of Reickenau, and not Abbot; but the latter is the title generally given him by the Emperor. The convent boasts of being possessed of the body of St. Mark the Evangelist; but this is disputed with them by the Venetians. It is more certain that the Emperor Charles the Fat lies buried there. In the convent is also shewn an emerald of extraordinary size, being two inches thick, and larger than a common folio, and weighing twenty-eight pounds three quarters. This emerald was prefented to the convent by Charlemagne. The Monks here are fubject to a prior.

The island of Reichenau is half a mile long, abounding in fine vineyards and all kinds of fruits. On it are still standing the villages of Lower and Upper-Zell.

Oehningen, a canonical college of Augustines, fituate not far from the town of Stein. This convent was founded in the year 965, by Chano count of Oebningen, who endowed it with his estate; but in 1534 the prior's revenue was, with the confent of the Emperor and Pope, annexed to the board-incomes of the bishop of Costanz, who bears the title of Lord of Oebningen, and keeps a steward there.

The vogtey (or district under a chief justice) of Geyenof-hen on the Zeller-see.

The district of Bollingen on the river Aach, which runs into the Zeller-fee. The lordship or manor of Rothelen or Rotteln, in the Landgravate of Kletgau, lying on the Rhine, and containing besides the seat of that name, the villages of Thengen or Deingen, Herderen and Lienkeim, or Lienen. The Prince Prince of Schwarzenberg, as Landgrave of Kletgau, claims not only the criminal jurifdiction of this place, but also the sovereignty of the lordship, allowing to the cathedral only the lower jurifdiction.

II. The following lordship, belonging to the chapter; viz.

The Imperial lordship of Conzenberg, lying on the north side of the Danube not far from Tuttlingen, and belonging to the dutchy of Wurtemberg. In the taxation-table of the Circle of Swabia it is rated at eighteen florins.

Obs. The lordships and manors of the bishop and chapter lying in the counties of Baaden and Thurgau are to be looked for in the account of Switzerland.

The BISHOPRIC of A U G S B U R G.

§. I. HE lands belonging to the bishopric of Augsburg lie scattered betwixt the rivers Lech, Iler and Danube; but the greatest part of them near the former. They form a part of the ancient Vindelicia, which was included in Rhætia. That tract of it lying towards the Tirolese and belonging to Algau is very mountainous; whereas the other principally confists of fine corn-land and pastures.

§. 2. This diocese takes its name from the Imperial city of Augsburg, where it was founded. The name of the first bishop thereof was Sozymus, who was raised to that dignity so early as the year 500. Bishop Mannus Sambuca, the fourth in order, first procured immoveable revenues to his bishopric; and Bishop Brico, who lived in the eighth century, augmented them. Bishop Zeiso, whom others call Rozilo, repaired the capitol of Augsburg, which lay in ruins, erecting it into a bishop's see. Bishop Ximbert, or Simbert, towards the beginning of the ninth century, incorporated the bishopric of Neuburg with that of Augsburg. His successor, Hanto, count of Andechs, greatly enriched it with the addition of his whole fortune. Under Bishop Bruno the diocese received another considerable agrandisement, his brother, the Emperor Henry II. conferring on him the title of Prince, together with the privilege of hunting, several imposts and other advantages. He bequeathed to it his feat at Straubingen, with many valuable appurtenances. All the treasures of the churches of S. Afra he likewise added to the bishopric, and separated the revenues of these two churches. Under the succeeding bishops the estate of the diocese received divers additions, particularly in the thirteenth century, when Bishop Hartmann, mann, count of Dillingen, annexed to it the town of Dillingen, with the county of Wittiflingen and other lands. Bithop Wolfhart-Roth purchased feveral villages, and by means of Bithop Henry IV. the Emperor Lewis mortgaged to the cathedral the Strafzvogtey, or superintendency of the roads, with the villages belonging to it.

- §. 3. The Prince and bishop of Augsburg, in the college of Princes, fits and votes betwixt the bishop of Costanz and Hildeskeim. In a Diet too of the Circle of Swabia, he possesses the second seat among the ecclefiaffical Princes, and is also the head of that fourth quarter of Swabia which lies betwixt the rivers Lech, Danube and Iler. The arms of this bishopric are, party per pale, gules and argent. Its affestment, according to the matricula of the Empire, in the year 1521, is twenty-one horsemen and one hundred foot, or fix hundred and fifty-two florins; but, in the prefent matricula, is faid to be somewhat less. To the chamber of Wetzlar its contingency is one hundred and eighty-nine rixdollars, thirty-one kruitzers and In ecclefiastical affairs it pertains to the province of the archbishop of Mentz. This diocese, towards the east, extends beyond the Lech to the dioceses of Ratisbon and Freysingen; southward, to those of Brixen and Chur; westward, to the bishopric of Costanz, from which it is separated by the Iler; and northward, beyond the Danube, to the bishoprics of Eichstatt and Wurtzburg.
- §. 4. The chapter of the cathedral here confifts of forty persons. The hereditary marshal of the bishopric is Baron Westernach; the hereditary chamberlain Baron Freyberg; the hereditary cup-bearer baron Western; and the hereditary steward Baron Stadien. The cathedral is in the Imperial city of Augsburg, where the bishop also has his court; but his proper residence is in the town of Dillingen.
- §. 5. The temporal and spiritual colleges belonging to the diocese are, the general vicariate, the ecclesiastical council and the consistory, the regency, the treasury and the court of siefs.
- §. 6. The episcopal revenue here is estimated at near 100,000 rixdollars. A prebendary brings in 1000, or 1700 guilders; but this depends on the plenty or scarcity of the fruits of the earth.
- §. 7. In the Imperial city of Augisturg, the bishop, as Prince, has a burg-grave court, offices of finances, demesnes, taxes and other courts relative to the administration of justice, or the different branches of his prerogative and revenue.
 - §. 8. The towns and manors belonging to this episcopal Principality are,
 - 1. The town and bailiwick of Dillingen.

Dillingen, the residence of the Prince, stands on the Danube, and had formerly counts of its own, to whom it gave title. Hartmann, the last count of Dillingen, who was also bishop of Augsburg and died in the year 1286, conferred this town on the bishopric. In the last quarter of the fifteenth.

fifteenth century Bishop John II. repaired, for his own residence, the palace, which had fallen to ruins; and Bishop Otto, in the year 1552, sounded an university here, in which is also a college of secular canons, as likewise one of Jesuits, together with a convent of Capuchins and two nunneries.

To the bailiwicks of Dillingen particularly belong the following villages, with a bailiwick over each; viz.

Altheim, Schretzheim, Fristlingen and Weiszengen. Betwixt the last and the little river of Susam lies the Benedictine convent of Fultenbach, which belongs to the diocese of Augsburg, and was founded in the year 730.

Gremkeim lies further down the Danube.

Wittislingen formerly bore the title of a county, but was given away to the diocese at the same time with the town of Dillingen.

2. The Pfleg-Amt, or prefecturate of Ayslingen, situate on the Danube.

Its principal place the market-town of Ayflingen.

3. The prefecturate of Westendorf and Killenthal, fituate on the Leeh.

Not far from the seat of Killenthal stands the Benedictine monastery of Holz, or the monasterium S. Johannis Baptista in silva.

4. The prefecturate of Zusmarshausen, lying on the river Susam, which runs into the Danube. In it Zusmarskausen, a market-town, containing a seat.

Dinkelscherben, a market-town.

5. The prefecturate of Pfaffenhausen, feated on the river Mindel, and purchased for the cathedral by Bishop Wolfbart towards the end of the thirteenth century. In it Pfaffenhausen, a market-town.

6. The prefecturate of Schoneck, lying on the river Gunz, and also purchased by Bishop Wolfbart. In this prefecturate is Sehoneck, a hamlet, containing a feat.

Beuren, a nunnery of Franciscans.

- 7. The prefecturate of Bobingen, fituate betwixt the rivers Wertach and Lech.
- Obs. In these parts to the superintendency of the roads belong the villages of Goggingen, Inningen, Bolingen, Mehringen, Aitingen, Menchingen, Erlingen, and others.
- 8. The prefecturate of Schwabmunchen, also situate betwixt the two abovementioned rivers, in a district called Lechfeld. Belonging to it is Schwabmunchen, a market-town, famous for its cotton stockings.

9. The prefecturate of Buchloe, lying along the rivulet of Gebnach, which runs into the Werbach. This prefecturate contains Buchlee, a market-town.

10. The prefecturate of LEEDER, fituate not far from the river Lech. In it Leeder, a market-town.

11. The

11. The prefecturate of OBERDORF, fituate on the river Wertach. Belonging to it Oberdorf, a market-town.

- 12. The prefecturate of Nesselwang, with the market-town of the same name.
- 13. Fuessen, or Fussen, in Latin Oppidum Faucense, or Fiessense, a small town, seated on the Lech, and also a frontier place and pass to Bavaria and the Tyrolese. In it is a Benedictine abbey and a convent of Franciscans; but the town is more noted for the peace concluded there betwixt Austria and Bavaria in the year 1745.
- 14. The prefecturate of Sonthofen, fituate on the river Iler, which receives its fource at the boundary of this bailiwick. Belonging to it Sonthofen, or Sunthofen, a market-town.

Fluchenstein, Rettenberg, Hindlang, Oy or Au, and other places, together with Obersdorf, a market-town.

Obs. 1. The cathedral has acquired several lands and places which formerly paid, or still pay tribute to the immediate noblesse of the quarter on the Danube, as Ottilienberg, Altensberg, Sulzschmidt, Autenried, Anhosen, Donau-Altheim, Lindau, Riebling, &c. 2. In the Tirolese it has a custom-house at Lurx and a farm at Botzen. 3. Besides several villages, estates and escheats which it would be too long here to enumerate.

The PRINCELY PRIORY of E L L W A N G E N.

- §. I. THE lands of this priory are fituate on the frontiers of the Circle of Franconia, betwixt the county of Oettingen, a part of the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the Imperial city of Aalen, as also the county of Limburg and the marquisate of Brandenburgh-Onolebach.
- §. 2. Its foundation was first established in the year 764 as a convent of Benedictines, afterwards as an abbey, and in 1460 and 1461, changed into a temporal priory. Some are of opinion, that this foundation was declared Princely so early as the year 1011, by the Emperor Henry II. and that this dignity was confirmed to it by the Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1347. Others, on the contrary, assert that it was not raised to the Princely rank till the year 1555, though from the Imperial votes of 1500, the priors of Ell-wangen appear to have sat in the Diets among the Princes before that time.

Vol. V. Z §. 3. The

- §. 3. The prior and lord of Ellwangen fits on the bench of the ecclefiaftical Princes in the Imperial council of Princes, next to the abbot of Kempten; but in the Diets of the Circle of Swabia they take precedence alternately, conformably to an agreement made in the year 1582. The chapter here confifts of twelve persons. The arms of the foundation are a mitre or, in a field argent. Its protector is the duke of Wurtemberg. The hereditary marshal of the foundation is Baron Adelmann of Adelmannsfelden; the hereditary chamberlain the Baron of Freyberg and Eissenberg; the cup-bearer Baron Rechberg of Hohen-Rechberg; and the lord-steward Baron Swarzach of Horn. In the matricula of the Empire this priory formerly was affested at five horse and eighteen foot, or one hundred and thirty-two storins; but, in the year 1691, fifty-two florins were remitted, insomuch that its present contingency is only eighty florins. To the Imperial chamber it is taxed in one hundred and seventy-sive ruthl. seventy-eight kruitzers and three quarters.
 - §. 4. The Princely colleges here are the regency, the ecclesiastical council and the treafury.

§. 5. To this priory belong the following places and manors; viz.

1. The court-manor of Ellwangen; in which is Ellwangen, a little town, fituate in the Vira, Firen or Feichten-Grund, on the river fagft, being the feat of the priory, and containing also a college of Jesuits. Near it, on a hill, stands Schonberg, the Prince's palace.

Opposite to it, without the town, stands also on a hill a fine pil-grimage-church.

2. The manor of Taxstell.

3. That of Neuler.

4. That of Rothlein.

5. That of Tannenberg, on the little river Bubler. To this belongs

The feat of Tannenberg, lying on a hill.

6. The manor of Wasseralfingen, situate on the river Kocher, and bordering on the Imperial city of Aalen. In it Wasseralfingen, a market-town.

7. The manor of Abts-Gnundt, containing the market-town of the same name, situate on the river Kocker.

8. The manor of Kochenburg, also called Kochersberg, bordering on the Imperial town of Aalen, and so named from a seat belonging to it.

9. The manor of Heuchlingen, situate on the river Lein, which joins the Kocher. In it

Lautern, a feat, lying on the river Rems in Old Remsthal, near Heubach, a manor belonging to the dutchy of Wurtemberg.

The Princely Abbey of K E M P T E N.

- §. 1. OF the abbey and Imperial town of Kempten, a plan, together with a map of the abbey-lands, may be seen in the Hochfurstlichen Stifts Kempten grundlichen Widerlegung des von der Stadt ejusdem nominis vor demselben sich anmaszenden alteren Herkommens, printed in folio, in the year 1737; both of which were defigned in that year by Thanner, and engraved by Bodenehr of Augsburg. The town of Kempten also, to its Grundlichen Ausfuhrung und Rettung ihres uralten Hirkommens und Reichs Immedietat, printed in the year 1731, and to which the above piece was an answer, has annexed a plan of the town and abbey, and likewise a view of the river Iler, with all its old and new bridges drawn from Hurter's map, and engraved in the year 1730 by Effer; but in the representation of the abbeylands the latter is defective. These lie on both sides of the river Iler, which it receives above S. Martinszell, where it ceases to be the boundary of the bishopric of Augsburg and the county of Konigseck Rothenfels, and leaves it below Karndorf, in the county of Waldburg. The greatest part of it confifts of the princely county of Kempten; to which some other districts and places have been added, together with a part of Algau, Ilergau and other ancient Gaus or territories.
- §. 2. About the year 773, Hildegard, consort to Charlemagne, repaired the Benedictine convent of Kempten, if the was not the original foundress the fettled on it her share of her mother's inheritance; in acknowledgment of which the abbey took her image for its coat of arms; and it is thought that by this legacy of the Empress it acquired that tract of land which it is at prefent possessed of, there being the most evident proofs that it belonged to the abbey fo long ago as the ninth or tenth century: for, though in fucceeding times it acquired many estates and lordships, yet these are only to be understood of property and inferior jurisdiction, being before within the marches of the abbey, and confequently under its fuperior jurifdiction, the lordship of Teisselberg alone excepted. At what time the title of Prince was conferred on this Benedictine abbey is not precifely known; some pretend that Andegarius its first abbot, was so created by Charlemagne, whilst others affert that this title was first conferred, in 1360, by the Emperor Henry IV. on the Abbot Henry of Mittelberg; but Schaten, in his Annal. Paderb. 1.8. fol. 783, produces an instrument of the Emperor Conrad III. dated in the year 1150, in which the abbot of Kempten is ranked among the ecclefiaffical Princes.

§. 3. The Prince and abbot of Kempten is grand-marshal to the Empress, and at her coronation takes from her the sceptre put into her hands by means of the confecrator, and delivers it to her again. In the Imperial college of Princes he takes place on the seat of the ecclesiastical Princes betwixt the bishop of Fulda and the prior of Ellwangen; but in the Diet of the Circle of Swabia sits and votes day after day with the latter. In the matricula of the Empire he is assessed at six horse and twenty foot, or one hundred and sifty-two florins; and to the chamber at Wetzlar he pays one hundred and eighty-two dollars, sifty-six kruitzers. In ecclesiastical affairs he is immediately dependent on the Pope: The chapter consists of twenty nobles.

§. 4. Of the hereditary offices of this princely abbey, the Elector of Barvaria is hereditary high-steward, the Elector of Saxony cup-bearer, the landgrave of Nellenburg marshal, and Count Montfort treasurer: but they are all represented by deputies; Count Roth being deputy-lord-steward, Count Bodman deputy-cup-bearer, Count Prasperg deputy-marshal, and Count Verdenstein deputy-treasurer. These high hereditary offices consist rather in protection than fervice.

6.5. The Prince's colleges are the regency, the confiftory and the treasury.

§. 6. The free Imperial jurisdiction in the county of Kempten, with which the abbey is invested has obtained for many centuries past, but is limited to the boundaries of the county. In the year 1522, an agreement was made betwixt it and the juridical court of the heath of Leutkircher and the Purs, that any vassal of the abbey of Kempten summoned before the last court, should, in all cases whatever, none excepted, be, on demand of the judge of Kempten, referred to his own court; but, in the year 1545, by a new compact, ten casus reservati were agreed on, in which the demand of the judge of Kempten should not take place against Leutkircher and the court of Purs.

§. 7. To this abbey belong

The Imperial town of Kempten, which confifts of the abbey-church, the Prince's palace, the offices belonging to it, and some private houses. In the year 1753, a literary society was established here.

Buchenberg, a market-town, privileged by the Emperor Frederick III. in the year 1485, lies in the forest of Wuerlingen.

S. Martinszell, a market-town, seated on the river Iler, and privileged at the same time with the foregoing.

Sulzberg, a feat, formerly a lordship, purchased in the sixteenth century by Sebastian, about of Breitenstein, of the barons Schellenberg. This place lies near the forest of Kempten, and is the residence of an intendant.

Thingau, a market-town, privileged by the Emperor Frederick in the year 1485. Wagegg, Wagegg, a very ancient castle with a lordship belonging to it, once the property of the noble family of Laubenberg; but, in the year 1581, annexed to the abbey by Abbot Eberbardslein.

Westerreidt, a seat, with a lordship annexed to it, purchased in the fixteenth century of Ulrich Schweickhard by Abbot Wolfgang of Grunenstein.

Gunzburg, a market-town, deriving its charter from the Emperois Rupert, in the year 1407; and, together with Leibenthan, constituting one lordship.

Dietmanfried, a market-town, created such by the Emperor Rudolph II. in the year 1586.

Zum Falken, a feat, which is the refidence of an intendant.

Rotensleim, a seat and lordship. The seat of Calde and the village of Ittelsburg, together with the lordship of Gronenback and all their estates, in Algau, whether seudal or hereditary, were, by the counts of Pappenbeim, who arrived to the possession of them on the extinction of the landgraves of Stublingen, in 1686, transferred to the abbey in 1692, in consideration of the sum of 65,000 florins. The town of Gronenback, or Grunenback, is a considerable place, with a market and Protestant church in it, of which Zurch enjoys the right of presentation. Close by the town, on a hill, is a conventual church of Catholics, as also the seat of Grunenback.

Teisselberg, or Deisselberg, together with Hetzlinshofen and Erbishoffen, are two foundations of nobles constituting one lordship; which, together with Gronenbach, are now fallen to the abbey. The inhabitants of Erbishofen are Protestants, and have a parish-church, the pastor of which is recommended by Zurch; and the Catholics also have a church in the hamlet of Lachen.

Legau, a market-town, created such in the year 1485 by the Emperor Frederick III.

Hobenthan, a feat with villages and districts belonging to it; as, namely, Mutmanshofen, Kimbratzhofen, Wiggensbach, Frauenzell, &c. which were all purchased by Abbot John of Reitheim, in the sisteenth century, of the samily of Haimenhofen.

Kemnath, a feat and lordship annexed to the abbey in the fixteenth century, by Abbot Welfgang of Grunenstein, who purchased it of Zimpreckt of Benznau. This seat is the residence of an intendant,

§. 1. A CCORDING to Dr. Haubers, the first map of the dutchy of Wurtemberg was cut in wood in the year 1559, being about the bigness of a common sheet of paper, and printed for the widow of Ulrich Morhards. In the year 1578 it was reprinted by George Gruppenbach, and inserted by Adam Ortelius in the first edition of his Theatrum orbis terrarum. But in the fecond edition of this work, instead of it he added a map of George Gadner, though without his privity. Gadner improved this map, and at last published it in the year 1596; which, in the year 1659, underwent another impression still more correct, by Roszlin; yet from this De Fer, in the year 1694, drew a very faulty one, which Walther rendered still more incorrect by his engraving. Gadner's map was likewise the ground-work of that of Mercator, which Hond, Janffonius, Waesberg and Blaeuw re-published under their respective names. Hulse reduced it to a smaller scale, which Matthew Merian inserted in Zeiller's Topographia Sueviæ. Schickard's new draught of it is now no longer in being, and Visscher's, Valk's, and Dankert's maps are incorrect. After all, the latest and best map of this dutchy is that defigned by John Maier, and engraved, in the year 1710, by Homann, on two leaves; which makes, in his Atlas of Germany, the eighty-third. as this also is not free from errors, it is to be wished that it were again published with Mr. Hauber's important amendments.

§. 2. This dukedom confifts of a great number of counties and lordships, some of which were purchased, some devolved to it by marriage, and others were acquired by conquest. To the north it terminates on the bishopric of Spire, the Palatinate, the Kreichgau, the county of Hohenloke, and the district of the Imperial town of Hall in Swabia; eastward it is bounded by the county of Limpurg, the districts of the Imperial towns of Gmund and Ulm, and the lordships of Rechberg and Wiesensteig; and with respect to the lordship of Heydenheim by the priory of Ellwangen; the county of Oettengen and a small tract of the dutchy of Pfalz-Neuburg; south-east by the Anstrian dominions; and to the south also by the dependencies of the same province, the territories of Furstenberg, Zwisalten, Zoller, Rothweil and other lesser districts, as also by the Brisgau; westward it confines on the district of Furstenberg, Oberkirch and Oppenau, two manors lying on the diocese of Straszburg, and the marquisates of Baaden-Baaden and Baaden-Dourlach, from which countries it is separated by the Schwarzwald, or Black-forest. Its extent from fouth to north, exclusive of the most southern detached parts in it, and from east to west, not including the lordship of Heydenbeim, which lies apart from it, is about fixteen miles.

§. 3. It is beyond dispute the most considerable and fertile part of the circle of Swabia, and may indeed be faid to be one of the best and warmest countries in all Germany. From its natural disposition, the country confiles of three tracts, which are all remarkably different. Of these the lowest and warmest is the Unterland, reaching from Heilbronn to Stutigard, the' in the eastern part in which are comprehended the manors of Murkard, Backanang and a part also of those of Winnenden, Schorndorf and Lorch, the air is not quite fo mild. The Middle-land lies betwixt the Unterland, the Alb, and the Black-forest. This part of the Alb and the Black-forest which have been taken notice of in the introduction of Swabia form the Upper-land, which is much colder than the former tho' lying more fouthward. It is proper here to fpecify the particular names of the feveral distinct tracts belonging to these. In the Unterland lies a small part of Jagst and the Kocher That as also the Weinsberg-thal (formerly called Sulmgau) which is so named from the little town of Weinsberg; the Zabergau, a part of Kraichgau; the lower part of Enzthals leading from Durrmunz; the Murthal; the Rams or Remfthal and the lower part also of the Neckarthals beginning from Eschingen; all which derive their feveral names from rivers and produce excellent wines. In the Middle-land and east of the Neckar lies the Filfthal, so called from the Fils; the Linninger Thal, out of which iffues the Lauter; the Uracher, or Ermsthal, from which issues the Erms; the Pfullinger Thal, so named from the town of Pfullingen, and where the Echitz has its fource; together with the Steinlacher Thal, which is so called from the Steinlach. To the west of the river Neckar lie the grounds which are fo famous for the plenty and excellency of their white cabbages, beginning about one hour's distance above Stuttgard, near Degerlock, and extending beyond Vayhingen, Muszberg, Steinenbronn, Waltenbuch, Grotzingen, Wolfschlugen, Kongen, Nellingen, and Ruith, from whence they wind again to the neighbourhood of Degerloch; the forest of Schonbuch, which extends from Waltenbuch to Hildritzbausen, and in another part almost to Tubingen; the exuberant Gow or Gau, beginning at Altingen, and reaching to the lower county of Hobenberg, and bordering close on Nagold; and on the other fide near Deckenpfrond on the Black-forest; together with the middle part of the valley of Neckar, lying from Tubingen to Esclingen. Lastly, in the Upper-land is that part only of the Alb which is called the Raube Alb, the Albuch lying in the lordship of Heydenbeim, and being much milder; as also the Hockftrafz, which extends towards Ulm, and constitutes a part of the manor of Blanbeurer. Beyond the Alb is the Brauzthal, situate in the lordship of Heydenheim; the Blauthal, fo called from the river Blau; the valley betwixt the lordships of Steufzlingen and Justingen, out of which issues the Schmick ;

Schmich; the Lauterthal; the Laucherthal and the Baar near Duttlingen. In that part of the Black-forest belonging to this dutchy lies the Gutacher Thal, so named from the Gutacht, which near Hausach runs into the Kinzig; the Elenborer and Sichltacher Thal, through which runs the Kinzig; the St. Christophs Thal and Beyersbronner Thall, through each of which runs a rivulet, whose streams uniting near Beyersbronn form the Murg.

The natural fituation of the country has also given rise to a common division of it, which, as it occurs more than once in the fequel, it will be proper here to illustrate: This division is into the land above and under the Staig, or into the Steig-regio supra and Inframontana. By the word Steig the Swabians mean a steep road; all the towns and manors of the dutchy to which the direct road from Stuttgard leads over the Boyfer-Wein and Hafen-Steige, three mountains near the gates of the city lying above the Steige, and all the rest under it.

§. 4. This dutchy abounds fo in grain that it exports confiderable quantities thereof; but this grain is chiefly spelt, rye and wheat being much less cultivated here. Of all the other forts of grain, however, here is also a plentiful fufficiency. The neighbourhood of Boblingen and Herrenberg exceed in fertility all the other parts of the dutchy. Flax and hemp are also cultivated here, and the former of these thrives best in the coldest parts. The vallies formed by the skirts of the Alb, some of which are three or four hours in length, are covered as it were with forests of fruit-trees, of which also there is no scarcity in most of the other parts of this country, cyder and perry being the liquors drank there in common by country people when wine happens to be dear. This dutchy abounds likewise in very rich palatable and wholiome wines, called by the general name of Neckar wines, though each has a particular title of its own, which it receives from the parts where it grows. The grapes also which yield the best wines bear the appellation of the countries whence the fets were first brought, as the Chiavenna, Valtoline, Tyrolles and Hungarian. The vineyards of the dutchy of Wurtemberg have been greatly improved by the very learned Mr. Bilfinger, who procured shoots from France, Italy, Greece, Hungary, Cyprus, and even Schiras in Persia; for his vineyard at Cantstadt, where most of them throve fo well that they have fince been transplanted with the like fuccess into many other vineyards. The tracts and vallies of the lower part of this dutchy noted for the best wines have been specified above, (§. 3.) and in the fequel I shall mention the particular places famed for that liquor. The cultivation of filk was revived here under Duke Charles. The forests of this country are considerably lessened. The consumption of oak, in particular, has been very large. Beach and birch also require to be used sparingly. The woods of fir, which lie in the Black-forest, have been spoken of in the Introduction to Swabia. The colder part of the Unternland, §. 3. fo nearly resembles the Black-forest as to be covered with firs and pines:

pines; turf is also dug there, particularly near Schweningen, Sindelfingen, Wildbad and Schopflock, which makes up for the fearcity of wood. Great profits are also made by graziery, particularly in the Black-forest, but the largest breeds of theep here are found on the Alb. Most parts of the country abound in game. In the valley of St. Christopher, near Frudenstadt and near Konigfwart in the valley of Murg, are mines of filver and copper. That at Konigstein in the Reinerzau, near the convent of Alpirspach, yields filver, and that at Guttach near Hernberg copper. Iron also is found at Konigsbronn and Morgelfletten, and also in Ludwigs Thal at Duttlingen, as likewise in the country of Schiltach at Ablen and Fluern; but not in sufficient quantities to supply the country, infomuch that the iron of Mompelgard is imported there. Alpirspach and the Reinerzau afford cobalt; and sulphur is likewise met with in the neighbourhood of Bahlingen, Heubach, Boll, and elsewhere; many parts also yield coal. Sulz has some saline springs. Of minerals the Terra figillata, which is reckoned preferable to that of Malta; and a fine clay for earthen-ware are particularly found near Heydenheim, as also porcelain in the manor of Harnberg, which is worked at Calw; fine variegated marbles, fome of which are equal to those of Italy, and remarkably transparent alabaster near Enzweykingen; agate crystalline pebbles, which cut glass, at Bulach; black amber on the Alb, as also at Kirchheim, near the Teckberge and at Boll; together with fine mill-stones at Upper-Ensingen, &c. Among the baths at Wurtemberg the most celebrated is that of the Wildbad; the other baths here are those of the Zeller Bad, the Hirschbad at Stuttgard, the Sulabad at Canstadter, the Bollerbad, the Cappenerbad at Licbenzell, the Lauterbad at Freudenstadt, the Krabebad at Alpirspach, the Geyerbad at Urach, and the Rictenauerhad at Backnang. The most noted mineral springs here are the Goppinger, the Teinacher, the Berger near Cantfladt, the Klein, or Leffer Englinger, at Pfullingen, and the Gonninger. The rivers which have their rife in and water this dutchy, have already been spoken of in the articles of the Alb and Schwarzwald in the introduction to Swabia. The principal of these is the Neckar, in Latin the Nicer, or Nicrus, which rises near Schwenningen in the manor of Duttlingen, dividing the dutchy from fouth to north, and joining the Rbine below Manheim in the lower Palatinate. Omitting the other finaller rivers which it receives within the dutchy, it is increased by the Enx as united with the Nagold, and also by the Fils and Rems. Duke Charles Lewis caused it to be made navigable from Cantfladt. The Enz likewise admits vessels as far as Vaylingen.

§. 5. The number of inhabitants in this dutchy is known to precision, an exact enquiry being made every year by the general superintendants, and reported to the annual Synod. In the year 1754 were numbered 477,115 souls, and they have hitherto been observed to increase. In the dutchy are fixty-eight cities and towns, exclusive of that part of Widdern belonging to the duke, with about 1200 boroughs, market-towns, villages and hamlets. Vol. V.

The States of Wurtemberg, fince the nobility separated themselves, are composed of the prelates, or abbots, and the towns. On the call of a Diet (which at present is only on very important occasions) all the prelates and a burgher-master from each town meet at Stuttgardt, out of whom are chosen four prelates and six burgher-masters, as representatives of the whole country. These are divided into the lesser and larger committee of Election. The former consists of two prelates and six burgher-masters, the provincial confuls, which are usually two or three, and the provincial receivers. The latter also consists of two prelates and six burgher-masters, with two provincial commissaries, three provincial recorders, and a like number of chancery-counsellors, as also of two provincial clerks of the excise, who are attended by three provincial beadles. This select body meets twice or thrice every year, each session lasting four, six, or eight weeks, according to the weight and multiplicity of business. The country choose their assertions at pleasure either from among the prelates or burgher-masters of the towns.

§. 6. The established religion of this country is Lutheranism, and though Duke Charles Alexander has embraced the Roman, yet in the years 1729, 1732 and 1733, he gave affurances to the States in formal instruments, that no change or innovation should be made in the Lutheran religion in any part of the whole dutchy, and that in all the churches and schools throughout the dutchy, and the countries thereunto belonging, no other religion than that of Lutheranism should be taught; that no new Catholic churches, chapels, altars or images, should be erected or set up, nor any fuch as were decayed or forfaken again used; that no processions, pilgrimages, nor catholic burying-places should be tolerated; that the host should never be carried openly, the Simultaneum Catholicum be no where introduced, nor any part of the catholic worship be performed except only that in the duke's chapel, the catholic inhabitants of the town of Ludwigsburg should have the privilege of performing their fervice in private; that all and every employment shall be filled with Lutherans alone; that the privy-council shall consist only of Lutherans; and that in the same manner as in the Electorate of Saxony, they alone shall have the management of the church concerns, revenue, and affairs relating to the police, whether respecting the ducal lands only or the whole body of Protestants in general, both within and without the Roman Empire, in the Imperial or circular Diet, or any other affembly. Further, in the year 1734, the faid duke, in confirmation of the premisses, did at the Imperial Diet deliver to the Protestant body Reversales under his fign manual, which were in due form accepted by them. Duke Charles Eugene also in the year 1750, issued a declaration against catholic processions either at Ludwigsburg or in any part of the dutchy, enjoining that religious matters should remain unalterable pursuant to the treaty of Weltphalia, the Reversalia of the Princes, and the national compacts grounded thereon. The Protestants only are tolerated here, and their place of worship at Stuttgardt is a private house. In this dutchy are also some Waldenses, who are either husbandmen or farmers, and live in the Italian villages, as they are called, some few towns alone excepted, where they have established manufactures of hats and stockings, and are allowed the public exercise of their religion. The toleration of the Jews here was abolished by an edict of Duke Christopher, that of two or three samilies at Stuttgardt excepted under the particular protection of the court, and those previously settled in the new acquisitions.

Concerning the constitution of the Lutberan church here, in the whole dutchy are five hundred and fifty-five parishes, and about fifty deaconries, exclusive of eight hundred and twenty-nine chapels of ease. The parishes are divided into thirty-eight special superintendencies, and these into sour general ones. The special superintendants, or as they are called here superattendants, and who are also termed Decani, or in common talk only Speciales, hold together with their deanries the parishes of the towns where they reside, annually visit the schools and churches within their department, convene once or twice a year the ministers subordinate to them, and make their report to the consistory. The general-superintendants, who are usually stiled General, are always the abbots of Bebenbausen, Adelberg, Maulbronn and Denkendorf.

1. Subject to the general-superintendant and abbot of Bebenbausen are nine special superintendants, of whom the special superintendant of Tubingen presides over twenty-two parishes; the superintendant of Lustnau over six, he at Herrenberg over twelve, he at Freudenstadt over ten, he at Wildberg over twenty-one, and he at Sulz over sixteen; the superintendant at Hornberg over seven, the superintendant at Tuttlingen over nine, and the superintendant at Balingen over twenty-six.

2. Subject to the general-superintendant and abbot of Adelberg are ten special superintendants, of whom the special-superintendant at Cantsladt presides over twelve parishes, the superintendant at Waiblingen over thirteen, at Schorndorf over twenty-five, at Marbach over twenty, at Bracknang over eight, at Laussen over eleven, at Guglingen over ten, at Brackenbeim over thirteen, at Neuensladt over twelve, and at Weinsberg over eleven. The abbey of Adelberg, though giving title to the general-superintendency, yet lies without it.

3. Subject to the general-superintendant and abbot of Maulbronn are eleven special-superintendants, of whom the special-superintendant of Stuttgardt presides over twenty-one parishes, he at Ludwigsburg over eight, he at Leonberg over seventeen, he at Markgroningen over nine, he at Bietigheim over eleven, he at Vayhingen over twelve, and he at Knittlingen over sixteen, exclusive of the parish of Luszbeim which is under the immediate visitation of the general-superintendant; the superintendant at Durmenz over eleven, the superintendant at Boblingen over sourceen, at Calw over eighteen, and at Wildbad over eleven.

4. Subject to the general superintendant and abbot of Denkendorf are eight special superintendants, of whom the special superintendant at Goppengen presides over twenty-sour parishes, the special superintendant at Kirchheim over nineteen, the superintendant at Nurtingen over ten, at Neussen over eight, at Heydenheim over twenty-sour, at Urach over twenty-sive, at Pfullingen over eleven, and at Blaubewen over twenty-one. The abbey of Denkendorf, which gives name to the generalship, lies without its limits.

The fynod here, which is held annually in the months of September and October, is composed of the confistory and sour general superintendants. All parishes are filled up by the confistory, which also, on a vacancy in the deanries, abbies, deaconries, &c. in the three chief towns, as also in the professorships in the university and convents, always proposes three persons, out of whom the privy-council chooses the candidate who is best recommended. The meanest revenue of a parish is four hundred florins.

The revenues of the ancient monasteries have been mostly applied to the service of churches and schools, and the persons officiating in them, under the direction of the ecclesiastical council. The sourteen abbots and priors of Adelberg, Alpirspach, Anhausen, Bebenhausen, Blaubeuren, Denkendorf, Herbrechtingen, Herrenbls, Hirsau, Konigsbronn, Lorch, Maulbronn, Murhard and S. George, not only form, in the manner abovementioned, the first class of the states of the country, but out of them also are chosen the four committees (§. 5.) and the three ecclesiastical counsellors of the consistory, four of whom, as above specified, are perpetual general superintendants and members of the synod; four are invested with the government of seminarial convents; as, namely, those of Bebenhausen, Maulbronn, Denkendorf and Blaubeuren; and these last four, together with the abbots of Anhausen, Herbrechtingen, Konigsbronn and Murkard, who are also priests of those places, are obliged to residence.

§. 7. For the inftruction of youth, particularly in divinity, this dutchy has feveral excellent foundations, which are not to be met with in other countries; the common grammar-schools here, under the direction of a preceptor and one, two or three assistants, who are termed collaboratores, or provisores, amount to above sifty; and every year these schools are visited and examined not only by the magistracy and clergy of each place, but also by a professor of philosophy at Tubingen and by the rector of the gymnasium at Stuttgardt. By the former are examined the schools in the country on the Steig, and by the latter those in the country under the Steig (§.3.) Out of these schools they select such schools as give indication of making good divines, and these at the gymnasium of Sutgard surther undergo three other examinations in three successive years; after which twenty, formerly twenty-sive, are removed from thence, as the Prince's alumni and stipendiaries, to the four convents in the country appropriated to academies, which may be looked upon as the highest classes of a gymnasium; and first to the two lower ones of Blaubeuren and Denkendorf, next to the two upper ones, as namely those of Bebenhausen and Maulbronn, and then from thence to the university at Tubingen on the theological exhibitions, which is done in the following order; viz. one year on the admittance of new alumni from the grammar-schools into the convent of Blaubeuren, the scholars of that convent are removed to Bebenhausen, whence another fet of students are promoted to the Prince's stipendium for divines at Tubingen. The succeeding year the promising scholars in the country schools are sent to the convent of Denkendorf, whence, for further improvement, they are removed to Maulbronn, and after their term, which is usually two years in each convent, they are promoted to the Prince's flipend. In these four convents the alumni are provided with lodging, food, apparel and instruction; but at their admittance, in conjunction with their parents and guardians, bind themselves, in case of elopement from the convent, apostacy from the Lutheran religion, or other scandalous crimes, to pay at the rate of fifty floring a year for the time of their board; as also to devote themselves to divinity; and not to folicit, or accept, of any office out of the country without the Prince's express leave; but, on the contrary, willingly to take upon themselves any scholastic or ecclesiastical function, either within or without the country to which the States shall appoint them. The Prince's theological stipend, at Tubingen, is a seminary containing about three hundred students, and sometimes more, who, after studying philosophy two years, are capable of being created masters of arts, and having studied divinity the two fucceeding ones, whether they have taken the degree or not, if they pass the very strict examination in the consistory, have a licence given them under the title of Examined masters to preach, baptize and administer the facrament. The most eminent among them are also appointed repetentes in the stipend. Till they are provided with a benefice they continue in the feminary, where, besides their food, every quarter of a year they receive one florin, thirty kruitzers and two quires of paper; but the magistri repetentes have a more liberal allowance. The superintendants of this stipend are the chancellor of the university, two professors of divinity, both of whom must live in the convent and the magister domus. From these foundations this dutchy derives a constant supply of such able and exemplary divines as, in proportion to its extent, are scarce to be equalled in any Protestant country whatever. Stuttgardt has also a gymnasium illustre, and at Tubingen, exclusive of its collegium illustre, is a celebrated university.

§. 8. This country is likewise not without several considerable manufactures; as, namely, that of potter's-ware at Heydenbeim and the porcelain manufactory at Calw; but this does not flourish so much as might have been expected from the many advantageous privileges granted for its encouragement. At Spiegelberg, not far from Marpach and Backnang, is a glass-house, the mirrors of which, and its other works, are very justly admired. Ludgwigsburg makes gold and marbled paper, as also damask and other linen; and at Urach and Blaubeuren are good linen manufactures; as Calw, Goppingen and Tuhingen are likewise noted for their woollen-stuffs. At Cantsladt are cotton-printers; in other places good hats and stockings are made. At Berg too, and at Stuttgardt, are manufactures of silk. The exports of these commodities and of the natural products of the country, are not inconsiderable. At Calw and Urach are trading companies; those belonging to the former of which are of the longest standing and of greatest importance. The introducement of what foreign commodities the country wants is principally by the way of Frankfort on the Mayn.

§. o. The castle of Wurtemberg, which has given name to the whole dutchy, lies in the manor of Cantifadt. The origin of the princely house is fomewhat obscure and uncertain. Those who deduce it from the Kings of the Franks fay, that King Clovis conferred on a favourite of his of the name of Emerich the castles of Wurtemberg and Beutelspach, together with the adjacent country, under the title of a Dynafty, or barony. Conrad, Dynast of Wurtemberg, refigning his inheritance to the Emperor Henry IV. as a fief. was by him created count thereof. It is certain, however, that there were counts of Wurtemberg at the beginning of the twelfth century. The Wurtemberg inheritance had frequently been divided, but the last division of it was in the year 1442, betwixt the counts Lewis and Ulrich. In the year 1473, the feveral counts of Wurtemberg then living entered into a compact for establishing the right of primogenitureship, and indivisibility of the Wurtemberg territories. This compact was ratified, in the year 1482, by the convention at Munsing, as the fundamental law of Wurtemberg; and, in the year 1484, received the function of the Emperor Frederick III. the years 1485, 1486 and 1489, it was confirmed by new compacts, and particularly, in the year 1490, by the ratification of the states of the country and the Swahian confederacy. In 1495, the Emperor Maximilian conferred on his fucceffor, Count Eberhard I. the title of duke; and again ratified the indivisibility of the country and the right of primogenitureship in it. This first duke, Eberhard, had for his successor his father's brother's fon Eberhard II. whose brother, Count Henry, obtained Mompelgard, with its appurtenances; and from Frederick, his grandfon, who was also reigning duke of Wurtemberg, the present ducal family is descended. His son, Julius Frederick, in right of his confort Elizabeth, inherited the dutchy of Oels in Silesia; and thus founded the collateral-line of Wurtemburg-Oels, which is still existing.

The first duke of Teck, known with any certainty, lived towards the end of the twelfth century; and Duke Albert, a son of Conrad's, was duke of Zabringen. These dukes of Teck possessed the castle of Teck, which now lies in ruins, together with the town of Kirchbeim; but a part of the latter belonged also to the dukes of Austria, who, in the year 1325, transferred it to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg; on which Frederick, duke of Teck, in 1381, disposed of his share in this town, together with the castle of Teck, to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg.

By the convention of Prague, in the year 1599, the reversion of the dutchy of Wurtemberg was ceded to the house of Austria, who, by virtue of this cession, assumed its title and arms; but the ducal house of Wurtemberg maintains that this reversion became void in the year 1740, by the decease of the Emperor Charles VI.

- §. 10. The duke's title is, Duke of Wurtemberg and Teck, Count of Mompelgard, Lord of Heydenheim and Justingen. The arms for Wurtemberg are three stag's horns, diamond, in a field topaz. For Teck topaz and diamond lozenges; for Mompelgard two barbels endorsed with tails averted, topaz, in a field, ruby; for Heydenkeim, a Saracen's head with a kind of Hussar's cap ruby in a field topaz; for Justingen saphire a staff in bend with branches on both sides; and, lastly, the Imperial standard, borne by the ducal-house of Wurtemberg as hereditary standard-bearer of the Empire.
- §. 11. This standard of the holy Roman Empire was conferred on the counts of Wurtemberg in the year 1336. The dukes are also grand huntsmen of the Empire; and in allusion to this honor, Duke Eberbard Lewis, in the year 1702, founded the order of hunting; and, in the year 1710, renewed and increased its statutes, the reigning duke of Wurtemberg being always grand-mafter thereof. The enfign of the order is a gold crofs in shape of that of Malta, enamelled with red; and at each of the four corners a golden eagle with a hunting-horn betwixt the middle and lower point of each part. In the centre is a small shield, on one side of which is a W in relievo with a ducal hat over it; and in the other three golden huntinghorns. This cross is worn appendant to a broad watered scarlet ribbon paffing from the left shoulder quite down to the right side. On the left breaft of the coat is a filver ftar embroidered with the enfign of the order in the middle, and in a green circle round it the motto of the order Amicitiae virtutisque fædus. The grand festival is on St. Hubert's day, which is also celebrated with a great hunting-match, at the place where the grand-mafter at that time happens to be.
- §. 12. The hereditary posts of this country were revived on its being raised to a dukedom. So early as the year 1511, at the celebration of the nuptials of Duke Ulrich, the following great officers affisted at the solemnity: viz. baron of Thumben as hereditary marshal, baron of Nippenburg as hereditary cup-bearer, the baron of Gutling as hereditary chamberlain, and the baron of Speten as hereditary steward. But at that time they had no fiefs (beneficia) but these were afterwards conferred on them in lieu of the pension, excepting that the Speten family are still without any, their enfeositment not being descended with the post of hereditary steward. The barons of Wallbrunn are at present hereditary cup-bearers; but by whom the other hereditary offices are enjoyed I know not.

§. 13. The duke of Wurtemberg fits and votes in the college of Princes by virtue of the dutchy of Wurtemberg, and has demanded the same privilege by virtue of the dutchy of Teck. But though this affair was recommended to the Diet by the Emperor Leopold, in the year 1699, and in 1708 by the Emperor Joseph, nothing has yet been done in it. The duke of Wurtemberg is one of the alternative Princes, as they are called from an agreement made, in the year 1576, for fettling the alternation of their ranks. In the Introduction to the Circle of Swabia, he is shewn to be the summoning Prince and director of this Circle. The affefiment in the matricula of the Empire for the dutchy of Wurtemberg, the Principality and county of Mompelgard and the county of Lowenslein, not long fince was fixty horse and two hundred and feventy-feven foot, or 1828 florins; but I cannot pofitively affirm whether this be the present establishment. The affessiment of the Imperial lordship of Justingen is five footmen, or twenty florins; to the Kammerziele, or Imperial chamber at Wetzlar, the dutchy pays nine hundred and fifty-three rixdollars, fifty-three kruitzers and a half; and the lordfhip of Justingen fifteen rixdollars, eleven kruitzers and a half.

§. 14. At Stuttgardt, which is the residence of the duke, are the privy-chancery, in which the duke himself presides; the privy, or ministerial-council, consisting of nobles, men of letters and other officers; the college of government, which, besides other officers, has also a president, together with nobles and men of letters among its members; the consistory, with a president, director and counsellors; the board of war, with a president and other members; the treasury, which consists of a president, a receiver, a sollicitor and other officers; the ecclesiastical college, with a director, administrators of the church-revenues and other members and officers, and several other boards and offices; as, namely, those of the mint, trade,

The high court of justice, where causes are terminated, in dernier resport, no appeal being allowed to the Aulic or any other foreign tribunal, was, in the year 1514, removed for ever to Tubingen, where it holds its sessions once a year; and consists of a chief-justice, assessions who are composed of nobles, men of study and country gentlemen, as also of a secretary.

§. 15. Mr. Keyszler, in his travels, computes the whole revenue of this country at two millions of guilders per annum. The country itself levies the contributions and excise.

§. 16. The military force here confifts of a body of horse-guards, horse-grenadiers, dragoons, foot-guards, five regiments of foot and a body of artillery.

§. 17. The more particular description of this dutchy is best reduced under the four following divisions; viz.

I. The princely temporal bailiwicks and cities, which I shall mention in the order in which they descended to the ducal house, though the time of the the acquisition of the six first, as having been longest in their possession, is unknown.

1. The city and district of Stuttdgart.

Stuttgart, or Stuttgardt, the capital of the dutchy and refidence of the duke, lies in a delightful country on the Nifenback, which at about one German league's distance from it runs into the Nechar. The city of itself is not large, but contains two well built fuburbs, which are called the Reiche and E/zlinger. The counts and dukes of Wurtemberg have had their refidence here ever fince the year 1321. Eberhard Lewis indeed removed to Ludwigsburg in the year 1727, but in 1733 Duke Charles Alexander removed hither again. The new ducal palace here was began in the year 1746. The building of the old one employed them from the year 1553 to 1570. Near it stands the chancery, which is a handsome stone structure; and on the other fide of the palace, towards the east, are the menagerie and summerhouse, the latter of which is admired for its curious architecture. It was built in the year 1584, confifts wholly of stone and contains two stories, in each of which is a falon. The uppermost of these is two hundred and one feet in length, feventy-one in breadth and fifty-one high, being arched and having pillars on the outfide. This falon is fitted up for a theatre. To the fouth of the old palace stands the new building, as it is called, which was erected betwixt the years 1599 and 1609. In the lower part of it are the duke's stables, and in the middle a large room for solemnities, and over that an armory. The cabinet of curiofities here is at prefent in the Prince's buildings, as it is called. The duke's offices in this city have been mentioned above, §. 14. In the dutchy-house both the committees of the country and the circular Diets affemble. The fee of its bishop, which was anciently at Beutelspach, was removed to this place in the year 1321, on which account the church of the Holy-Crofs is stilled the cathedral. Exclusive of this, among the German-Lutheran churches, are those of the hospital cliurch and St. Leonard. The French-Lutheran congregation here have the exercise of their public worship in the palace church belonging to the convent of Betenhausen, and the French reformed meet in a room of the old palace. In this town is also a special superintendency, and a gymnasium illustre of seven classes, the rector of which also is $P\alpha$ dagogarcha or Governor of the schools in the country under the Steige. The filk manufactories of Stuttgardt make all forts of stuffs, stockings. and ribbands. The origin of this town is uncertain; in the year 1283 it was befieged without fuccefs by Rudolph I. but in 1287, he reduced Count Eberhard to fuch streights that he was compelled to promife the demolition of the walls of the city. In the year 1520 and 1567, the whole city was again furrounded with walls; in 1546 and 1547 it fuffered greatly by the Spaniards; in 1634, and the following years, by the Imperialists; and in 1688, 1693, and 1707, by the French. VOL. V. T_0

To it belong the hamlets of Hefzlach and Gablenberg, the inhabitants of which are burghers of Stuttgardt, and their processes are tried in its courts.

The district of Stuttgardt under the Steige produces great quantities of wine, and on the horse course, betwixt Stuttgardt and Cantstadt, is a medicinal bath called Hirschbad. To this district belong twenty parishes, viz. Waltenbuch, a little town, containing a castle, in which the duke usually resides when he hunts at Schonbuch. This place, together with some other villages and hamlets, was, in the year 1363, sold by duke Reinold of Urssingen to count Eberhard of Wurtemberg.

Bernhausen, Bohnlanden, Bothnang, Degerloch, where the Krautreich filder or white college fields begin, Echterdingen, Feuerbach, Gaiszburg, Heumaden, Kennath, Musberg, Nellingen, formerly containing a priory; Upper-Eszlingen, Plattenbard and Plieningen.

Plochingen, Ruith, Scharnhausen, Sielmengen and Steinenbronn.

2. The town and district of Cantstadt.

Cantstadt, or Cantstatt, a small town, lying on the east side of the Neckar, and containing a suburb on the other side of it, by reason of its situation is accounted a pass. In it is a special-superintendency, and a cotton printing-house; and both within and near the town are three salt springs of approved virtue in several disorders. Near the town the counts of Wurtemberg anciently held their tribunals in the open air, and nigh it also stood the castles of Brye, Altenburg, and Berg. In the neighbourhood lies the little village of Berg, in which is a silk manufactory, and near it an excellent mineral spring. On a hill lying about 1000 paces to the east of the town 1700 bones of great and small animals have been dug up, and the walls of an ancient Roman building discovered.

The district of Cantstadt contains thirteen parishes; namely,

Fellbach, Hedelfingen, Hofen, a Roman-catholic parish, Munster, Upper-Turkheim, Rohracker, Rommelshausen, Schmiden, Ulbach, Under-Turkheim, Wangen, Weil in Dorf, and Zuffenhausen. Betwixt the parochial villages of Fellbach and Under-Turkheim, near the hamlet of Rotheberg, is the family seat of Wurtemberg, which was the residence of the counts of Wurtemberg till the year 1320, and stands on an eminence. This seat has been frequently laid in ruins.

Obf. Fellbach, Ulbach, and Under-Turkeim, are noted for their wine.

3. The town and district of Waiblingen.

Waiblingen, a little town lying on the Rems, has belonged to the counts of Wurtemberg ever fince the year 1253. During the thirty years war the greatest part of this place was destroyed. In it is a special-superintendency.

The bailiwick of Waiblingen produces, in most places, good wine and corn: to it belong eight parishes, namely, Beinstein, Bittenfeld, Hegnach, Hobnacker, Korb, Neckar-Groningen, Neckar-Rems, and Neustadtlein; and also in old records New-Waiblingen, which is walled.

4. The town and district of Schorndorf.

Schorndorf, a small but fortified town, situate on the Rems, is said to have had the privilege of a town conferred on it in the year 1230 by the Emperor Frederick II. In the years 1538 and 1560 it was strengthened with additional fortifications, in 1634 besieged and taken by the Imperialists, and in 1646 by the Frenck. In the year 1743 almost one half of it was destroyed by fire. In this place is a special-superintendency.

The bailiwick of Schorndorf, contains eighteen parishes, viz.

Beutelspach, a borough, said to have formerly enjoyed municipal privileges. The old town, which stood on the Cappelberg, in its neighbourhood, was the residence of the ancient counts of Wurtemberg. The cathedral stood formerly in this town, but in the year 1321 was removed to Stuttgardt. In its church is the burial-place of the ancient counts of Wurtemberg.

Aichelberg, a parochial village, belonging to the barons of Holz; Aichfchiefz, Aurbach, Baltmansweiler, Enderspach, Geradsletten, Great-Heppach, Grunbach, Hegenlohe, Haubersbronn, Hohengehren, Pluderhausen, Rudersberg, Schnaith, Schornbach, Strumpfelbach, Winterbach: Of these Great-Heppach is famed for wine.

5. The town and district of Leonberg, containing Leonberg, a little town lying not far from the rivulet of Glems. In it is a ducal palace. This town is also the feat of a special-superintendency. In the year 1498 it suffered by fire. After the battle of Nordlingen, in 1635, when the Imperialists had made themselves masters of all Wurtemberg, the Emperor granted this town to General Gallas; but by the peace of Westphalia it was restored to the duke.

Of the district of Leonberg, which lies in the Old Glemsgau, the greatest part belonged to the earldom of Asperg, and was purchased with it. It comprises seventeen parishes, viz.

Heimsheim, or Heimsen, a very old little town, which the counts of Wurtemberg, in the years 1443, 1456, and 1497, purchased of the noble samilies of Neuneck, Stein, Gultlingen, Stadion, and Smalnstein; and of which at last, namely in the year 1687, the ducal house of Wurtemberg also exchanged with the Marggrave Frederick the Great the share which the samily of Gemmingen had held for some centuries as a mortgage from the Marggrave of Baaden. In the year 1742 this town was granted as a fief to Count William Frederick of Gravenitz, and on his renunciation was granted by Duke Charles Alexander to his consort Maria Augusta for her life. In the thirty years war it was destroyed by fire, and in 1692 and 1693 plundered by the French. To it belongs Perouse, a parochial village of the industrious Waldenses.

The parochial villages of Ditzingen or Titzingen, Eltingen, Geberskeim, Gerlingen, Heimerdingen, Hemmingen, Hirschlanden, Hosingen, Malmsbein, Bb 2

Monsheim, Munklingen, Renningen, Rutmarsheim or Ruthesheim, Schockingen, and Warmbronn.

6. The town and district of Goppingen, containing Goppingen, a town, fituate in a delightful plain on the river Fils, with a ducal feat in it, and a special-superintendency. Before the reformation, this town contained a cathedral, and at present has a manufactory of filk-stuffs. Probably the town belonged anciently to the Barons of Stauffen, and was taken from them either by Count Ulrich or Eberhard of Wurtemberg. In the year 1425 it was demolished by fire. In 1519 the Swabian confederacy made themselves masters of it; and in 1643 the Bavarian General John Von Werth. Not far from the town lies the excellent mineral spring of Schwalbrunn.

The district of Goppingen comprehends seventeen parishes, namely, Albershausen, Betzgenrieth, Boll, near which is a mineral spring; Eberspach, Faurndau or Faurdnau, which, before the Resormation, contained a cathedral; Ganszlosen, Gruibingen, whence the above-mentioned town of Gruibingau took its name; Hattenhosen, and Hochdorf.

Hohen-Stauffen, a parochial village, in which was the family feat of the house of Hohen-Stauffen belonging to the dutchy of Swabia and the Empire, and at first named Stophe, or Stoyphe. In the year 1525 this palace was destroyed by the peasants.

Heiningen, a parochial village, on which the Emperor Frederick III.

conferred the privileges of a town, but with little benefit to it.

Holzheim, Reichenbach, Schlath, Schlierbach, Uhingen or Uwingen, and Wangen.

Hohenstatt, a village, belonging partly to this amt or bailiwick, and lying beyond Wiesensteig on the Alb, the highest part of which is said to be hereabouts.

7. The town and district of Urach, containing

Urach, a little town, situate on the Alb, in a valley near the river Erms, in which is a ducal seat, and a special superintendency. In this place also was formerly an abbey and a chartreux. Considerable quantities of damask and other linens made here are exported by the Urach company. This town is the capital of the ancient earldom of the same name. One of the oldest counts of Urach whom we know with any degree of certainty is Gerbard, who died bishop of Spire in the year 1110. Count Henry of Furstenberg inherited the castle and earldom of Urach by his mother, and in 1254, exchanged one half of it, together with the castle, with the count of Wurtemberg for one half of Wittlingen. In the year 1260 Count Berthold of Urach (in whom and his brother Rudolph this samily became extinct) lest the other half of this earldom to this count Ulrich, in the possession of which he was confirmed by King Richard, and the remaining part was purchased by this Count, in the year 1265, of Count Henry

Henry of Furstenberg for three hundred and ten marks of filver. In 1473 all the counts of Wurtemberg, and in 1486 the two Counts Eberbard entered also into a convention here relative to the government of the country. In the year 1634 the Imperialists made themselves masters of this town. Near it on the other side lies the Erms.

Hohen-Urach, a strong castle standing on a mountain, and formerly pretty well fortified. In the year 1635 this castle was obliged to surrender to the Imperialists after a long siege.

In the neighbourhood of the town of Urach are some fine mills for lead, iron, and paper.

In the district of Urach are several curiofities. Near the town of Urach is a beautiful white earth, which is faid to furpass the terra sigillata of Malta. At St. John's, Guterflein, and Offenhausen, which were formerly convents, are fine studs of horses. In a high and steep mountain, not far from the town of Urach, is the famous Holzrutsche or wood-slide, which confifts of one thick iron pipe, about three feet broad, being on both fides upwards of two feet high and about nine hundred long. This pipe begins at the top of the mountain and reaches almost down the valley near the town of Urach and the river Erms. Into its upper opening is put the wood felled on the Alb and afterwards cut into billets, which being thus carried down the pipe with prodigious celerity, is thrown into the Erms, which forwards it into the Neckar near Tenzlingen, and after this runs beyoud Nurttingen and Esclingen to Berg near Stuttgardt, where it is at last stopped and piled up in the duke's wood-yards. In this manner every year, about Easter, are brought from the Alb to Stuttgardt upwards of good cords of wood, besides what serves for the duke's court. Its produce is applied to the payment of the ecclefiastical and civil officers. To the district belong thirty parishes, namely Bempflingen, Bernloch, Blietzhausen, Bohringen, Dettingen Under-Urach, which carries on a confiderable trade in dried fruit; Donnstetten, Ehningen near Reutlingen, Erpfingen, Feldstetten, Geckingen, Gomendingen, Gruorn, Hausen on the Lauchert, Hengen, Kohlstetten, Magerkongen, Laichingen, on which the Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1364, conferred the privileges of a town; Metzingen under Urach, Mittelstatt, Neuhausen under Urach, Ohnastetten, Seeburg, anciently a fortified place; Sondelfingen, Sontheim on the Alb, Steingebronn, Upfingen, Willmandingen, Wittlingen, which anciently enjoyed the privileges of a town, Wurtingen, and Zainingen.

8. The town and district of Munsingen. In it

Munsingen, a small town, in which a convention was made in the year 1482 betwixt the Counts Eberbard the elder and younger, relative to the right of primogenitureship and the indivisibility of the Wurtemberg lands. It is not known with any degree of certainty whether this town anciently belonged to the borough of Wittlingen or the earldom of Urach. In the year 1347 the family of Speten fold their estate to the counts of Wurtemberg.

The district of Munsingen includes ten parishes, namely, Auingen, Bottingen, Buttenhausen, a free lordship belonging to Gemmingen; Dapsen, under which among others is the chapel of Eglingen, as also the palace of Graveneck lying near it; Enabeuren partly subject to Furstenberg; Hunder-singen, Magolskein, in which is a Lutheran and Roman Catholic priest; Mehrstetten, Mundingen, Oeden-Waldstetten, and Marpach, noted for its stud of horses.

9. The town and district of Nurtingen, containing Nurtingen, anciently called also Nuwertingen, a little town situate on the Neckar, and the seat of a special-superintendency. This place is so ancient as the year 1080, at which time it belonged to the counts of Achalm. After that it sell to the counts of Urach, and the barons of Neuffen. As, according to the account given under Urach, after the death of count Berthold of Urach, a part of the earldom of that name was confirmed as a fief by the Emperor Richard to the Counts of Wurtemberg, a part of the town of Nurtingen was also made dependent on it. The duke of Teck and the convent of Salmar swell had also a part of it, the screme of whom in the year 1299, ceded his by treaty to Wurtemberg, and the latter also his in the year 1645. The hospital here sounded in 1480, is at present the richest soundation in the whole dutchy. In the years 1473 and 1750 this town suffered considerably by fire; and in 1634 was roughly handled by the Imperialists.

The district of Nurtingen consists of ten parishes, viz.

Grotzingen, a little town, which formerly had lords of its own to whom it gave name; and from these it devolved to the samily of Bernhausen. In the year 1333, this place was purchased by the counts of Hohenberg, and in 1337, descended in the same manner to the counts of Wurtemberg.

Ech or Aich, Neckarhausen, Neckar-Tailfingen, Neckar-Tenzlingen, Neu-kausen, Upper-Boyhingen, the last of which formerly gave name to a lord-ship, Upper-Ensingen, well known for its fine millstones, Under-Ensingen and Wolstschlugen.

10. The town and diffrict of Backnang. In it

Backnang, a town fituate in a delightful valley on the Murr, and containing a rich cathedral founded in the year 1116. In the year 1626 the Jesuits possessed themselves of this place, but in 1648 again evacuated it. In it also is a special superintendency; and the town together with the castle of Reichenberg, about the year 1297, descended from the Marggrave of Baaden to the counts of Wurtemberg, partly by inheritance and partly in lieu of payment, and partly also as a marriage-portion. In the years 1635 and 1693 it was wholly consumed by fire.

The district of Backnang contains the parishes of Upper-Bruden and Under-Weiszbach, together with the old castle of Reichenberg, in which resides a ranger of a forest and also the castle of Ebersperg.

Obf. The glass-houses at Spiegelberg, which export very curious works that way of all kinds are included in no particular district, but have a juridical officer of their own, who is also inspector of the glass-works. These alone constitute a parish.

11. The town and diffrict of Marpach. In it is Marpach, a small town situate in a pleasant valley on the river Neckar, which, a little below it, receives the Murr. This place is the seat of a special superintendency. How it came to the counts of Wurtemberg is not certainly known. But it was a part of their dominions so early as the begining of the 14th century. In 1546 it suffered greatly from the Spaniards: in 1642 it was twice plundered, in 1693 it was burnt by the French, and in 1745, greatly damaged by a storm, as was also the whole country round it. This district has excellent vineyards, meadows, and corn-land.

The district of Marpach comprehends fourteen parishes, namely, Affelterbach, and Binningen, a parochial village, near which in the year 1597 was discovered the walls of a Roman fortification on the spot where a town called Veneria, or Sicca Veneria is said to have stood; Burgstall, Erbstetten, Erdmanbausen, Hochdorf, belonging to the free barons of Genmingen; Kirchberg, Murr, Pleidelsheim, Poppenweiler, Kielingshausen, Kiethenau, in which is a bath; and Steinheim, a market-town containing a nunnery; which is also known by the name of Marienthal and Weyler zum stein. Some of these places, as Pleidelsheim for instance, belonged to the ancient Murachgau, or Murgau.

12. The town and district of Beilflein. In it

Beilstein, a small town, which formerly, and even so lately as the year 1230 had counts of its own, and who took their title from it. Afterwards it seems probably to have belonged to the counts of Reichenberg, next to the Marggraves of Baaden, from whom, together with the castle of Reichenberg and the town of Backnang, it is supposed to have descended to the counts of Wurtemberg, to whom in 1361 it was granted as a fief by the crown of Bohemia, together with Botwar, Neuenburg, and the castle of Lichtenberg. In the year 1453 it was given to the counts of Helfenstein, but resumed again in 1457. In 1643 it was plundered by the duke of Weymar's forces; and 1693 burnt by the French.

The district of Beilstein contains the following places, viz.

The parochial villages of Auenstein and Gronau.

Oberstenfeld, a market-town belonging to Wurtemberg. In this town is an independent canonry of Lutheran ladies under the direction of an abbess, and having a chaplain and bailest of its own.

The lordship of Stettenfels and Gruppenbach, in the 13th century belonged to the family of Sturmfeder. In the year 1504, Zasolphus of Adelsheim the possession of it, by virtue of an order of the Emperor Maximilian I. was deprived of it by Ulrich duke of Wurtemberg, who incorporated it with the dutchy, as a fief always to be held by the hereditary marshal, and accordingly in the year 1507 it was given as a male fief to Hans Conrad Thumb of Neuburg, whose wife Margaret was fister to the above-mentioned Zafolph, at that time deceased. In the year 1527, the above Conrad sold it to Woiff Philip of Hirnheim, who dying without iffue, Duke Christian was for refuming the fief. But the Emperor Charles V. conferred the lordthip on the house of Walther of Hirnheim, who in 1551 fold it to the family of Fugger, and they in 1556 received it as a fief from the counts of Wurtemberg. But the Fuggers accounting it an immediate lordship derived from Wurtemberg only as a male fief, but exempt from all fervices, and incorporated with the independent nobleffe about the Hocher, and in the years 1734 and 1735 founding a convent of Capuchins, as also a church at the castle of Stettenfels, this occasioned an expensive process before the Aulic Council with the house of Wurtemberg, insomuch that to bring it to a conclusion, the duke in 1747, purchased the dominium utile of the lordthip. It confifts of the castle of Stettenfels, and the little town of Gruppenbach, with a Lutheran parish-church, a hamlet, and some land.

Under-heinrieth, a parish-village.

13. The town and district of Neuffen. In it

Neuffen, a little town, but a special superintendency; and having formerly lords of its own, who were at first stiled nobles of Neuffen, and afterwards counts of Graispach and Marsletten. From these, partly by purchase and partly by inheritance, in the year 1284 it descended to Conrad of Weinsperg, who in 1301 sold it to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg.

Not far from the town on a high and steep hill stands a castle called Hohen-neuffen.

The diffrict of Neuffen contains eight parithes, namely, Beuren, Erkenbrechtsweiler, Frickenhausen, Grabensletten, Grafenberg, Great-Bettlingen, Kohlberg and Linfenhofen.

14. The castle of Asperg, or Hoben-Asperg, lies at a small distance from Ludwigshurg, betwixt Stuttgardt and Groningen, on a single mountain in the old Glemsgau, in the country around which, for some leagues, is nothing but corn-land to be seen. In former times its proper name was Richten-terg, and Asperg that of a little town seated on the mountain near it; but the latter was demolished in the 14th century, and included within the circuit of the castle, which then came to be called Asperg. Anciently too an earldom belonged to it, the owner of which was descended of the line Palatine of Tubingen. Count William of Tubingen possessed it in 1228, and his son Ulrich at first stilled himself count of Asperg, whose son of the same name in the year 1308 sold the county of Asperg to Count Eberkard of Wurtemberg. The castle in the 16th and 17th centuries was several times taken, and at present is reduced to a low condition. Near it is a market-town with with a parish-church in it founded about the year 1450, and which is also called the castle of Asperg, or Under-Asperg.

15. The town and diffrict of Calw. In it

Calw, a town fituate on the Nagold with a special superintendency in it and a cloth manufacture, and containing also a trading company. This place formerly belonged to the Wiringau, or Wirmgau. Afterwards it had particular counts of its own who occur in history so early as the beginning of the 11th century. In the second half of the 13th century part of this earldom devolved to the Palatine of Tubingen, and the other part to the counts of Schelklingen. In the year 1308 the Counts Conrad, Ulrich, and Henry of Schelklingen transferred their half of the county to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg; and in 1345 Count William of Tubingen sold his half of the county of Calw for 7000 lb. weight of hellers, or 5200 storins, to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg. The castle in which the ancient Counts of Calw are said to have resided, stood on a hill above the town; but in 1600 was razed; and the town itself in 1635 laid in ashes by the Imperialists, and in 1692 again by the French.

The district of Calw contains eight parishes, namely, Altburg, Braitenberg, Dachtel, Deckenpfrond, Mottingen, Neuweiler and Zwerenberg.

Zavelstein, a little town feated on a mountain. To it belongs a hamlet lying in a narrow valley beneath it.

Deynach, through which the rivulet of Deynach runs, and celebrated for its excellent and delightful springs.

16. The little town of Wildbald, which lies in a deep valley on the rivulet of Enz, and was purchased by the counts of Wurtemberg together with the town of Calw. This town is the seat of a special superintendency and samous also for the virtues of its warm baths. In the years 1457, 1525, 1645 and 1742, it was wholly burnt down, but is now rebuilt much hand-somer than ever, and in particular contains many elegant improvements in its baths.

17. The town and district of Neuenburg.

Neuenburg, a small town seated in a valley on the little river of Enz, seems formerly to have belonged to the county of Calw, having together with that county been sold to the house of Wurtemberg, who in 1361 were invested with it as a sief by the crown of Bohemia. In 1519 the Swabian consederacy having made themselves masters of this dutchy, the town and district of Neuenburg were mortgaged to Francis von Sickingen; but in 1534 Duke Ulrich again recovered all. The castle which stands on a hill near it, is at present the residence of a ranger of the forest. In some old pits in the neighbourhood of this town are sound great quantities of those excellent iron stones called glass-heads or blood-stones, and from their size and figure Bohn-Erze or bean-ore.

Vol. V. C c The

The district of Neuenberg contains the nine following parishes; viz. Birkenfeld, of which the Marggrave of Baaden had formerly a part; Calmbach, Dohel, Feld-Rennach, Gravenhausen, Grunwettersbach, Langenbrand, Ottenhausen and Palmbach, a place inhabited by Waldenses and consequently Protestants.

18. The town and district of Rosenfeld. In it

Rosenfeld, a small town, situate not far from the above county of Hobenberg and anciently belonging to the lordship of Urszlingen; but the castle of that name stood on an eminence at a small distance from the town. In the year 1317, Simon and Conrad, dukes of Teck, sold it to Eberhard, Count of Wurtemberg.

The district of Rosenseld contains in it eight parishes; namely, Aysleig, Bergfelden, Bickelsberg, Plotzlingen, Leidringen, Tabingen, Trichtingen, or Truchtingen and Vohringen.

19. The town and district of Brackenheim, in the Zabergau, situate on the little river Zaber. In it Brackenheim, a town, formerly the capital of the Zabergau, and belonging to the lordship of Magenheim. One half of this place was settled by Maria, daughter of Ulrich, lord of Magenheim and wife to Otho, count of Hole.berg, on her son Burkard, count of Hohenberg, who, in the year 1321, sold his part of the castle of Magenheim, as also of the town of Brackenheim and several other appurtenances, to Eberhard, count of Wurtemberg; and the other half of the lordship of Magenheim was bequeathed by Zaisolph of Magenheim to the samily of Wurtemberg. In this town is a special superintendency.

The district of Brakenheim contains fourteen parishes; namely, Botenheim, Durrenzimmern, Great-Gartach, Hausen, Haberschlacht, Ho-fen, Kleebronn.

Kirchheim on the Neckar, a market-town, formerly a free village and immediately subject to the Empire.

Little-Gartach, a small town, purchased, in the year 1335, of Albert Bruzzen by Eberhard and Ulrich, counts of Wurtemberg, and afterwards, from the year 1485 to 1571, continued as a mortgage to the Gemmingen family. Near it once stood the castle of Luneberg, or Leimberg.

Meimsheim, Niederhofen, Nordhausen, a parish of Protestant Waldenses; Northeim and Stetten am Heuchelberg.

20. The town and district of Dornstetten: Belonging to it

Dornstetten, a town, situate on the Black Forest not far from the little river Glatt, and in the country formerly called the Nagalgau or Nagoldgau, to which appertained also the small Gau Waldgau, which received its name from the river Waldach. The town once belonged to the Counts of Furstenberg, who mortgaged it, in lieu of a portion, to Anne Countess of Furstenberg and John of Gerolzeck her husband, who made an absolute sale of it to the counts of Hobenberg, and these in 1320 to Count Eberkard of Wurtemberg.

In the years 1415 and 1563 this place suffered greatly by fire, and in 1675 was wholly burnt down.

The district of Dornstetten contains a mountain which is said to abound in ores; as also the five parishes of Bayersbronn, Glatten, Grunthal, Pfalzgrafenweiler, and Tunlingen. In this district is likewise held, twice a year, a Waldgericht or forest-court of twelve judges who are chosen out of the villages of Dietersweiler, Benzingen, Upper- and Under-Aach, Wittlinsweiler, Grondel, Under-Muszbach and Halwangen, but the president thereof is the present of Dornstetten.

21. The town and district of Winnenden, situate betwixt the towns and districts of Backnang and Waiblingen, and containing Winnenden, a small town, fold in the year 325, by Conrad of Weinsperg to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg. In it anciently was a commandery of the Teutonic order, which, in the year 1665, they parted with to Duke Eberbard III. for 48,000 florins, who converted the mansion belonging to the commandery into a feat. In the year 1693, the town was laid in ashes by the French. In its neighbourhood once stood a castle which was called after its name.

The district of Winnenden contains in it the parishes of Bucch, Oppel-spokn and Schwaickheim.

22. The town and district of Guglingen. In it

Guglingen, a finall town, fituate on the river Zaber, and formerly belonging to the lords of Neuffen, from whom it descended to the counts of Eberslein; but the counts of Wurtemberg became proprietors of it in the fourteenth century, and at present it is the seat of a special superintendency of Lutherans.

Within the district of Guglingen are six parishes; namely, Frauenzimmern, Hasner-Haszlach, Kurnbach, (of which a half, or rather two thirds belong to the house of Hesse-Cassel) Ochsenbach, Pfassenhosen and Weiler. Near Kirpach, or Kirchbach, Duke Eberhard III. built him a seat with a hunting-park belonging to it, which he stocked with divers kinds of beasts.

23. The town and district of Groningen. In it

Marggroningen, a town fituate on the river Glems, and the feat of a special superintendency. In the year 1295, this place was sold by the counts Conrad and Eberbard to the Emperor Adolphus, on whose decease it escheated to the Empire, and thus continued an Imperial town till the year 1332, when the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria conferred it on Conrad of Schlusselberg; who, as chief standard-bearer, had a great share in the victory obtained over Frederick of Austria at the obstinate battle of Mubldorf, not far from Ochlingen. This nobleman, in the year 1336, sold it to Ulrich, count of Wurtemberg, for 6000 pounds weight of Hellers. The Emperor ratisfied the purchase, and invested Count Ulrich with the sief as an appenage to the Imperial standard.

The manor of Groningen contains fix parishes; viz.

Biszingen, Moglingen, Munchingen, Schwieberdingen, Thamm and Under-Riexingenæ. The last, which is a handsome market-town, a part belongs to the noble family of Leutrum. In the village of Osweil the duke of Wurtemberg enjoys the Wild-fang, or Jus capiendi homines vagabundos et errones et redigendi illos in servitutem.

24. The town and district of Vayhingen. In it

Vaylingen, a town fituate on the river Enz in the ancient Enzgau, and so named from it. This place contains a castle, seated on an eminence, which, in the year 1734, was fortisted with additional works in the modern taste, is the seat of a superintendency, and had formerly counts of its own. Of these Egeno, of whom mention is made in a record bearing date in the year 1139, is the first of whom there is any certain knowledge. Henry, son to Count Conrad and Matilda his sister, who was married to Frederick, count of Zollern, were the last of that family. The town came in a manner unknown into the hands of the counts of Octtingen, who, in the year 1339, sold it to Ulrich, count of Wurtemberg. In 1617, 1618 and 1693, it suffered very much by fire.

The district of Vayhingen contains in it the ten following parishes; viz.

Upper-Riexingen, a small town.

Aurich, Eberdingen, Ensingen, Enzweybingen, in which is a quarry of transparent alabaster, Hohen-Haszlach, Horrheim, Nusdorf, of which the family of Reischach possesses one part, Rieth, Wusten, or Klein, Glatbach and a part of Sersheim, the last of which belongs mostly to Sachsenheim. Rechentshofen, originally a numbery founded by the counts of Vayhingen, is, together with its lordship, devolved to the Wurtemberg family.

25. The town and district of Tubingen. Belonging to it

Tubingen, the fecond town of the dutchy, which lies in a rugged fituation, on the river Neckar, betwixt two hills which separate the Neckar and Ammer-Thal. Of these hills that towards the east is called Ofterberg and the other the Schloszberg from the Schlosse, or castle, of Hicken-Tubingen, which stands on it. Southward lies the Steinlacher Thal, through which runs the rivulet of Steinlach. Ever since the year 1514, the high-court of justice, wherein all processes were sinally determined, has been held here. Tubingen has also an university founded in the year 1477, by Count Eberbard the Elder, and from him called Alma Eberhardina. (The above-mentioned slipendium for divines is in a building here formerly an Augustine convent) The Martinian and Hachmannian stipendia, which are annexed to the university; a collegium illustre, all the scholars of which are Princes or counts, and is never opened but when youths of such families come to study there; a Latin school of sour classes and a special superintendency. In it is also a woollen manufacture. This town is of such antiquity that its æra is quite unknown. It is the origin of the Pfalzgraviate of Swabia, and, though the descent of the ancient Palatines of Tubingen be unknown, yet they had here their pfalz, or palatium, which stood on the spot of the present castle of Hoben-Tubingen Chuno. One of the eldest Pfalzgraves known at present lived in the year 1080; and the last of them, viz. George Eberhard, died in the year 1631. The two Pfalzgraves, Gotz and William, in the year 1342, sold this town to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg. In 1535, Duke Ulrich pulling down the old castle, caused that of Hoben-Tubingen, which is the present residence, to be erected with fortifications. In 1540 the town was damaged by fire. In the thirty years war it was frequently besieged and taken, and in 1688 was considerably hurt by the French.

Not far from the town, towards Belsen, lies a medicinal bath. Of the free burseh in the Steinlacker Thal, mention has been made before.

The district of Tubingen contains in it twenty-one parishes; viz. Bodelf-bausen, Breitenholz, Custerdingen, Degerschlacht, Denendingen, Duszlingen, Entringen, with the castle of Hohen-Entringen, Gonningen, Kilchberg, Kirchentellinsfurt, Mobringen auf den Herden, Mossingen, Nahren, Ocschingen, to which are annexed the mountain-castle and farm of Hohenfurst; Offerdingen, Pfassingen, the seat of a collection, Kommelspach, Schlaidorf, Thalbeim, Walddorf and Weilheim, lying on the river Neckar. The ancient convent of Einsidel, in Schonbuch, has been converted into a hunting-seat.

26. The town and district of Herrenberg. In it

Herrenberg, a town which is divided into the upper and lower, the former of which stands upon a mountain. This place contains a special superintendency, once belonged to the Psalzgraves of Tubingen, and in 1382 was sold to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg. In the year 1466, was for the most part burned down; in 1548, it was much distressed by the Spaniards; in 1634, entirely plundered by the Imperialists; in 1635, again consumed by fire; and, in the year 1688, greatly damaged by the French. Before the Reformation it contained a cathedral.

The district of Herrenberg consists of ten parishes; viz. Gartringen, Gulstein, Hildritzhausen, Kay, Kuppingen, Metzingen im Gau, Nufringen, Kemmingsheim, Thailfingen and Wolfenhausen.

27. The town and district of Boblingen. In it

Boblingen, a small town, situate in a very fruitful country and standing high in the forest of Sckonbuch, which abounds with game, and having a castle seated on an eminence and belonging to it, which lies above the town. In this place also is a special superintendency. It formerly belonged to the Psalzgrave of Tubingen, but a part was, in the year 1344, fold to Count Eberbard of Wurtemberg, who, in the year 1357, purchased the whole.

whole. In 1547 the Spaniards lived here at discretion, and, in 1638, the Imperialists also. The neighbourhood produces some wine.

The district of Boblingen enjoys a very fruitful soil and contains in it twelve parishes; namely, Aydingen, Dagersheim, Holzgerlingen, Magstatt, Mochingen, or Maichingen, Mauren, belonging to the free barons of Schertlin; Oslelsheim and Schonaich.

28. Sindelfingen, a little town, lying one short half German league from Boblingen, in a very fruitful country. This place anciently belonged to the counts of Calw, on the extinction of whom it descended to Count Rudolph of Tubingen. In the year 1263, from a village it was erected into a town, and the same privileges as had been granted to Tubingen were given it in 1274 by the Emperor Rudolph. A daughter of Gotz, Pfalzgrave of Tubingen, brought it as a portion to her husband Ulrich of Rechberg, whose son Ulrich the Younger, sold it, in the year 1351, to the count of Wurtemberg. The abbey here was secularised after the Reformation.

29. The town and diffrict of Heubach. In it

Heubach, a mean little town, lying not far from the source of the Rems, betwixt the Imperial cities of Gmund and Aalen. This place belonged to the Counts of Wurtemberg so long since as the year 1360. On a high mountain near it stands the castle of Kosenstein.

The district of Heubach contains in it the parishes of Lindach and Upper-Babingen. In some hamlets here the Imperial town of Gmund and other lordships have the joint jurisdiction, and in others the former only.

30. The town and district of Lauffen. Belonging to it is Laussen on the Neckar, a town situate in a very fruitful pleasant country, and containing also a special jurisdiction. It is a very ancient place and was formerly immediately subject to the Empire. In the thirteenth century it devolved to the Marggraves of Baaden, from whom it descended, in the year 1346, to Albert Hofwart the younger, and after his decease the greatest part of it was first purchased of his father and brother by Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg, who, in the year 1369, got the whole into his own hands. The bridge built over the Neckar is the widest and longest in the whole dutchy, and leads to the village of Laussen, which lying opposite to the town is reckoned a part thereof, being even handsomer than it; and containing the principal church, the clergy and most of the officers of the juridical courts reside here; but the seat of the justiciary is in the castle, which stands on a rock in the middle of the Neckar. Before the town lies a lake which is accounted the largest in the whole country.

The district of Lauffen consists of the parishes of Gemmerigheim and Ilsfelden.

31. The town and district of Botwar, containing Great-Botwar, a finall town, fituate on the little rivulet of Botwar. This place is very ancient, and formerly belonged to the barons of Lichten-berg, berg, who, in the fourteenth century, took upon them the name of Hummel; and their castle, viz. Liebtenberg, stands not far from the town. This castle, the town of Botwar, and other places and estates hereabouts, were purchased by Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg for 5600 pounds weight of hellers. In the year 1642, the town was ill treated by Duke Wcymar's forces, and in 1693 by the French. The country produces fine wine.

The district of Botwar contains in it the parishes of Little-Aspach, Little-Botwar and Schaubeck, a part of which belongs to the family of Gaisberg and Winzelhausen, a fief belonging to the barons of Schutz.

32. The town and district of Tuttlingen. In it

Tuttlingen, or Duttlingen, a town feated without the boundaries of the dutchy, near the estate of Furstenberg on the Danu'z. In this town is a special superintendency. In the year 1334, it was a village and belonged to the lordship of Wartenberg, but betwixt that year and 1372 was raised to a town, and in the last mentioned year was sold by Oswald of Wartenberg to Count Rudolph of Sulz. The exact time of its devolving to the counts of Wurtemberg is not known, though that seems to have been before the end of the source the century, for in 1413 it had belonged to them for some time.

Not far from it stands the castle of Liebten-Wartenberg. The castle of Honberg was entirely destroyed in the thirty years war. About a quarter of a German league from the town lies Ludwigsthal, noted for its iron manufactory erected by Duke Eberhard Lewis, in which iron is both cast and forged.

The district of Tuttlingen has been enlarged with the lordships of Lupsen, Karpsen and Falkenstein. A baron's family anciently took their title from the lordship of Lupsen, who, when the earldom of Stulingen sell to them, styled themselves also Counts of Lupsen and Stulingen; but, in the year 1582, this family became extinct. In the year 1437, Brun of Lupsen sold the mountain and castle of Lupsen, in Latin Lupsedunum, together with some villages and estates, to Henry and Rudolph of Fridingen; the latter of whom, in the year 1444, sold it a second time to Count Lewis of Wurtemberg, to whom he also transferred the lordship of Karpsen. The barons of Falkenstein, who are not to be consounded with those seated in Alsace, in the years 1444 and 1449, sold their lordship of Falkenstein to Count Lewis of Wurtemberg. The eight parishes of this district are Aldingen, situate on the Baar, Hausen ob Frona, Newbausen ob Eck, Oeffingen, Schwenningen, Thalheim, Troszingen and Thonningen. In an open country near the parochial village of Schwenningen rises the Neckar, where it is immediately encreased by so many springs that at a quarter of an hour's distance only it drives a mill.

33. The town and district of Dornhan. In it

Dornhan, or Dornheim, a small town situate in the Schwarzwald, which in 1251 was a village held as a sief of the barons of Wurtemberg by Volmar of Brandeck; but in 1271 Lewis duke of Teck raised it to a town. When it came under the dominion of Wurtemberg is not known, possibly at the same time as the town of Rosensch In the year 1718 it was set on sire by lightning, and wholly consumed, excepting a few houses. Near it stood the castles of Brandeck and Vogelsberg.

The district of Dornhan contains in it the parishes of Furnsaal and Under-Brandi the last of which is Roman Catholic.

34. The town and district of Nagold. In it

Nagold, a town fituate in the Schwarzwald on the river Nagold, and in the country formerly called the Nagoldgau. This place anciently belonged to the counts of Hohenberg, who are now extinct; and in 1363 was fold by Count Otto to Everbard Count of Wurtemberg. In the year 1736 a medicinal spring was discovered here.

The district of Nagold consists of four parishes, viz.

Haiterbach, a small town purchased at the same time with Nagold.

Bohndorf, Hochdorf, and Warth.

- 35. Ebingen, a small town, lying betwixt the upper Hohenberg, to which it anciently belonged, and the county of Zollern. In the year 1367 this place was fold to Eberhard Count of Wurtemberg. The little village of Bitz is annexed to it.
- 36. The town and district of Hornberg, a town situate in the Schwarz-wald on the river Gutach, and the seat of a special superintendency. This place formerly belonged in part to the family of the barons of Hornberg, and the dukes of Urszlingen, whose share escheated to George and Henry von Gerolzeck. The share of the former was sold to the counts of Wurtemberg in 1423, and that of the latter in 1443, 1447, and 1448.

The diffrict belonging to it confifts of Schiltach, a small town, which in the year 1590, was totally consumed by fire. Its parish-church comprehends under it three chapels of ease. The neighbouring mountain of Hobenberg yields a fine iron ore.

Of feats and hamlets here are as many as make four parishes, viz. Guttach, Kirnbach, Tennenbronn, and Weiler. In the year 1575, the copper and silver mine work here was discovered at Tennenbronn. In Offenbacher Thale is dug up a white clay which is used in the porcelain manufactory at Calw.

37. The town and district of Kirchheim. In it

Kirchheim under Teck, a town situate below the old castle of Teck, and the seat of a special superintendency. In the year 1690 this place was wholly destroyed by fire. Formerly it belonged to the dukes of Teck, jointly with the dukes of Austria, who in 1325 transferred their share to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg, on which Frederick duke of Teck mortgaged, and afterwards fold his share of the town together with the castle of Teck and the vassals to the Counts Eberhard and Ulrich of Wurtemberg.

and

Teck, a castle of very great antiquity in it, stood here on a mountain near Kirchbeim, which is higher than the adjacent A.ps; but in the year 1525 was demolished by the revolting peasants. From hence the ancient dukes of Teck derive their name, which is scarce to be met with in any authentic record precedent to the year 1180; and Aibert a son of Conrad's and grandson to Berthold duke of Zahringen is the first mentioned in a record of 1193 as duke of Teck; and in Lewis, patriarch of Aquileia, this ducal samily failed in 1439. In the Teckerberg is found the gagates, or a black amber, which, the fragrancy excepted, has all the qualities of the yellow.

The district of Kirchheim contains in it fourteen parishes, viz.

Owen, a small town, which belonged to the dukes of Teck, and was their residence and place of interrment.

Biszingen, Dettingen on the Schloszberg, Gutenberg, near which stood a castle where the archives of the dukes of Teck were kept; Nabern, Upper and Under-Lenningen, Ohmden, Koszwalden and Schopstoch, all which belonged to the dukes of Teck.

Weilheim, a small town, in the year 1317 surrounded with walls. This place formerly belonged to the county of Aichelberg, and not far from it stood the castle of the same name. A part of this county sell to the counts of Kirchberg, who in the year 1510 became extinct, and sold it in 1334 to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg. The other part was sold in 1339 to Count Ulrich of Aichelberg.

The parishes of Holzmaden, Jesingen, and Zell under dem Aichelberg, belonged likewise to the county of Aichelberg.

38. The town and district of Murbard. In it

Murhard, a small town situate on the river Murr in the ancient Murrgau; and samous only for its abbey. This abbey was formerly a convent of Benedictines, and is said to have been first founded in the year 816, but ever since the year 1572 has been under the direction of a Lutheran abbot. The prelate here is also minister of the place, with two deacons under him, one of which is minister of Furnspach, and the other has forty-three chapels under his care. The town itself is posterior to the convent; the latter was at first under the protection of the at present extinct family of Lowenstein, who had also the jurisdiction of the town. In the year 1365 the convent, by order of the Emperor, admitted the counts of Wurtemberg as their patrons and defenders; but not without opposition from the counts of Lowenstein. At last, namely, in the years 1393 and 1395 they ceded all their right in the town and convent of Murhard to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg and his heirs. The district of Murhard contains in it the parishes of Oberroth and Viebberg; but these are included in the dutchy of Limpburg.

39. The town and district of Bahlingen. In it Vol. V. D d Bahlingen, Bablingen, a town fituate in a fruitful foil on the little river of Eyach, betwixt the upper and lower county of Hobenberg and the county of Zollern, and the feat also of a special superintendency. This place formerly belonged to the lordship of Schalksburg, whose castle has long since lain in ruins, and was together with the town in the year 1403, sold by Count Frederick of Zollern to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg. In the years 1607 and 1724 this town was almost wholly destroyed by fire. Near it is a medicinal spring.

Not far from hence is the Hewberg, as it is called, which among the vulgar is, but with little reason, no less famous than the Brocken or Blocksberg, mentioned before. With respect to the freyen Bursch at Bahlingen, an agreement was made on that head in the year 1490 betwixt Wurtemberg and Hochberg.

The district of Bablingen consists of sourteen parishes, namely, Durwangen, Endigen, Engstlatt, Erzingen, Frommern, Heselwangen, Mosstetten, Onstrattingen, Ostdorff, Pfaffingen, Thaisfingen, Thieringen, Truchtelfingen, and Winterlingen.

40. The town and district of Bietigheim. In it

Bietigheim, a town fituate at the conflux of the Enz and Metterbach, from the former of which the Enzgau has its name. This place was originally a village, which the counts of Wurtemberg about the middle of the 14th century probably acquired from the counts of Wayhingen, and in 1364, with the Emperor's permission, raised to a town, but it was soon after wholly destroyed by fire, as the greater part of it was again in 1718. This place, however, now is a special superintendency.

The district of Bietigheim consists of the parishes of Great and Little-Ingerskeim and Lochgau.

41. The town and district of Wildberg, a town fituate on the river Nagold in the country formerly called the Nagoldgau, and which is the feat of a special superintendency. In the years 1363 and 1377 this place was sold by the counts of Hohenberg to Rupert Palsgrave of Tubingen, and in 1440, by the Pfalzgrave Otto to Counts Lewis and Ulrich of Wurtemberg. In the year 1464 it was wholly consumed by fire. Not far from hence stands Reuthin, formerly a very opulent convent, which is at present the residence of a justiciary.

The district of Wildberg consists of five parishes, namely, Bulach, or New-Bulach, a small town, near which were formerly some rich mines of copper and silver. This parish is hereditary in the Gruckler family.

Ebhausen, Gultlingen, Upper-Jettingen and Sutz.

42. The town and district of Blaubeuren, a town situate on the Alb, in the Pleonungethal, or Pleninchau, on the banks of the river Blau, which takes its rise near the foot of a hill in the Blautopse, as it is called. This town is a special superintendency. A convent was first erected here near the castle of Egelse, or Aigelse; but in the year 1085 was removed to this place. After the Reformation one of the lower conventual schools, was founded founded here, in which twenty alumni are instructed by two professors under the inspection of the Latheran abbot, but this was afterwards removed to the upper convent of Bebenbausen. The town, together with the administrations of the convent, was, in the year 1447 fold by Count Convad of Helfenstein to Lewis Count of Wurtemberg and Albert Duke of Austria, of whose house it was held as a fief by the Counts of Helfenstein, confirmed the purchase, and granted the town to Count Lewis as an hereditary fief. The long contests betwixt the houses of Wurtemberg and Austria concerning this fief were partly accommodated at the treaty of Westphalia, and fully terminated in the year 1692, this lordship continuing to the house of Wurtemberg.

Wurtemberg.] G E R M A N Y.

The forest-district here consists of five parishes, namely, Asch, Berghulen, Gerhausen, Suppingen, Pappenlau, and Marchbronn.

Obf. The conventual manor is described in the sequel.

43. The town and diffrict of Sulz. In it

Sulz, a town, fituate on the river Neckar, not far from Dornhan and Rosenfeld, in which are two profitable falt-springs. The falt-works here indeed have been much improved by some ingenious works, but are not yet sufficient to surnish the whole country. The town is a special superintendency. So early as the year 1284 this place belonged to the lords of Geroseck, who in 1423 granted to the counts of Wurtemberg the advowson thereof. In the year 1471, the Emperor Frederick having put the town under the bann, empowered Eberhard count of Wurtemberg to make himself master of it, which he did not fail to do. In 1581 and 1720 it sustained great damages by fire.

In the neighbourhood of this town is the castle of Albeck.

The district of Sulz contains in it the three parishes of Fluorn, which has some good iron-works in it; Mublen am back, and Zigmarswangen.

44. The town and district of Pfullingen. In it

Pfullingen, an open town fituate in a very pleasant and fruitful valley at the extremity of the Alb, which is particularly noted for its fine orchards. This place is the feat of a special superintendency, and formerly belonged to the noble family of Remp, who at first stiled themselves of Pfullingen, and are thought to have been dependants of the counts of Wurtemberg. In the year 1487, Gaspar Remp sold his share of Pfullingen, together with the castle thereof, to Eberhard the elder count of Wurtemberg. In this town was formerly a rich nunnery.

The district of Pfullingen belongs for the most part to the lords of Greif-fenslein, from whom the counts of Wurtemberg purchased it in the year 1355. In it not far from Pfullingen lies the Nebelloch, being a cave famous among other things for an infinite variety of figures in spar. Near Engstingen is a medicinal spring. The parishes of this district are Gengstingen, which is Roman Catholic; Holzelsingen, Honau, Little-Engstingen and Underkausen.

D d 2 Not

Not far also far from Pfullingen stood the castle of Achalm, which escheating to the Empire on the extinction of the counts of Achalm, and was by the Emperor Lewis, in the year 1330, conferred on Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg; yet did the lords of Rietheim keep possession of it till the year 1378, when they sold it to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg. In the conventual manor of Psullingen lies the parish of Genkingers.

45. The town and district of Weinsberg. In it

Weinsberg, a town fituate in the ancient country of the Sulmanagau, or Sulm-gau; a part confifts in a round hill, on which also stands a ruined castle: The other part lies in a valley. In it is also a special superintendency. This place is said to have been besieged in the year 1140 by the Emperor Conrad. In 1400 it belonged to the lords of Weinsberg, from whom it devolved to the Pfalzgraves of the Rhine. In 1504, Ulrich duke of Wurtemberg made himself master of it, and the conquest thereof was confirmed by the Emperor Maximilian I. Asterwards, in the peasants war, this place siding with the rebellious boors, it was entirely laid in ashes by the Swabian confederacy. In the year 1707 the greatest part of it was also destroyed by fire.

Weinsberger Thal is famous for its excellent wine. Near the town stood the nunnery of Licebtenstern; which in the year 1525 was demolished by the peasants. To the convent manor belong the parishes of Upper-Eiszisheim and Waldbach.

The district of Weinsberg, consists of eight parishes, viz. Bitzfeld, with the chapel of ease of Bretzfeld, Eberstadt, Elbosen, Horkbeim, Sulzbach, Sabwapach, Wildspach, Wusten-roth; to the last of which belongs, among others, the chapel of ease of Boringsweiler.

46. The town and district of Neustadt. In it

Neufladt, a town fituate in the ancient Kochergau on the river Kocher, which here receives the river Brettach. This town contains a palace and a special superintendency. In the year 1444 it belonged to the lords of Weinsberg; but in 1483 to the Elector Palatine; and in 1504, during the Palatinate war was conquered by the house of Wurtemberg. By a compact agreed upon among the brothers this place fell to the share of Duke Achilles; but on the sailure of the Neufladt branch devolved again to the reigning family.

The district of Neustadt contains a part of the ancient Kochergau and Brettachgau, and consists of the parishes of Brettach, Gochsen, Klever-Sulzbach, and Kocher-Steinsfeld.

47. The town and district of Meckmuhl. In it

Meckmubl, a town fituate in the ancient Jawtgau on the river Jaxt. This place was in being so early as the year 800. Afterwards it belonged to the lords of Hobenlobe, and in 1445 the Pfalzgrave Lewis is said to have purchased it of them. During the Palatinate war in the year 1504, Ulrich Duke of Wurtemberg took the town. In 1521 the Emperor Charles transferred ferred it as a mortgage to Conrad bishop of Wurzburg; but in 1542 the Wurtemberg family redeemed it. Meckmukl formerly contained a cathedral.

The district of Meckmubl comprehends under it the part belonging to the Wurtemberg family in the little hereditary town of Widdern, (of which also the Palatinate, Wurzberg and a noble family are proprietors) the parishes of Lampolzhausen, Rogheim and Siglingen.

48. The lordship of Heydenheim, which lies on the Aalbuch on the river Brenz in the Brenzthal or the ancient Brenzgau, was formerly a free lordthip, the proprietors of which took not their title from the town of Heydenbeim but from the castle of Hellenstein standing near it. The family of Hellenstein becoming extinct in the year 1307, this lordship fell to the then Emperor. This Emperor Albert mortgaged it to Albert of Rechberg, from whose sons Conrad and Albert the Emperor Lewis VI. redeeming it, mortgaged it again to Count Ulrich of Helfenstein, to whom the Emperor Charles IV. granted it in the year 1351 for ever. In 1448 the counts of Helfenstein fold the lordship to Count Uirich of Wurtemberg, and he again to Duke Lewis of Bavaria: and Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg having fided with Duke Albert of Bavaria against Phillip the elector palatine, in the year 1504 had the lordship of Heydenheim given him in return for the expense he had been at. The Emperor Charles V. in 1521, mortgaged it to the town of Ulm, which ceded it again, in 1536, to Duke Ulrich. Duke Frederick of Wurtemberg first united it with his own title; and in 1708, the arms of Heydenbeim, with a Saracen's head, were also added to that of Wurtemberg. The most remarkable places in it are Heydenkeim, a small town, situate on the Brenz, and which the Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1356, permitted Count Ulrich to wall in. This place is the seat of a special superintendency, and contains in it a manufacture of fine earthern ware. Not far from hence lies Hellenstein, a ducal palace completely finished by Duk: Frederick. This palace consists of twelve parishes; namely, Boblbeim, or Boblen, Dettingen and Heucklingen, Fleinbeim and Zoschingen, Gerstetten, Hausen am Lonthal, Heldensingen, Hermaringen, Hoben-Memmingen, Morgeistetten, Nattheim and Oggenbausen, Schnaitheim, and Sontheim. The convents of Ankausen, Herbrechtingen, and Konigsbronn will occur in the fequel.

49. Hoben-Twiel, anciently Duellium, a fortification standing on a very high rock, in the Hegau, and entirely surrounded by the Austrian county of Hellenberg. The dukes of Swabia anciently held it of the Emperor, and after the lords of Clingenberg, who in the year 1515 transferred their jus aperturæ in it to Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg, and in 1538 made an absolute sale thereof to him. This castle was frequently besieged in the seventeenth century but never taken. The French garrison which lay here during the thirty years war evacuated the place by virtue of the peace of Westphalia. On the rock on which stands the sorters is a vineyard of forty acres.

50. The lordship or district of Steuszlingen lies betwixt the lordship of Justingen and the territory of the abbey of Zwifalten, and formerly belonged to an ancient noble family, which takes it name from thence, and in 1270 the lordship was given as a fief to the counts of Wurtemberg. From them it devolved to the counts of Freyberg, the male heirs of which failing in the year 1581, it escheated to the ducal house of Wurtemberg, as lord of the fief, which, in 1618, he entirely united to the dutchy.

The district belonging to it consists of the parochial hamlets of Old-Steufzlingen and Little-Almendingen, both which are Roman catholic. Sondernach is a dependency of Mehrstetten in the district of Munsingen.

51. The town and district of Besigheim. In it

Besigheim, a town, situate near the constax of the Enz and Neckar, and which belonged, for a considerable time, to the Marggravate of Baaden, but in the year 1463 was mortgaged to the Elector-palatine. In 1504 it was taken by Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg who was confirmed in the possession thereof by the Emperor; but in 1529 it was redeemed by the Marggrave Philip of Baaden, and in 1594, sold to Duke Frederick of Wurtemberg. This is a good wine country.

The district of Befigheim consists of the parishes and market-towns of Walkeim and Heszigheim.

52. The district of Mundelsheim, which, together with Besigheim, was purchased by the Marggraves of Baaden, is under the direction of the justiciary and Keller (an inferior officer) at Besigheim, and consists solely of the market-town of Mundelsheim, which produces excellent wine.

53. The town and district of Freudenstadt: In it

Freudensladt, a town and fort, situate on a rock in the Schwarzwald one league's distance from the Kniebisz. In the year 1599 Duke Frederick settled some protestants here who came out of Austria, Carniola, Stiria and Moravia. In the year 1632 it suffered greatly by fire, and in 1634, being laid waste with fire and sword, was entirely forsaken. On the peace that ensued it was again rebuilt, and in 1667 provided with a regular octangular fortification and citadel.

The district of Freudenstadt consists of the estate and village of Rod, which was purchased in the year 1601, as also of the lordship of Neuneck purchased in 1614. The Kniebisz is a pass over the Black forest, and also a custom-house and an inn, near which formerly stood a convent. The Christophsthal lying betwixt Freudenstadt and Kniebisz contains a minework of copper and silver. Near Freudenstadt is dug a hard reddish brown marble, which is variegated with white, yellow and dark brown veins.

54. The town and district of Altensteig: In it

Altenfteig, a town, fituate on the Schwarzwalde in the ancient Nagoldgau, which belonged formerly to the counts of Hohenberg, who fold it to the Marggrave of Baaden in the year 1400, but in 1603 it was made over in exchange to the ducal house of Wurtemberg.

The district of Altensteig contains in it eight parochial-villages, viz. Altensteig, Gottelsingen, Grombach, Kothselden, Simmersselden, Spielberg, Under-Jettingen, and Waltdorf, in the last of which is a receiver's office.

55. The town and diffrict of Liebenzell, containing Zell or Liebenzell, a small town, situate in a narrow valley on the Nagold in the ancient Wiringau or Wurmgau. On the Nagold without this town are two warm baths called the upper and lower. In the year 1603 this place was exchanged with the Marggrave of Baaden.

The district of Liebenzell includes the parishes of Reichenbach and Schemberg.

56. The town and diffrict of Sachsenbeim, containing Great Sachsenheim, a small town, situate betwixt the districts of Vayhingen and Bietigheim, which belonged to the family of Sachsenheim, who were vasfals to the counts of Vayhingen, but was ceded to the counts of Wurtemberg, who, in the years 1471 and 1481, purchased part of it, and in 1562, Eernhard of Sachsenheim, the last of his family, dying without male-heirs, the who'e fiefs of Sachsenheim escheated to the ducal house of Wurtemberg. In the year 1581, this little town and district were united with the Wurtemberg territories.

The district confists of three parishes; viz. Little-Sachsenheim, Middle-Zimmern and the greatest part of Sersheim.

57. Kopfigheim, a parochial-village, fituate not far from Great-Bottwar, close by the river Neckar. This place contains a justiciary of its own and produces excellent wine. It formerly depended as a fief on the earldom of Vayhingen, and descended from the family of Ebersperg to that of Spet, who on that account took their title from Kopfigheim. Lewis Spet dying in the year 1550 without male heirs, Duke Christopher of Wurtemberg shewed an inclination for seizing the fief; but by agreement it went to his relation Hans Lewis Spet, whose son fold the whole village, together with the castle, in the year 1587, to Duke Lewis for 53,000 florins.

58. The town and district of Ludwigsburg, centaining

Ludwigsburg, the fecond ducal feat and third principal town, which lies not far from the fort of Asperg, betwixt Stuttgardt and Bietigheim. Towards the beginning of the present century, in this place were no more than two farms, named Erlach and Fuchshof, which belonged to the convent of Bebenhausen. In 1704, Duke Eberhard Lewis built him a hunting-seat here and called it Ludwigshurg. To this he afterwards added a stately building, which was compleated in the year 1733. In it are two chapels, one consecrated, in 1721, for Roman Catholics, the other, built in 1748, for Lutherans. The picture-gallery here is very fine. In the pleasant garden too, which stands opposite to the old castle, is a building called Favorita. Near the castle houses have been gradually built, so as at length to form a handsome town, which lies higher than the castle and is the seat of a special superintendency. In the manufactory here is made a good cloth, as also damask linen and marbled paper. In the years 1727 and 1730, the principal ducal colleges were removed hither from Stuttgardt, but in 1733, on the decease of Duke Eberhard Lewis remanded them back again to that place. Ludwigshurg is the usual summer residence of the ducal court.

The district of Ludwigsburg consists of nine parishes in the following places; viz.

Aldingen, a market-town, which devolved as a vacant fief to the ducal house in the year 1747.

Geyszingen and Heutingskeim, two little market-towns.

Hoheneck, a village, having the privilege of a particular representative at the provincial Diet. Its wine excellent.

Egloskeim, Kornwestheim, Neckar-Beyhingen, which is a noble place;

Neckar-Weybingen, Ofweyl and Pflugelfden.

II. The ducal lands under the management of the chamber of finances, which are the proper estates of the reigning duke, and must not be confounded with the demesnes. These are as follows; viz.

Gomaringen, a parish, not far from the boundaries of the territory belonging to the town of Reutlingen.

Marschalken-Zimmern, a parochial-village and castle, situate not far from Dornhan, and sormerly a fiel of the lords of Lupsen.

Winnenthal, a castle lying not far from Weinsberg.

Stetten in Kamsthal, within the circle of the district of Schorndorf, a parochial village and castle formerly belonging to the samily of Yberg, who sold it, in the year 1443, to Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg. In 1508, this village was bequeathed to the samily of Thumbs of Neuburg, who ceded it in 1645; but, in the year 1664, one half of it devolved to the duke of Wurtemberg, and the other in 1666, Duke Eberhard Lewis made a present of to his consort. This place produces excellent wine, the best kind of which is from its colour called Brodwasser, or water which has had a toast in it.

Hohen Karpfen, an old castle with a large estate belonging to it within the district of Tuttlingen, and, in the year 1444, purchased by the counts of Wurtemberg.

Gochsheim, anciently Goszpolzheim, Goszbisheim, or Goszbotzheim, a small town, situate on the river Craich, with a ducal palace in it. Formerly this place belonged to the counts of Eberstein, who held it originally as a sief of the Elector-palatine, but afterwards Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg having, in the war with the Palatinate, in the year 1504, made himself master thereof, held it in the same manner of the ducal house of Wurtemberg. The male issue of that house failing in the year 1660, the lord-paramount granted the little town and other siefs to Maria Eleonora, widow of the last Count Casimir, who was also born counters of Saarbrucken, and to her daughter daughter Albertina Sophia Esther, the latter of whom married to Duke Frederick Augustus of Wurtemberg-Neustadt; on whose decease, which sollowed in the year 1729, the sief fell to the reigning house, and in 1736 was also reckoned among the demesses. The little town and castle here were laid in ashes by the French in the year 1689, and in 1738 the former was again consumed by fire.

Freudenthal, a manor, formerly belonging to the district of Besigheim of which Doke Ulrich, in the year 1504, during the war with the Palatinate, made himself master. Afterwards it passed through several hands, and devolving at length to the countess of Wurden, came by agreement to the ducal house in the year 1732.

Wendlingen, a mean little town and feat standing on the little river of Lauter, which below it falls into the Neckar. The family of Werdnau fold it in the year 1545 to Duke Uhrich for 29,000 florins.

Kongen, an opulent parochial village, feated on the other fide of the river Neckar, over which in this neighbourhood lies a stone bridge. This place anciently belonged to the counts of Hobenberg, and in 1336 was purchased by the counts of Aichelberg, from whom it descended by inheritance to the Thumbs of Neuburg; and in 1666 one half of it was purchased by the ducal house of Wurtemberg, and in 1739 also the other.

Neidlingen, a parochial-village, containing a feat lying beyond Kirchheim and Weilheim, and formerly united to the earldom of Aichelberg. That part of it possessed by the samily of Freyberg devolved to the ducal house of Wurtemberg in the year 1596. It was afterwards parcelled into several fiels, and at length, on the decease of its owner Conrad Widerholds, was taken as a fiel and reckoned among the lands under the chamber of finances. To it belong the courts of Kandeck and Ochswangen.

Brenz, a market-town, fituate on the river Brenz, not far from the boundaries of the Palatinate of Neuburg and once a Roman station. Since that it has belonged to the Gussens of Gussenserg, whose debts obliging them to part with it, Duke Frederick of Wurtemberg, as principal creditor, with the consent of the others, assumed it to himself, and in 1613, paid off the debts to the sull value thereof. Duke John Frederick conferred this place, together with Weiltingen and a pension of 15,000 florins, on his brother Julius Frederick; but the Weiltingen line failing in the year 1705, and Brenz escheating by compact to the reigning family, Duke Eberbard Lewis annexed it to the demesnes.

Weiltingen, a market-town, with a feat in it, on the Wernitz, not far from Dinkelsbuhl, and originally belonging to the counts of Octingen, who, in the year 1360, fold it to one of the name of Seckendorf; and his descendants, in 1542, again disposed of it to the lords of Knoringen. Wolf William of Knoringen transferred it as a fief to Duke Frederick of Wurtemberg, who had advanced him money, and on the sudden decease of his Vol. V.

debtor, in the year 1616, assumed it to himself; on which, together with Brenz, it became an appennage of Wanfred duke of Wurtemberg, whose male line failing in 1705, both places again escheated to the reigning house.

Liebenstein, a castle situate betwixt Laussen and Great-Bottwar, and, together with the villages of Kaltenwesten and Ottmarskeim, sold and exchanged, in the years 1073 and 1678, by the Liebenstein family to the ducal house.

Stambein, a parochial-village, situate betwixt Stuttgardt and Asperg, being an ancient sief belonging to Wurtemberg, which, together with Zazen-bausen, was purchased in the year 1737 from the Schertels of Burtenbach by the house of Wurtemberg.

The lordship of Sterneck, situate betwixt the manors of Dornsletten and Dornslan, belonged, as a sief of Wurtemberg, first to the samily of Brandeck, afterwards to that of Ow, and lastly to the counts of Athembs, who, in the year 1749, ceded it to the ducal house in exchange for the village of Hirrlingen in the county of Hobenberg. The castle of Sterneck lies on the river Haimback. To it also belong the villages and hamlets of Welden, Braitenan, Busenweiler, Geratweiler and Trollenberg. Furnsaal has been already mentioned above in the district of Dornsan.

Ochsenberg, a small town, containing a seat, and which, together with the two parishes of Leonbronn and Sternenfels, Zaberfeld and Mickelbach, lie about the little river Zaber in the district of Brackenheim, and were pur-chaied of the family of Sternfels for three millions of florins.

Obf. The lordships of Welzkeim and Justingen are also lands subject to the chamber of finances, but the former of these belongs to the Circle of Francinia, and the latter has both a seat and vote in the circle of Swabia.

- III. The convents and manors belonging thereto, which before the Reformation were under the direction of the prelates of those convents.
- 1. The convent of Maulbronn lies near the fource of the Salzbacks, which formerly gave name to the country of Salzgau. This convent was founded, in the year 1137, at Ekweiler; but, in 1148, removed to the prefent place. The Electors-palatine have always been its patrons and defenders; but, in the year 1504, during the palatinate war, Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg made himself master thereof, and also of the villages in its jurisdiction. In the year 1557, the first Lutheran abbot was appointed over it. At present it is the seat of one of the two upper conventual schools, in which twenty alumni, sent from the convent of Denkendorf, are further improved by two professors under the inspection of the abbot, who is always general-superintendant, with eleven special ones under him. In the year 1564, a theological conference was set on foot here betwixt the divines of the Palatinate and Wurtemberg.

The conventual district is of great extent, as containing in it twenty-four Lutheran and four Protestant parishes. The former of these are

r. The

1. The parishes of Durmenz, or Durmunz, and Mublacker, whose ministers are also special superintendants of the diocese of Upper-Maulbronz.

2. Flacht, Great-Glathach, Illingen, Iptingen, Lommersheim, Oeschelbronn and Koszwaag, famous for its wine; Weissach, Wiernskeim, Wimbskeim and Wurmberg, are parishes of the upper diocese of Maulbronn.

3. Knitlingen, a finall town in which the special superintendant of the lower diocese of Maulbronn resides. This place belonged formerly to the samily of Bretheim; but, in the year 1504, was, together with the convent of Maulbronn, seized by Duke Ulrich. In 1632, being surprized by the Imperialists, it was plundered with the slaughter of above 4000 persons. In the year 1692, it was laid in ashes by the French, and, in 1734, pillaged.

4. Dieffenbach, Freudenstein, Gundelbach, Kieselbronn, Lienzingen, Oelbronn, Oetisheim, Ruith, Schutzingen, Under-Oewisheim, in which is produced a rich red wine, and Zasersweyher, are parishes belonging to the lower diocese of Maulbronn. The seat of Elsingen, not sar from Ruith, is also noted for the excellency of its wine.

5. The four Protestant parishes are, 1. Durmenz, Schonenberg and Corres; 2. Great and Little-Villars; 3. Pinache and Serres; 4. Lucern and Barenthal.

2. The conventual manor of Blaubeuren. Of the convent an account is to be found above under the article of the town of Blaubeuren. The conventual manor here includes fix parishes; which are Lautern, Machtolskeim, Rothenacker, Seiszbeim, or Seissen, and Weiler. Betwixt Seiszbeim and Southeim is a spacious and very humid cavern, with a variety of figures in it in dropstone.

3. The convent of Anhausen lies on the Brenz and has always been annexed to the lordship of Heydenheim. It was founded in the year 1125 at Langen-naw, near Ulm, but afterwards removed to the present place. Ever since the year 1558, it has had a Lutheran abbot. Within the conventual manor are four parishes; viz. Dettingen and Heuchlingen, though the latter lies partly in the manor of Heydenheim, Gussenstadt and Mocklingen, in which some lordships lying without the dutchy have a share.

4. The convent of Herbrechtingen, also called Herwartingen and Herbertingen, lies near the Brenz and was founded in the twelfth century. The village of this name belonged to the Swabian dukes of Hobenstauffen. The Emperor Frederick I. having thoroughly repaired the convent, settled a body of Augustine Monks in it. Since the extinction of the dukes of Swabia, it has always been looked upon as an appennage to the lordship of Hevdenkeim, and ever since the year 1555, its abbots have been Lutherans. The conventual manor here consists of the parishes of Hurben and Eselsburg.

5. The convent of Konigsbronn was founded, in the year 1302, by King Albert at the village of Springe, which now is no longer known by that name. In the year 1448, the counts of Helfenslein fold this convent, which was of the Cistercian order, to Ulrich, count of Wurtemburg, as a dependency of the lordship of Heydenheim, together with which it was again ceded to Duke Ulrich in 1504. In the year 1521 it was mortgaged by the Emperor Charles V. to the city of Ulm, and in 1536 redeemed. James Schropp was the first Lutheran abbot of it, who lived in the year 1557. Near this convent are very considerable iron-works. The conventual manor contains the parishes of Degenfeld, Upper-Kochen, Schnstatten, Steinheim and Albuch, and Zang.

- 6. The convent of Adelberg, lying betwixt Schorndorf and Goppingen, in a woody country, was founded in 1178, and at first called Madelberg. It consisted of a monastery of both sexes, but the nuns were afterwards removed to Laussen. It appears, that the counts of Wurtemberg, on the extinction of the dukes of Swabia became possessed of this convent, together with the castle and lordship of Walthausen. In 1525, it was entirely demolished by the rebellious peasants. In 1565 it obtained its first Lutheran abbot, who is also a general-superintendant, with ten special ones under him. The conventual district here contains six parishes, namely, Adelberg and Hundskolz, Kirchen-Kirnberg, Lothenberg, Upper-Walden, Steinenberg, Zeil and Altback.
- 7. The convent of Denkendorf stands on a small eminence on the little river of Kersch, which in the territory of the Imperial city of Esslingen runs into the Neckar. This convent was sounded about the year 1120 or 1124, and probably by Count Berthold of Würtemberg. Ever since the year 1560 the abbot hereof has been Lutheran, and is also a general superintendant with eight special superintendants as suffragans. Since the year 1713 the lower conventual academy, formerly at Hirsau, has been settled here; in which twenty alumni, after a course of instruction under two professors, are removed to the upper convent of Maulbronn. On the other side of the little river of Kersch lies a village of the same name.
- 8. The convent of Bebenhausen lies in the district called Schonbuck, about one hour's distance from Tubingen, and was founded by Rudolph I. Pfalzgrave of Tubingen. Ever since the year 1560 the abbots here have been Lutherans, and at the same time general-superintendants, with nine special ones under them. Here is also one of the two higher conventual academies of the country with twenty alumni sent hither from the lower convent of Blaubeuren, who are sitted under two professors for the Tubingen seminary. The conventual manor here contains the nine following parishes, viz.

1. Lustnau, in which is a special superintendency.

2. Altdorf, Hagenloch, Jesingen, Immenhausen, Ofterdingen, Poltringen and Keusten, as also Under-Oeschelbronn, a hamlet in Schonbuch.

9. The convent of Hirfau lies on the Nagold, being the most ancient in all this dutchy having been founded in the year 830 by a count of Calw. The first Lutheran abbot hereof, by name Henry Weickersreuter was in 1558 appointed co-adjutor to the last Catholic abbot. In the year 1692,

the

the convent having been laid in othes by the French, its academy was removed to Denkendorf. The conventual manor here includes the parishes of Friossheim, Schafbausen, and Stanbeim.

The priory of Reichenbach on the Murr, which has been incorporated with this convent, contains a purveyor who receives and accounts for the revenues thereof. To this priory belongs the parish of Schwartzenberg.

10. The convent of S. Gorgen, or Jorgen, lies in the Schwarzwalde on the river Brigach in a country which has for some ages past been here called the Baar. It was sounded about the year 1080. In 1567 it first received a Lutheran abbot. In 1634 it was ruined for the last time, having never since been rebuilt. Near it is a village in which the duke of Wurtemberg's steward lives, and to the conventual manor belongs the parish of Munch-weiler.

Obs. About half a mile west of this convent lies one of the sources of the Danube, called the Briege or Brigach.

- 11. The convent of Lorch, or Lieben Frauen Berg, stands on a mountain in the Rems beyond Schorndorf towards Gmund, and takes its name from the village of Lorch, in Latin Laureacum, which lies below it, and formerly belonged to the lords of Hobenstaussen. Frederick duke of Swabia and his spouse Agnes joined in the soundation of it, and together with several other members of the Hobenstaussen samily have their tombs here. On its dissolution the advocatia, or patronage, with the jurisdiction thereof escheated to the house of Wurtemberg. The first Lutheran about here was settled in 1563. In this conventual district are the parishes of Alfdorf, belonging to the barons Von Holz, Frickenhosen and Tateroth.
- 12. The convent of Alpirspach lies in the Black-forest, on the river Kinzig, being in 1095, and since successively under the administration of the dukes of Teck and the dukes of Urszlingen, and lastly under that of the counts of Wurtemberg. In 1563 it obtained its first Lutheran about. In the conventual district here are eleven parishes, namely Gaiszlingen, which is Catholic; Hopfau, Lombach, Nordweil in the Breisgau, which is also Catholic; Upper-Yslingen, Peterszell, Keinhardsau, Rothenberg, Schomberg, Wittendorf and Wittershausen. At Alpirspach is also a mill, where cobalt is prepared into smalt; and at Konigstern in the Reinerzau is a silver mine-work.
- 13. The convent of Herrenalb lies on the river Alb, not far from the borders of the marggravate of Baaden. This convent was founded in the year 1148 by Count Berthold of Eberflein. In 1338 Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg became administrator of it. In 1555 the first Lutheran abbot was appointed over it. To this convent belong
- 1. The conventual district here, together with the parish of Loffenau, which lies in it.
 - 2. The district of Derdingen, on the borders of the Palatinate, containing.

ing the parishes of Freudenstein, Nusbohm, and Upper-Acker. Bahnbrucken is a chapel of ease to the parish of Gochsheim.

3. The district of Merklingen, once belonging to the dukes of Deuxponts. Merklingen is a market-town. The other parishes belonging to this manor are Gechingen, Hansen nader Wurm, Hengslett, and Simmetsheim.

- IV. Places out of the dutchy, in which the house of Wurtemberg enjoys certain privileges or incomes, or which are fiefs of that dutchy.
- 1. The county of Lowenstein, situate betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the county of Hobenlobe, and best exhibited in professor Hase's map of the Circle of Swabia. The ancient counts of Lowenstein were descended from the counts of Calw. The last of this line was Count Lewis, who fold the county for 14000 florins to the Elector-palatine Frederick the Victorious, whose fon Lewis, by Clara of Tettingen, on the decease of his father, instead of the lordships bequeathed to him obtained from the Elector Philip the county of Lowenstein. The Emperor Maximilian I. in the year 1494, promoted this Lewis to the rank of an Imperial count; and he is the founder of the present Princes and Counts of Lowenstein-wertheim. In his time duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg, during the Palatinate war, made himself also master of this county of Lowenstein: And though in 1510 it was returned on the mediation of feveral Electors and Princes, yet was it on condition that he should hold it as a dependent fief.

The arms of the county are a lion gules. It is divided betwixt the Princes and Counts of the house of Lowenstein-wertheim.

I. To the line of the counts belong

I. The little town and manor of Lowenstein.

2. The manor of Sulzbach.

3. The Prince's line possesses

I. The manor of Abstadt or Wildeck, in which is the castle of Wildeck and the market-town of Abstadt.

2. In the Imperial cities of Esclingen, Giengen, Heilbronn, Pfullendorf, Kentlingen, Kothweil, Spire and Weail; Hingerlock, belonging to Hohenzollern; in Langenau, belonging to Ulm; and in Westbeim a dependency of Hall; as also in Rosengarten and the Wurtemberg convents of Denkendorf, Blaubeuren, Herbrechtingen, Alpirspach, S. Georgen, Lichtenstern, Konigsbronn, Maulbronn, Hirfau, Bebenhausen, Anhausen, and Murhard they have their stewards. In the Imperial town of Schwabisch Gmund is a Wurtemberg escorttrooper; and in Stotzingen, a place in the barony of Rackenitz, a bailiff.

3. Lastly, to this place belong the parishes of Bibersfeld, Durnau, Golzbausen, Great-Aspach, Hochdorf, Bey Enzweybingen; Muhlhausen on the Enz, which is famous for a red wine; Oppenweiler, Pflumern, and Weiler in the Weinbergers thal.

Of the MARGGRAVATE of BAADEN in general.

§. I. O F the marggravates of Baaden and Hochberg a very accurate map has been jointly drawn by John Morell and Daniel Beuch, and published by Blaeuw, Jansson, Waesberge, Schenk and Valk; which map

John Ulrich Moller reduced to a smaller scale.

- §. 2. The marggravate of Baaden lies on the eastern side of the Rhine; and is properly that tract of land betwixt the Pfinz and Schwarzbach, and watered by the little rivers of Alb, Pfedderbach, Murg, Saubach and Sulzbach, all of which empty themselves into the Rhine. The northern part of this country, which lies betwixt the rivers Pfinz and Alb is called the lower marggravate, or from the capital Durlach the marggravate of Baaden-Durlach, but all the rest the upper marggravate; or from Baaden the capital the marquisate of Baaden-Baaden; but to these marggraves belong also other lands, which shall be mentioned in the sequel. The whole marggravate is a good country, abounding with corn, hemp, slax, bees-wax, and wood.
- §. 3. The Marggraves of Baaden are descended from Herman II. son to Duke Berthold I. of Zahringen, on whom was conferred the country of Hochberg. His son Herman I. being said to have taken upon him the original title and arms of a Marggrave of Baaden, that marggravate being the portion of his spouse Judith, it is a common but mistaken notion that the title of Hockberg was prior to that of Baaden. The Marggrave Herman III. who died in the year 1190; lest behind him Herman IV. and Henry. Of these the latter sounded the Hockberg line, which in the 14th century was divided into those of Hockberg and Sausen; but the Baaden line commenced in the former. In the year 1503, the Marggrave Christopher of Baaden reunited the two lines: But in his sons Bernard and Ernest commenced two other, which still continue, viz. that of Baaden-Baaden and that of Baaden-Durlach. The right of primogenitareship has long since been introduced in both, and religiously observed.
- §. 4. The title of each of these lines is, Marggrave of Baaden and Hochberg, Landgrave of Sausenberg, Count Sponbeim and Eberstein, lord of Roteln, Baaden Weiler, Lahr and Mahlberg; but the house of Baaden-Baaden adds to it the districts of Ortenau and Kehl. The arms for the margravate of Baaden are party per bend ruby in a field topaz; for Sansenberg, a lion rampant ruby, crowned topaz in a field pearl; for Sponbeim, chequise ruby and pearl, saphire and topaz; for Eberstein, a boar (Eber) diamond or, a mount emerald in a field or, and a rose ruby with seeds saphire in a field pearl; for the landgravate of Brilgau, a crowned lion ruby in a field pearl; for Roteln, a lion passant ruby in a field ruby, and two sesses waved pearl in a field azure; for Baaden-Weiler, ruby, party per pale, topaz, with three chevrons diamond; for Labr, pearl per fesse ruby; for Mablberg, a crowned lion diamond in a field topaz.

§. 5. A compact relative to their precedence at the Diet was entered into in the year 1576, betwixt these marggraves and the dukes of Wurtemberg and Pomerania, and the landgraves of Hesse. These have three votes in the college of Princes. In the year 1397, they obtained from the Emperor Wincesseus, that their servants, subjects and vassals should not be liable, for civil causes, to be sued in any court except the Aulic; and this privilege was, in the year 1442, confirmed by the Emperor Frederick III.

Of the Marggraves of Baaden-Baaden, and their Territories.

- §.6. The upper marggravate of Baaden terminates westward, on the Rhine, and a small part of it lies on the west side of that river. North-west it is bounded by the lower marggravate of Baaden-Durlach; eastward by the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the county of Eberstein; southward by the Ortenau, and particularly by Oberkirch and Oppenau, two manors belonging to the bishopric of Straszburg, the district of Ortenau and the manor of Lichtenau, belonging to the Principality of Hesse-Darmstadt. The lordship of Mahlberg, which also belongs to this family, lies somewhat higher up the Rhine betwixt the Ortenau and the Brisgau.
- §. 7. The descent of the house of Baaden-Baaden, from the Marggrave Bernard has been shewn above. It was this Prince who introduced Lutheranism into the marggravate. Of his two sons, Philibert and Christopher III. the former died in the year 1639, and his son Philip being in his minority placed under the tutelage of the Duke of Bavaria, this Prince took advantage of it to suppress the Reformation in these parts. The Marggrave Philip died so early as the year 1588, and the dominions devolved to Edward, son of the beforenamed Christopher III. who became a convert to popery. During his absence in 1595, Ernest Frederick, Marggrave of Durlach, possessed himself of the whole country; and it was the year 1629 before the Marggrave Frederick restored it to William son of Edward, who also this same year acquired the lordship of Mahlberg. His son Ferdinand Maximilian, in 1660, added also the county of Eberstein to it as a vacant sief: and his son Lewis William distinguished himself by his military reputation. The Marggrave Bernhard Lewis William George, son to the latter by his marriage with Maria Anna, a daughter of Adam Francis Charles Prince of Schwarzenberg, brought to his family the lordships in Bohemia, described in vol. iv. p. 88, 90, 92, 94.

- §. 8. Baaden-Baaden in the college of Princes has one vote, but in feat ranks with the other alternative Princes according to the ten usual clauses, though always with precedence to Baaden-Durlach and Baaden-Hockberg. In the Circle of Swabia, by virtue of the upper marggravate, it has a vote among the temporal Princes. The Marggraves of Baaden-Baaden and Baaden-Durlach are also the chiefs of the second quarter of the Circle of Swabia. For this upper marggravate the Prince in the matricula of the Empire is affested at twelve horsemen and twenty foot, or two hundred and fixty-four florins; and to the chamber of Wetzlar pays one hundred and seventy-four florins, forty-four and a half rix-dollars.
- §. 9. The principal colleges and offices of this Prince are the privy-council, the court of justice and treasury. His annual income, according to Keyszler, is 400,000 florins.

§. 10. The countries belonging to this principality are,

1. The upper marggravate of Baaden, which confifts of the following towns and diffricts, viz.

1. The united towns and districts of Rastatt. In it

Rastadt or Rastatt, the residence of the Prince, and lying in a fine plain called Rastadtheath near the river Murg, which, a little below it, salls into the Rhine. The Marggrave Lewis William caused it to be built with regularity and elegance; and had also begun a very superb palace here which he intended for his residence, but did not live to finish it. Before those improvements this place was but a village. In the year 1714 a peace was concluded here betwixt the Emperor and France.

Favorita, a feat standing about one hour's distance from Rastadt, and built by the Marggrave Lewis William's widow.

Kuppenheim, a little town seated on the river Murg.

2. The town and district of Baaden. In it

Baaden, the capital of the upper marggravate, lies on the Oelbach amidst vineyards. Its name is derived from its celebrated hot-baths. In the year 1688, this place was laid in ashes by the French, at which time the Prince's palace was also greatly damaged.

Lichtenthal, in Latin Lucida Vallis, a nunnery of Cistercians, anciently the place of interrment to the Marggraves.

3. The town and district of Ettlingen, which is a small place situate on the river Alb. In it is Daxlanden, a large village feated on the Rhine, the last place, to the north, of the upper marggravate.

4. The district of Steinbach, which takes its name from Steinbach, a little town.

Vol. V. F f. 5. The

5. The diffrict of Bubel and Grosebweier, containing Bubel, a market-town.

Affemball, a village, the neighbourhood of which produces a very good wine.

Grefebweier, a feat and village.

6. The little town and diffrict of Stollhoffen, together with Schwarzach.

Stellhoffen, a little town lying not far from the Rhine. At the beginning of the war for the Spanish succession, a line was thrown up from thence eastward to the Black-forest and up the Rhine towards Philipsburg, which the French attacking in 1703, were repulsed with great slaughter.

Schwarzach, an abbey of Benedictines, fituate betwixt Stollhoffen and Lichtenau. To this abbey belongs a manor containing in it eleven villages believes the market-town of Schwarzach. The sovereign thereof is the Prince of Baaden.

7. The town and district of Beinheim on the west side of the Rhine, situate in Lower-Alface, and containing Beinheim, a little town which formerly belonged to the lords of Flec-kenstein.

Leitenheim, a village; and Rechwag, an inn.

II. The district of Kehl. In it

Kehl, a village feated opposite to the city of Strasburg, and one half of it belonging to a religious foundation in Strasburg for the support of the structure of the grand cathedral there; but the management of it is lodged in the magistracy. Of the other half one quarter belongs to Baaden-Baaden, and the other to the lords of Bockel. Within its jurisdiction stands the ruinated

Imperial fortress of Kehl, which was built on the following occasion. Formerly, when Strasburg was an Imperial city, its bridge was defended by forts on both fides the river. In the year 1678, the French laid fiege to that on this fide the Rbine, and which from the village of Kebl was called Fort Kehl. Having taken it by storm, they razed it. Hereupon the village of Kehl was removed, and a fort built at the conflux of the Kinzig into the Rhine which is still called Kehl. At the peace of Reyswick, in the year 1697, this fort being ceded to the Emperor and the Empire, it was declared an Imperial fortress. But the ground belonging to it the Emperor conferred as a fief on the house of Baaden-Baaden, reserving still the right of placing a garrison in it to the Empire. In the year 1733 it was taken by the French. On the first of October 1754, on account of its ruinous condition, the Circle of Swabia withdrew a body of troops which were quartered there, on which the Marggrave of Baaden-Baaden caused the garrison to be replaced by his circular contingency; and referred to the Empire what measures it would take with regard to the right of garrison-III. The ing, which had been referved to it.

III. The district of Stauffenberg in the Ortenau, fituate betwixt the towns of Oberkirch and Gengenbach.

IV. The lordship of Mahlberg, the situation of which is described above (§. 6.) and which formerly belonged to the lords of Gerolzeck. On the death of Henry, the last of the lords of the line of Labr, in the year 1426 it devolved to his heiress Adelheida, spouse to Count John of Mors and Saarwerden: On the failure of this branch the lordship, as being the portion of Katherine heiress of Saarwerden descended to John Lewis count of Nassau, and in 1629 came by agreement to the house of Baaden-Baaden. In it are the following places, viz.

Mablberg, a little town and feat containing a convent of Capuchins.

Kippenheim, a considerable market-town: Together with

The large villages of Kippenheim weiler, Sulz, Heiligenzell, Oberweier, Friesenheim, Upper-Schopfen, Schutterzell, Dundenheim, Ichenheim, Ottenheim, Kurzel, and Wagenstatt.

Obs. Exclusive of the lordships in Bohemia of which mention has been made above (§. 7.) this family also possesses the manors of Ortenau, and Rodalben in the lordship of Graffenstein, as also the lordship of Rodemachern in the dutchy of Luxemburg, with a considerable part of the county of Sponbeim, described in vol. iv. and the lordship of Eberstein, which occurs in its order in the Circle of Swabia.

Of the MARGGRAVE of BAADEN-DURLACH and his Territories.

- §. 11. The lower marggravate of Baaden terminates to the west on the river Rhine; southward on the upper marggravate of Baaden, the convent of Frauenalb and the dukedom of Wurtemberg; eastward on the same dukedom, and northward on the bishoprick of Spire. The marggravate of Hochberg lies in and along the Brisgau. The upper marggravate of Durlach, as it is called, which consists of the three lordships of Roteln, Sausenberg and Baadenweiler, lies betwixt the Rhine, the Brisgau, and the four forest-towns towards Basel.
- §. 12. The present house of Baaden-Durlach is descended as above-mentioned from Marggrave Ernest, who embraced the Protestant religion, and whose son Charles II. completely settled it in his dominions; and also removed the residentiary seat from Pforzheim to Durlach, and there built the palace of Karlsburg. Frederick V. his grandson by his son George Frederick, was by his fourth wise Anne Maria, daughter to James the last lord of Hohen-Gerolzeck and Sulz, appointed heir to all her estates, which consisted principally in the allodial lands of Hoken-Gerolzeck, and a large claim on the counts of Nassau. His son Frederick VI. in the year 1664, obtained from the Emperor the title of Illustrious. His fon Frederick the Great rebuilt Durlach and the castle of Karlsburg, both which had been ravaged and destroyed by the French; and liberally encouraged the resugees of that nation who sted into his country. He was succeeded by his son Charles William, who undertook the rebuilding of a new residentiary city called Karlsruhe, i. e. Charles's Rest; and on the 17th of June 1715, on occasion of laying the soundation-stone for the palace, instituted the order of Fidelity. As he was succeeded by his son Frederick, so was the latter also by his son Charles Frederick.

§. 13. The Marggrave of Baaden-Durlach enjoys two votes in the college of Princes. viz. one for the lower marggravate of Baaden, the other for the marggravate of Hochberg; and votes next to Baaden-Baaden. Among the Princes in the diet of the Circle of Swabia, these countries likewise entitle him to two votes. His assessment in the matricula of the Empire formerly amounted to twenty horse and sifty-three soot, or four hundred and sifty-two florins; but in the year 1683 it was reduced to three hundred and two. To the chamber of Wetzlar he pays one hundred and seventy-four rix-dollars forty-four kruitzers and a half.

§. 14. The great colleges here hold their sessions at Karlsruhe, and these from the privy-council, the court of justice, the ecclesiastical council, the matrimonial-court, the chamber of accounts, and the treasury.

§. 15. The reigning family and the country in general profess Luther-anism; but with toleration of Protestants, Catholics and Jews at Karlfruhe: The former have also their meetings at Walsch-Neureuth and Friderichsthal. The whole country of Baaden-Durlach contains in it one hundred and twenty parishes, which are under the inspection of the seven superintendants of Pforzheim, Durlach, Karlfruhe, Emmendingen, Mulheim, Lorrach and Schopfen. The general superintendency here has been suppressed.

400,000 florins.

§. 17. His territories are,

I. The lower Marggravate of BAADEN, containing

1. The upper diffrict of Karlfruhe, being one continued plain without either hill or eminence, and every where fandy, for which reason it is also called the Hart. It produces nevertheless corn, hemp, flax, turneps, pease and other vegetables; and the villages along the Rhine abound in hay and breed great numbers of cattle, besides which they enjoy the conveniency of good sisheries in the Rhine. The Hartwald lies in the middle of the district betwixt the rivers Pfinz and Alb, and reaches from Graben to Muhlburg, which is four hours in length. To this upper district belongs Karlfruhe, a regular built town in the Hartwalde, and owing its origin in the year 1715 to the Marggrave Charles, who chose it for his residence. The tower of the main building of the palace here commands a view not only of all the main streets of the town, but also of twenty-five vista's, some of which are planted in order to heighten the beauty of the prospect, and others cut through the Hartwald. In it is a special superintendency and a gymna-sum illustre, which was first sounded in the year 1583 at Durlach as a common school; but in 1596 raised to a gymnasium illustre. In this gymnasium are eight masters, the four first of whom are stiled professors. Exclusive too of the court and the churches in the town belonging to the Lutherans, the Protestants and Catholics have each of them theirs, and the Years also a synagogue.

nastery, but now parcelled into lodgings for the officers of the court.

Muhlburg, a little town feated on the Alb, receiving its charter from the Marggrave Frederick. The Prince's palace here was destroyed by the French.

The parochial villages of Knielingen, with a ruined castle.

Eckenstein and Schrock on the Rhine, over which the latter has a settled ferry.

Linkenheim and Hochstatten, both seated on the Rhine, as also Deutsch-Neureuth.

Staffort, a village containing a church and an old ruinated castle, in which in the year 1599, to gratify the Protestants, the liber Staffortensis was composed under the protection of the Marggrave Ernst Frederick.

The parochial villages of Spock and Graben, both lying on the Pfinz. In the last is a ruinated castle.

The parochial village of Lidelsheim feated on the old Rhine, which is an arm of that river; with Russaheim on the Rhine.

The Protestant parochial villages of Friderichsthal and Walsch-Neureuth.

Roth, a parochial village lying on the other fide of the Rhine, about one hour's distance from Landau. One half of this place belongs to the Marggrave of Baaden-Durlach and the other to the Elector Palatine.

2. The upper district of Durlach, being a very fruitful country and producing not only an exuberance of corn, hemp and flax, but also good wine, particularly near Gretzingen and Sellingen, the wine of Durlach being inferior to these. In it is Durlach, the capital of the principality and once the residence of the Prince, lying on the river Pfinz. In this town once was a palace called Karlfburg, with a special superintendency and a grammar-school. In the year 1689 this place was laid in ashes by the French. Half an hour's distance from the town, betwixt it and Rindheim, is a very large decoy for wild-sowl.

The parochial villages of Rindheim, Hagsfeld and Blankenloch. About half an hour from the latter stands Seehof, the mansion-house of a fine estate belonging to the Prince, with most beautiful meadows near it for the use of his stables there.

Gretzingen, a parochial village feated on the Pfinz, and much reforted to for the Prince's delightful palace and gardens there.

The parochial villages of Berghausen, or Barkhausen, in which is also a pretty hunting seat belonging to the Marggraves, and Sellingen, both lying on the Pfinz.

Wolfertsweier and Rippurg; in the last of which is an old castle.

Munzesheim, a parochial village containing a seat, is a sief of the Marggraves held by the barons of Munzesheim.

Hobenwettersbach, formerly Durrenwettersbach, a rich farm.

3. The upper diffrict of Pforzheim. In it

Pforzkeim, a town seated on the Entz, which at this place receives the Nagold and Wurm. Pforzheim was formerly the residence of the youngest branch of the Marggraves. In it is a special superintendency, a grammar-school, and an orphan-house, and in the year 1689 it was destroyed by the French.

The parochial villages of Bauschlott, Brotzingen, Dietlingen, Durn, Elmendingen, Eutingen, Eyszingen, Huchenfeld and Weissenslein; together with Ispringen, Langenalt, and Nieffern, hamlets.

4. The district of Stein and Langensteinbach. In it

Stein, a market-town and feat.

The parochial villages of Konigsbach, Upper and Under-Woszingen, Nottingen, Itterspach, Remchingen, containing a seat; and Gobrichen.

Langen/leinback, a market-town, with a feat in it and warm-baths.

II. The Maggravate of Hochberg or Hachberg, forms an upper-amt, or Prefecturate of itself, and is divided into four quarters; viz.

1. The Emmendingen quarter, to which belongs

Hochberg, a very ancient castle.

Emmendingen, a little town fituate on the Elz, and where in the year 1 590 a fruitless conference was set on foot betwixt the Catholic and Lutheran divines. In this town is a special superintendency, and its neighbourhood produces excellent wine.

The parochial villages of Ottoschwanden, or Ottenschwangen, Reppenbach, Sexau, Langen-Denzlingen, Vorstatten or Vorenstetten, and Gundelsingen.

Sulzburg, a little town lying betwixt Heitersheim and Baadenweiler, and noted for a very good red wine. Near it are the villages of Ballrechten and Dettingen, which also belong to this quarter.

2. The Malterdingen quarter comprehends the parochial villages of Malterdingen, Kondringen, Mundingen and Broggingen.

3. The Eichstatten quarter contains in it the parochial villages of Eichstetten, Bozingen, Nymburg, Balingen and Theningen.

4. The Weisweiler quarter, in which are the church-villages of Weisweil on the Rhine, Konigschafhausen and Leiselheim, or Lisselen, Bischoffingen, Bickensohl, Ihringen and Brechthal.

III. The upper Marggravate of Durlach, as it is called, produces the best wine in this country, which is therefore distinguished by the name of Marggravate-wine, and properly consists of the three following lordships, viz.

1. The lordship of Roteln, formerly having lords of its own who bore the title thereof; and on the extinction of these it escheated to the Murggraves of Hochberg. In conjunction with the lordship of Sausenberg it makes one government, and consists of thirteen vogteys, or bailtwicks, viz.

1. The bailiwick of Thumbringen, on a hill, in which is the ruinated castle of Roteln, and at the foot of it lies the village of Thumbringen.

2. The bailiwick of Lorrack, containing Lorrach, a little town, in which is a special superintendency and a gram-mar-school.

Crenzach, a parochial village lying above Basil near the Rhine.

3. The bailiwick of Riminken.

4. The bailiwicks and parithes of Wollbach and Weil.

5. The bailiwick of Haltingen, in which is Haltingen, a parochial village.

Fridlingen, a castle seated on the Rhine, near which in 1702 a sharp encounter happened betwixt the Imperialists and the French.

6. The bailiwick and parish of Eymeldingen.
7. The bailiwick of Kirchen and Reidbach.

8. The bailiwick of Schopfen, in which is Schopfheim, or Schopfen, a small town seated on the river of Wisen, and containing a special superintendency.

9. The bailiwicks and parishes of Weitenau, Stein and Tegernau.

- 2. The landgravate of Sausenberg, which, as before observed, in conjunction with the lordship of Roteln makes one government, and confists of eight bailiwicks; but the castle of that name is demolished. The bailiwicks in it are,
 - 1. The bailiwick and parish of Tannenkirch.

2. The bailiwick of Blanfingen; to which belongs Candern, a market-town, containing iron-works.

3. The bailiwick of Upper-Eckenheim, in which are the parochial villages of Upper and Lower-Eckenheim.

4. The bailiwick of Welmlingen.

5. The bailiwick and parishes of Holzen, Feldberg and Vogelbach.

6. The bailiwick and parish of Auggen.7. The famous inn of Kalte Herberg.

3. The lordship of Badenweiler, formerly belonging to the counts of Freyburg, but transferred by Count John in the year 1444 to the Marggrave Rudolph of Hochberg. This lordship forms a distinct government, to which belong nine bailiwicks, viz.

1. The bailiwick of Badenweiler, containing Badenweiler, a castle seated on a mountain, and deriving its name from a warm bath near it. Subject to this castle are

The villages of Upper and Lower-Weiler, in which are some iron-works:

2. The bailiwick of Mulbeim, containing

Mulbeim, a market-town, in which is a special superintendency.

3. The bailiwicks and parishes of Britzingen, Hugelbeim, Buckingen, Lauffen, Mengen and Opfingen.

4. The bailiwick of Wolfenweiler, containing the parochial villages of Wolfenweiler and Haszlach.

The COUNTRY belonging to the PRINCE of HOHENZOLLERN.

§. 1. THE country of Hohenzollern is principally surrounded by the dutchy of Wurtemberg, by the lower county of Hohenberg belonging to Austria, the lordships of Haigerloch and Trochtelsingen in the territories of Furstenberg, and the county of Sigmaringen. Westward it terminates on the upper county of Hohenberg belonging to Austria; and eastward on some towns and districts belonging to the same province; as also on those of Wurtemberg, Furstenberg and Truchsesz. The lordship of Haigerloch is environed by the county of Hohenzollern, the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the county of Hohenberg belonging to Austria. These countries are all of tolerable fertility and watered by the Danube, which runs through the county of Sigmaringen, where it receives the little river of Lauchart; as also by the rivers Eyach and Starzell, which fall into the Neckar.

§. 2. Passing over the obscurities of the origin of the very ancient family of Hohenzollern, we shall only observe that in the second half of the twelfth century, in which Count Conrad (for in all appearance he was the first Burggrave) obtained the burggravate of Nurnburg, it was divided into two branches, of which the Burggrave branch attained to the Electorate of Brandenburg and the crown of Prussia; but the Hohenzollern branch continued in the country of Zollern. Count Charles, who died in 1576, is the sounder of the present united house of Zollern; and on the 24th of January 1575, at Sigmaringen, made a formal incorporation of the Zollern territories. From his son Frederick IV. is descended the Hohenzollern-Hechingen samily, and from his son Charles II. that of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, which still substites. John George of the Hechingen line was in the year 1623 promoted by the Emperor to the rank of Prince, in behalf of himself and the perpetual first-first-born of the family: and on the 30th of June 1653, his son Frederick was introduced into the council of Princes. Prince Frederick William in the year 1692 obtained from the Emperor Leopold the title of Prince to all the younger brothers of his house, which in 1750 became extinct, and the sovereignty of the country devolved to Prince Joseph William Francis, son to Count Hermann Frederick, and brother to that Prince. The Sigmaringen line has been shewn above to be derived from Count Charles II. who died in the year 1606. His son John, in 1623, was created a Prince of the Empire, and his son Prince Meinard I. lest two sons behind him whose virtues and accomplishments did honour to their high birth, viz. Maximilian, who continued the reigning line, and Francis Antony, from whom is descended the collateral line of Haigerlock.

§. 3. The before-mentioned Princes Eitel Frederick of the Heckingen and Meinard I. of the Sigmaringen line, by the Emperor's permission, entered into an agreement that the title of Prince should be confined to the first-born reigning lords of their house; and that the other children should be only counts, although as is shewn above, Prince Frederick William in the year 1692 obtained a grant from the Emperor, by which the title of Prince was extended to all the younger children of his house; notwithstanding which all the sisters of the reigning Prince of Hohenzollern, Heckingen excepted, are stilled countesses.

- §. 4. The Princes of Hohenzollern are hereditary chamberlains of the holy Roman Empire, which office by virtue of the agreement made by Count Charles in the year 1575 (§. 2.) is always to belong to the first-born of the family, who receives the investiture of it from the Elector of Brandenburg; but may make over his right to any other of his family. By virtue of the compact and the incorporation of the inheritance made at Nurnberg in the years 1692 and 1695 with the Elector of Brandenburg, they stile themselves Burggraves of Nurnberg, as the Electoral house of Brandenburg inferts Hohenzollern among its titles. The county of Hohenzollern, together with all its regalia, privileges and appurtenances, is an absolutely free and independent property; and the same is afferted by the Princes of Hobenzollern with respect to the county of Sigmaringen, in opposition to the house of Austria, which has long aimed at the sovereignty thereof; and actually disposes of the counties of Voringen and the lordship of Haigerlock as fiefs. Of the Emperor and Empire the Princes hold only the criminal jurisdiction and an impost for the office of the Schultheissen (a kind of judge) in the Imperial town of Reutlingen. Both lines of this family are Roman Catholics.
- §. 5. The titles of the reigning Princes of both lines runs thus, viz. Prince of Hohenzollern, Burggrave of Nurnberg, Count of Sigmaringen and Voringen, Lord of Haigerloch and Wohrstein, and Hereditary Chamberlain of the Holy Roman Empire. The arms for Zollern, are quarterly, diamond Vol. V.

and pearl. For Sigmaringen, a stag or, on a hill emerald, in a field pearl; and for the office of hereditary chamberlain, a faltire of two sceptres.

§. 6. In the college of Princes Hobenzollern has but one vote, which is given by the reigning Prince of Hobenzollern-Hechingen, and betwixt the votes of Aremberg and Lobkowitz. In the Diet of the Circle of Swabia, each reigning Prince has a vote. The affeliment in the matricula of the Empire for Hechingen and Haigerloch is fix horse and twenty foot, or one hundred and fifty-two florins, namely, ninety-five for Hechingen, and fifty-seven for Haigerloch; Woringen and Sigmaringen are rated at one hundred and thirty-eight florins; but Wohringen being a dependency of Austria, and Sigmaringen claimed also by the archducal house thereof, this article does not take place. To the chamber of Wetzlar, Hobenzollern-Hechingen pays forty-three rix-dollars twenty-five and a half kruitzers; and Habenzollern Haigerloch and Hobenzollern-Sigmaringen the like sum; exclusive of certain articles in the matricula concerning the lands of Werdenberg and Tengennellenburg, but these are are of no effect.

§. 7. Each reigning Prince has a council and treasury. The yearly income of the Prince of Hobenzollern Hechingen is computed at 30,000 florins, and that of Hobenzollern Sigmaringen does not exceed this fum.

The Territories of the Reigning PRINCE of HOHENZOLLERN-HECHINGEN, are

The princely county of Hobenzollern, containing Hobenzollern, the patriarchal house of the family, and a fortification, which was destroyed in the year 1423, but rebuilt by Count Lewis Nicholas.

Hechingen, the residence of the Prince, lies on the river Starzel. In it is an abbey dedicated to St. James.

Not far from the town lies a convent of Franciscan Friars, called St. Luzen, and betwixt Hechingen and Hohenzollern is Stetten, a village which is a dependency of the parish of Hechingen, and contains in it a Dominican nunnery called Maria Gnadenthal or the Vale of Mary's Grace.

Grosselfingen, a market-town and parish.

Rangendingen, a parochial-village, having in it a nunnery of Dominicans called the White Society.

The parishes of Boll and Steinhofen.

The villages of Burladingen and Gauselsingen, which constitute one parish.

The village of Killer giving name to the vale thereof. Starzel and Haufen, which form one parish: As also

The parishes of Stein, Weilheim, Jungingen, Thankeim, Owingen, Stetten under Hollstein, and Wulflingen. The

The reigning Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen possesses,

I. The county of Sigmaringen, which on the extinction of the counts of Werdenberg escheated to the empire, and was conferred by the Emperor Charles V. on the house of Hohenzollern, for which reason the house of Austria claims the sovereignty of it. To it belongs Sigmaringen, the Prince's residence, which lies on the Danube.

The parochial villages of Sigmaringen, Krauchenwisen, Hausen and Langen-Enslingen.

Habstall, a nunnery of Dominicans.

Laitz and Gornheim, nunneries of Franciscans.

Inzhofen, an Augustine nunnery.

Bingen, a village, the greatest part of which belongs to the house of Hornstein, but the house of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen enjoys the criminal and forest jurisdiction, and likewise the sovereignty of the roads.

Obs. The present state of the county of Voringen or Veringen, has been briefly exhibited in vol. iv. in the territories belonging to the house of Austria in Swabia. The Princes of Hohenzollern bear it in their title. But the line of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen enjoys as siefs under Austria the parochial-villages of Voringen, lying near the town of that name; together with Benzingen and Harthausen auf der Scheer.

2. The lordships of Haigerloch and Wohrstein, constituting an upper-amt, or government. These anciently belonged to the counts of Hohenberg, from whom they devolved to the house of Austria, which towards the close of the 15th century exchanged it with that of Hohenzollern for the lordship of Rakunz. To it belong

Haigerloch, a small town seated on the little river of Eyach, with

The parishes of Gruel, in which is a nunnery of Dominicans, and those of Zimmern, Stetten, Bietenhausen, Empfingen, Hardt, Teilfingen, Weildorf, Heffendorf, Fischingen, Immnau and Kilberg, Kirchberg or Kilchberg, a Dominican nunnery.

The PRINCELY ABBEY of L I N D A U.

§. 1. The free fecular foundation in the Imperial city of Lindau on the Bodensee, or lake of Costanz, is an immediate foundation of the Empire, the abbess whereof is a Princess, and ever since the time of the Emperor Frederick III. Stiles herself so. In the Imperial Diet she holds the first seat. Among the abbesses on the Swabian bench of prelates, and in the Diet of the Circle of Swabia, she enjoys at present both seat and voice on the secular bench of Princes betwixt Hobenzollern Sigmaringen and Gg2

Buchau; though alternately with the latter, by virtue of an agreement entered into in the year 1697, to that purpose. But both in his own name and that of the bench of prelates, the precedence of this abbey is disputed in the Diet of the circle and other public assemblies by the abbot of Salmanfaceil. This opposition, however, is no less strenuously opposed by the abbess. The assessment of the abbey, in the matricula of the Empire, was formerly five foot or twenty florins; but, in the year 1682, an abatement was made of thirteen florins, infomuch that it is now reduced to seven. To the chamber at Wetzlar it is rated at fifty rixdollars, sixty-four kruitzers.

§. 2. The origin of this abbey is not precifely known, nor has it yet been made to appear, that in the ninth century there was, on an island in the lake of Costanz, on which now stands the town and abbey of Lindau, any convent of that name. The opinion of Conringius, which is espoused by others, carries much more probability with it; viz. that the abbey here, towards the beginning of the tenth century, was removed to the island from the convent of Wasserburg, and for the greater security thereof built contiguous to the town of Lindau. About the beginning of the seventeenth century, the abbey signified that it could produce a charter from the Emperor Lewis, bearing date in the year 866, and containing a grant from Adelberg, count of Rorbback, of the whole country of Lindau, with the Emperor's confirmation of the said grant to the abbey, together with the dignity of Prince. But many learned writers, both Catholics and Protestants, have demonstrated the salsity of this instrument.

§. 3. Instead of a district, this abbey has only some distinct farms, most of which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Imperial town of Lindaw; neither can it lay any impost on its own vassals, they being in that respect subject to other lordships. It has, however, several houses and estates belonging to it in the Imperial town of Lindau which pay rent to the abbey, as lying on its grounds. Every abbess also has a privilege, on her accession to her government of the abbey, of releasing the first malesactor that is capitally condemned within the jurisdiction of the city. On the other hand, the abbesses are to be free of the town, and the council may cause the alarm-bell to be rung in the steeple of the abbey. The house of Austria is patron of this abbey, in token of which it presents its administrator or justiciary every year with a certain quantity of wine instead of protection-money; and the wine itself is called protection-wine. In the year 1728, both the abbey and town of Lindau suffered greatly by fire.

The PRINCELY-ABBEY of B U C H A U.

§. 1. THE abbey of Buchau, in the Imperial town of that name, is faid to have been founded towards the beginning of the tenth century by a lady named Adelinda. The abbess hereof, who has the same liberty of marrying as the Capitularians, or Canonelles, is a Princess, and styled such, of the holy Roman Empire, as also abbess of the Imperial, princely and fecular free abbey of Buchau and Strafzberg, and the Capitularians must all be either daughters of counts or barons. In the Diet the abbefs fits and votes on the bench of the prelates of the Rhine betwixt the abbeffes of $E \pi n$ and Hervorden, and likewise on the bench of the counts and lords of Swabia, on account of the lordship of Straszberg; and in the Diet of the circle of Swabia, on the bench of Lay-princes betwixt Lindau and Thengen; but in the subscription of the resolutions of the circle of 1616, the stands among the prelates after Salmanfweil; and it is on this that Salmanfweil grounds its opposition to the precedency of Buchau, as is already thewn under the article of Lindau. In the matricula of the Empire this abbey is affeffed at two horsemen and fix foot, or forty-eight florins; and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays forty-eight rixdollars fifty-four kruitzers.

§. 2. In the year 1376, this abbey was taken by the Emperor Charles IV. under the particular patronage and protection of the Empire, with an immunity from all delegated power; and the bishop of Costanz, with the prelate of Kempten, are Imperial commissioners, or administrators of the revenue.

§. 3. To the abbey belong

1. The lordship of Straszberg, which lies betwixt the dutchy of Wurtenberg, the upper-county of Hobenberg appertaining to Austria, as also the county of Voringen. This lordship has been the property of the abbey for many centuries, but, in the year 1345, was conferred as a fiel on the samily of Reischach, and, in 1429, on Hans Schwallern and his heirs. In the year 1508, it was conferred on the samily of Honburg, and, in 1533, on that of Westersteten. George Diterich of Westersteten dying in the year 1622 without male-issue, the fiel returned to the abbey, which ever since that time has retained it in its own hands; and on this account had a long dispute with the Imperial nobility of the quarter of the Hegau, Algau, and about the lake of Costanz, concerning the collections which the noblesse would have committed to their fidelity; but the abbey has ever levied them itself and paid them into the chest of the circle. This lordship is subject to the administration of a high-steward, or prefect, appointed by the abbey, and contains Strafzberg, a small town and castle situate on the Schmich.

The villages of Frobnstetten and Kayseringen, together with the glass-manufactory.

In the towns of the Sulgau and Mengen, though belonging to Austria, it possesses the advowson of the parishes, besides certain rights and casualties, for which it maintains a bailiss in each of those places. It presents also to the parishes of Durnau, Ertingen, Kanzach, Bitzweiler, Mietingen, Braunenweiler, Uigendorf, Ogelspeyren, Renhardschweiler and Morbach; all which lie in the neighbourhood of Buchau.

The Princely-County of H E N G E N.

§. 1. LIES in the Hegau, betwixt the landgravate of Baar, belonging to the Prince of Furstenberg, Blumenfeld, a manor of the Teutonic order, and the Swiss canton of Schaffhausen. This lordship the Emperor Charles V. purchased for himself in the name of his brother the Archduke Ferdinand, inthe year 1542, of Christopher Count of Thengen, for 8210 florins; and it was annexed to the landgravate of Nellenburg: but the Emperor Ferdinand III. transferred it to the younger branch of the line of Pancrace of the noble family of Aversberg, or Aursberg, under the title of an immediate Imperial princely county. John Weichard, first Prince of Aursberg, was, in the year 1654, admitted into the college of Princes; and, in 1665, by virtue of Thengen, into the bench of Lay-princes in the Diet of the circle of Swabia; and in the Imperial matricula subscribed to an affestment of seventy-six slorins; but the family failing in their payment of the subsidies of the circle, in the year 1698 were deprived of their vote; upon which it came to a compromise, and Aursberg promised to pay yearly to the circle 1500 florins. Its contingency to the chamber of Wetzlar is fifty-fix rixdollars. The title of the reigning Prince is Duke of Munsterberg and Frankenstein, princely count of Thengen and Mitterburg, high hereditary-marshal and hereditary-treasurer in the dutchy of Carinthia and the marquifate of Wind.

§. 2. The princely-county of Thengen is under the direction of a Prefect, or lord-lieutenant, of the Prince's nomination, and contains in it Thengen, a small town, having no feat.

The villages of Thengen, Utenhofen, Althaven and Endeburg.

Of the family of the Prince and Landgrave of Fursteneers, and his territories in general.

§. 1. THE house of Furstenberg is one of the most ancient and considerable in all Swabia, being derived from Egeno, count of Urach, who flourished in the thirteenth century. Count Frederick of Furstenberg, who made great additions to the territories of his family and lived in the fixteenth century, left two fons, the counts Christopher and Joachim, who gave rife to two separate lines; viz. Count Christopher to that of Kinzingerthal, which, exclusive of fomething considerable in the Baar, obtained the Kinzingerthal, Blomberg, and some other lordships in the Schwarzwalde. Christopher II. his grandion, by his fon Count Albert, left two fons, who were founders of two other particular lines. In Count Vatiflaw II. commenced that of Moskirch, which failed in the year 1744; and in Count Frederick Rudolph the Stubling line, which is still existing. Joachim II. son to the above-mentioned Count Frederick, was founder of the Heiligenberg line, which was continued by his fon Frederick, and in the perfons of his fons Egon and Lewis, was again divided into the lines of Heiligenberg and Donesching. The latter foon failed, but the former, in the year 1664, became a Prince of the Empire; though, in 1716, on the extinction of the male descendants thereof, their lands and the dignity of Prince devolved to the above-mentioned Moskirch and Stubling.

§. 2. Thus all the Furstenberg estates escheated to the line of Furstenberg-Stubling. The title of Prince is now only borne by the sovercign and his presumptive heir. The title of the reigning Prince runs thus; viz. Prince of the holy Roman Empire, as also of Furstenberg, Landgrave of Baar and Stublingen, count of Heiligenberg and Werdenberg, baron of Gundelsingen, lord of Hausen in the Kinzinger thal, Moskirch, Hohenboven, Wildenstein, Jungnau, Trochtelsingen, Waldsberg, Weytra, &c. The children and sisters style themselves Landgraves of Furstenberg, the Baar and Stublingen. Their coat of arms are a shield topaz with a border nebuted pearls and saphire. In the center lies the Furstenberg eagle, topaz, with the beak and claws saphire; on its breast is a shield quarterly. In the first and sourth quarters, in a field ruby, is a three pointed gonfalon, or banner, decorated pearl, for Werdenberg; and in the second and third quarters, in a field pearl for Heiligenberg, a bend diamond.

§. 3. The above-mentioned title of the Prince shews the territories belonging to the house of Furstenberg; and the lordship of Weytra excepted, which lies in the Lower-Austria, they are all in the circle of Swabia, and thus the Prince is entitled to six votes in the Diet of the circle; viz. two among the Princes for Heiligenberg and Stublingen and four among the counts and barons as lord of Moskirch, Baar, Hausen in the Kinzingerthal and Gundelfingen. In the Imperial Diet he possesses one vote in the college of Princes, into which he was introduced about the year 1667, together with East-Friesland; as also another vote in the college of the counts of Swabia for Heiligenberg and Werdenberg.

- §. 4. The affessment in the matricula of the Empire for the landgravate of Baar and the Kinzingerthal, is six horsemen and thirty foot, or one hundred and ninety-two florins. For one half of the manors of Werdenberg, namely, Heiligenberg, Jungnau and Trochtelfingen, four horsemen and twenty-two foot and a half, or one hundred and thirty-eight florins. For Gundelfingen, two horsemen and two foot, or thirty-two florins. For Stublingen, eighteen florins thirty kruitzers. For Engen, seventy florins, and for Moskirch thirty. To the chamber at Wetzlar, the house of Furstenberg is rated, for the Werdenberg estate, at seventy-three ruthlers eighty-seven kruitzers. For Baar, at ninety-three ruthlers thirty kruitzers. For Helfenslein-Weisensleig, that is for Wildenslein, at five ruthlers thirty-fix kruitzers and a half. For Gundelsingen, at twenty-seven ruthlers thirteen kruitzers. For Zimmern, or Moskirch, at twenty ruthlers, twenty-five kruitzers and a quarter; and for Lupsen, or Stublingen, at seventy-one ruthlers one kruitzer.
- §. 5. The Princes of Furstenberg enjoy the protection and criminal jurisdiction over the abbey of Salmansweil, by a voluntary cession of the abbey.
- §. 6. I now proceed to give an account of the territories of the Prince of Furstenberg in the order of their feat and vote in the circle of Swabia, which are as follows; viz.

The princely county of Heiligenberg, together with the lordships of Jungnau and Trochtelfingen.

These countries are called the estate of Werdenberg, having formerly belonged to the counts thereof, who becoming extinct in the year 1530, their lands fell to Count Frederick of Furstenberg, by means of Anne, daughter to Count Christopher of Werdenberg and Heiligenberg, to whom he was married in the sixteenth century, and after him to his son Joachim, founder of the Heiligenberg line, which is so called from this part of the inheritance.

The county of Heiligenberg is bounded, to the east, by that of Konigseck, the abbey of Weingarten and the bailiwick of Altorf and Ravensburg; southward, by the territory of Costanz and Salmansweil; to the west, it borders on the jurisdiction of Uberling and Petershaus, and, to the north, terminates on the Imperial town of Pfullendorf, the county of Sigmaringen and other

other lesser territories. It had anciently counts of its own, on the failure of whom it fell to the counts of Werdenberg, and from them to those of Furflenberg. In it is one of the most ancient Imperial districts in Swabia, which is called that of Schackebuch, and is wholly included in the boundaries of the county. This county is at present a presecturate, and contains in it Heiligenberg, a castle seated on a high rock, and deriving its name from the relicks of a certain saint who lies buried there.

The villages of Ilmensee, Pfrungen, Zustorf, Denkingen, Great-Stadelhof, Korbach, Koggenbeuren, Winglingen, Siggingen, Frickingen and Stein, with several hamlets and seats.

The lordship of Jungnau lies betwixt the counties of Sigmaringen and Voringen, and the territories of Austria on the river Lauchert, constituting a prefecturate or superior district, and containing in it the market-town of Jungnau with the village of Enneringen and the hamlet of Hochberg.

The lordship of Trochtessingen lies betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg, the princely county of Hohenzollern and the abbey of Zwifalten, and also constitutes a prefecturate containing in it

Trochtelfingen, a small town, situate on the Schmeicha in the Alb.

Steinhulben, a market-town.

Melchingen, a fmall market-town, and certain villages.

Of the Princes and Counts of OETTINGEN, and their territories in general.

§. 1. M. R. CNOPF has drawn a map of the county of Oettingen, which was engraved by Homann's heirs in the year 1744, and is the eighty-fourth map in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. This county borders, to the north, on the principality of Anspach and the Imperial town of Dinkelsbubl; to the east, on the dutchy of Pfalz-Neuburg; to the south, is bounded by the same and the lordships of Eglingen and Heydenbeim, and, to the west, terminates on the priory of Elwangen and the commandery of Kapfenburg. Its greatest extent, from north to south, is six leagues, and from east to west four. Its south-east parts are bounded by the Danube, on which side also the Wernitz, its principal river, takes its rise near Donauwerth, being there joined by the little rivers of Sulz and Eger.

§. 3. I shall here furnish the reader with a brief history of the counts of Oettingen, from the time of Count Otho, who lived about the beginning of the twelfth century. His fon Frederick was founder of the family. In the fourteenth century, the counts of Oettingen obtained a part of Lower-Alface, and from thence styled themselves Landgraves thereof; but, in the year 1359, they fold the fief which they held of the bishop of Strafzlurg, to him; and the remainder of the fiels which they held of the Empire they bequeathed to the Emperor Charles IV. and to their vaffals the family of Lichtenberg. Of the barons of Fleckenstein they are perpetual paramounts, on account of eleven villages lying along the Rhine, as shall be shewn below in §. 4. Count Frederick IV. who possessed the whole county of Oettingen and died in the year 1429, left three fons, who divided the county in such a manner among themselves that each obtained one third thereof. William refided at Oettingen, Ulrich at Flochberg, and "fohn at Wallerstein. The two last soon became extinct, whence their there of course fell to the line of William, which was founded by his for Wolfgang and Lewis the Elder his cousin. His oldest son, Lewis the Younger, was the founder of the Oettingen-Oettingen or Lutheran line, and the third fon, Frederick, of the Oettingen-Wallerstein, or Catholic line. The male-iffue of the former, which was first raised to the rank of Prince in the year 1674, and possessed one -i of the country, failed in 1731; the latter, which possessed five twelfths of it, was founded by William the Elder, son to Frederick, whose three sons were the founders of the three collateral-lines; viz. 1. William the Younger, was founder of the Spelberg-line, of which line Francis Albert, with his descendants, was raised, in the year 1734, to the rank of Prince, and introduced the right of primogenitureship into his own family; but his fon, Count John Aloysius, by virtue of a decree passed in the year 1739, by the Aulic council, and an agreement consequent thereupon, obtained one third of the Oettingen-Oettingen estate. 2. Wolfgang, founder of the Wallerslein line, from whose cousin Philip, the present count of Oettingen-Wallerstein is descended; and from him, by virtue of the will of Albert Ernest, the last Prince of Oettingen, Count Antony Charles inherited his country, ceding it to his eldest son Frederick, to whom his brother, Count Philip Charles, succeeded both in that and also in the county of Wallerstein. 3. Ernest the Elder, founder of the Balder line, which indeed in his fon was fubdivided into those of Balder and Katzenstein; the former whereof failing in the year 1687, its share of the county fell to the latter, which also obtained one third of the Oettingen-Oettingen estate.

Vol. V. H h fourteenth

§. 4. In the year 1495, the counts of Oettingen entered into a family compact among themselves, which was confirmed by the Emperor Maximilian, and in which, among other things, it was stipulated, that a count might dispose of the property and profits of his share in the estate to an alien, but the sovereignty and regalia should remain in the Oettingen samily, as also that they should hold in common the regalia, minage, grant of siefs, jurisdiction, mintage, impost and friedschatz, or the treasure of peace, as it is called, and likewise that the eldest reigning count, when he actually resides refides in any other part of the country, shall be invested with the actual fovereignty of it. This family compact was renewed in the year 1522, and in 1663 confirmed by the Emperor Leopold; but Abert Erneft, of the Oettingen-Oettingen line being raifed to the rank of Prince, the Wallerstein line opposed it; whence arose long contests, which were at length compromised in the year 1696, the direction of the particulars above-mentioned continuing as before in the eldest of the family, the line of the counts of Wallerstein being in no case to intersere in any thing. On the other hand, this Wallerstein line engaged that they would no more oppose the vote of the princely line in the Diet of the Empire, and that they would also give personal precedence to the new Prince not only in his own person but even in subscribing the decree and agreement. Further, that the familycompact made in 1522, should undergo an alteration in such respects as were inconfistent with the new princely dignity: and in this it was also stipulated, that no Prince or person of higher rank than the count of Oettingen should be appointed tutor. This compact was confirmed in the same year by the Emperor Leopold. The barons of Fleckenstein have anciently held, as fiefs of the house of Oettingen, the eleven following villages lying in Alface on the Rhine and in the neighbourhood of Fort Louis; viz. Koppenheim, Forstfelden, Kauchenheim, Gisenheim, Roschwog, Sessenheim, Rinsheim, Denkelsheim, Stockmatt, Dalbunden and Avenbeim.

§. 5. On the extinction of the line of Oettingen-Oettingen and the devolution of their estate to the Oettingen-Wallersein line, this branch leaving part of its inheritance to Oettingen-Spielberg, the reigning Prince of Oettingen-Spielberg styles himself, Prince of Oettingen, of the holy Roman Empire, &c. But the reigning count of Oettingen-Wallerstein bears the title of reigning count of Oettingen-Oettingen and Oettingen-Wallerstein. The arms of Oettingen are vairy ruby and a shield saphire with a narrow St. Andrew's cross pearl sur tout.

§. 6. According to the Imperial matricula, the whole county of Oettingen is affelfed at eight horse and forty-five foot, or two hundred and seventy-fix florins. With respect to the Imperial chamber of Wetzlar, its taxation is rated after the following manner; viz. Oettingen of Oettingen pays sixty-two ruthlers twenty kruitzers: Oettingen-Wallerstein, twenty-one ruthlers, thirty-eight kruitzers and a half: Oettingen-Katzenstein and Hohen-Baldern, nine ruthlers, sixty-sive kruitzers: Oettingen-Spielberg, twenty-sive ruthlers, sifty kruitzers.

§.7. Neither the extinct princely line of Oettingen-Oettingen, nor the present line of Oettingen-Spielberg, have obtained a seat or vote in the college of Princes at the Diet of the Empire, but the collective house of Oettingen is reckoned in the college of the counts Swabia. On the other hand, in the year 1675, the princely line was admitted to a seat and vote after Furstenberg-Heiligenberg on the bench of Lay-princes in the circle of H h 2

Swabia; and probably this privilege refides at present in the line of Spielberg; but the other counts of Oettingen have collectively only one vote on the bench of counts and barons, and that after the commandery of Alschbausen.

- §. 8. The subjects here are partly Roman Catholic and partly Lutheran. The Protestant consistory, erected by Albert Ernest, the last Lutheran Prince of Octingen-Octingen, is still ruled in common by the present Prince of Octingen and the count of Octingen-Wallerstein. In the town of Octingen is a general superintendency of Lutherans, which is held also in common; and both there and at Appenhosen, Harburg and Trochtelsingen are special superintendencies of the same seat belonging to Count Octingen-Octtingen, with soity-two parishes under them.
- §. 9. The Prince of Oettingen has, at his refidentiary-feat at Oettingen, a chancery-office and a treasury. The reigning count of Oettingen-Wallerstein has also a particular council and treasury for Oettingen-Oettingen and Oettingen-Wallerstein. The reigning count of Oettingen-Katzenstein-Baldern has likewise a distinct council of regency; but all the three lines of Oettingen have one custom-house and high-steward in common, which are both accountable to the chamber of regency. The Imperial tribunal at Oettingen, or rather that tract called the Riesz, has been long in the possession of the counts of Oettingen, and this jurisdiction they exercise over all the Princes and States in the Riesz, and have even looked upon the whole as an included county, maintaining therein, under the title of a bailiwick, the territorial jurisdiction over all the States dwelling or possession to the town of Nordlingen without its walls; but that has occasioned several violent contests and expensive processes.

Of the county belonging to the princely house of Oettingen in particular.

It confifts of the following districts:

I. The Upper-amt, or prefecturate of Oettingen, together with the district of Schneidheim. The line of Oettingen-Spielberg, by virtue of a compact made in 1739 with the line of the counts of Oettingen-Waller-stein, has to its former share in this prefecturate, to which chiefly belongs one half of the town of Oettingen, added also the share formerly belonging to the Princes of Oettingen-Oettingen. This prefecturate constitutes a part of what is called the Riesz (in Latin the Rhiæsa) of which particular tract of land Homann's heirs, in the year 1738, published a particular map, which makes the eighty-sixth in the Atlas of Germany.

Oettingen, the capital of the whole county of that name and the refidence of the princely line of Oettingen-Spielberg, lies on the Wernitz, being the feat of the princely regency and treasury, as also of the Lutheran consistory of the Princes and counts in common, of a Protestant superintendency, to which belong sisteen parishes, that of Oettingen being included, and likewise of a prefecturate, with a society for the improvement of art and sciences, a grammar-school and an orphan-house, a college of Jesuit and a commandery of the Teutonick order belonging to the bailiwick of Franken.

Obs. In this commandery are contained the villages of Belzheim, together with Upper and Under-Reimlingen, as also one half of the villages of Heinffart and Ebermeegen, with the greatest part of the village of Zipplingen; and Heinsfart, a village and castle, one half of which belongs thereto.

The district of Schneidheim lies on the little river of Sechta, and in the Sechta-grund, which takes its name from it.

II. The prefecturate of Aufkirch has also fallen to the princely-house of Oettingen-Spielberg by virtue of an agreement made with that of Oettingen-Wallerstein relative to the inheritance of Oettingen-Oettingen. In it is Aufkirch, a market-town, feated on the Wernitz and containing one Lutkeran church. This place was formerly an immediate dependency of the Empire. Beyond Aufkirch the Wernitz receives the little river of Sulz.

Furnheim, a Lutheran parish, with other villages and hamlets.

III. The prefecturate of Munchsroth, together with the former, is devolved to the princely line of Spielberg. Belonging to it is Munchfroth, a parochial-village, in which formerly was a priory of Benedictines.

The Lutheran parishes of Seegringen and Walkheim. Near the parochial-village of Walkheim, which is furrounded by the territory of Balder, lies the fource of the river faxt.

IV. The prefecturate of Durrwangen is situate on the river Sulz, being entirely surrounded by the territories of the Marggrave of Onolz-bach. In it is Durrwangen, a market-town and castle.

Laberswind, a hamlet.

V. The Prefecturate of Spielberg and Sammenheim is also wholly furrounded by the territories belonging to the Marggrave of Onolzbach. In it Spielberg, a market-town and castle from which the princely line receives its distinguishing title.

Gnozheim, a market-town; and Sammenheim, a village.

The Princely Landgravate of KLETTGAU, or SCHWARZENBERG, on Wegen Sulz.

§. 1. THE Klettgau, or Clettgow, which is also called Kleggau and Klekgau, and in Latin Pagus Latobrigicus, is a tract of land bordering, to the south, on the river Rhine; to the east and north, on the Swiss cantons of Zurich and Schaffhausen; to the north-west, on the landgravate of Stublingen, and, to the west, terminates on the four forest-towns. This district is somewhat above two leagues in length but not full two broad. On account of its former possessor it bears also the name of Sulz, and by some is even called the county of Sulz, though improperly, the counts of Sulz having formerly possessed only the landgravate of Klettgau, which was raised to a princely landgravate by the Emperor Leopold in the year 1694. The Klettgau abounds in good wine, particularly red, as also in corn, and is a fine sporting country.

§. 2. The ancient proprietors of this country; namely, the counts of Sulz, take their name from Sulz, a town of Wurtemberg, fituate on the Neckar, which belonged to them. So early as the year 1085, we find mention of one Alwig, a count of Sulz, probably the same by whose liberality the convent of Alpirspach was founded. Rudolph, son to Count Hermann, retrieved the decline in his family by marrying Urfula, daughter to John, the last count of Habsburg of the Lauffenburg line, and with her received for portion the landgravate of Klettgau and the lordships of Rothenburg and Krenkingen. This Prince also, in the year 1408, entered into a compact with his step-mother Agnes, by virtue of which were transferred to him and his father all the lands which she inherited and possessed from her husband John. In the year 1420, this agreement was confirmed by the Emperor Sigismund, on condition that the landgravate of Klettgau should be held as a fief of the arch-ducal house of Austria. Alwig, son to Rudolph, received for a portion with his wife Verena, daughter to Ulrich, lord of Brandis, the lordships of Vadutz, Schellenberg and Blumeneck, and his grand-nephew, Count Charles Lewis, obtained with his spouse, Dorothey Catherine, daughter to Adolph, count of Sayn, the lordships of Monklar and Mainzburg, or Manzenberg (already mentioned) but these lordships have fince devolved to other houses. In the year 1687, the male-iffue of the counts of Sulz became extinct in Count John Lewis. But the Emperor Leofold having declared his eldest daughter, Maria Anna, wife to Prince Ferdinand William Eusebius of Schwarzenberg capable of succeeding to all the lands and lordships, together with the other rights and privileges which belonged to her father, and of conveying these to the heirs of her body; the landgravate of Klettgau Klettgau descended to Adam Francis Charles, son to Prince Ferdinand of Schwarzenberg.

- §. 3. The full title of the reigning Prince of Schwarzenberg will occur in his territories in Franconia. We shall only observe here that from these countries in Swabia, he styles himself Prince and landgrave of Klettgau and count of Sulz; and also, by virtue of the same, hereditary chief-justice of the holy Roman Empire at Rothweil, and even appoints a deputy who is elected from among the counts or baren. This effice of chief-justice was first conferred by the Emperor, in the year 1360, on Count Rudolph of Sulz.
- §. 4. The house of Schwarzenberg, however, has not been yet able to acquire a seat and vote in the college of Princes, by virtue of this princely landgravate, being classed only among the Imperial counts of Swabia, though in the diets of the circle of Swabia, as proprietor of this landgravate, it has sat among the Lay-princes ever since the year 1696. In the matricular assessment of the Empire it is rated at two horsemen and nine sort, or sixty florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar pays thirty-seven ruthlers seventy-nine kruitzers.
- §. 5. In this landgravate an Imperial court was formerly usually held at Rhinow auf der Halden, or at Langenstein. But this has long since been disontinued.

§. 6. To the landgravate belongs

Thungen, or Tiengen, the Prince's residence and the seat of the government, but small, and lying on the river Wutach. This town sormerly, together with its district, constituted a particular lordship, which descended from the lords of Krenkingen to the counts of Sulz. In the year 1499, Thungen was pillaged and burnt by the Swiss.

The patishes of Baltersweil, Buhl, Degernau, Erzingen, Griessen, Jestetten, Lienheim, Lottstetten, Upper-Lauchingen, Rheinheim, Schwerzen and Dettichkofen, together with the castle of Kiffenberg.

The Princely-House of L I C H T E N S T E I N,

Of which the Carlovingian line was advanced by the Emperor Matthias to the dignity of Prince, in the year 1618, and the Gundaker line, in 1623, by the Emperor Ferdinand. The manner in which it obtained a feat and vote among the Lay-princes in the circle of Swabia was as follows: Prince John Adam Andrew, of the Carlovingian line, having advanced to the circle in the year 1707, a loan of 250,000 florins without interest, was, in return, complimented with a vote among the Princes. On his decease without male-issue in the year 1712, he left to his cousin, Prince

Toleph Winceslaus Laurence of the Gundaker or Hartmann line, the money abovementioned, which remains yet unpaid, togetherwith the counties and lordships of Vadutz and Schellenberg, and other estates which he had purchased in the year 1699. These were bought by Prince Antony Florian, brother to Prince Philip Erasmus, his father, and in the year 1713 he was admitted into the Imperial college of Princes; and, in the year 1719, his lordflips were raifed by the Emperor to an independant Imperial Principality; and, by virtue of this, his fon, Joseph John Adam, was for himself and male descendants admitted also into the Imperial college of Princes. This Prince dying without male-iffue, in the year 1732, the honours and privileges of his line devolved to the abovementioned Prince Joseph Wincellaus Laurence, whose claim to the vote of Lichtenstein, in the college of Princes, was for a long time contested; whereas, his right of voting among the Lay-princes of the circle of Swabia, by virtue of the compact betwixt the circle and the generous Prince John Andrew, in the year 1707, was admitted without any difficulty; nevertheless it has been disputed on what pretences even this vote among the Princes of the circle could be grounded: for no fooner had the county and lordship of Vadutz and Schellenberg been advanced to a Principality under the title of Lichtenstein, than the family made a demand of the capital advanced to the circle, and claimed their vote as Princes by virtue of the new Principality: but this the circle would not allow of. The family, however, by the Emperor's mediation, fo far obtained its end, that the vote in the circle should rest partly on the refidue of the abovementioned loan, which remains still unpaid, and likewife on the new Principality of Lichtenslein. Thus

The Principality of L I C H T E N S T E I N

Consists of the ancient Imperial county and lordship of Vadutz and Schellenberg, lying on the other side of the lake of Costanz on the Rhine, betwixt the lordships of Pludenz and Feldkirch in Switzerland. In the sisteenth century, these territories descended from the barons of Schellenberg to the barons of Brandis; and from them, in the year 1507, by marriage, to the counts of Sulz; but, in the year 1614. Caspar Hohenbembs purchased them for 200,000 florins; and, in 1699, a second purchase was made of them by Prince John Adam of Lichtenstein. The subsequent part of their history has been related above. Their contingency in the Imperial matricula was formerly eighteen florins; what alterations have since been made in it I know not; and to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar this Principality pays eighteen ruthlers sixty kruitzers. It forms a presecturate, the most remarkable places of which are the following, viz.

Vadun

Vadutz, a castle, standing on a steep rock, beneath which lies a market-town.

Schellenberg, a castle, seated on the Eschnerberg.

Benderen, a monastery of Præmonstratenses, situate not far from the Rhine, together with

The villages of Balzers, or Balferen, Trifen, Schan, or Schon, Eschen and Mauren.

The Landgravate of Stuhlingen, belonging to the Furstenberg family.

§. 1. THIS country lies on the river Wutach, which runs into the Rhine, and borders on the landgravate of Klettgau, the canton of Schaff-hausen, the manor of Blumenfeld belonging to the Teutonick order, the county of Bondorf and the Brilgau, being about two German miles and a half in length and one and a half broad.

§. 2. It belonged anciently to the counts of Lupfen, and, on the extinction of these counts, in the year 1532, devolved to Conrad of Pappenheim by virtue of a reversionary grant from the Emperor Maximilian II. His son Maximilian appointed his grandson, Francis Maximilian of Furstenberg heir to Stublingen, Howen and Engen. Other particulars relating to this land-gravate may be seen above in the introductory discourse to the princely house of Furstenberg.

§. 3. To the countries of Furstenberg-Stublingen belongs,

1. The proper landgravate of Stublingen, constituting a prefecturate, and containing in it

Stublingen, a small town, with a feat belonging to it lying on the river Wutach.

Divers villages; as, namely, Aich, Eberfingen, Eckingen, Kreuchingen, Upper and Under-Mettingen, Michen, or Muchheim, Schwaningen, Witzen, &c.

Berau, a nunnery of Benedictines; and Rieder, the name of two Augustine convents situate near each other but containing numbers of different fexes.

2. The lordship of Heben, or Hewen, called also Howen, together with Engen, which lies in the Hegau betwixt the landgravates of Baar and Nellenburg and other territories, and belonged formerly to barons who received their title from it: but these failing in the year 1570, this lordship, together with the landgravate of Stublingen, devolved to the counts of Lupsen, after-Vol. V.

wards to the Pappenheims, and lastly to the house of Furstenberg. It constitutes a prefecturate, to which belongs also the manor of Emmingen aus der Eck. In it is Hohenheben, or Hohenbeben and Hohenhoven, a castle, standing on a mountain.

Engen, a small town, containing a numery of Dominicans. On an eminence near the town stands also a monastery of Capuchins.

The villages of Bisendorf, Emingen, Haltingen, Honstettin, Schenkenburg, Stetten, Welsch-Engen, &c.

3. The prefecturate of Neuftadt, lying betwixt the Brifgau, the county of Bondorf and the landgravate of Baar. To it belongs Neufladt, a market-town, feated on the river Wutach, with a convent of Capuchins in it.

Grunewald, a convent of Hermits, together with The villages of Cappel, Lenzkirch, Seig, &c.

The abbey of Salmansweil, or Salmansweiler, called also Salmansweil, and in Latin Salamonis villa and Salemium, lies betwint the county of Heiligenberg, the diocese of Costanz and the Imperial town of Ueberlingen. Its newest part also extends to the Bodmer or Ueberlingen lake.

This abbey belongs to the order of Ciffercians, being founded towards the years 1134 and 1140, by Gunther, or Guntram, baron of Adelreuter, a nobleman possessed of great riches, and still bears the arms of that family, which are a ram sable in a field gules. The Emperor Conrad III. is said to have rendered it immediately subject to the Empire in the year 1142, and from the Emperor Frederick I. it not only received additional privileges but also a grant of certain lands.

The title of the abbot is, Most noble prelate and lord of the holy Roman Empire, and reigning abbot of the royal exempt, and consistorial free Imperial foundation and minister of Salem. He is usually vicar-general of the Cistercian order in Upper-Germany and superintendant of the nunneries of Heggback, Wald, Heil, the Kreuzthal, Rothmunster, Gutenzell, Baindt and Neiding. In the Diet he sits among the prelates of Swabia betwixt Elchingen and Weingarten; but in the circle thereof enjoys the first seat and vote among the bench of prelates. In the year 1729, by virtue of a decree of an Imperial commission from his assessment of one hundred and thirty florins in the matricula of the Empire, a deduction was made of sisty-four, together with a decree that in all imposts, whether of the Empire or circle, he was only to be rated at seventy-six slorins; and to the chamber at Wetzlar Wetzlar his quota is one hundred and fixty-nine ruthlers, eight kruitzers. Several records, bearing date in the years 1155, 1183, 1193, 1353, 1433, 1453, 1521, &c. thew that the Emperors took this abbey under their immediate protection: but I also find the Erbrtuchsesse of Waldburg mentioned as hereditary-governors and patrons of this abbey, by virtue of the counties of Scheer and Friedberg, and likewise that the abbeys invested the Princes of Furstenberg with the protection and criminal jurisdiction over the convent, and that they actually exercised the same. Furthermore I find, that the archdukes of Austria also, in the years 1458 and 1605, received the convent under their particular protection, and that it pays yearly eight tuns of protection-wine to the procurator's office of Swabia, though, in the year 1434 and 1487, it was, by the Emperors Sigismund and Frederick rendered exempt from all contributions, fervices, patronage and defence of the procurators of Swabia. The abbey is faid, by various occurrences to have lost one third of its revenues. From its village-courts an appeal lies to its State-court, thence to the abbot's chief court, and from thence still further to the Imperial-chamber. The most remarkable places in it are

The convent of Salmansweil, lying on the river Ach, and said, before the unhappy conflagration in the year 1697, to have been one of the finest monasteries in all Germany.

Around the convent lie the villages of Luctkirch, Bermating, Pjaffenhofen, Mimmenhausen and Seefelden, together with several hamlets and seats. At Maurach, on the lake of Ueberlingen, resides a justice.

3. The manor of Obingen, or Owingen, is environed with the district of the Imperial town of Ueberlingen.

4. The prefecturate of Bachhaupten lies betwixt the counties of Scheer, Konigseck, Heiligenberg and Sigmaringen, and contains in it the villages of Bachhaupten, Ostrach, Eeinbart and several hamlets and seats.

5. The lordship and prefecturate of Schemelberg lies on the river Rise, between the territories of Biberach and Austria.

The abbey has also a prefecturate-office at Stockach, with a pfleg-amt, or stewartry, at Ulm; dependent on which is also the village of Under-Elchingen, not far from the abbey of that name; a pfleg-amt at Ehingen, another at Ueberlingen, a manor at Kirchberg, and farms at Moskirch and Costanz.

The Benedictine abbey of Weingarten, which belongs to the cathedral of Costanz, stands in the market-town of Altorf, being also surrounded by the bailiwick of Altorf. In this market-town anciently stood a nunnery of Benedictines, which was founded in the eighth century by Count Isen-bard, bard, and endowed by his fon Count Welpho, founder of the Guelphs, whose fon Ethico restored this ruinated convent. But Welpho II. about the year 1047, removed the Nuns from thence to the old convent of Altamunfter, lying in the Nordgau, and on the other hand ordered the Benedictine Monks to Altorf. In the year 1053, the convent here was burnt down, upon which Welpho translated it to Martinsberg, which lies near the town. Welpho II. III. and IV. together with Henry III. Welpho V. and VI. out of their hereditary county of Altorf endowed it with many estates, vasfals, villages, hamlets and tythes. The Emperor Henry III. took. it into the protection of himself and the Empire, and by Henry IV. it was created an immediate State thereof. The Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1376, not only confirmed those acts of favour, but also with immunity from the imposts and power of the procurators in Swabia, which last article, in the year 1489, was also ratified by the Emperor Frederick. The title of the abbot is Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire, lord of the respectable Imperial foundation and abbey of Weingarten, abbot also of H)fen, lord of the independent Imperial lordship of Blumenegg, Brochenxell and Hagnau. In the Diet of the Empire he fits among the prelates of Swabia, as in that of the circle also among the prelates, and in both betwixt Salmansweil and Ochsenbausen. His contingency in the matricula of the Empire and circle is one hundred and five florins; to the kammerziele, or Imperial chamber at Wetzlar, he pays for the abbey one hundred and thirty-five, ruthlers twenty-three kruitzers, and for the lordfhip of Bhumenegg, twelve ruthlers, fifteen kruitzers and a half. The præfect of the country claims a criminal jurifdiction over this abbey; but that the abbey opposes and itself appoints justitiaries over its vassals and estates, and holds also the procuratorship of Alterf as a mortgage from the Empire.

The lordships and estates of the abbey are as follows:

L O R D S H I P S.

- 1. Brochenzell, lying on the river Schusz, and furrounded by the prefecturate.
 - 2. Hagnau, seated on the lake of Ueberlingen and not far from Morsburg.
- 3. The free Imperial lordship of Blumenegg, or Blumeneck, lying betwixt the above described counties of Sonneberg, Pludenz, Feldkirch and Bregenz in the Walgau, and having formerly lords of its own to whom it gave title. From them it descended to the counts of Wardenberg, then to the counts of Brandis, and lastly to the counts of Sulz, who, in the year 1613, sold it to the abbey of Weingarten for 150,000 florins. This lordship is under the direction of a presect, and contains in it Blumeneck, a castle, seated on a mountain.

S. Gerold, formerly called Friesen, or Im Friessen, a Benedictine abbey belonging to a convent of Hermits, together with

The villages of Pludesch, Turingen, Ludesch, Auf Raggal, Aufplons, Son-

- II. Places and estates lying in the procuratorship of Altorf, and under its forest and supreme jurisdiction, but which are for the most part in the lower jurisdiction and subject to the abbey. These are seated in the following manors of the bailiwick; viz.
- 1. In the manor of Fischbacker, on the lake of Ueberlingen, not far from Buchborn, stands

The Benedictine abbey of Hofen dedicated to S. Pantaleon, which from a numbery was converted, in the year 1420, into a convent of Monks and incorporated with the abbey of Weingarten. This place has the lower jurif-diction over five houses in the village of Seemosz.

To the lower-court of Haffen-Weingarten belong the villages of Hofen and Wagerskausen.

2. In the manor of Zogenweiler, belonging to the abbey of Weingarten, together with the lower jurisdiction thereof, are the villages of Essenbausen, Lengenweiler, Fronkossen, Reuten and Ergerksehweiler.

3. In the manor of Geigelbacher is the Pluzenreuten court, to which belong the villages of Phuzenreuten, Staig and Neuhausen.

4. In the manor of Schindelbacker is the lower court of Plertied, on which depend the villages of Plerriedt and Stuben. In this manor also belonging to the abbey, but without any jurisdiction over it, lies the village of Munechreutin.

5. In the manor of Bosch, Pferricher and Bodenegg, the abbey is possessed of several farms with the lower jurisdiction thereof.

In the manor of Grunkraut it possesses also nine farms under a lower jurisdiction, but the villages of Sibrestreutin and Schlier, together with the hamlet of Upper-Sulgen and certain houses and farms, though belonging thereto, are independent of its jurisdiction.

In the prefecturate, or manor, about Gebratzhofen, on the heath of Leut-kirch, it has thirty farms and a mill belonging to it, with the lower jurit-diction thereof.

The ABBEY of OCHSENHAUSEN.

The Benedictine abbey of Ocksenbausen lies between the Imperial towns of Memmingen and Biberach, being founded in the year 1100 as a priory dependent on the abbey of St. Blasius in the Scharzwald; but, in the year 1301, it was raised to an abbey and declared absolutely free and independent of that of St. Blasius. Its privileges were gradually augmented: by the Emperor Wenceslaus in the year 1397, by the Emperor Sigismund in the year 1434, and by the Emperor Frederick III. in the year 1452, it was exempted from all fummons and process in a provincial court. In the year 1548, the Emperor Ferdinand I. took it into his particular protection and that of the house of Austria, under which it still remains. abbey pays annually fix florins as protection-money to the procurator of Altorf, and for Ummendorf ten more. In the year 1706, the Emperor Joseph conferred on the abbot the criminal jurisdiction throughout all the villages and lands belonging to the abbey. The abbot's title is, Most noble prelate and lord of the most holy Roman Empire, lord sovereign abbot of the immediate free Imperial abbey of Ochsenhausen, lord of the free Imperial lordships of Thankeimb, Umendorf, Upper and Under-Sulmentingen, as also of Horn and Fischbach. In the Diet of the Empire he fits and votes betwixt the Swabian prelates of Weingarten and Yrsee, but in that of the circle of Swabia he fits on the bench of prelates betwixt Weingarten and Elchingen. His affessment in the matricula of the Empire and circle is one hundred florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar he pays one hundred and thirty-nine ruthlers, fixty-nine kruitzers. From the manor-courts of the abbey an appeal lies to the regency, which consists of an ordinary-council composed of laics, ecclefiaftics and other officers.

Near the convent of Ochsenbausen lies a market-town of the same name on the river Rottam, containing one parish-church.

The manors in the territories of the abbey are those of Umendorf, Horn and Fischbach, together with Thankeimb and Upper and Under-Sulmentingen. To it belong also the parishes of Steinhausen, Simmertingen, Thanheimb, Umendorf, Reinstetten, Bellmont, Ringschnaidt, Mittelbuch, Rottumb, having all regulars and capitulars; Laupheim, Winterrieden, Kirchdorf, Opfingen, Baldringen, Schoneburg, Under-Sinonertingen, Horn and Fischback, which are subject to secular clergy.

The lordship of Wain, formerly belonging to this abbey, is now a dependency of the Imperial city of Ulm.

The Abbey of E L C H I N G E N.

The Benedictine abbey of Elchingen, originally Aichlingen, stands on a high mountain close by the Danube, being furrounded by the territories of the Imperial city of Ulm. This abbey was founded in the year 1128, in an ancient castle, where a few years after it was destroyed by fire, but rebuilt again with greater stateliness in the year 1142. The abbot hereof is flyled, Most noble lord-prelate of the most holy Roman Empire, and reigning lord of the respectable and immediately free Imperial abbey of Elchingen. In the Diet of the Empire he fits and votes in the bench of Swabian prelates betwixt Marchthal and Salmanfweil; but in that of the circle of Swabia he is feated between Ochsenhausen and Irsee. His afsessment in the matricula of the Empire and circle is at present fifty florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar one hundred and fixty-two florins, twenty-nine kruitzers: but he has protested against this taxation as too burdensome, the abbey having, fince the year 1521, loft near two hundred estates, particularly the market-towns of Waldsletten, the large villages of Ochfenbrun, Wallenhausen and Holzheim, together with the hamlets of Weissengen and Balbertskofen.

To this abbey still belong,

1. The prefecturate of Elchingen, containing in it the villages of Thal and Thalfingen.

2. The Pfleg-amt, or bailiwick, of Tomertingen; to which belong the parishes of Tomertingen, Dornstatt and Westersletten.

3. The bailiwick of Fabilieim, belonging to which are the villages of Upper and Under-Fabilieim, Nersingen, Strasz and Leybi.

The Cistercian abbey of Kaysersheim, or Keyszheim, in Latin Abbatia Casariensis, stands at a small distance from Donauwerth, in the county of Graispach, being incorporated into the dutchy of Neuberg. This abbey was founded, in the year 1135, by Count Henry of Lechsgemunde, with this prescription, that the son of the Blessed Virgin should be its only patron and protector; but the calamities of the times made it further advisable, in the year 1274, to sollicit the protection of King Rudolphus; in 1346, that of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria; and, in the year 1349, that of Stephen, Pfalzgrave of the Rhine and duke of Bavaria. The succeeding dukes of Bavaria aiming at the sovereignty over it, the Emperor Charles, on a representation of the manifest injustice of such a procedure, declared the abbey absolutely free and independent of those dukes, with the liberty of electing whom they pleased for their defender under the Emperor. This immunity was ratified by the Emperors Winceflaus and Sigismund, and the convent reckoned an immediate State of the Empire. In the years 1446, 1459, 1460 and 1475, it entered in the matricula of the Empire, and in 1521 was furnimened to the Diet at Worms, and by a decree thereof rated at four horse-men and nxtvfeven foot. In the year 1511, an agreement was entered into betwixt Frederick, Palatine of the Rhine, the duke of Bavaria as his guardian, and the abbev; in which the latter paid feven hundred and fifty floring down in lieu of the land-tax required of it, the duke engaging for himfelf, fucceffors, pupil and heirs, that no taxes should at any time be required of the abbey, its vaffals and estates; but that it should continue, as before, in the full and unmolested enjoyment of its rights, jurisdictions, powers, mortgages and revenues. In the year 1527, the Palatine and abbeventered into another convention, that, in confideration of the fum of one hundred florins annually paid to that Prince, he should take it into his protection, but without any jurisdiction or power of imposing a tax thereon, and that one party should be at liberty to renounce the compact of reciprocal aid. In the year 1534, by virtue of a new agreement, which was ratified, in the year 1541, by the Emperor Charles, it was agreed that the abbev should accept of, acknowledge, have and continue the Elector-palatine as proprietor of the county of Griafpach for their perpetual patron and defender; and, in confideration of fuch protection yearly, pay to him the fum of fix hundred florins; that the Elector-palatine thould have criminal jurifdiction in the places within the district of the abbey, but without any manner of jurisdiction over its vassals, possessions or lands, or in any shape oppress them; but the Pfalzgraves afterwards making feveral attempts against the independency of this abbey, and a long and vehement contest arising on that account betwirt the circles of Swabia and Bavaria, each laying claim to it; and the abbey fometimes fiding with one, fometimes with another, and fometimes with neither, at length, in the year 1757, it was formally admitted by the circle of Swabia on the bench of prelates betwixt Ur/perg and Roggenburg, though the circle of Bavaria did not fail to enter a protest against it. In the Diet of the Empire the abbot possesses the first feat among the prelates of the Rhine. The affestment of the abbey in the matricula of the Empire amounted formerly to two hundred and eighty-two florins. In the year 1701, it engaged to pay annually, at two stated terms, the fum of three hundred florins to the cheft of the circle of Bavaria; and, in case of a proportionate augmentation of supplies, to raise four hundred within the terms specified. In the year 1757, it contributed two hundred and fixteen men to the contingency of the circle of Bavaria, declaring itself, however, at the same time as belonging to that of Swabia. The Premonstratensian abbey of Roth, also improperly called Munchroth, and belonging to the cathedral of Augsburg, lies betwixt the abbey of Ochfenhausen, the county of Waldburg and other small territories. It was founded in the year 1126, and, in 1376, taken by the Emperor Charles IV. under the particular protection and patronage of the Empire, and exempted from the power and imposts of the procurator of Upper-Swabia. In the year 1338, it obtained also a privilege from the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and, in 1430, from the Emperor Sigismund, of not being liable to impositions of any country-court; and ever since the year 1619, it has obtained, as paramount, the supreme and criminal jurisdiction over all the villages, hamlets, manors and estates which it holds as siefs of the house of Austria, paying thereunto 8000 florins, exclusive of a ton of wine annually to the presecturate instead of protection-money. The title of its abbot is,

The Pramonstratensian abbey of Weissenan, in Latin Augia Alba, or Minderau, and Augia Minor, which belongs to the cathedral of Coffanz, lies on the river Schusz, betwixt the bailiwick of Altorf, the city of Ravensburg and the county of Montfort. It is faid to have been originally the feat of fome Hermits, which, in the year 990, was raifed to a convent, in 1145 created a Præmonstratensian priory, and, in the year 1257, an abbey. In the year 1164, the Emperor Frederick I. took the convent under his own particular protection and that of the Empire. The dukes of Swabia, of the house of Hohenstauffen, endowed it with several villages, hamlets, manors and lands, granting to it many privileges which were confirmed not only by King Rudolph in the year 1280, but also by succeeding Kings and Emperors. In 1376, in particular, the Emperor Charles IV. took the convent into the patronage of the Empire, exempting it from the jurisdiction of the provincial procurators of Upper-Swabia, to whom, however, it still pays annually twenty bushels of peas, one tun of wine and one pound of pepper, as protection-money. The title of its abbot is, Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire, lord of the Imperial foundation and abbey of Weiffenau. In the Diet of the Empire he fits and votes on the bench of the prelates of Swabia betwixt the abbots of Roggenburg and Schuffenried, and in that of the circle of Swabia between the abbots of Roth and Schuffenried. The village of Oberhofen, with the manor of Rambratzkofen, belongs to it, together with the low jurisdiction; but with respect to the supreme and forest-jurisdiction thereof, it is subject to the provincial-presecturate, having within it several estates and manors.

The Præmonstratensian abbey of Schussenried, or Soreth, in Latin Sorethum, or Abbatia Sorethana, lies betwixt the county of Waldburg, the barony of Aulendorf, the lordship of Sebeer, the abbey of Buchau and other territories bordering also on the Federsee. Within its jurisdiction rises the little river of Schuse. In the year 1188, it was founded by the brothers Beringer and Conrad of Schuffenried in their castle, and belongs to the cathedral of Costanz. In 1376, the Emperor, Charles IV. took it under the particular patronage and protection of the Empire, exempting it from all jurisdiction to the provincial prefecturate. In the year 1487, the Emperor Frederick III. granted it the following privilege; viz. that its officers, people and subjects should not be liable to the imposts of any court. Its abbot is styled, Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire and lord of the Imperial foundation and abbey of Schuffenried. In the Diet of the Empire he fits among the prelates of Szoubia betwixt the abbots of Weissenau and the prior of Wettenbausen; but in that of the circle of Swabia, between the abbots of Weissenau and Marchthal. The affefiment of this abbey in the Imperial matricula was formerly eighty florins, but at prefent is only thirty-five. To the kammerziele, or Imperial chamber at Wetzlar, it pays fixty-feven ruthlers, fifty-fix kruitzers and a half. It has lost several estates and tythes which once belonged to it, together with the village of Laupach. Appertaining to it at present are the villages of Almansweiler, Michelweneda, Steinhausen and Stassangen, with the bailiwick annexed thereto, as also a number of hamlets and manors.

 A R C H T H A L.

The Præmonstratensian abbey of Marchthal, in Latin Martalum, or Martellum, belonging to the cathedral of Costanz, lies on a rock in the Danube, the territories of it extending to the Federsee, or Lacus Plumarius. This abbey at first was only a college of canons, founded so early as the years

1000 and 1006 by the Hermanns, father and son, dukes of Swabia. In the year 1171, it was made a priory, and, in 1418, an abbey. In the year 1575, the Emperor Maximilian II. granted it an immunity from foreign courts, which the Emperor Leopold confirmed in 1659, with the reservation of some particular cases. The abbot is styled, Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire and lord of the Imperial soundation and abbey of Marchthal. The assessment of the abbey in the matricula of the Empire was formerly sorty-sour florins, but at present it amounts to no more than thirty-two. Its taxation to the chamber of Wetzlar is eighty-one ruthlers sourteen kruitzers and a half. The criminal jurisdiction over the village near the convent of Marchthal, is an Imperial sief. To the jurisdiction of the abbey also belong the villages of Dathausen, Dieterskirch, Hausen, Kirchbirlingen, Reutlingen, Saugart, Seekirch, Under-Wackingen and Uttenweiler, with several hamlets and manore.

The Benedictine abbey of Peterskausen. in Latin Petri-domus, or Peterski. fium, lies directly opposite to the city of Costanz. This abbey was founded about the year 980, and belongs to the cathedral of Costanz. The title of its abbot is, Most noble lord-prelate of the holv Roman Empire and lord of the two Imperial foundations and abbeys of St. Gregory of Petershausen and SS. Cyril and George at Stein on the Rhine, prior of Klingenzell, lord of the abbey at St. Mary's Gate in Mengen, and also lord of the lordships of Stauffen, Hilzingen, Rietheim, &c. In the Diet of the Empire he has a feat and vote on the bench of the Swabian prelates betwixt the abbots of 17 fee and Ur/perg; but in that of the circle of Swabia between the abbot of Marchthal and the prior of Wettenhausen. His assessment to the Imperial matricula amounts at prefent to twenty florins, and his contingency to the chamber at Wetzlar is forty ruthlers fifty-four kruitzers. This abbey is under the protection of Austria. A confiderable part of its estates lies in foreign lands, but, exclusive of these, in the year 1581, the city of Cofanz purchased the jurisdiction over the village or suburb of Peterskausen for 3000 florins; and, in the years 1641 and 1682, the abbey lost several estates and lands by the fortifications added to the city of Costanz. Indeed, the convent in the free-town of Stein, under the jurifdiction of Zurich, was, in the year 1597, united by the Pope with the abbey of Petershausen; but this convent has lately been suppressed. Klingenzell lies in the Turgau, being subject to the jurifdiction of the Swifs.

The lordships of Stauffen, Hilzingen and Rietheim lie in the neighbourhood hood of the Wurtemberg fortress of Hoben-twiel, in the county of Nellenburg.

At Hilzingen is a prefect.

To the abbey also belong the villages of Herdwangen, Sauldorf and Senthart, which, together with several other villages and market-towns, lie between the county of Heiligenberg, the commandery of Alschbausen, the lordship of Moskirch and the territories of Uberlingen.

The Priory of WETTENHAUSEN.

The priory of Wettenhausen, in which are regular canons of the order of St. Augustine belonging to the cathedral of Augsburg, lies with its territories between and on the rivers Gunz, Kamlach and Mindel, being surrounded by the Austrian marggravate of Burgan. This abbey is said to have been founded about the year 982 or one hundred years earlier. The prior is styled, Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire, and lord of the Imperial foundation and priory of Wettenhausen, counsellor and perpetual chaplain to his Roman, Imperial and royal Majesty. In the Diet of the Empire he sits on the bench of the prelates of Swabia, betwixt the abbots of Schussenried and Gengenbach; but in that of the circle of Swabia betwixt the abbots of Peterskausen and Zwifalten. Its present assessment to the matricula of the Empire and circle is twenty florins. Its quota to the chamber of Wetzlar is sifty-four ruthlers, eight kruitzers and a half.

The abbey of Wettenhausen itself stands on the river Kamlach. In it lies interred Henry, the last Marggrave of Burgan, who died without issue in the year 1283.

At Great-Kotz and Rosingen are two bailiwicks, which belong to the priory, and at Wattenweiler is a bailist. Exclusive of the villages of Limpa, Ellersbach, Huipa and Ettenbeuren, to this priory belong also several hamlets and manors.

The Benedictine abbey of Zwifalten, which belongs to the cathedral of Costanz, lies, together with its lands on the river Alb, betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the Danube, bordering also on the territories of Furstenberg and Austria. This abbey was founded, in the year 1089, by the count of Achalm, and obtained its first abbot in the year 1091. The protection and patronage of this abbey is said to have devolved from the dukes of Bavaria

Gengenbach.] G E R M A N Y.

Bavaria to the counts of Emerkingen, and from them, in the year 1303, to the dukes of Austria; but the dukes of Wurtemberg have maintained, that the right of protection to the abbey descended to them, as it lies in the territories of Count Achalm, whose country fell to them. They have also actually exercifed protection, patronage, purveyance and territorial jurifdiction over it, so that it is not summoned to the Diet of the circle of Swabia, neither does it fend a representative to the Imperial Diet; but, in the year 1751, it freed itself from this connection with the dukes of Wurtemberg, by ceding to them the three villages of Great-Enslingen, Oedenwaldstetten and Neubausen, with certain casualties. The title of its abbot is, Most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire, and reigning lord of the Imperial foundation and abbey of Zwifalten. In the Diet of the Empire he fits on the bench of the Swabian prelates between the prior of Wettenhausen and the abbot of Gengenback, and in that of the circle of Swabia has the same place. His affessment in the matricula of the Empire is———florins, and to a kammerziele he contributes forty ruthlers.

The convent itself lies in a valley at the foot of the Alb on two rivulets called the Ach; accordingly the place where it stands, but which was pulled down at the time of its foundation, was called Zwifaltach, in Latin Duplices Aquæ.

The villages belonging to this abbey are Aichenlau, Aichstetten, Bechingen, Degeseld, Durrenwaldstetten, Ehstetten, Emeringen, Geiszingen, Hohenberg, Ittenhausen, Kirchheim, Mozingen, Oberstetten, Pfraunstetten, Taugendorf, Upfelmehr and Wilsingen.

The lordship of Reichenstein was purchased in the year 1499, and includes in it the castle of Reichenstein with the villages of Thalbeim and Lauteren.

The castle of Mochenthal, anciently called also Openthal, was, in the year 1192, conferred on the convent by the counts of Berg. In it is a chapel.

Obs. In the Austrian town of Ebingen this abbey has had a college or academy ever since the year 1686, and in the Turgau possesses the house of Middle-Gyrsberg, or Giersperg, which was purchased in 1679.

The Abbey of G E N G E N B A C H.

The Benedictine abbey of Gengenbach lies in the Imperial town of that name, and belongs to the cathedral of Straszburg. It is said to have been founded about the year 740. The title of its abbot is most noble lord-prelate of the holy Roman Empire, of the Imperial foundation and abbey of Gengenbach, and lord of Rysz. In the Diet of the Empire he enjoys both a feat and vote on the bench of Swabian prelates between those of Zwi-falten and Lindau, but in that of the circle of Swabia betwixt Zwifalten and Heggbach. His affeliment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle is at present only seven florins, but his contingency to the chamber at Wetzlar is forty ruthlers fifty-sour kruitzers. The Princes of Furstenberg are protectors of this abbey. It has lost the principal part of the estates and revenues which it possessed in Swabia, Alface, the city and bishopric of Basel, the Brisgau and Kingsingerthal. At present it has bailists at Offenburg and Zell am Hammersbach.

The Abber of $$H$$
 E G G B A C H .

The Cistorcian abbey of Heggbach, or Heppach, belonging to the diocese of Costanz, lies betwirt the abbey of Ochsenbausen, the Imperial town of Biberach and the Austrian territories. This abbey is said by some to have been sounded in the eleventh century, but according to others in the year 1233, and is subordinate to the abbot of Salmansweil. The title of its abbess is, most noble lady-abbess and lady of the Imperial soundation and abbey of Heggbach. In the Diet of the Empire she sits and votes on the bench of the Swabian prelates, betwirt the abbesses of Rothmunster and Gutenzell, but in that of the circle of Swabia betwirt the abbot of Gengenbach and the abbess of Gutenzell. In the matricula of the Empire and Circle her assessment is at present sixteen florins, and her taxation to the Kammerziele thirteeen ruthlers, forty-six kruitzers and a quarter. To the jurisdiction of this abbey belongs.

The village of Mictingen, together with certain hamlets, as namely Sulmingen. It possesses also a share in the lower jurisdiction of the village of Aichssetten.

The Abbey of G U \mathcal{T} E N Z E L L.

The Cificrcian abbey of Gutenzell, in Latin Bona cella, in some ancient records also called Gotteszell, or Dei cella, lies betwixt the abbey of Ochsen-bausen, the lordship of Iler-Aychheim and other territories. It is said to have been sounded about the year 1240, being under the inspection of the abbot of Salmansweil. The title of its abbess is that of most noble lady-abbess and lady of the free and noble soundation and abbey of Gutenzell belonging to the holy Roman Empire. In the Imperial Diet she fits on the bench of Swabian prelates betwixt the abbesses of Heggbach and Baindt, and in the circle of Swabia between Heggbach and Rahmunster. In the matricula of the Empire and the Circle she is at present assessed only at ten florins, paying also to the kammerziele thirteen ruthlers, forty-six kruitzers and a quarter. The territory of this abbey is very small.

The Abbey of R O \mathcal{T} H M U N S \mathcal{T} E R.

The Cistercian abbey of Rothmunster, in Latin Vallis B. Mariæ Virginis belonging to the diocese of Costanz, lies on the Nockar, not far from the Imperial town of Rothweil. This abbey was originally but a small convent called Hohenmauren, which stood near Rothweil at a place called Altestadt, but afterwards in a wilderness called Holperbach, and at last was removed to the place of its present situation about the year 1224, and named Rothmunster. It is subject to the abbot of Salmansweil. The title of its abbess is that of most noble lady-abbess of the Imperial soundation and abbey of Rothmunster. In the Diet of the Empire she has a seat and vote on the bench of the Swabian prelates betwixt the abbesses of Lindau and Heggbach, but in that of Swabia betwixt Gutenzell and Baindt. Her present assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle is nineteen florins, but to the kammerziele she is rated at forty ruthlers, fifty-four kruitzers. To its jurisdiction belong

The villages of Aixen, Lauffen, Fridlingen, Zepfenhan, &c.

The Abbey of B A I N D T.

The Cistercian abbey of Baindt, in Latin Poundum, and also Abbatia Bintensis, or Hortus storidus, belonging to the cathedral of Costanz, and subject to the direction of the abbot of Salmansweil, lies on the river Schusz, in the district of Altors. This abbey was founded in the year 1241, and in 1376 taken under the particular protection of the Empire, and freed from all exactions and imposts of the prefect. The title of its abbess is that of most noble lasy-abbess of the Imperial soundation and abbey of Baindt of the holy Roman Empire. In the Imperial Diet she holds the last seat on the bench of Swabian prelates, and in the circle of Swabia the same on the bench of the prelates thereof. Her assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle is at present only sour florins, and her contingency to the chamber at Wetzlar thirteen ruthlers, forty-six kruitzers and a quarter. Vol. V.

This abbey is under the protection of the district, and pays annually for protection-money one florin in gold, two cakes of gingerbread, three bushels of peas, and also twenty bushels of oats for the privilege of felling wood in the forest of Altorf. It has no peculiar territory of its own, and but one single tenant liable to taxes; its proper subjects being under the dominion of other lordships, and indeed the greatest part of its lands also under the high and low jurisdiction of the presecturate.

The Commandery of Alfchhausen, together with the other commanderies of the Teutonick order lying in the circle of Swabia, and belonging to the bailiwick of Alface and Burgundy.

The commandery of Alfekhausen belongs to the Teutonick order within the bailiwicks of Alface and Burgundy. The commandery of this bailiwick, which is also that of Alfekhausen, is reckoned indeed among the Imperial prelates, but in the Diet of the Empire belongs, on account of this commandery, to the college of Swabian counts, and also in the circle of Swabia to the bench of counts and lords, on which it has the first seat. Its affessment in the Imperial matricula, which formerly amounted to one hundred and fixty florins, was, in the year 1682, reduced to fixty; but it pays to the chamber at Wetzlar a hundred and one ruthlers, forty-five kruitzers.

To this commandery belongs

Alsochausen, or Altschausen, also called Alshausen, a castle, which is the residence of the country commandery of the bailiwick of Alsace and Burgundy, and lies betwixt the district of Altors and the counties of Konigseck and Scheer. The place of the same name situate near it is a free Imperial village, whose title to jurisdiction in ecclesiastical and civil matters, has been frequently contested by the Teutonick order.

The villages of Alligebe, Eberspach, Gombs, and Muchbach, together with feveral hamlets and manors lie round the before-mentioned castle.

The other commanderies of the bailiwick of Alface and Burgundy in the circle of Swabia, but of which only those of Meinau pay their contingency to the Imperial matricula of the commandery are the following: viz.

I. The commanderies of Robr and Waldsteten, to which belong the following places: namely,

1. Within the marggravate of Burgau.

Robr, a market-town, fituate on the river Kamblach, not far from the abbey of Wettenhausen.

Waldsletten, a market-town, situate not far from Gunz.

Blaichen, a village, feated betwixt the rivers Gunz and Kamblach.

2. The village of Setzingen, with the market-town of Herrlingen and the castle of Arneck, on the river Blau, are either wholly, or only in part, surrounded

3. The administratorship in the Imperial city of Ravensburg.

4. The castle of Achberg, together with some hamlets on the eastern borders of the county of Montfort.

II. The commandery of Meinau, to which belongs

- 1. Meinau, a small pleasant island, situate in the Bodmer or Ueberlinger-lake, which Arnold of Langenstein conferred on the Teutonick order in the year 1282. This island produces wine and corn, and on it stands a commandery-house.
- 2. The wards in the town of Immenstadt belonging to Count Konig feck, and also in the Imperial town of Ueberlingen.
- 3. The manor of Blumenfeld lying betwixt the landgravate of Nellenburg, the canton of Schaffbausen, the landgravates of Baar and Stublingen, and the county of Thengen. To it belongs.

Blumenfeld, a small town, seated on the river Ach.

The villages of Leipferdingen, Wolterdingen, Binningen, &c.

III. The commandery of Beuggen, to which belong

The market-towns of Beuggen, with the stewartry of Frick, in the fouthern part of the Brifgau, and that of Rheinfelden.

IV. The commandery of Freyburg, in the town of Freyburg in the Brifgau. To it belong the villages of Wasenweiler, situate betwixt Freyburg and the Rhine; with those of Waldorf, Schwandorf, and Volmaringen, lying all three in the neighbourhood of the Wurtemberg towns of Nagold and Haiterbach; as also Raxingen, Ilingen, Robrdorf, and Hemmendorf, seated in the neighbourhood of the Austrian towns of Horb and Ehingen.

The Territories belonging to the kouse of Count Oettingen - Wallerstein

Lie partly in that tract of land called the Hertfeld, or Hartfeld, in Latin durus campus, being a fandy and barren foil, and are

I. Those manors belonging to the counts of the line of Oettingen-Oettingen, which are within the government of Wallerstein, namely,

1. The prefecturate of Wallerstein, in which is Wallerstein, a market-town, containing a residence-castle.

2. The prefecturate of the marquifate of Offingen, in which is

The marquifate of Offingen, a market-town.

- 3. The manor of Thanhausen, or Dannhausen, having its seat in a village of the same name, not far from Seckta.
- 4. The stewartry of Flochberg, which has its seat in the village of the same name, not far from the town of Bopfingen.
 - 5. The prefecturate of Neresheim, in which is Nereskeim, a small town, situate in the Hertfeld. Near it on the mounof St. Ulrichsberg stands the Benedictine monastery of Nereskeim, which was founded in the year 1095, by count Hartmann III. of Dillingen and Kyburg in the Imperial district of Nereskeim, and on the extinction of the counts of Dillingen in 1286, fell under the territorial jurisdiction of Oettingen. It obtained indeed a papal bull of exemption, but without detriment to the territorial jurisdiction, hereditary protection, and administration of the counts of Oettingen.

6. The lordship and presecturate of Biszingen, through which runs the little river of Kossel, containing in it the market towns of Upper-Bissingen, and the caftle of Hebenburg, with certain villages and hamlets.

7. Erdling, a village and commandery of the order of St. John, fituate not far from the town of Nordlingen, is under the protection and territorial jurisdiction of the counts of Oettingen.

8. Kirckbeim and Maiking, or Moking, are convents, over which the counts of Oettingen have the right of protection and administration.

II. The manors inherited by the counts of the extinct line of Octtingen-Octtingen, and possessed by virtue of the compact entered into with Octtingen-Spielberg. These are under a particular government, and are

1. The Upper-Amt, or prefecturate of Alerheim, in which is Alerheim, a castle and large village, containing a Lutheran parish. Near it, in the year 1645, was fought a battle betwixt the French and Bavarians.

Holzkirch, a market-town, feated on the river Wornitz, and in which is held the criminal court of this Upper-Amt. This town contains a Lutheran parith.

2. The pfleg-amt or bailiwick of the convent of Zimmern, consists of the ancient Ciftercian numbers of Zimmern. This place at present, together with Deining, forms a Lutheran parish.

3. The upper prefecturate of Harburg, in which is Harburg, a large market-town and castle, seated on the river Wornitz, and containing a special superintendency over eight parishes.

Appezhofen, a village, which is also a superintendency including eight parifhes.

4. The prefecturate of Hohaus, to which belongs

Holoaus, a castle, and Hiben-Altheim, a castle and village, containing a Lutheran parish.

5. The manor of Christgarten, confisting of an ancient monastery of Carthusians.

6. The counts of Oettingen have the protection and administration of the Benedictine monastery of Dettingen.

Obs. 1. The house of Oettingen, together with four other families, has also a share in the parochial village of Trochtesfingen on the Eger, situate betwixt betwixt Nordlingen and Bopfingen. The minister here is also Lutheran and special intendant to the count of Oettingen-Oettingen, with eleven Lutheran parishes under him. 2. The castle and village of Diemantslein, giving title to an ancient noble family, and lying on the borders of the dutchy of Neuburg, which, together with Burgberg, escheated as a vacant fief to the Octtingen family.

The Counts of Oettingen-Baldern

Posses in the county of Oettingen

I. The prefecturate of Baldern, to which belongs

Baldern, a market-town and the refidentiary feats, together with Mark Zobing a market-town.

II. The manor of Rotting, which takes its name from a village.

III. The manor of Authausen, also receiving its name from a village fituate on the little river Eger.

IV. The manor of Ratzenslein, in which stands the castle and village of Ratzenstein, together with two other villages and a hamlet.

The Furstenberg Lordship of M O S Z K I R CH.

The lordship of Moszkirch which lies on the Danube betwixt the upper county of Hohenberg, the county of Sigmaringen, the abbey of Petershaufen, the commandery of Alfchhaufen, and the lordship of Waldsperg, formerly belonged to the counts of Zimmern, and afterwards to the counts of Helfensiein, which last became utterly extinct in the year 1627. Count Wratistaus II. of Furstenberg, who successively married the two countesses of Helfenstein, the latter of whom, named Francisca Carolina, was heiress to Rudolph the last count of Helfenslein, brought this lordship to his house, founding the line of Furstenberg-Moszkirch. This lordship at present constitutes a prefecturate, to which belongs Moszkirch, or Meszkirch, a town and castle, situate in a country called Madach, and reckoned in the H gau. In this town is a convent of Capuchins.

Meningen, a morket-town.

The villages of Geckingen, Heudorf, Kreenheimstetten, Langenhart, Leiberdingen, and Robrdorf, in the latter of which stood the family seat of the ancient counts of Rokrdorf.

Wildenstein, a castle, seated on two steep rocks on the Danube, and partly hewn out of them, belonged to the barons of Gundelfingen, afterwards to the counts of Zimmern, and next to the counts of Historilein, from whom it descended to the Furstenberg family.

Falkenstein, a castie, standing on a mountain on the north side of the Danube, and giving title to the ancient counts of Zimmern.

Obs. In this place most properly comes in the lordship of Waldsperg, which gives title to the house of Furstenberg. It lies betwixt the lordship of Moszkirch, the landgravate of Nellenburg, and the commandery of Alschbausen, being formerly a knight's fief, purchased by the house of Furstenberg, but the Teutonick order reserved the right of investiture to themselves, the exercise of which was disputed by the house of Furstenberg. This lordship contains the villages of Wondorf and Grombach, together with several manors and hamlets.

The Lordship of W I E S E N S T E I G

Lies betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the territories of the Imperial city of Ulm, being about two miles long and as much in breadth. It defeended from the dukes of Teck to the counts of Helfenstein, and has given name to a peculiar line. On the failure of the counts of this house in the year 1627, in the person of Count Rudolph, one third of this lordship devolved to the house of Furstenberg, but the other two thirds were purchased by the Elector of Bavaria of the two elder daughters of the last count; to this the dukes of Wurtemberg indeed would not give their consent, and, in the year 1704, took possession of the lordship, but by virtue of the peace of Baaden, concluded in the year 1714, were obliged to restore it to the Elector of Bavaria, who, as lord thereof, has, in the Diet of the Empire, a seat and vote in the college of the Swabian counts, and in the circle of Swabia on the bench of counts, and as such is assessed by the Imperial matricula at twenty-four florins, and to a kammerziele pays ten ruthlers, seventy-three kruitzers. To this lordship belongs Wiesensleig, a small town, situate in a valley on the Fils amidst high mountains, and containing a castle. This place is a canonry dedicated to St. Cyriac, being originally sounded in the year 861 both as a Benedictine convent and a nunnery of Franciscans. In the year 1648 it was almost entirely consumed by fire.

Deckingen, a market-town, fituate on the Fils.

The villages of Ditzenbach, Gaspach, Hochenstatt, Muhlhausen, Reichenbach, and Westerheim on the Alb.

The Furstenberg Landgravate of B A A R.

The landgravate of Baar seems to derive its name from the word baar, i. e. naked or bare, this country in comparison of that part of the Schwarz-wald in which it lies being bare, smooth, and clear of large wood. However it appears that anciently even a tract of the Schwarzwald belonged to the Gau or district of Baar. In it the Danube, or Donau, has its source, at least with respect to its name. For the river of Brigach which runs from St. George into the dutchy of Wurtemberg, and also the Brege from Furtwangen uniting, together with the Febrenbach, below Donaueschingen are indeed more considerable than the small river which runs at the same place into these united streams, notwithstanding which this is commonly called the Danube; and it is certain that that name first had its rise near Donaueschingen.

The most remarkable places in this landgravate are the following: viz. Furstenberg, a small town and castle, seated on a mountain, from which the Furstenberg samily takes its name.

Neiding, a market town, fituate on the Danube, with a Ciflercian nunnery in it which is the burial-place of the Furstenberg family.

Blumberg, a small town, but the residence of a presecturate.

Hufingen, a little town seated on a mountain, and containing a prefecturate. Lossingen, a small town, situate in a fruitful valley, in which is a prefecturate and a medicinal bath.

Fridenweiler, a nunnery of Ciftercians belonging to the cathedral of Strafzburg.

Febrenbach, a little town feated on a mountain.

Donaueschingen, or Doneschingen, a market-town, near which the Danube takes its name, is the residence of the Prince of Furstenberg, and the seat of the court of justice, the regency, chancery, and treasury.

Geisingen, a little town, lying on the Danube, and being also the residence of an administrator.

Wartenberg, a castle, seated on a mountain, and having anciently free lords of its own.

Amptenhausen, or Ampthousen, a Benedictine nunnerv.

Moringen, a small town and castle, situate on the Danube, and containing a presecturate.

The Furstenberg Lordship of Hausen in the Kinzing Thale.

This lordship lies in the Schwarzwalde, or Black Forest, on the river of Kinzing, its principal places are the following: viz.

Hausen, a small town and castle, seated on the river of Kinzing.

Hoszlach, a small town, situate also on the Kinzing, and containing a prefecturate.

Wolffach, a little town and castle seated on the river Kinzing, into which at this place runs the Wolffach. In it is a presecturate.

Wittichen, or Witlichen, a numbery of the order of St. Clara, and belonging to the cathedral of Costanz.

Rieplisau, or Ripplinsau, a Benedictine priory, subject to the jurisdiction of the abbey of Villingen.

The

The counts of Montfort on account of the Lordship of Tettnang.

§. 1. IIE counts of Montfort take their title from the ruinated mountain-castle of the same name, situated in the county of Feldkirch, See Vol. IV. p. 240.

In the thirteenth century lived Rudolph Count of Montfort, whose sons Hugo, Rudolph, and Ulrich, sounded three lines; namely the first that of Terinang, the second that of Feldkirch, and the third that of Bregenz. The last of these sailed in the year 1338, the second in 1390 in Count Rudolph, who, in 1365, sold the county of Feldkirch or Montfort to the house of Austria. The first or Tettnang line remaining, divided itself in Hugo's sons William and Henry into the collateral lines of Bregenz and Tettnang. The latter sailed about the middle of the sixteenth century, but the former alienated the county of Bregenz. See Vol. IV. p. 239, together with other lordships and estates, which still continue in the lordship of Tettnang.

§. 2. This lordship of Tettnang lies on the Bondensee, or lake of Costanz, between the district of Alters, the territories of the towns of Wangen and Lindau, and the lordship of Wasserburg belonging to count Fugger, being watered by the rivers Schusz and Arg.

§. 3. The title of the lord hereof of is Governing count of Montfort, lord of Bregenz, Tettnang, and Argen. His arms are a banner ruby with three rings topaz in a field pearl. His afferfiment in the Imperial matricula is two horse and eleven foot, or fixty-eight florins, and his contingency to the chamber of Wetzlar fixty-one ruthlers, twenty-eight kruitzers and three quarters. He enjoys both feat and vote not only in the Imperial Diet of the college of Swabian counts, but also in that of the circle of Swabia.

§. 4. The districts and principal places belonging to this lordship are the following: viz.

Tettnang, or Tattnang, commonly called Tetlang, a small town and castle, seated on the Mublenbach, which runs into the Schusz.

2. The manor of Land-waibel in which is Thann a parochial village with a convent in it belonging to the order of St. Paul the Hermite.

Not far from this village is another convent of Hermites called Argenbart.

3. The manor of Hemmickhofen, to which belong the feats of Hemmick-bofen and Schleinsee or Schlimsee, as also the parishes of Gattnau.

4. The manor of Langnau containing Languau, a convent of the order of St. Paul the Hermite, fituate near the river Arg.

Summerau, a seat.

Wielandsweiler, a hamlet, in which the steward of the manor resides.

Hiltensweiler, a parochial village.

5. The district of Neukirch, in which are the parochial villages of Neukirch, Goppersweiler, and Wilpotsweiler.

6. The lordship of Argen lies on the lake of Costanz, being subject to a high-steward. To it belongs

Langen-Argen, a large parochial village, fituate on the lake of Costanz, but the castle of Argen stands in it.

Nomenbach, a hamlet, and the refidence of a steward.

Obs. The lordship of Schomburg within the territories of Montfort on the Upper-Argen belongs to the Imperial nobility of Algan and the Bodensee, containing in it the castle of Schomburg, which is fituate on a mountain and the parishes of Bronens-weiler and Haszlach. At Pflegelberg on the river Arg is a custom-house.

The Counties and Lordships of the noble family of Truchsels, Imperial hereditary Stewards of Waldburg.

THESE lie betwixt the Danube and the Iler; and of the particular fituation of each an account shall be given in the sequel. The castle of Waldburg gave name to the ancient family of the barons of Waldburg, who were at first hereditary stewards to the dukes of Swabia, but in 1518 obtained from the Elector palatine the survivorship of the high office of hereditary steward of the Empire, and for the first time officiated as such at the diet of the Empire held at Ratisbon in the year 1594: At length this title of their office (Erbtruchse) became also their proper name. For a considerable time they held, by way of mortgage, the procuratorship of Swabia, see Vol. IV. p. 241. and even one hundred years before that mortgage, namely in 1221, that office was enjoyed by the lord steward Eberbard Truchses. The title of count was conferred on them by Ferdinand II. in the year 1618, or rather renewed, the lord steward Gebhard having long before borne the title of count, but this his descendants dropt. James and George sons to the lord steward John, in the fifteenth century founded the two lines of Scheer and Wolffegg which are still existing: That of Scheer was again divided into two other lines in the fons of Christopher; William Henry propagating that of Scheer, and Frederick being the founder of that of Trauchburg. The Wolffegg line was in the fons of George IV. again divided into those of Wolffegg-Wolffegg, of which Honorius was the founder and that of Wolffegg-zeil, VOL. V. Mm which commenced in Frobenius. Of the former the Waldfee is a collateral line, as Wurzach is of that of Zeil. All these several lines sit in the Diet of the circle of Swabia as States of the circle; but the office of hereditary steward of the Empire belongs to the eldest of the principal line of Wolffegg, who holds it in fief of the Elector of Bavaria as arch high-steward of the Empire. As a mark of this office the hereditary steward bears three monds topaz in a field ruby, his arms for Waldburg being three pine-apples topaz in a field faphire. In the diet of the Empire they enjoy only a fingle vote among the counts of Swabia; but in that of the circle of Swabia three, viz. one for Zeil and Wurzach, another for Wolffegg and the Waldsee, and the third for Scheer, Durmentingen and Trauchburg. They have indeed follicited for a fourth vote on account of Trauchburg, but their allegations were found of little weight. In the circular Diets they alternate in votes and feats with the houses of Konigsegg. The affessment of the family of Erbtruckefefs in the matricula of the Empire amounts to three hundred and twelve florins, to which the principal line of Scheer pays ninety-fix florins for Scheer and forty-eight for Trauchburg. The principal line of Wolffegg pays also one hundred and forty-four florins, exclusive of twenty-four for Marstetten. The former of these two pays to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar one hundred and thirty-nine ruthlers, twenty-feven kruitzers: the latter being rated for Wolffegg at forty-one ruthlers, fixty-nine kruitzers and a half; for the Waldsee fifty-one ruthlers, five kruitzers; for Zeil twenty-three ruthlers, twenty-one kruitzers and a quarter; and for Wurzach twenty-three ruthlers, twenty-one kruitzers and a quarter. The family of Truchsesz, together with their fervants and vaffals are by the charters of feveral Emperors and Kings, particularly of the Emperor Frederick III. in the year 1464, exempted from being tried by a foreign court.

The Line of the Count of Wolffegg-Zeil.

Of which the count in possession stiles himself hereditary steward of the holy Roman Empire and count of Zeil, baron of Waldburg, lord of Wurzach, Marstetten, Altmannshofen, Wolffegg, and the Waldsee. To it belongs

The County of Z E I L.

Which lies in the Algau, betwixt the county of Wurzach and Leutkir-cher heath. It had anciently counts of its own who became extinct in the thirteenth century, on which the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria mortgaged it to John Truchsesz of Walburg; but it was afterwards ceded to the Emperor Charles IV. as a male-fief. To it belongs.

Zeil, a castle and borough, situate on the little river Aitrach.

Aickstetten, a village lying on the same river.

Altmannshofen, a village, feated also on the little river Aitrach, and being likewise a lordship constituting part of the count's title.

The villages of Reichenhofen, Diepolzhofen, Seubrant, and Honlishofen.

The Line of the Counts of Wolffegg-Zeil-Wurzach

Bears the same title with the former, and its territories are

1. The lordship of Wurzach lying in the Algau, betwixt the lordship of Kiszlegg, the county of Wolffegg, the lordship of Waldburg and the abbeys of Ochsenbausen and Roth; and which came to the family of Truchsesz by Clara, countess of Neissen, spouse to Count John. In it is Wurzach, a small town seated on the river Aitrach.

The village of Elbwangen with feveral hamlets and farm-houses.

2. The lordship of Marstetten or Mablsletten lying on the Iler, about one hour and a quarter west from the town of Memmingen, and formerly belonging to the counts of Konigsegg, by whom it was sold to the Truchseses. This lordship contains in it Marstetten, a castle in a ruinous condition, seated on the Iler.

Aitrach, or Eitrach, a large village lying on the little river of the same name, which below it joins the Iler. A species of fish called nasen, i. e. snouts, come in spring time in shoals from the Iler into that of Aitrach in order to spawn, when vast numbers of them are caught and exported in salt to Bavaria. Though but a village this place carries on a very large trade with Vienna in wood and floats.

Mooshausen, a village.

Ferthofen, a hamlet, in which is a bridge over the river Iler, and a strong custom-house, together with many other hamlets.

The Line of the Counts of Wolffegg-Wolffegg.

The reigning count of which bears this title, hereditary steward of the holy Roman Empire, count of Wolffegg, baron of Waldburg, lord of the Waldfee, Zeil, Wurzach and Marstetten, as also of Kiszlegg, Waltershofen, he Rothsee, Prasszerg and Leypolz. Its territories are

I. The lordship of Wolffegg, which lies betwixt the lordships of the Waldsee, Wurzach, and Kiszlegg, and the district of Alterf, forming also a part of the portion of Clara countess of Neissen. To it belongs Wolffegg, or Wolffeck, a village and feat.

The villages of Arnach, Dietman's, Neckenfurt, Rottenbach, Schwarzach, Thann, and Ziegelbach, with many other hamlets and farms.

II. The lordship of Waldburg is environed by the district of Alterf, but

M in 2 together together with its upper and lower jurisdiction belongs to the counts of Wolffegg, some hamlets and farms excepted which lie among the lands of the district, and are subject also to its upper jurisdiction. In it is

Waldburg, a village and castle, standing on a hill, and the original seat of the house of Truchsesz.

The villages of Upper-Edensbach, and Schregsberg, with feveral hamlets and parcels of land, all subject to the lower jurisdiction of the count; the upper jurisdiction thereof belonging to the justiciary of the district.

III. The lordship of Kiszlegg lying betwixt the above district, the counties of Zeil and Wolffegg, and the lordship of Egloff; but a part of it belongs also to the Trauchburg line. Near the castle of Kiszlegg or Kieselegg is a kind of market-town with a nunnery of Franciscans in it. The village of Waltershofen is mentioned as a lordship in the count's title.

Obs. The lordships of Praszberg and Leypolz are under the high and forest jurisdiction of the district; but the lower jurisdiction thereof belongs to the Truchseszes.

The Line of the Count of Wolffegg-Waldsee.

Who stiles himself hereditary steward of the holy Roman Empire, count of Wolffegg, Zeil, Wurzach, Mar and Winterstetten. His lands are

I. The lordship of the Waldsee which lies betwixt the county of Wolfegg, the district of Altorf, and the abbey of Schussenried, and is a mortage from the house of Austria. In it is

The castle near the little town of Waldsee, in which, though belonging to Austria, the Truchseszes have a mansion-house.

Twenty-three villages, hamlets and farms, with a Franciscan nunnery called Reuie.

II. The manor of Winterstetten on the river Risz, another mortgage from the house of Austria; and which, exclusive of the castle and little market-town of Winterstetten, contains in it sisteen villages hamlets and farms.

The Line of Scheer-Scheer.

The count of which stiles himself hereditary steward of the holy Roman Empire, count of Friedberg and Trauchburg, baron of Waldburg, lord of Scheer, Durmentingen, Bussen and Kiszlegg. This count is proprietor of

I. The lordship of Scheer, which lies on the Danube, and borders on the Alb, being a cold barren soil, purchased in the year 1463 of the house of Austria. In it is Scheer, a small town and castle seated on the Danube.

II. The county of Friedberg, also purchased of the house of Austria in the year 1463. In it is Friedberg, a castle, situate betwixt the Austrian towns of Mengen and Saulgen.

- III. The lordship of Durmeting, or Durmentingen, situate on the river Kanzach, which issues out of the Federsee and runs into the Danube. In it is the market-town of the same name.
- IV. The lordship of Bu/z, which like the former lies on the other side of the Kanzach, and is a mortgage of the house of Austria to the Truchse/zes. Exclusive of the castle of the same name this lordship contains in it sive other places.

V. The village of Renartsweiler, situate betwixt Saulgen and Aulendorf.

The Line of Trauchburg.

The count of which stiles himself hereditary steward of the sacred Roman Empire, count of Trauchburg and Friedberg, baron of Waldburg, lord of Kiszlegg, Herroth, Neidegg, Scheer, Durmentingen and Bussen. His lands are

I. The county of Trauchburg lying betwixt the abbey of Kempten and the lordship of Egloff, which belonged formerly to the family of Voringen, of whom the Truchsezses purchased it in the year 1309.

The castle of Trauchburg, with the village of Weilen, which is subject to it, is an Austrian fief.

Neidegg, or Neideck, a castle.

II. A part of the before-mentioned lordship of Kiszlegg.

III. The lordship of Herroth, situate betwixt the lordship of Kiszlegg and the Leutkircher heath.

Obs. In the Imperial town of Yini is an abbey of Benedictine monks, of which the Truchsefzes are patrons, defenders, and administrators.

Of the Counts of Konigsegg and the Territories in the Circle of Swabia.

THE family of the lords of Konig seck is of very great antiquity, and in Hugh and John George, sons to George, baron of Konig seck, was divided into two lines; the former commencing in that of Rothensels, and the latter being the sounder of the line of Aulendorf, both which were by the Emperor Ferdinand II. raised to the dignity of counts of the Empire. The title of each each of these lines runs thus, viz. Counts of the holy Roman Empire of Konigsegg and Rothensels, and Barons of Aulendorf and Staussen. The Aulendorf line adds also to it that of lords of Ebenweiler and Wald in Swabia. Their arms are chequée topaz and ruby. In the diet of the Empire they possess only one vote in the college of the Swabian counts, but in that of the circle of Swabia each line has one vote, alternating among themselves and the hereditary Erbtruchsesz lines both with respect to seat and voice. In the Imperial matricula their assessment for Konigseck Berg is twenty florins, for Aulendorf twenty-sour, and for Rothensels and Staussenstein forty. Their contingency to the chamber at Wetzlar is for Aulendorf, twenty-eight ruthlers, thirty-eight kruitzers and a half, and for Rothensels and Staussenstein thirty ruthlers, sifty-nine kruitzers and one ninth.

The Line of the Counts of Konigsegg-Rothensels are proprietors of

The county of Rothenfels, together with the lordship of Stauffen. This county lies in the Algau betwixt the bishopric of Augsburg, the abbey of Kempten, the county of Trauchburg, and the Austrian lordships of Arlberg. It is near five German miles long, and betwixt two and three in breadth, and anciently belonged to the counts of Montfort, of whom it was purchased by the Konigsegg samily in the sixteenth century. The remarkable places in it are Rothenfels, a castle, seated on a hill. Beneath it lies Immenstatt, a large market-town, situate betwixt the Alpsee and the Iler, on a stream which issues out of the former into the latter. In it is a monastery of Capuchins.

Werdenstein, a castle.

Stauffen, a castle, standing on a mountain, and having a barony belonging to it.

The Line of the Counts of Koniglegg-Aulendorf, possesses

I. The county of Konigseg, lying betwixt the county of Heiligenberg, the lordship of Scheer, the commandery of Alchhausen, and the sherissdom of Alters. In it is Konig fegg, or Konig feck, a castle, standing on a hill, and the original feat of the family.

The villages of Wald, Gugenhausen, and Ebenweiler.

II. The barony of Aulendorf, which lies betwixt the commandery of Alfobbausen, the presecturate of Altorf, and the abbey of Schussenried. The principal place in it is Aulendorf, a castle nd market-town, standing on a hill, at the foot of which runs the Schus.

The

The Lordships of

MINDELHEIM and SCHWABECK.

OF the lorship of Mindelbeim, John Bapt. Homann has published a map which constitutes the eighty-fifth in the Atlas of Germany, but from it the political boundaries of the lordship cannot be seen, for it exhibits only the forest of Mindelheim according to its eight Huten, or commons. This lordship lies in the Algau being environed by the lordship of Schwabeck, the abbey of Yrsee, the marggravate of Burgau, and the territories of Count Fugger and others. It is about two German miles square, and sormerly belonged to the dukes of Teck, being at that time the only remaining part of all their lands. On their extinction it devolved to the family of Rechberg, and from them to that of Freundsberg, who also failing, a contest arose about it betwixt the families of Fugger and Maxelrain; but the latter transferring their right to Duke Maximilian of Bavaria in the year 1612, he made himself master of the lordship and transmitted it to his descendants. The Elector of Bavaria being put under the ban in the year 1706, the Emperor raised this lordship to a principality, conferring it as a fief on the most illustrious duke of Marlborough, who was created a Prince of the Empire, and invested also with a feat and vote not only in the bench of Princes of the circle of Swabia, but likewife in the Imperial Diet. By the peace of Rastadt and Baaden, however, in the year 1714, Mindelbeim reverted again under its ancient title of a lordship to the Elector of Bavaria, who on account thereof enjoys both a feat and vote on the bench of counts and barons of the Swabian circle; but I do not find that a vote is allowed for it in the college of counts at the Imperial Diet. In the matricula of the Empire this lordship is affessed at three horse and ten foot, or feventy-fix florins. Its quota to the chamber of Wetzlar is ninety-two ruthlers, two kruitzers and three quarters.

I. In the lordship of Mindelheim are the following places: viz.

Mindelheim, a town, fituate on the river Mindel, and in the parish-church of which are interred some dukes of Teck. In this town is a college of Jesuits, with a gymnasium, and a Franciscan convent. On a hill near it stands the seat of its lord, named St. Georgenberg.

The parochial villages of Breitenbronn, situate on the river Kamlach; Dorschhausen in the Heslewang; Durlewang on the river Mindel; Eitten-bausen, Erisried, Hausen, Kirchdorf in the Heslewang; Kongetried, Loppenbausen situate on the river Kamlach; Mindlau in the Heslewang; Nassenbeuren, Upper and Under-Kamlach situate on the river of the same name near

Reysersberg,

Reysersberg, the native place of the celebrated geographer John Baptista Homann; Upper-Turbach, Salga, or Saulgen, Stockheim, Under-Aurbach seated on the little river of Aurbach; Under-Rieden lying near Reysersbach on the river Kamlach; Warmsried, and Westernach.

Frickenbausen, a handsome village, with a small castle in it, situate not far from Gunz, in which the lordship of Mindelbeim possesses one half of the upper-jurisdiction, but the other half, together with the lower-jurisdiction thereof, belongs to the lower hospital of Memmingen. In this place is dug a clay which makes a beautiful earthen-ware.

Dasperg, a village, situate not far from the Gunz, and having a very beneficial bath. This place is also called Mamuble.

II. The lordship of Schwabeck lies betwixt the lordship of Mindelbeim and the diocese of Augsburg, and is said to have been forcibly seized by the latter in the year 1208, but afterwards purchased, by virtue of which the cathedral always claims it; and upon the Elector of Bavaria's being put under the ban of the Empire in the year 1706, they were put in possession thereof in 1710, but held it only till the peace of Baaden, when it was restored to that Elector.

The principal places in it are Schwabeck, a castle, and Turkheim a market-town, situate on the river Wertach.

The Lordship of Gundelfingen belonging to the family of Furstenberg.

THIS lordship lies betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the abbey of Zwifalten, and had formerly lords of its own, who took their title from it. On the extinction of these it descended to the counts of Helsenshein, and on their extinction also came by marriage to Wratislaus count of Furstenberg. To it belongs

Gundelfingen, or New-Gundelfingen, a castle and village, situate in the Lauterthale on the river Lauter.

Haingen, a small town, seated on the river Lauter.

Bibishausen, a village, lying on the Lauter.

Neufra, or Nuifra, a castle and lordship, situate not far from the Danube, and Durmentingen.

The County of

Lies in the Black Forest, betwixt the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the Margravate of Baaden, being watered by the Murg, by means of which great numbers of timber-floats are carried into the Rhine. On the extinction of the Counts of Eberstein, who were proprietors of this county, in the person of Count Casimir in the year 1660, it fell as a vacant male-fiel to the Marggraves of Baaden-Baaden, to whom a part of it had also descended for some time before. It gives title to a seat and vote in the college of Swalian Counts at the Diet of the Empire, and also in that of the Circle. In the Imperial matricula the assessment of the Counts of Eberstein is four foot, or sixteen florins, and their quota to the chamber at Wetzlar ten ruthlers, seventy-three kruitzers. This county contains Eberstein, a castle, with a market-town of the same name lying near it.

Gerspach, a small town, seated on the river Murg, and one part of the inhabitants of which are Lutherans, the other Roman-catholics. The cathedral of Speyr is joint proprietor hereof, and has sometimes even disposed of it as a sief.

The parochial villages of Forbach, Weissenbach, Salbach, &c.

Muckensturm, a market-town, seated without the county in the Marggravate of Baaden.

Frauenalb, in Latin Alba dominarum, a Benedictine abbey for ladies, fituate near the river Alb, and founded by Count Berthold of Eberflein. Belonging to it are certain villages and hamlets, as namely Volkersback, Pfaffenroth, Zell, &c.

Öbs. The Counts of Eberstein were formerly proprietors also of the town of Gochsheim and the market-towns of Boltringen and Oberdorf, of which an account has been given above under the dutchy of Wurtemberg.

Of the Counts of Fugger in general, and of their lands in the circle of Swabia in particular.

§. I. HE Counts of Fugger are descended from John Fugger an inhabitant of the village of Graben, which lies not far from Augsburg, who removing in the year 1370 to that city became, by marriage, a freeman Vol. V.

No thereof.

thereof. In the thirteenth century the Fuggers were weavers, but afterwards followed merchandise, and the sons of the above-mentioned John Fugger, viz. Andrew and James, by these means acquired very considerable fortunes. George and James were the most remarkable of the sons of the latter. 'James by traffick and dealing in the mines made fuch immense additions to his fortune that he purchased several counties and lordships, which, having no fons of his own to inherit, he left as a patrimonial estate to the children of his brother George. Both he and all the Fuggers were ennobled by the Emperor Maximilian to whom, by their opulence, they had rendered important fervices. Of George's fons the most worthy of notice are Raymund and Antony, these founding the two principal lines, increasing the lordships and estates they inherited in trust, and in 1530 obtaining also the dignity of Barons and Counts from the Emperor Charles V. for fervices rendered to him of the same nature with the above. The capital line of Raymund became divided in John, James, and George, the ions of Raymund, into the Pfirtisch and Weissenborn branches. Of the former is descended the branch of Zinneberg, and the latter still exists. The principal line of Antony divides itself in his fons Mark, John, and James, into three brauches. From Mark or Marx, comes the Norndorf, or Marx Fugger branch which failed in the feventeenth century; upon which the lordships belonging to it were divided among the two succeeding branches. Under the Marx Fugger branch at prefent is to be included the line proceeding from the John's branch, which obtained the lordship of Norndoff, and was founded by Sebastian: From John or Hans is derived the Hans-Fugger branch, the collateral lines of which are that of Kirchbeim; from Bonaventura that of Worth, which is also derived from Sebastian, and, as has been observed above, is called the Marx Fugger branch; that of Muckbaulen from Paul, and that of Glottick from Francis Ernest. From the abvove-mentioned James is descended the James-Fugger branch, the collateral lines of which are that of Babenhausen from John son to James, whose cousin John Rudelth's eldest son, by name Rupert, sounded that of Boofz, and the younger John James Alexander Sigismund Rudolph the collateral line of Babenhausen; that of Wasser or Wollenburg, being descended from Hieronymus fon to James.

§. 2. Each of the two principal lines are to inspect into the administration of the abbey of Fugger, and the senior thereof is administrator. At Augsburg the samily of these Counts have a court of chancery in common.

§. 3. The Counts of Fugger only put their family name to their christian name, for instance, John Charles Fugger, and after this stile themselves Counts of Kirchberg and Wissenborn. Each line also bears its particular lordships in their titles. The arms of Fugger properly consist of half lilies; but for Kirchberg they bear a semale Moor clad in black with loose hair, and holding a mitre ruby in her hand, in a field pearl; and for Weissenborn three three buffaloes or hunting horns pearl, lying over each other stringed and garnished topaz, in a field ruby.

- §. 4. In the Diet of the Empire they have a feat and vote in the college of Swabian Counts. In the circle of Swabia the Antony main line enjoys three votes as Counts, who are named from the three chief branches. And these three principal branches of the Antony line are assessed in the Imperial matricula at one hundred and eight florins, viz. the Marx-Fugger line twenty-two florins, twenty-one kruitzers, fix hellers; the John Fugger line forty-three florins, thirty-fix kruitzers, fix hellers; and the James Fugger at forty-two florins, one kruitzer, four hellers. The contingency of the first to the Imperial chamber is twelve ruthlers, eight kruitzers and a half, of the fecond twenty-nine ruthlers, forty-fix kruitzers; of the third twentyeight ruthlers, twenty-eight kruitzers. For the lordship of Wasserburg it pays in particular eight florins to the taxes of the Empire, and fourteen ruthlers to the chamber at Wetzlar.
 - §. 5. The lordships and estates of the Counts of Fugger are of three forts, viz.
- 1. One of the Austrian lands in the circle of Swabia, namely the counties of Kirchberg and Weiffenborn, which they hold at present only as a mortgage of the house of Austria and belonging to the Raymund line, as shewn in Vol. IV. p. 245. The affessiment in the Imperial matricula for this county, which amounts to twenty-eight florins, is paid to the circle of Austria but appointed by the house of that name. The taxation paid for it to the chamber of Wetzlar is faid to amount to fixty-feven ruthlers, fiftyfour kruitzers and three quarters.

Obf. The Counts of Fugger formerly possessed also some considerable lordships in Alface and the Sundgau as mortgages belonging to the house of Austria; but these countries falling to the crown of France, it redeemed them from the Counts of Fugger, conferring them on its natural subjects.

- 2. Part of them belong to the immediate Imperial Noblesse of Swabia, being mostly possessed by the branches and collateral descendants of the Antony line and paying taxes to that body, as Dietenbeim, Brandenburg, Heimertingen, Grunenbach, and Wald, which shall be mentioned among the Noblesse of the canton of the Danube.
- §. 6. Thus to this part belong only the lands in the circle of Swabia which are possessed by the Antony line, viz.

1. To the present chief branch of Marx Fugger belongs

Norndorff, a lordship, situate between the rivers Schmutter and Lech: In it is the market-town of the fame name: with

The villages of Ebingen and Lauterbronn, and those of Dutenstein, Dicmingen, and Wagenhof, lying betwixt the dutchy of Neuburg and the lord-Thip of Eglingen.

2. The Hans-Fugger principal branch, particularly The collateral line of Kirchheim are proprietors of

1. The Imperial lordship of Kirchheim, lying betwixt the lordship of Mindelkeim and the Marggravate of Burgau, being purchased by the sounder of the Antony line. To it belongs

Kirchheim, a market-town and feat, fituate not far from Mindel, on the little river of Hossach. At this place is a convent of Dominicans.

The parochial villages of Mergen and Hafeldach.

Spock, Derendorf, and Tieffenried are hamlets; in the last is a miraculous image of the Virgin Mary, to which adoration is paid.

2. The Imperial lordship of Eppischhausen was also purchased by the founder of the Antony line. In it is a parish of the same name.

3. The lordships of Turkenfeld and Schmuchen, in which also are parishes of the same name.

2: The collateral line of Muckhausen is possessed of

1. The lordship of Muckhausen, or Mickhausen, seated on the little river Schmutter, and purchased in the year 1563. This lordship is an Austrian set

2. The lordship of Schwindegg.

3. The collateral branch of Glott, possessed of

1. The lordship of Glott or Glatt, lying on a small river of the same name which falls into the Danube, betwixt the territories of the bishopric of Augsburg and the Marggravate of Burgau, and was purchased in the year 1536 for 16400 florins. Glott, its capital, is a market-town.

2. The lordship of Hilgartschberg.

3. The lordship of Oberndorf, situate on the Lech, and which, in the year 1533, was purchased by Wolfang Marschalk for 21000 slorins, together with Elgan, also situated on the Lech.

3. The James Fugger principal branch, particularly I. The collateral line of Babenhausen are possessed of

1. The lordship of Babenbausen lying on the Gunz, and purchased in the year 1538 by the Lords of Rechberg. This lordship was exempted from the seodal jurisdiction of Wurtemberg in consideration of a sum of money. In it is Babenhausen, a market-town having a castle situate on the Gunz: together with

The villages of Ketterskausen and Kirchhaszlach, in which is a fraternity of the order of Barthemites who live all in common, as also Waltenhausen, a village, purchased in the year 1542 by Margaret of Wernau for 1800 florins, and belonging to the hospital in it.

2. The lordship of Boose lying on the Iler, and in which is Boofz, a genteel market-town, with a feat.

Oberneden, a village.

Blesz, or Plesz, a village, tributary to this lordship, but in other respects belonging to the Carthusian monastery of Buxheim.

Reichau, a castle and lordship.

2. To Hohenembs.] G E R M A N Y.

2. To the collateral branch of Waffer or Wollenburg belongs

1. The lordship of Wollenburg situate betwixt the rivers Wertach and Schmutter, and containing in it Wollenburg or Wellenburg, a castle seated on a hill, not far from the river Iler.

The village of Berka and other places.

2. The lordship of Gablingen, situate on the river Schmutter.

3. The lordship of Biberbach lying on the same river, and containing in it Biberbach, or Markt Biberbach, a market-town and castle, together with. The villages of Albertshofen, Längenreichern, Meittingen, and Riblingen.

4. The bailiwick of Rottenbach, situate on the river Gunz, and containing in it

The villages of Rottenback, Gottenau, and Ronsperg.

5. The lordship of Wasserburg situate on the Bodensee, or lake of Costanz, and purchased in the sixteenth century by the Counts of Montfort. This lordship contains in it Wasserburg, a market-town, near which stands a castle of the same name on a point of land which runs into the lake of Costanz.

The County of H O H E N E M B S

Lies on the Rhine in the valley which takes its name from that river, and is furrounded by the Austrian lordship of Arlberg. The house of Hobenembs is of an ancient and noble extraction, the family feat of Upper-Ems stood farther up the Rhine, one league beyond Chur in Upper-Bund, and near the village of Ems. On this family the Emperor Charles V. conferred the dignity of Baron, and foon afterwards also that of Count. In the time of the Emperor Ferdinand I. Count James Hannibal obtained a feat and vote both in the Diet of the Empire, and also in that of Swabia. His fon Caspar, in the year 1614, purchased of Count Charles Lewis the lordships of Vadutz and Schellenberg, but these were again alsenated. James Hannibal his fon is the founder of all the present Counts of Hohenembs. From Charles Frederick is descended the Hohenembs line, his brother Francis William founding that of Vadutz. The former ended in Francis Charles Antony and the county of Hohenembs devolved to the Vadutz line, which is still in being. The title of the reigning Count Francis William Rudolph is Count of the holy Roman Empire and of Hobenembs and Gallara, Lord of Dornbiern, Wiednau, Haszlach, and the free Imperial manor of *Lustnau, as also of the lordships of Bistra, Bonna, Schonbrunn, Trepin, and Laubendorf. His arms are a goat topaz, with horns diamond in a field faphire. In the Diet of the Empire the reigning Count of Hobenembs has a feat and vote in the college of Swabian Counts, and also in that of Counts in the circle of Swabia. His afferiment in the Imperial matricula is one horse and two foot, or twenty florins. To the Kammerziele, according to the latest matricula, Hohenembs pays for itself and Sulz Brandis sixty rixdollars, twenty-one kruitzers. But the article of Sulz Brandis, or of the lordships of Vadutz and Schellenberg, no longer constitutes a part of his territories, these having been purchased by Prince Lichtenstein. This county contains in it the following places; viz.

Old and Now-Hohen-Embs, in Latin Amifium, two very strong castles feated on a mountain.

Embs, or Ems, a market-town, under the jurisdiction of New-Hoben-Embs, and being also the Count's seat. In the neighbourhood of this town is a sulphureous bath. Anciently the tenants here were immediately subject to the empire, but in the year 1343 were granted as a mortgage by the Emperor Lewis to Ulrich of Embs, and afterwards transferred by purchase to him.

Lustnau, an Imperial manor fituate not far from the Rhine, which has been a royal manor ever fince the race of the Carlovingian Kings. After that it came to the Counts of Werdenberg, but by them was mortgaged in the year 1395 to Ulrich of Embs, and purchased in 1526 by Marx Sittieb of Embs, together with the higher, lower, and forest-jurisdiction, imposts, taxes, and cafualties thereof. In it is a parochial church.

Obs. 1. The ancient Imperial tenants in Dorenburen, or Dornbiern, called also Dornbeuren, and who have been already mentioned, have also been mortgaged and were afterwards fold, together with the tenants of Lustnau, to the house of Hohenembs. It still also possesses there certain privileges, as the criminal-jurisdiction, tythes, casualties, &c. for which it employs a bailist: But the house of Austria enjoys the civil-jurisdiction and other privileges. 2. The places of Wiednau and Haszlach lie on the west-side of the Rhine, in the Rheinthal being subject to the jurisdiction of the Switzers. The county of Gallara, or Gallerate, which the Counts bear in their title and which was conferred on them by Philip II. King of Spain, lies in the dutchy of Milan in the Milanese, and the other lordships which form a part of their titles lie in Bohemia.

tion of whom is made in the records of the twelfth century, this free lord-ship devolved in the sixteenth century to the ancient family of Freyberg, and particularly to the Opfing line thereof, which afterwards being much involved in debt, this lordship was seized in the thirty years war by Colonel Keller, one of the creditors, but at length redeemed by John Christopher of Freyberg, of the Eisenberg line, who was first prior of Ellwangen and afterwards bishop of Augsburg. This prelate transferred it to his brother Ferdinand Christopher of Freyberg, whose descendants sold it in the year 1751 to the Duke of Wurtemberg for 300,000 florins. The proprietor hereof enjoys both a seat and vote in the college of the Swabian Counts at the Diet of the Empire, and likewise in that of the circle of Swabia. Its assessment in the Imperial matricula is five soot, or twenty florins; and its taxation to the Kammerziele fifteen rixdollars, eleven kruitzers and a half. It is at present under the jurisdiction of the ducal bailiwick of Steuszlingen; its inhabitants Roman-catholics, and the places contained in it

Justingen, a castle and parochial village, together with The villages of Ingstetten, Hutten and Gunderskofen, and The sarm of Schach.

The County of B O N D O R F,

Lying betwixt the Brifgau, the landgravates of Baar and Stublinger, is five leagues in length, and between one and three broad. This county had formerly lords of its own to whom it gave title; but afterwards belonged to the Counts of Lupfen, and in 1613 was purchased by the abbey of S. Blasius, belonging to the territory of Brifgau, which proprietor thereof has a seat and voice in the Diet of the Empire in the college of Swabian Counts, and also among the Counts in that of the circle of Swabia. It is affessed in the Imperial matricula at twenty-five florins, thirty kruitzers; and its contingency to the chamber at Wetzlar is twelve rixdollars, fifteen kruitzers and a half. In this county is Boudorf, a market-town, containing a convent of the order of St. Paul the hermit, with Several villages and hamlets.

The Lordship of G L O F,

Situated on the river Argen, betwixt the Imperial towns of Y/ni and Wangen, was formerly known under the name of the free people of Meglofs, or Meglitz. The ancient market-town and castle of Meglofs, or Eglof, together with the feveral villages, hamlets and farms belonging to it, are immediately subject to the Empire, and its present judges, counsellors, common and free people to whom the Imperial freedom was granted in the year 1521, are on account of the Empire, under the particular protection and patronage of the town of Yini. Afterwards they came by mortgage, though with the entire refervation of their privileges, to the house of Austria, who in the year 166—transferred it as a lordship to the Counts of Traun and Abensperg for 30,000 florins, who by virtue thereof enjoy both a feat and voice in the Diet of the Empire in the college of Swabian Counts, and ever fince the year 1662, on the bench of Counts in the circle of Swabia. What their affessment is in the Imperial matricula I cannot precisely tell, but their quota to the chamber of Wetzlar is twenty-fix rixdollars, twenty-two kruitzers and one half

The County or Lordship of T H A N N H A U S E N,

Situate near the abbey of Ursperg on the river Mindel, and formerly belonging as an Imperial knights-land to the canton of the Danube. George Lewis, Count of Sinzendorf got possession of this lordship, and entered into an agreement with the Imperial knights, in which they yielded up to him their right to the same; whereupon in the year 1677 he obtained a seat and vote in the Diet of Swabia, and also in that of the Empire among the college of Swabian Counts. About the beginning of the eighteenth century it descended to John Philip Count of Stadion, who in the year 1708 obtained a seat and vote on the bench of Counts in the circle of Swabia, and in 1709 on that of the Empire in the college of Swabian Counts. Its matricular assessment to the Empire I do not know; but to the chamber of Wetzlar its contingency is eight rixdollars, eight kruitzers.

Thannhausen, a market-town in this lordship, lies on the Mindel.

The County of HOHEN-GEROLDSECK,

Is fituate betwixt the Brifgau, the Furstenberg lordship of Itali, - in the Kinzing Thale, the Imperial town of Zell on the Hammersback and the Gengenbach, the Baaden-Baaden lordship of Mahlberg, the Nasfau-Saarbrucke lordthip of Lobr, the bithop of Strafzburg's manor of Ettenheim, and the Emending quarter of the Marggravate of Hochberg, being about three leagues long and as many in breadth. It consists partly of an Imperial and Austrian siet, and partly also of particular inheritances. The male-heirs of the ancient family of the Barons of Geroldfeck failed in the year 1634 in James, Lord of Geroldleck, whose only daughter, Anna Maria, was first married to Count Frederick of Solms, and after his decease to the Marggrave Frederick of Baaden-Durlach. Ever fince the year 1620, the Barons of Kronberg have obtained the reversion of the county of Hohen-Geroldseck, not only in the Imperial but likewise in the Austrian fiefs, and in 1635 got possession of the whole country: But the above-mentioned Anna Maria, or the Marggraves of Baaden-Durlach could not obtain this, though their proper inheritance. On the decease of Crato Adolphus, Count of Kronberg, in the year 1691 without issue, the county of Hohen-Geroldseck escheated to the Lord paramount, and after that devolved as a fief to Charles Cafpar von der Leyen, who in the year 1711 was raifed to the dignity of an hereditary Count of the Empire, and in the fame year obtained also a feat and vote on the bench of Counts in the circle of Swabia, as also another seat and vote in the Diet of the Empire in the college of Swabian Counts. The title of these Counts is that of the Holy Roman Empire, and Von der Leyen and Hoben-Geroldfeck, Basons of Adendorf, and Lord of Bliefcaftel, Burrweiler, Munchweiler, Otterbach, Niewern, Saffig, Abrenfels, Bongard, Simpelfeld, &c. Their arms are a flate saphire, party per pale pearl; and their affessment to a Roman month fixteen florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar eight iixdollars, nine kruitzers and three fourths. The county contains in it Hohen-Geroldseck, a castle seated on a hill.

Dautenstein, or Dutenstein, also a castle; together with

The villages of Selbach and Mittelbach, and likewise those of Prinzbach, Derlenbach, Steinbach, Reichenbach and Kuback, all mean places.

Is furrounded by the county of Oettingen, certain territories belonging to Count Fugger and to the bishopric of Augsburg, as also by the dutchy of Neuburg. Formerly it belonged to the Counts of Graveneck, who in the year 1217 became extinct in Count Godfrey Antony, in which year it was purchased by the Prince of Tours and Taxis for 200,000 florins, who by virtue thereof enjoys both a seat and vote in the circle of Swabia on the bench of Counts. To a Roman month it pays twenty florins, and to the Kammerziele five rixdollars, thirty-fix and one half kruitzers. In it is

Eglingen, a market-village, together with

The hamlets of Baumgarten, Sellbronn, and Ofterhof.

 $A \quad U \quad G \quad S \quad B \quad U \quad R \quad G.$

The free Imperial city of Augsburg, originally called Vindelica, and afterwards Augusta Vindelicorum, or Rhætorum, lies in a fertile healthy air and a delightful country betwixt the rivers Lech and Wertach, which unite not far from this place. Its utmost circuit is about 9000 common paces, and its length from the Rothe thoren, or Red-gate to the Fischerthor 4000. This city is environed with ramparts, walls and deep ditches; and has four large and fix finall gates, as also a wicket of curious contrivance betwixt the gates of Gogging and Klenker, for admitting proper persons in the night-time. It is commonly divided into three parts, viz. into that of St. Ulrich's Drittel, which reaches from the Rothe thoren to the town-house; into that of St. Stephen's Drittel extending from the Westacker Bruckthor to the town-house, and into that of 'facob's Drittel which goes from 'facob's thor to the Thor of Barfuszer. Others divide it into the upper, midde and lower town, and the fuburb of St. James. Some of its streets are steep, but below these it has others which are broad and well paved, whence it may ingeneral be termed a fine city. Exclufive of the cathedral of Augsburg, with its fourteen chapels, in this city are also fix Roman-catholic parochial churches, viz. those of St. John, S. George, S. Maurice, and S. Ulrich, together with that of the Holy Cross, and S. Stephen, as also five monasteries, among which is a Jesuit's college, and exclusive of the abbies of S. Ulrick and Afra, of which a particular article is to be met with at the end of this circle) three nunneries, and fix Lutheran parish-churches, viz. those of S. Anna and S. Ulrich near the Holy Cross, that of the baresooted Monks, that of St. James and the Holy Ghost, or im Spital, to which belong four-fourteen ministers, and among them two seniors; besides a I bir me wastnafium near the church of St. Anne's, which contains in it a good library. In the year 1755, the Imperial Franciscan academy for arts and sciences was founded here. In it are also several hospitals for the poor, orphan- and fick people, with other charitable foundations. The bithop of Angslung has a court here, with feveral offices, exclusive of the cathedral-abbey and deanery. The town-house, which is reckoned the finest in all Germany, was completed in the year 1620, after having been fix years in building. Its principal ornament is a falon of fine pictures in the third flory, which is fifty-two feet high, fifty-eight broad, and one hundred and ten in length, without any pillars to it, and furrounded on both fides by the four Prince's rooms, as they are called, which are also exquisitely painted. Near the town-house stands the lofty tower of Perlachthurm. The armory is well provided. Here is also a large house of correction and a work-house, together with feveral other public edifices. The palaces of the Counts of Fugger are very magnificent. The Fuggerey, as it is called, confifts of one hundred and fix small houses, erected in the year 1519 by the brothers U/rich, George and James Fugger, in James's suburb, for the reception of poor burghers and inhabitants, and let out at a very small rent. On the fine and well contrived aqueducts for the conveyance of water here from the Lech are feveral corn, fawing, flatting and fmelting-mills; but particularly remarkable are the water-works here, which from five towers convey the water through the city in fuch a manner, that not only five large and beautiful fountains and other public refervoirs, but also the greatest part of the houses are supplied by means of these works with that element in plenty. The burghers here are computed at 6000. One half of the council is Lutheran and the other Roman-catholic. Formerly the Patricians, as they are called, had the government in their hands; but in the year 1368 it was forcibly taken from them, and the government of fifty introduced; but in 1548, the Emperor Charles V. restored the Patricians. At present the magistracy confifts of forty-five persons, thirty-one of whom are Patricians, sour of the Mehrer Gefellschaft, or Mehrern der Gesellschaft, as it is called, (which confifts of fuch as have married the daughters of Patricians, and on this account are registered among that fociety) five of the body of merchants, and five of the commonalty. The city of Augsburg has long been celebrated for the great number of its curious artists, whose works in particular in tin and filver, are much admired. The trade of this place is confiderable, but it was formerly much greater. The arms of the city are party per pale, argent and gules foutcheon, with a green pine-apple and a fir-apple vert. Its garrison usually consists of three hundred men.

From the Vindelici, Augsburg came under the dominion of the Romans, and Drusus settled a Roman colony here. Afterwards it sell under the power of the Alemanni, the Goths and the Franks, under the last of whom it declined greatly, but recovered again under Charles the Fat. The Emperor Henry III. took it into his particular protection, but it suffered much from its contests with the bishops, and its condition became very precarious. The Emperor Frederick I. granted it feveral privileges; and, in the year 1275, King Rudolph I. confirmed and enlarged its Imperial rights. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the second place on the bench of the Imperial cities of Swabia, but in that of the circle has the first feat and vote. affellment in the matricula of the Empire, which formerly amounted to nine hundred florins, was, in the year 1705, reduced to five hundred and feven rixdollars, twenty kruitzers and a half. Of the feveral Diets of the Empire which have been held here fince the time of the Emperor Lewis I. two are particularly remarkable; namely, that of the year 1530, at which, in a hall of the bishop's palace, the Augsburg confession of faith was publicly read; and that of 1555, at which the religious peace was fettled. In this city too, in the year 1686, an alliance was concluded between the Emperor, Spain, Sweden, and fome other Princes and Circles, in opposition to France. Towards the conclusion of the years 1703 and 1704, it fuffered much by the Bavarians and French.

To the jurisdiction of this city belongs the village of Oberhausen: but in ecclesiastical matters it is subject to the bishop. who, conformably to an agreement made in the year 1602, grants institution to the ministers.

The Augsburg territories and Imperial vogtey or prefecturate has always been distinguished from the provincial vogtey in Upper and Lower-Swabia, and is usually governed by a Prefect of its own; but in other respects it is always subject to the Dukes of Swabia, in whose name it was governed by the Counts of Schwabeck from the year 1067 till 1162. On the failure of these in the last mentioned year, it was hereditarily incorporated by the Emperor Frederick I. with the dutchy of Swabia, and on the devolution of the latter to the Empire. Its Prefects were appointed by the Kings and Emperors till the year 1426, in which year the Emperor Sigisfmund is said to have conferred on this city the privilege of nominating both a country and city Prefect, the confirmation of them only being reserved to the Emperor. Ever since that time the presecturate has continued in the disposal of the city. To it belong the villages of Gersthofen, Stettenhofen and Langweid.

U L M.

The free Imperial city of Ulm lies in an uneven fpot of ground on the Denube, over which it has a stone bridge. Here also that river receives into it the Elau, which runs through a part of the city, and beyond it, close by the upper jurisdiction, is joined by the Ilcr. This city is pretty well fortified. The inhabitants are mostly Lutherans, and to them belongs the Minster, or cathedral, cathedral, which is a large structure, standing almost in the centre of the city, and having feven ministers belonging to it, together with the church of the Holy Ghost, a hospital and the church of bare-footed Monks. The Romancatholic inhabitants perform their public worship at the convent of St. Michael at Wengen, in which are regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, and in the house of the Teutonick order, to which belong the villages of Bettingen and Bollingen, which are faid by mistake above, under the article Also chausen, to be subject to the commenderies of Robr and Waldsletten. The Lutheran gymnasium here is founded in the convent formerly belonging to the bare-footed Monks. The splendid foundation of Samulungsslift is particularly appropriated for the daughters of Patricians, who are permitted to marry. The magistracy here is Lutheran and confists of forty-one members, above one half of whom are Patricians. Among the public civil buildings here are the town-house and the arfenal with many others. This city maintains fix companies of foldiers, three of whom constitute its contingent to the circle. Large quantities of wine are brought hither from the Rhine, the Neckar, the lake of Costanz and Veltlin, and carried farther up on the Danube. Ulm trades also in linen and other goods. The arms of the city are a chief argent, furrounded by another fable. Till the year 1300, this place had no walls, being only furrounded with a ditch and a pallifade. In 813, the Emperor Charlemagne granted certain confiderable privileges to the abbey of Reichnau near Costanz over Ulm, which in ancient records is called Villa Regia: but notwithstanding this, it still continued immediately subject to the Empire; and under the Emperor Lewis IV. it bought off this jurisdiction from the abbot for a sum of money, the said Emperor, in the year 1346, also permitting the city to chuse a council for itself. The Emperors Charles V. Wenceslaus and Frederick III. in conjunction with other Emperors, confirmed and enlarged its privileges. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the fourth feat on the bench of Swabian cities; but in the circle of Swabia has not only the fecond place on the bench of Swabian cities, but also the perpetual directorium thereof. In Ulm are kept the archives of the Imperial towns in Swabia and Franconia; and the Diet of Swabia also is usually held here. In the year 1683, this city was affested by the matricula of the Empire and Circle at between fix and nine hundred florins; and its contingent to the chamber at Wetzlar is five hundred and ninety-five rixdollars, fourteen kruitzers. With respect to its history, it is to be observed, that in the year 1129, it was destroyed by the Emperor Lotharius; and in 1348 confumed by fire; that an agreement was made here in 1620 betwixt the United and Leaguists, and that, in the year 1702, it was surprized by the Elector of Bavaria. An Imperial court was anciently held here in the Stadelhof, near that which at prefent is called the Grunenbof.

Not far from the city lies

Sofflingen, or Sefflingen, a nunnery of the order of St. Clara.

fob. Christ. Lauterback has delineated a map of the territories of this city, which map was engraved by fok. Bapt. Homann, and constitutes the eighty-ninth in his Atlas of Germany. This territory was purchased by the Counts of Helfenslein, the Counts of Werdenberg, Barons Rietheim and others, and has been acquired by other means. Though mountainous, yet it is not without fine corn-lands, meadows and excellent woods.

I. The upper lordship contains in it the following districts: viz.

1. The ober-amt, or prefecturate, of LANGENAU: in which is Langenau, a very large market-town.

Oellingen, a parochial-village.

2. The amt, or bailiwick, of Weidensteten, including the parochial-villages of Weidensteten, Neensteten and Holzkirch.

3. The bailiwick of Bernslatt, containing the parochial-village of Bern-flatt, together with those of Baimerstetten and Eiselau.

4. The bailiwick of Ballendorf, in which lie the parochial-villages of Ballendorf and Borflingen.

5. The bailiwick of Ettlenschiefz, containing the parochial-villages of Ettlenschiefz and Sinnenbronn.

6. The ober-amt of Leipheim, comprehending

Leipheim, a small town and castle, situate not far from the Danube, and which was fold by the Gussen of Gussenberg to the Counts of Wurtemberg, and by the latter, in the year 1453, to the city of Ulm. In the year 1634, this town was miserably laid waste.

Riedheim, a parochial-village.

7. The forest-prefecturate of ALTHEIM, in which are the parochial-villages of Altheim and Zahringen, together with Soglingen.

8. The prefecturate of Albeck, which was purchased, in the year

1383, by Count Conrad of Werdenberg, and contains in it

Albeck, a small town and castle, seated on the river Alb; together with The parochial-villages of Horvelsingen, Gottingen, Jungingen, Aselsingen, Biszingen, and several hamlets.

II. The under lordship contains in it the following presecturates: viz.

1. The ober-amt, or prefecturate of GEISZLINGEN: in which is Geiszlingen, a small town, seated in a bottom betwixt high and stony mountains, and long since samous for its sine works in bone. This town was purchased, in the year 1396, by Count Helfenstein. Not far from it is a bath.

On a rocky mountain near it also stood the very ancient castle of Geysel-stein, and on another the castle of Helfenstein, once the samily seat of the Counts of that name, who are at present extinct.

2. The bailiwick of Stotten, or Stetten, in which is a parochial-village of the fame name.

3. The

3. The bailiwick of Uberkingen, containing Uberkingen, a village, seated on the Fils, and having a good mineral spring.

4. The bailiwick of Bohringen, containing the parochial-villages of Bolringen, or Baringen, and Hausen on the Fils.

5. The prefecturate of ALTENSTADT, in which is Altenstadt, a market-town, seated on the Fils, and anciently belonging to the Counts of Spitzenberg.

Kuch, a church-village.

6. The bailiwick of Suffen, in which are the parochial-villages of Suffen and Gingen, both lying on the Fils.

7. The bailiwick of Stubersheim, in which are the parochial-villages of Stubersheim, Schalkstetten, Waldhausen, Steinenkirch, Brauniskeim and Weiler ob Geiszlingen.

8. The bailiwick of Turkheim, comprehending the parochial-villages of Turkbeim and Amsletten, as also Oppingen.

9. The prefecturate of Lonsee, to which belong the parochial-villages of Lonsee, Urspring and Reutti, or Reitheim ob Urspring.

10. The bailiwick of Nellingen, containing the parochial-villages of Nellingen, Merklingen and Aufbausen.

11. The bailiwick of Scharenstetten, in which are the parochial-villages of Scharenstetten, Lutzhausen and Themmenhausen.

12. The bailiwick of Bermaringen, containing the parochial-villages of Bermaringen, Maringen and Lehr.

- 13. The bailiwick of Pful, comprehending in it the parochial-villages of Pful, together with Offenbausen, Steinbeim, Holzschwang, Reutti ob der Donau, Grimmelsingen and Ersingen, the last of which appertains to the Sammlungsslift, or abbey of Ladies, at Ulm.
- 14. The lordship of Wain, situate between the rivers Iler and Westerlich, or Weybing, and purchased of the abbey of Ochsenhausen. This lordship contains some fine woods. In it is Wain, a parochial-village.

E S Z L I N G E N.

The free Imperial city of Efzlingen lies on the Neckar, confifting partly of the city itself, which stands on a branch of the Neckar, and in which is the upper or parochial-church of St. Dennis, together with the new or Dominican church and the orphan-house, the Frauenkirehe, the lower or Barfuszer kirche, the grammar-school or padagogium, and the collegium alumnorum; as also the fine town-house, the beautiful Ritterbau, and the rich hospital of St. Catherine; and partly of three suburbs; viz. the upper suburb, which, as well as the city, stands upon a branch of the Neckar; the suburb suburb of Beutten, near which lies the citadel; and the suburb of Bliensau, which is fituated on an illand betwixt the main stream of the Neckar and the above-mentioned branch, and is noted for containing in it the arfenal of the circle of Swabia. The principal church here belongs to the Lutherans, of whom the whole magifracy confifts. The Roman-catholics of this town perform their public worthip in the chapel of the stewards, which the convent of Kayforsheim has in this place. It is no easy matter to determine the first commencement of its Imperial freedom. In the Diet of the Empire it possessible fifth place on the bench of the Imperial cities of Swabia, but the third on the bench of cities in the circle of Swabia. Its affeffment in the matricula of the Empire amounted at first to two hundred and twenty florins; but, in the year 1683, this fum was reduced to one hundred and forty-seven, and in 1692 brought down still farther to thirty-seven. To a kammerziele, or the chamber at Wetzlar, it is faid to pay one hundred and feventy-feven rixdollars, fifty-one kruitzers. As a bailiwick this city pays yearly an acknowledgment of ten florins to the Imperial prefecturate of Alterf. Eschingen is under the protection of the Duke of Wurtemberg. In the year 1701 it suffered much by a fire. Near it, in the Neckar-halden as it is called, is produced a good Neckar-wine. Its territories are on all sides surrounded by the dutchy of Wurtemberg. Exclusive of the villages of Mettingen and certain hamlets, they contain in them also the parochialvillages of Deyzisau on the Neckar, Mohringen and Vaybingen, the two last of which lie in the Fildern, or coal-fields, as they are called; and belong to the above-mentioned hospital of St. Catherine.

R E U T L I N G E N.

The free Imperial city of Reutlingen stands about one long German mile's distance from Tubingen, on the little river Ecketz, which runs into the Neckar. This city is not large, having in it only one parochial-church, together with one hospital, an orphan-house and a grammar-school. Both the magistracy and burghery here are Lutheran, the former of which usually consists of twenty-eight persons, of whom the Schultheisz, or civil-judge, and twelve others, are commoners, and constitute the Zunstmeister collegium or the wardens of companies. It is said that the Emperor Frederick II. first environed this city with a wall in the year 1215 or 1220, and also made it an Imperial free town. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wencessaus engaged, in the years 1348 and 1387, to maintain the town in its immediate dependency on the Empire, and neither to mortgage nor sell it. The jurisdiction which the Counts of Achalm (whose seat stood not far from hence) had over this town, and which on their extinction fell to the Empire, is said to have been made over by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, in the year 1330, together with with the lands of the Counts, to Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg; but, in the year 1500, Duke Ulrich fold this jurifdiction to the town of Reutlingen, or, as others say, ceded it to the Emperor Maximilian, who transferred it to the town in lieu of a sum of money. In the Diet of the Empire Reutlingen is possessed in the sixth seat and vote on the bench of the Imperial towns of Swabia; but in that of the circle of the sourth on the bench of towns. Its assessed in the matricula of the Empire and circle formerly amounted to one hundred and eighty-eight florins, but, in the year 1683, this sum was reduced to one hundred and thirty-six, and, in 1726, the town being destroyed by a great fire, in 1728, it was brought down to eighty. Its contingency to a kammerziele is sifty-seven rixdollars, forty-sour kruitzers. This town is under the protection of the Duke of Wurtemberg. For its judicial authority it pays annually sixteen guilders in gold as an acknowledgment to the Imperial presecturate of Altors. Near it, in the year 1716, was discovered a sulphureous spring.

To its territories belong the parishes of Bezingen, Wanweil, Ommenhausen and Bronnweiler.

The free Imperial city of Nordlingen lies in the Riesz on the river Eger, in a fertile country, particularly in pasturage, and, till the year 1238, stood on the adjacent hill of Emeransberg, but was that year confumed by fire, upon which it was built on its present site. The burghers here are almost all of them Lutheran, and those of that religion, exclusive of the parochialchurch, are possessed of two others, one of which stands near the hospital, and a Latin school; but the Roman-catholics in this city celebrate public worship in the church near the German house which belongs to the landcommandery of Ellingen in Franconia, and which, in the year 1387, fell to the Teutonick order. The magistracy also are Lutheran. Formerly the town was under the bishopric of Ratisben, but in the thirteenth century it obtained the freedom of the Empire, though not before the year 1251. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceflaus promifed, that the town should be maintained in its immediate dependency on the Empire. In the Imperial Diet it possesses the seventh place on the bench of the Imperial towns of Swabia, but the fifth among those of that circle. Nordlingen was formerly affeffed to the matricula of the Empire and Circle at two hundred and fixty florins, but, in the year 1683, this affestment was reduced to one hundred and fifty. Its contingent to the chamber at Wetzlar is faid to be two hundred and nineteen rixdollars, feventy-two kruitzers. The Emperor Charles IV. granted it the privilege of holding a court, but it has made no use of it. Near it, in the year 1634, the Swedes were defeated by the Imperialifls. Vol. V.

In 1647, it was befieged by the army of the Empire for feventeen weeks, during which it suffered greatly by an accidental fire. In the year 1702, a samous compact was entered into here between the five circles, and the town better fortified, as being a bulwark to the circle of Franconia against Bavaria.

The Princes and Counts of the house of Oettingen have for a long time past endeavoured to acquire the jurisdiction over its territories, which has given rise to many and even bloody contests. To it belong the parochial-villages of Nehrmenmingen, Goldburgkausen and Schweindorf, and it is also possessed of a share in several other villages.

The free Imperial town of Hall, otherwise called Swabian-Hall, and in Latin Hala Suevorum, lies, together with its territories, on the river Kocher, betwixt the counties of Hohenlohe and Limpurg, the margravate of Anspach, the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the priory of Elwangen. The town itself is so furrounded by mountains that it is not easy to approach it, and in it and in the suburbs the river Kocher divides itself, both these parts being joined by means of a bridge of stone. Considered in other respects, this town confifts of three parts; namely, of Hall, or Old-Hall, in which stands the principal church of St. Michael, together with the college, the hospital, another church and the falt-houses, from which the town takes its name: Of the part above Kocher, in which stands a house of the order of St. John and the church of St. Catherine, and of the Gelbinger gaffe, or street. This city is Lutheran. The inhabitants are falt-boilers and handicraftsmen. The magistracy consists of twenty-four persons under the direction of two burgomasters as presidents, who, on account of the above-mentioned division of the town, are called fladtmeister. The city owes its original to its faltsprings, which, it is faid, gave occasion to several noblemen to settle here, and among other buildings to erect them feven stone towers; whence the place at first obtained the name of Siebenburgen, or Seven Castles. Afterwards it became gradually enlarged till it arrived to its present state, but was very much damaged by fire in the years 1346, 1680 and 1728. In 1348 and 1387, the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus engaged to maintain the city in its immediate dependency on the Empire, and neither to mortgage nor fell it. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the ninth seat on the bench of Imperial towns in Swabia, but the fixth among those of the circle. affessment in the Imperial and circular matricula, which formerly amounted to two hundred, and ninety-three florins and a half, was, in the year 1683, reduced to one hundred and eighty. To the chamber at Wetzlar it is rated at one hundred and forty rixdollars, fixty-three kruitzers. One of its privileges is its having an Imperial standard, and, among the things worthy of notice here, is this, namely, that the now suppressed coin called bellers take their name from this place. Its arms are, Or, a hand dexter, and, gules, a cross of the same. In the year 1710, several Protestant Prince and States had a meeting here, and entered into a convention among themselves.

To the jurisdiction of this town belong seven presecturates, containing Velberg, a fmall town, feated on the little river Bubler.

Ilzhofen, also a small town.

Limpurg, a castle, purchased by Erasmus, Baron of Limpurg, in the year 1540.

The free Imperial town of Ueberlingen stands on a rock in a bay of the lake of Costanz, which takes its name from it, and its moats are formed of fo many stone quarries. This town is divided into three parts; namely, into the lower town, the upper town and the Gallenberg; in the last of which is produced wine. Ueberlingen is Roman-catholic, and contains in it a collegiate-church dedicated to St. Nicolas, as also a house of the order of St. John, an Imperial hospital, three convents and two other churches. Near the town is a good mineral fpring. Ueberlingen was an Imperial town fo early as the time of the Emperors of Swabia. Charles IV. and Wenceflaus, engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the Empire. To the prefecturate of Altorf it pays, as an annual acknowledgment, ten pounds of pfennings. In the diet of the Empire it possesses the eleventh place among the Imperial towns of Swabia, and among those of the circle the seventh. Its affessiment to the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to three hundred and twelve florins, but in 1683 was reduced to one hundred and thirty-nine. Its contingency to the chamber of Wetzlar is one hundred and fifty-feven rixdollars, twenty-four kruitzers.

To the jurifdiction of this town belong

The castles of Hohen-Bodman and Ramsberg, together with

The parishes of Mabsspuren, Bondorf, Great-Schonach, Under-Siggingen, Denkingen and Sernatingen.

The free Imperial town of Rotlaveil or Rottaveil stands on an eminence on the Neckar, its territories being furrounded by the dutchy of Wurtemberg, the upper county of Hobenberg belonging to Austria and the Furstenberg Landgraviate of Baar. Rothweil is Roman-catholic, and contains in it a house of Monks of the order of St. John, together with a residence of Jefuits and three convents. It is a very ancient Imperial town, and was engaged by the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceflaus to be maintained as fuch. In the Imperial Diet it holds the tenth place among the towns of Swabia, and the eighth among those of the circle. Its affessment in the Imperial and circular matricula, which formerly amounted to two hundred and eighty florins, was, in 1683, reduced to one hundred and feventy-feven, and in 1728 first to one hundred and forty-four, afterwards to thirty, and at last to fourteen. The contingency it pays to a kammerziele is one hundred and fifty-feven rixdollars, twenty kruitzers and a half. In 1463 it entered into an alliance for the first time, and in 1519 into one for ever with the cantons of Switzerland, with a refervation, however, of all due allegiance to the Roman Empire: But receiving an Austrian garrison in 1632 on its being befieged by the Swedes, it was excluded from that alliance. The principal thing in this town is the Imperial tribunal, the first traces of which are to be found in the provincial court of Swabia, which seems to have received its origin in the time of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and till the middle of the fifteenth century was fometimes called the provincial court of the Emperor and fometimes the Imperial tribunal of Rothweil. In 1360 the Emperor Charles IV. transferred to Count Rudolph of Sulz the right of holding this country-court in the name of his Imperial Majesty and the Empire, and in 1401 the Emperor Rupert empowered the said Counts to substitute a Baron or Count as their deputy. From the Counts of Sulz this post of hereditary chief judge descended to the house of Schwarzenberg, as mentioned above in the landgraviate of Kletgau, and the Prince of Schwarzenberg even chose a Stadtholder for the district from among the Counts or Barons. In this tribunal feven judges take their feats. depends, however, wholly upon the Emperor. Its jurisdiction extends over the circle of Swabia, and the Austrian countries lying therein, as also over the circles of Franconia and the Rhine. A great many States, however, have obtained the privilege of exemption from it, but this privilege extends not usually to matrimonial cases, or such as are formally referved to this tribunal. It enjoys a joint jurisdiction with the Imperial States in its district; but these have for a long time preferred several complaints against it. From it lies an appeal to the supreme court of the Empire. Last of all it is to be observed that near this town is a freye Bursch, or free hunting jurisdiction, of pretty large extent.

The territories of this town include a considerable, and as some suppose, the best part of the proper estate of the Counts of Zimmern, or Zimbern, who became extinct in the year 1591, which estate the town purchased for the sum of 88000 florins. In its district also stands the samily seat of the said counts. The parishes belonging to this jurisdiction are Altslatt, Dauingen, Deislingen, Dietingen, Duningen, Elsendorf, Fischbach, Herren-Zimmern, Hoch-Mesingen, Mublhausen, Lower-Aeschach or Eschach, Seedorf, Stetten, and Villingen, which last lies in a village of the same name.

The free Imperial town of Heilbrunn, or Hailbronn, lies on the Neckar, in a very pleafant and fruitful wine country, fituated on the borders of the dutchy of Wurtemberg and the Palatinate. Heilbronn is well-built, and of its three churches the parochial-church of St. Kilian is the principal. The college and town-library lie in the convent formerly belonging to the Minorites. At this place also is a mansion-house and commandery of the Teutonick order, to which belong the villages of Wimmenthal and Sondheim, together with a nunnery of the order of St. Clara. The form of government in this city is aristocratical, and the magistracy here, as well as most of the inhabitants, are Lutheran. The Emperor Henry IV. is faid to have erected this place into a town, Frederick II. enlarged it and improved its fortifications; Conrad III. created it an Imperial city, and Frederick III. granted it the three colours, azure, gules, and argent, also bestowing on it for arms an eagle fable in a field Or. The Emperors Charles IV, and Wenceslaus engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the Empire. Heilbronn was formerly for a confiderable time under the protection of Wurtemberg, and afterwards under that of the Elector-palatine. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the twelfth seat among the Imperial towns of Swabia, and the ninth in the bench of those of the circle. By the matriculas of the Empire and Circle its affefiment appears formerly to have been two hundred and eight florins; but in the year 1683 this fum was reduced to one hundred and four, and in 1728 raifed to one hundred and twenty-fix. Its quota to a kammerziele, or the chamber at Wetzlar, is one hundred and forty-eight rix-dollars, feventy-one kruitzers.

Within its jurisdiction are the handsome parochial villages of Flein, Bockingen, Neckergartach, and Frankenbach.

The free Imperial town of Gmund, or Gemund, which is also Swabian Gmund, and originally Kayferfreuth, lies on the Rems at the end of the Remsthal, betwixt the manor belonging to the Wurtemberg convent of Lorch and the lordship of Heydenheim. Its territories border also on the Imperial town of Aalen and the lordship of Rechberg. The whole town is Roman-catholic; and exclusive of the principal church of the Holy Cross, it contains in it three other churches, together with another near the hospital, as also four convents and two numeries. The magistracy here is elected out of the body of the people. Gmund was very probably a municipal town of the Dukes of Swabia of the Hohen-Stauffen family, but afterwards obtained the freedom of the Empire and the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency thereon. In the Imperial Diet it possesses the thirteenth seat among the towns of Swabia, and among those of the circle the tenth. Its assessment to a matricula of the Empire and Circle, which formerly amounted to one hundred and seventyfix florins, was, in 1683, reduced to one hundred and fifteen, but in 1728 it was raifed to one hundred and forty-two. Its contingency to the chamber of Wetzlar is faid to amount to one hundred and one rixdollars, forty-one kruitzers and a half. Near it is a common Pursch, or free hunting ground called Mundart.

Within its territories are the parishes of Bargau, Dewangen, Herrligkosen, Iggingen, Mogglingen, and Bobingen, together with Lautern, Muthlangen, Upper-Bettringen, Spreitbach, Weil, Wetzgau, and Zimmerbach.

The free Imperial town of Memmingen lies in a beautiful and fertile plain on a small river called the Aach, and running into the Iler. This town is Lutheran, and its principal church of St. Martin belongs entirely to those of that communion; but the church of our Lady is possessed by them in common with the Roman-catholics here, by virtue of an agreement made in the year 1569. In it is also an Augustine monastery with a church, a Franciscan nunnery, a convent or residence of Monks of the Holy Cross (ordinis S. spiritus de Româ in Saxiâ) with a hospital near it, in which is a church, as also a house, a chapel consecrated to the three Eastern wise men or Kings of Cullen, a small church, and another hospital near the church of our Lady. The magistracy here, which consists of nineteen persons, is partly Lutheran and partly patrician, and partly also composed of the body of the people. The arms of the town are a demi eagle and a crofs gules in a field argent. It is uncertain whether Memmingen anciently belonged to the Guelfs county of Altorf or not: It is certain, however, that Guelph VI. frequently retided, and at last died at this place. So early as the days of the Emperor Frederick I. it was a free Imperial town, and on the failure of the Guelph-Alterf family secured itself so effectually in its Imperial freedom, that King Rudolph acknowledged and confirmed it therein by a charter bearing date in 1286. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus also engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the Empire. In the Imperial Diet it possesses the fourteenth place on the Swabian bench of the cities of the Empire, but in that of the circle of Swabia the eleventh. Its affefiment in the matricula of the Empire which formerly amounted to two hundred and forty-eight florins, was in 1683 reduced to one hundred and fifty. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays two hundred and eighty-one dollars, thirty-two kruitzers, exclusive of a yearly present of sisteen lb. of hellers to the prefecturate of the province on account of its balliwick. With Switzerland, Italy, and other countries adjacent it carries on a good trade in Bavarian falt, home-spun linen, hops, grain, and other goods. In the year 1647, after a vigorous fiege of nine weeks by the Imperialifts and Bavarians, it furrendered as incapable of farther refishance. The district of this town belongs partly to the hospital, the patriciate, and the house of the order of the Holy Ghost.

1. The lordship of Eisenburg belongs partly to the patriciate in Memmingen, partly to the house of the order of the Holy Ghost, and partly to the under hospital. In it are three seats, namely Eisenburg, Grunfurth, and Trunkelsberg, together with the village of Amadingen, and three hamlets.

Kunersberg, noted for its good bath, its terra sigillata, and porcelain, belongs to the family of Kuner Lords of Kunersberg.

Upper-holzgunz, a feat with lands annexed to it, belongs, together with its high jurisdiction to the upper hospital of the order of the Holy Ghost.

Under-holzgunz, a large Roman-catholic village, belongs to the under hospital.

Lauben, is a protestant village with a church in it, seated on the Gunz, having manufactures of brass, pewter, and wire.

The lordship of Wespach is a fief of the under-hospital.

Frickenhausen, is a Protestant village, with a church on a steep mountain, over which the under-hospital is possessed of the whole lower jurisdiction, and one half also of the high, the other half pertaining to the electorate of Bavaria on account of Mindelheim.

Erkheim, is a very long village, with a Roman-catholic and Lutheran church in it: To the latter is annexed Dankelfried noted for its chalybeate spring. The convent of Ottobeuren is possessed of a part of Erkheim.

Arlefried is a protestant village.

Woringen, likewise a Protestant village, but containing also a Roman-catholic church in it, and being a fief to the under-hospital at Kempten.

Hausen, is a large Lutheran village, one half of which belongs to the hofpital, the other half being assigned for the payment of the Lutheran parish-church of St. Martin under the high jurisdiction of the prefecturate of Alterf.

Volkratshofen, a Lutheran village with a church in it, and belonging to the hospital but under the presecturate.

The Lutheran parochial villages of Dickenreishausen, Buxach, Steinheim, and Berg.

The free Imperial town of Lindau in ancient records named Lintonua, Lindaugia, and Lindowe, and by some also who affect to give it a Greek appellation Phylyarea from the linden-tree, stands on an island in the lake of Coflanz, but has a communication with the continent by means of a bridge. This island is divided by an arm of the lake in such a manner as to form another smaller island, which is separated from the city, and confifts of vineyards and gardens, being walled quite round. On account of this situation it is that Lindau has been stilled the Venice of Swabia. cerning the Imperial abbey here and the relation it bears to the town, notice has been taken of it already. The greatest part of the burghers The parish church is dedicated to St. Stephen. here are Lutherans. The town has also a well endowed hospital, and a grammar school confifting of four classes. The castle and the Heyden Maur, or beathen wall. as it is called, standing near the gate at the bridge which leads to the continent, are reckoned Roman works; the latter of which is attributed to Tiberius Nero, and the former to Constantinus Chlorus, at the time of their encampments campments in this island during their expeditions against the Vindelici and Alemanni. It is also supposed that near this castle formerly stood a town. and that the little church of St. Peter here was built on the first introduction of Christianity into this country. This town occurs likewise in two records under the name of Curtis Lintowa, and bearing date fo long ago as the time of the Carlovingians. In the year 948, Lindau being laid in ashes by Her. mann Duke of Swabia, a great number of the inhabitants betook themselves to Eschach on the continent, which by means of this emigration from became a thriving town. But in the eleventh century this place being confumed by fire, they purchased their freedom of their Lord Count Hugo of Bregenz, returned again to the island and rebuilt their original town of Lindau, which in the years 1264 and 1347 was again almost totally confumed by fire. By King Rudolphus's charter of 1275, the town appears both at that time and a long while before to have been Imperial. Emperors Charles IV. and Winceslaus promised to maintain it as such. In 1396 it procured to itself for ever the redemption of the Imperial vogtey or presecturate. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the sisteenth place among the Imperial cities of the Swabian bench, but in the circle of Swabia the twelfth. Its affessiment to a matricula of the Empire and Circle, which formerly amounted to one hundred and ninety-fix florins, in the year 1683 was reduced to ninety, but in 1728 raised to one hundred and thirty, though with a refervation at the same time of an abatement at a certain limited term. The magistracy here consists of the privy and large council. Lindau was also formerly a court-town and a provincial tribunal; but instead of these it has ever since the end of the fifteenth century been annexed to Altorf. It pays annually, as an acknowledgment, two tuns of wine to the prefecturate of Altorf. At the Diet held here in the year 1496 was eftablished the chamber of justice. In 1647 it held out a siege of nine weeks against the Swedes, who were at last obliged to retire. In 1728 a confiderable part of it was confumed by fire.

The district belonging to this town has been represented in a map drawn betwixt the years 1626 and 1628 by John Andrew Raub. It lies betwixt the lordships of Wasserburg, Tettnang, Achberg, New-Ravensburg, and Bregenz. In it are comprehended

The villages of Eschach or Aeschach, which was formerly a town.

Rickenbach, Schonau, and Oberraitnau, which constitute a part of the town's property. But in each of these villages the secular abbey at Lindau has a farm, and the patronage of them was mortgaged, in 1334, by the Emperor Lewis to Hugh Count of Bregenz, as also by the Emperor Charles IV. in the years 1364 and 1366 to Ulrich the Elder Count of Helfenstein; by the Emperor Winceslaus in 1394 to Mark von Schellenberg; and lastly, by the Emperor Sigismund in 1430 to the town of Lindau, for the sum of 1300 florins. All the natives of these four villages, before the Vol. V.

the year 1430, were freemen of Lindau. The three first stand within the high and low jurisdiction of the town of Lindau, but the fourth only within the latter.

The villages and hamlets of Schachen, Tegelstein, Hory, Heimasreutin, Streittelssingen, and Hochbuch, and the castles of Senfftnau and Alwind are all under the high and low jurisdiction of the town.

The four parishes of Herkenschweiler, Sigmanszell, Weissenberg, and Unterraitnau, together with the hamlets and farms belonging to it; as likewise Besenreuttin, and certain other places lie within the low jurisdiction of the town; but the high jurisdiction thereof is vested in the county of Montfort.

The free Imperial town of Dinkelsbuhl or Dunkelspuhl, by some called Tricollis, Zeacollis, or Zeapolis, lies betwixt the county of Oettingen and the Marggravate of Anspach on the Wernitz, standing on three bubles or hills, on which formerly grew spelt. Accordingly on its arms is an ear of spelt Or. The inhabitants of this place are a mixture of Lutherans and Romancatholics, the latter of which are possessed of the great church and two convents; but the former of the hospital-church, their own consistory, and two German schools, in one of which, by virtue of a compact made in the year 1651, Latin may be taught. The magistracy here is also one half of it Roman-catholic, and the other Lutheran. The Teutonick order has a manor and a prefecturate here belonging to the commandery of Ellingen, and among others comprehends in it the village of Wimmelbach. In an ancient instrument this place is called oppidum villicum; and about the year 928 was first environed with a wall, to which in 1126 was added another. In 1351 the town was mortgaged by the Emperor to the Counts of Oettingen, but afterwards redeemed itself. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wencessaus engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the Empire. In the Diet of the Empire it possesses the sixteenth place on the bench of the Imperial towns in Swabia; but in that of the circle the thirteenth. Its affessment to the matricula of the Empire and Circle in the year 1683 was reduced from two hundred and eight florins to the fum of ninety-fix; but to the chamber at Wetzlar it is taxed at one hundred and forty-eight rixdollars, feventy-one kruitzers.

The hamlet of Tiefweeg constitutes the principal part of its district.

The free Imperial town of Biberach and its district lies on the little river Riesz, near the abbeys of Ochsenhausen and Heggbach; bordering likewise on Austria and other territories: The town is feated in a valley amidst mountains. Its magistracy are one half of it Roman-catholics, and the other half Lutherans. St. Martin's, or the great church here, and the rich hofpital, together with its church, are common to both fects. The Lutherans also are possessed of the church of St. Mary Magdalen. Each of them likewife has its grammar-school. In the town is a nunnery, and near it stands a convent of Monks. Its arms are azure, a beaver crowned Or. The Emperor Charles IV. and Wenceslaus promised to maintain it in its immediate dependance on the Empire. Its place in the Imperial Diet is the feventeenth among the towns of Swabia, and in that of the circle the fourteenth. Its taxation to the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to one hundred and ninety-fix florins, but in the year 1683 it obtained a reduction to fixty-five florins and three quarters. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays eighty-one rixdollars, fourteen kruitzers and a half, besides an annual present of ten lb. of psennings to the presecturate of Altorf.

The parochial village of Upper-holzheim belonging to its district is Lutheran. Exclusive too of the villages of Altenweiler, Baltringen, Ingerkingen, Lauberskausen, and several hamlets and farms, it has, under its presecturate, the lower jurisdiction over several others.

The free Imperial town of Ravensburg, formerly more properly called Gravensburg, or Counts-castle, lies in a valley on the river Schusz in the Algau, being wholly surrounded by the presecturate. The Roman-catholics and Lutherans here both with respect to spiritual and temporal affairs are on the same sooting with each other, and the magistracy is shared betwixt them. The church situated near the Carmelite convent is common to the two sects; but the Lutherans are exclusively possessed of the Trinity church, and the Roman-catholics also of two parish churches. This place anciently belonged to the Guelphs Counts of Altors; but was an Imperial town before the time of King Rudolphus, as appears from its charters of 1276 and 1286. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wencessaus engaged to maintain it in its immediacy on the Empire. In the general Diet it sits the eighteenth among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia, but on the bench of the circle it holds the sisteenth seat. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle was reduced in the years 1683 from one hundred and ninety-fix florins to feventy-eight; but in 1728 raifed again to one hundred. Its contribution to the chamber of Wetzlar is fixty rixdollars, feventy-feven kruitzers and a half. To the prefecturate it pays annually as an honorary prefent 10lb. of pfennings. Ravensburg is a very ancient court-town belonging to the tribunal held on the Leutkircher beath and the Purs. The castle, which stood on a hill near the town, and which in the year 1647, was burnt by the Swedes, the government in the Upper and Lower-Swabia assumed to themselves.

The lordship of Schmaleck, which was disposed of to the town by the Counts of Verden and Heiligenberg, together with its dependencies of Albertschwendi, Dankertschweiler, and Bettenreuti, stand under the high jurisdiction of the presecturate, subject to whose high and low jurisdiction are many other lands. From the charter of the Emperor Frederick III. which bears date in the year 1478, it appears that the superintendency of the whole forest of Alters, together with the power of holding an annual forest-court was conferred by the Empire as a sief on the town.

K E M P T E N.

The free Imperial town of Kempten in Latin Campidona, lies in the Algau on the river Iler which flows betwixt the town and the suburbs, and stands as is supposed on the site of the ancient Campodunum or Campidunum. But although there was a Roman station here, Ptolemy notwithstanding places Campodunum betwixt the rivers Ifer and Jun, whence it may with greater probability be looked for in the district of Munich the capital of Bavaria. Both the burghers and magistracy here profess Lutheranism, and in the town is a handsome parish church and a grammar-school. Its arms are the Imperial eagle party per pale, Or and fable. This town afferts that it is of greater antiquity than the Imperial abbey which stands near it; and the latter again maintains that the town owes its walls and its very appearance of a town to the abbots, and was for a long time subject to them, not the least shadow of their independency appearing before the thirteenth century. The town again allows that the abbots found means to obtain feveral privileges and regalia in it, but deny that they had ever any fuch thing as a complete fovereignty over it, having from time immemorial always been an independent Imperial town: However that be, King Rudolph I. in an instrument of 1289 stiles himself their legitimus advocatus, and enjoined that the burghers should not in anywise be, by the abbot, molested, mortgaged or aggrieved on account of the abbey; which instrument was further renewed and confirmed to it in the year 1304 by the Emperors Albert I. and in 1354 by Charles IV. which last named Emperor in the years 1348, 1355, and 1361, again ratified their immediate dependence on the Empire, and the like was done in 1370 and 1377 by the Emperor Wenceslaus: Lastly, it afferts that the Emperor Frederick III. in the year 1448 again took it into his defence and protection, and into that of the Empire, under which as well as other Imperial cities it had always continued immediately independent: And that he likewise confirmed all its ancient rights and privileges. Lastly, in 1525, this town for the sum of 30,000 gold guilders purchased to itself all rights, prerogatives, profits and perquifites, particularly all tolls and taxes belonging to the abbey, both within and without the town; which compact received the fanction not only of the Emperor Charles V. but also of all his successors, and likewise that of the fee of Rome. By virtue thereof the abbey is to build on its ground no more than what is absolutely necessary, and for its own service; and not to sortify the abbey, or raife any structures conducive thereto, nor within a mile of the town of Kempten, to hold or cause to be held any market, either public or private. In the year 1633 the town was taken fword in hand by the Imperialists with the slaughter of at least two thirds of the burghers. In the Diet of the Empire it fits the twentieth among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia; but in that of the circle, it possesses the sixteenth seat. Its affessment in the matricula of the Diet and Circle was in the year 1683 reduced from one hundred and fifty-fix florins to fifty-two. To the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar it pays forty rixdollars, fifty-tour kruitzers. It has no villages, but is possessed of lands, monies, tithes and other incomes.

The free Imperial town of Kauffbeuren and its district lies in the Algan on the Wertack, and in the valley which derives its name from it betwixt the bishopric of Augsburg, and the abbies of Kempten and Yrsec. Before the fourteenth century, and even so late as the year 1336, it was stilled only Buren, or Burun. The burghers here are partly Lucherans and partly Roman-catholics, but its magistracy consists of eight Lutherans and sour Roman-catholics. In the town-court and great council are also two Romancatholic members, but the rest are all Lutherans. Here is a Jesuits residence and a Franciscan nunnery. In or near the town was anciently a castle of the same name, from which, and that not improbably, Frederick of Buren, father to Frederick of Stauffen, first Duke of Swabia, received his furname. On the extinction of the Dukes of Swabia of the Hoben-Stauffen line, the town fell to the Empire. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceflaus promised to maintain it perpetually in its immediate dependency thereon. In the general Diet it fits the twenty-fecond among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia, but in the Diet of the circle its place is the feventeenth among the Imperial towns. Its affessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle was formerly one hundred and fixty florins, but in 1683 was reduced to fifty-three and one half. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays forty-four rixdollars, fixty-five kruitzers.

In its district are the villages of Upper-Beuren, Maurstetten, Upper-Germeringen, Upper-Ostendorf and Westendorf.

The free Imperial town of Weil, in Latin Wila, is also called Weilerstadt, Stadtwil, or Weil die stadt, by way of distinction from a village of the same name. This town stands on the river Wurm, betwixt Liebenzell and Sindelfingen, two towns belonging to the dutchy of Wurtemberg, by which dutchy it is wholly furrounded. The Roman-catholic religion prevails here. The parish-church of St. Peter was formerly collegiate. Here is also a convent of Augustine and Capuchin Monks, together with a rich hospital. The time of its being made an Imperial town is not certainly known. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceflaus promifed to maintain it as fuch. In the general Diet it fits the twenty-third among the Imperial towns on the Swabian bench, but in the circular Diet is possessed of the eighteenth seat. Its affestment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle was in the year 1683 reduced from fixty florins to eighteen, but in 1728 raifed again to thirty. Its quota to the chamber at Wetzlar is forty-five rixdollars, ten kruitzers. To the Imperial prefecturate of Altorf it pays annually as an acknowledgment ten pound of hellers. In the year 1388 Count Ulrich of Wurtemberg lost his life in a battle near this place. In 1648 the French took it by storm. Near it is a freye purseh, or free hunting district.

W A N G E N.

The free Imperial town of Wangen lies, together with its district, on the river Argen, betwixt the prefecturate of Altorf and the lordships of Tettnang, Egloff and others; being Roman-catholic, and containing in it a parish-church, as also an hospital and a convent of Capuchin Monks. At what time it became an Imperial town is not known. In 1330 the Emperor Lewis mortgaged it to Hugh, Count of Bregenz; but the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus promised to maintain it in its perpetual privileges. In the diet of the Empire it sits the twenty-sourth among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia, but the nineteenth in the circular Diet. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle which formerly amounted to eighty florins was in 1683 reduced to forty. To the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar its quota is thirty-six rixdollars, forty-three kruitzers. To the imperial prefecturate of Altorf it pays annually eight pounds pounds of pfennings. Wangen is also one of the court-towns of the tribunal which is held on Leutkircher heath and the Purs. In the year 1538 it was greatly damaged by fire. In its district are γ S N I.

The free Imperial town of 1/ni, or Isny, lies in the Algau, betwixt the counties of Hoheneck and Trauchburg, and the lordship of Eglof. Its magistracy and the greatest part of its burghery are Lutkeran; but among the latter are fome Roman-catholics. Here is even an abbey of Benedictine Monks, of which the noble family of the Treuchsesses are administrators and patrons, the whole city indeed likewise formerly belonging to them. But the latter in 1365 redeeming itself for 9000 lb. weight of hellers, it was by the Emperor Charles IV. taken into the immediate protection of the Empire, with all the rights immunities and usages of the other Imperial towns. The Emperor Wenceslaus further affured them of the perpetual enjoyment of their tenure. In a Diet of the Empire its place among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia is the twenty-fifth, but in the circular Diet the twentieth. Its taxation to the marricula of the Empire and Diet was in 1683 reduced from eighty to forty florins. In 1692 it was further reduced to thirty, and afterwards to fixteen, but in 1728 raifed again to thirty-eight florins. To the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar it pays thirty-three rixdollars, feventy-five kruitzers. Ever fince the year 1514 Yjni has been a court-town for the heath of Leutkirch and the Purs. In 1631 a great part of it was confirmed by fire, and in 1721 it suffered extremely by the like calamity.

L E U \mathcal{T} K I R C H.

The free Imperial town of Leutkirch lies in the Algau on the river Efchach, which below this place runs into the Aitrach, and likewise on the heath to which it gives name. In it is a Lutheran and a Roman-catholic church, together with a nunnery of Franciscans, but the greatest part of the magistracy are Lutherans. Its immediate dependence on the Empire may be traced with certainty at least from the time of King Rudolph, and the Emperors Charles IV. and Wencessaus promised to preserve it in the same. In the Diet of the Empire its place among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia is the twenty-eighth, and among those of the circle the twenty-first. Its assessment to the matricula of the Empire and Circle was in the year 1683 reduced from forty to sourteen florins; but in 1728 raised again to twenty-one. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays thirty-three rixdollars, dollars, fixty-nine kruitzers and a half. Leutkirch was formerly a court-town for the tribunal held on its heath, and in the Purs. It is furrounded with lands under the high and low jurifdiction of the prefecturate, on which account, in the year 1545, it entered into a particular convention with it.

IV I M P F F E N.

The free Imperial town of Wimpffen, in Latin Wimpina, and in the time of the Romans called Cornelia, lies in the Craichgau on the river Neckar, which hereabouts receives into it the Jagst. This place confists properly of two towns, the most considerable of which is called Wimpffen auf dem berg, or Wimpffen on the bill, and the other Wimpffen in thale, or Wimpften on the vale. In the former of these is a Lutheran parish-church and a grammar-school, as also a Roman-catholic hospital, or house of the order of the Holy Ghost; but in the latter is a Roman-catholic abbey dedicated to St. Peter, together with a convent of Dominican Monks. The magistracy here, however, are wholly Lutherans. The Huns are faid to have ravaged this town; but an instrument of donation by King Henry VII. bearing date in the year 1228, shews it to have entirely recovered that calamity. On the failure of the Dukes of Swabia it gradually procured its freedom, and the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus promised to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the Empire. In the general Diet it fits the twenty-ninth among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia, but in the circular its place is the twenty-fecond. Its taxation to the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to eighty florins; but in the year 1683 this was reduced to twenty-five; and in 1728, further lowered to twenty-two. To the chamber at Wetzlar its quota is fifty-one rixdollars, feventy-five kruitzers and a half. In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries there was an Imperial tribunal at this place, from which possibly the ancient Oberhof, as it was called, took its origin: And this tribunal adminstered speedy justice to a great many circumjacent places. In the years 1530 and 1540 was held an Imperial chamber here; and in 1626 a sharp action happened here betwixt Count Tilly and the Marggrave of Baaden-Durlach. In 1645 and 1688 Wimpffen was taken by the French.

The only village in its district is that of Hofftatt.

G I E N G E N

The free Imperial town of Giengen lies on the river Brenz, being furcounded by the lordship of Heydenbeim, which belongs to Wurtemberg. This place place is Lutheran. At what time it came to be an Imperial town is not known. In the year 1354 the Emperor Charles IV. granted it to the Counts of Helfenstein as an hereditary fief, but in 1378 that Emperor reassumed it, and the Emperor Wenceslaus also promised to maintain it as an Imperial town. In 1634 it was entirely destroyed by the Imperial army. In the general Diet it holds the thirty-first place among the Imperial towns of the Bench of Swabia, and in that of the Circle of Swabia the twenty-third. Its assessment to the matricula of the Empire and circle, which formerly amounted to fixty florins, was, in the year 1683, reduced to thirty-four; but in 1728 settled again at thirty-six. To the chamber at Wetzlar its quota is twenty-seven rixdollars, fix kruitzers.

P F U L L E N D O R F.

The free little Imperial town of Pfullendorf lies in the Hegau, betwixt the counties of Heiligenberg and Sigmaringen. Some are of opinion that at this place stood the town of Bragodurum, mentioned by Ptolomey. This town is Roman-catholic, and exclusive of a parish-church contains in it a hospital and two nunneries. Anciently it had Counts of its own, of whom Count Rudolph, who died in 1180, having only one daughter, was prevailed upon to transfer his county to the Emperor Frederick I. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus promised to maintain the town in the enjoyment of its Imperial privileges. In the Diet of the Empire its place is the twenty-fixth among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia, and in that of the circle the twenty-fourth. Its affessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to one hundred and four florins; but in the year 1683 this was reduced to forty-three, and in 1728 raifed again to forty-fix. To the chamber of Wetzlar it pays thirty-three rixdollars, fixty-nine kruitzers and a half. To the Imperial prefecturate it pays annually an acknowledgment of five pounds of pfennings.

The village of Linz belonging to it, and which stands at the distance of about one hour west from the town, gave name to the Linzgau

The free little Imperial town of Buchhorn, or Buchorn, lies on the lake of Costanz, being Lutheran, and had formerly Counts of its own, who failed in the person of Count Otto, on which this town escheated to the Guelphs, Counts of Alters: But even so early as the Swabian Emperors it was an Imperial town; and was further declared such by King Rudolph I. in the year 1275. The Emperors Charles IV. and Wenceslaus promised also to Vol. V.

maintain it in its privileges. In the general Diet it holds the thirty-fourth place among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia, and in that of the circle the twenty-fifth. Its affeliment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle was reduced in the year 1683 from twenty to fourteen florins, and in 1728 farther lowered to thirteen. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays twenty rixdollars, twenty-feven kruitzers, exclusive of an acknowledgment of ten pounds of pfennings to the Imperial prefecturate of Altorf. This place is under the protection of the Imperial town of Uberlingen. In it are warehouses for the goods consigned to it from St. Gall and Steinach, cross the lake of Costanz to Swabia, and likewise for those sent in return. In the year 1369 it was wholly destroyed by fire. Not far from it stands a Dominican nunnery called Lieben, or Lowenthal.

The lordship of Baumgarten, together with the seat of that name and the large village of Eriskirch, is under the high jurisdiction of the presecturate.

A A L E N.

The free Imperial town of Aalen, in Latin called Ala, or Ola, lies in the Kochenthal on the river Kocher, betwixt the district of the Imperial town of Gmund and the abbey of Elwangen, being wholly Protestant. A Count of Oettingen is said to have mortgaged it for the sum of 20,000 florins to Count Eberhard of Wurtemberg; but in the year 1360 the Emperor Charles IV. purchased it and annexed it to the Empire, and as such the Emperor Wencessaus in 1387, and in 1401 the Emperor Rupert, promised to maintain it. In the general Diet its place among the Imperial towns on the Swabian bench is the thirty-fifth, but in that of the circle it possesses the twenty-sixth. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to fixty florins, but in the year 1683 it obtained a reduction of it to twenty-nine, and in the year 1728 this sum was raised again to thirty-eight florins. To the chamber of Wetzlar it pays eighteen rixdollars, fifty-fix kruitzers and a half; and as an acknowledgment of its having a civil justiciary it pays likewise every year ten florins to the Imperial presecturate of Altors.

To its district belong the hamlets of Upper and Under-Rombach, Habem-statt, Rothenberg and Little-Hurblingen.

The small free Imperial town of Bopfingen, or Popfingen, lies in the Riesz on the river Eger, being surrounded by the county of Oettingen. This place is Lutheran. In the year 1387 the Emperor Wenceslaus promised it the con-continuance of its privileges. In the Diet of the Empire its place among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia is the thirty-feventh, but in that of the circle it ranks the twenty-feventh. Its affessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle sormerly amounted to twenty-four florins; but in 1683 this was reduced to seventeen, though in 1728 raised again to twenty. To the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar its quota is thirteen rixdollars, sixty-five kruitzers and a half. This place is proprietor of the village of Oberdorf in its neighbourhood.

 $B \qquad U \qquad C \qquad H \qquad \mathcal{A} \quad U_{\bullet}$

The free little Imperial town of Buchau stands on the Federsec. In the time of the Emperor Lewis it was mortgaged, but in 1347 that Emperor promised to make it unalienable if it redeemed itself, and in 1387 it received assurances from the Emperor Wenceslaus of its perpetual annexment to the Empire. In the general Diet its place among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia is the thirty-sixth; but in that of the circle the twenty-eighth. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to eight florins, but in 1683 this sum was reduced to four. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays sixteen rixdollars, nineteen kruitzers and a half.

O F F E N B U R G.

The free little Imperial town of Offenburg lies on the river Kinzing in the Ortenau, being Roman-catholic, and containing in it two convents. This place was originally an Imperial town, but by the Empire mortgaged to Baaden, which in the year 1330 made over the faid mortgage to the bishopric of Straszburg, by which bishopric one half of it was further transferred to the Elector-palatine. From the former of these the town redeemed itself somewhat before the fixteenth century, and from the latter it became discharged in the year 1504, on that Prince's falling under the ban of the Empire. In 1635 its charter as an Imperial and circular town was renewed. In the Diet of the Empire it fits the twenty-feventh among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia, but at the circular Diet its place is reckoned the twenty-ninth. Its affessiment in the matricula of the Circle and Empire was in the year 1683 reduced from one hundred and twenty to thirty-four florins, and in 1728 to thirty-three. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays twenty-two rixdollars, eighty-eight kruitzers and a half. Offenburg is under the protection of Austria, and even the residence of the Austrian prefect in Ortenau. In the year 1688 its fortifications were blown up by the French.

G E N G E N B A C H.

The free little Imperial town of Gengenbach lies also on the river Kinzing in the Ortenau. It was for some time mortgaged to the bishopric of Strasz-burg, and by that bishopric further mortgaged to the Elector-palatine: but in the beginning of the sixteenth century, the Elector Philip being put under the ban of the Empire, it was discharged from that mortgage, though even whilst it continued this town enjoyed a seat, and its representative was actually present in the general Diets held in the years 1470 and 1489. In the Diet of the Empire its place is the thirty-second among the Imperial towns on the bench of Swabia, and in that of the circle the thirtieth. Its assessment in the matricula of the Circle and Empire was, in the year 1683, reduced from sixty to seventeen florins, but, in 1728, raised again to twenty-four. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays twenty-two rixdollars, eighty-eight kruitzers and a half.

ZELL AM HAMMERSBACH.

The free little Imperial town of Zell am Hammersbach, or Harmsbach, stands at no great distance from the preceding town, being wholly Roman-catholic. Like the two foregoing Imperial towns too it continued for some time mortgaged to the bishopric of Straszburg and the palatinate. In the Diet of the Empire its place among the Imperial towns of the bench of Swabia is the thirty-third, but in that of the circle the thirty-first and last. Its assessment in the matricula of the Empire and Circle formerly amounted to forty florins, but, in the year 1683, was reduced to eleven and a half, though, in 1728, again raised to twenty-one florins.

By an Imperial order transimitted to the town in the year 1711, the vale of Hammersbach was nominated an immediate State of the Empire, to be included in one and the same matricula with the town of Zell, and, excepting with respect to the payment of the third psenning to the affestments of the Empire in the circle of Swabia, and the chamber at Wetzlar was to be wholly separate and independant of the town; whence, accordingly, it has its own distinct court and magistracy under the direction of a vogt, or prelate, whose title is of great antiquity.

Obs. These three last towns, in the year 1614, renewed an old compact for the mutual support of their common privileges, antient usages, rights and liberties.

A P P E N D I X.

IN the circle of Swabia lie also the following immediate Imperial lands, though without being States of the circle: viz.

1. The ABBEY of

O T T O B E U R E N.

The Benedictine abbey of Ottobeuren, or Ottobeuren, formerly also called Uttenbeuren and Ittabeuren, stands about two hours eastward from Memmingen, being the finest convent of that order in all Swabia, and indeed a superb building, containing a splendid church. It was first founded in the year 764, and belonged to the cathedral of Augsburg, but is at present exempt from all subordination, having, in the year 1626, paid that cathedral the fum of 100,000 florins; in confideration of which it renounced all fupremacy, jurisdiction and authority, together with the power of imposing taxes over it; which agreement was confirmed by the Emperor. The title of the abbot is that of Reigning prelate and lord of the immediate free Imperial abbey of Ottoheuren, actual counsellor and hereditary chaplain to his Imperial Majesty. The convent is immediately under the Empire, and as such formerly used to be summoned to the Imperial Diet; but this privilege has for a long time been discontinued. It is likewise affessed in the quota of the circle of Swabia. Near it is a market-town, over which it is possessed of criminal jurisdiction, as a fief of the Empire, granted to it in the year 1521 by Charles V.

About half one hour's distance below Ottobeuren lies the Benedictine nunnery of Klosterwald, being subject to a prioress, and in some measure dependent on Ottobeuren.

To the jurisdiction of the abbey of Ottobeuren belong the villages of Altsried, Attabausen, Beheim, Benningen, which lies not far from Memmingen, Frechenried, Gunz, Hawangen, Upper and Under-Westerheim, Sundbeim on the Under-Gunz, Ungerhausen, &c. It is also possessed of certain lands belonging to the Teutonick order.

2. The Abbey of S. Ulrich and S. Afra in

In the Imperial city of Augsburg stands the abbey of St. Ulrich and St. Afra; from which, towards the beginning of the eleventh century, Bruno, bishop of Augsburg, removed the lay-brothers, filling it with Benedictine Monks, under the direction of an abbot, and also prevailed with the Emperor Henry II. to grant them five villages, after he himfelf had transferred all the wealth of this church to the bishopric and separated the incomes of the two churches from each other. In the years 1323 and 1335, the Emperor Lewis conferred two privileges on the abbot, declaring him his chaplain and receiving him and the convent, together with all its lands and vassals, into his particular protection; and likewise passed an act that the abbot and the convent should not be indictable before any other person than the Emperor himself. In the year 1417, the Emperor Sigismund granted a charter to the convent and at the same time put it under the vicariate protection of the city of Augsburg, to which, however, it pays the fum of one hundred golden guilders per annum as protection-money. In the year 1422, the freedom of this city was granted to the convent. In 1576, the bishop of Augsburg was for disputing the immediate dependency of this abbey on the Empire, and for affuming the fovereignty over it; but, in the year 1577, he received an order from the fiscal of the Empire enjoining him not to impose any tax on the abbey or exercise any kind of temporal jurisdiction over it, being, as a State of the Empire, to remain unmolested in its privileges. In the general Diet its abbot fits among the prelates of the Rhine, and in the matricula is affessed at twenty florins; but the taxes for the Empire, and other contributions, it usually pays into the office of the bishop of Augsburg.

3. The Villages belonging to the Carthusian monastery of

 $B \quad U \quad X \quad H \quad E \quad I \quad M.$

The chartreux of Buxbeim is under the protection of Austria; and for that reason has been mentioned above. On account, however of its villages, it pays taxes to the circle of Swabia.

Westerhard is a hamlet about half an hour's distance from the convent, fituated not far from the river Iler.

Plesz, or Blesz, a village, lying also not far from the Iler, and affessed in conjunction with the lordship of Boos, which belongs to the Fuggers.

Oberhausen is a village, seated on the river Roth beyond Weissenborn.

Bennern, a hamlet and seat, lying near Weissenborn.

Voringen, a village, fituate not far from the Iler.

Neubaus, a hamlet, belonging to the marquifate of Burgau, and lying not far from Leipheim.

4. The Lordship of

NEW-RAVENSBURG,

Stands on the river Argen, betwixt the lordships of Tettnang and Achberg and the districts of the Imperial towns of Wangen and Lindau. This lordship belongs to the abbey of St. Gall in Switzerland, which accordingly pays its quota to the contribution of the circle.

5. The VILLAGE of M U N S T E R,

Lies above the town of Donauwert, on the Danube, and belongs to the convent of the Holy-cross in the said town, having been purchased by it of the Counts of Oettingen; but is so far accounted a part of Swabia that it pays its quota to the contributions of that circle.

INTRODUCTION

To the CIRCLE of

B A V A R I A.

§.1. F the circle of Bavaria maps have been published by Sanfon, Jaillot, Nollin, de Witt, Visscher and Homann; but that of the last is the best, and constitutes the seventy-fifth in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. This circle is environed by the circles of Swabia, Austria and Franconia, and the Kingdom of Bohemia. It contains in it about 1020 fquare geographical miles, and derives its name from the dutchy of Bavaria, being the largest and most considerable part thereof.

§. 3. The twenty States of this circle are divided into two benches of ecclefiaftics and laicks. The ecclefiaftical States here are the archbishopric of Salzburg, the bishoprics of Freisingen, Ratisbonne and Passau, together with the priory of Berchtolsgaden and the abbies of S. Emeran, Lower and Upper-Munster, all which three lie in the city of Ratisbonne. The laicks here are composed of the electorate of Bavaria, the dutchies of Neuburg and Sulzbach, the landgravate of Leuchtenberg, the princely county of Sternstein, together with the counties of Haag and Ortenburg, as also the lordships of Ehrensels, Sulzburg and Pyrbaum, Hohenwaldeck, Breiteneck and the Imperial city of Ratisbonne. In the circular Diets their suffrages are demanded in the following order: viz. Salzburg, the electorate of Bavaria, Freisingen, Neuburg, Ratisbonne, Leuchtenberg, Passau, Sternstein, Berchtolsgaden, Haag, S. Emeran, Ortenburg, Lower-Munster, Ehrensels, Upper-Munster, Sulzburg, Pyrbaum, Hohenwaldeck, Breiteneck and Ratisbonne.

§.4. Of this circle the Elector of Bavaria and the archbishop of Salzburg are joint Summoning-princes and directors, the convocatory office being likewise held jointly by them, but the directorium is alternate. The Prince here in office is termed Director Agens. Ratisbonne or Wosserburg are the two places where the Diet of the circle is most usually held, though it is sometimes convened also at Landsbut or Muldorf. Whether there be a circular chancery and chamber of records here, I am not able to determine; every Director Agens, transacting the affairs of the circle in his own chancery, and keeping the registers of all the acts and occurrences of his directorium.

Prince

§. 5. Though Bavaria is one of the anterior provinces, as they are called from their being most exposed to the hostilities of the French, yet it never could be brought to an alliance with that people, notwithstanding the repeated invitations and even conferences which have been set on foot for that good purpose, saving that at the critical juncture of the year 1683, it entered into a triennial-league with the circles of Franconia and Swabia. In the year 1681, the military force of the Empire, in time of peace, being settled by an act of the Germanic body at 40,000 men, the number to be surnished by this circle was eight hundred cavalry and 1494 infantry; and towards the 300,000 florins granted, in the year 1707, to the operation-chest, it paid 18,252 florins, nine kruitzers. The Elector of Bavaria is hereditary-commander in chief of the circle, by virtue of which office he has the direction of all military-affairs.

With respect to religion this circle is one of the mixed. By virtue of the peace of Westphalia it was entitled to name four assessors in the Imperial chamber, which, by a resolution of the Diet in the years 1719 and 1720, were reduced to two, and at present only one is actually presented there, this presentation lying in the breast of the directors of the circle independently of the other States.

The Archbishopric of

§.1. Of the archbishopric of Salzburg a map has been published by Marcus Secznagel, and inserted by Ortelius in his Theatrum: but a much better, and in itself a very correct and judicious map of it has been since drawn by Odilo Guetrather, and printed by Homann. Accordingly this map constitutes the eightieth map in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. To the east, this bishopric terminates on Austria and Stiria; to the south, on Carinthia and Tyrol; to the west, it is also bounded by Tyrol and Upper-Bavaria, and, northward, likewise by the same part of that electorate. Its greatest extent, from west to east, according to Guetrather's map, is Vol. V.

twenty-five German miles, and from north to fouth fixteen, or from the extremity of the limits in Upper-Bavaria to those of Carinthia twenty-four, whilst others reduce both the length and the breadth to no more than eighteen German miles.

- §. 3. This country is defended on all fides by mountains and narrow passes, or rather consists entirely of mountains and vallies. No manner of grain is fown here, whence it is supplied with all its corn from Bavaria; but every part of it produces hay of a peculiar goodness, and this proves a fund for breeds of excellent cattle in it. The horses here in particular are efteemed for their beauty, hardiness and vigor, being able to travel full speed up the highest mountains, and that supported by no other food than hay and grafs without any oats. At Hallein, which stands about two hours distance from the city of Salzburg, are falt-works belonging to the Sovereign, in which falt of all colours, yellow, red, blue and white, is hewn out from along the subterraneous lanes, and then afterwards dissolved in fresh-water, which is conveyed into pits, of the brine of which is made the finest salt: but these works are carried on only in summer, a sufficient quantity being made in that feafon not only for home confumption, but likewife to answer all foreign demands. Indeed Bavaria is the only country to which it is exported, and there, according to an ancient compact made betwixt the two Princes, is it exchanged for corn. In this archbishopric are likewise very considerable mines of gold, silver, copper, lead, iron and lapis calaminaris. A great deal of steel and brass is also made here, and the plenty of these last metals remarkably appears in the aftonishing numbers of swords, sabres, bayonets, muskets, canon and mortars which are to be seen in the armories all over the country. Exclusive too of other fossiles, in this bishopric is found a very good marble. At Aign is a cold, and at Gastein a hot bath. The principal river here is the Salza, or Salzach, which rifes within the country, in the valley of Krumbler, towards the county of Tyrol, watering a great part of it, and after receiving into it the little rivers of Saal and Galtein, the sources of which lie also in this archbishopric, continues its course into Upper-Bavaria, where it falls into the Inn, which washes a small part of the western side of the archbishopric. In it also rise the Ens and Muer, exclusive of a great number of other little streams, rivulets and lakes, all which abound in variety of fish. The largest of these lakes lie towards the frontiers of Austria.
- §. 4. In the archbishopric are fix cities and twenty-five market-towns. The estates of the nobility here enjoying lower jurisdiction over the vassals, are styled Hosmarkte. All peasants here universally are allowed the use of arms, and being from their early years trained up to shooting at a mark and military-duty, would, on occasion, prove a very serviceable body. Instead of soccase they pay into the county-treasury a certain contribution in money, which is paid again on the demand of their respective Lords.

Lords. The nobility here were formerly very numerous, but the policy of the Princes fet too many springs at work for the oppressing and extirpating of them, so that not so much as one at present remains, and their estates are now in the hands of the church. With respect to the sew nobles at court or belonging to the cathedral, they are to a man all foreigners, especially Austrians, Bohemians, and some out of Bavaria. The nobility therefore being thus become extinct the prelates and commons form the States of the country, the former of these are the bishop of Chiemsee, the prior of the cathedral, the abbot of St. Peter at Salzburg, the prior of Berchtolsgader, the abbot of St. Michael in Bavaria, the prior of Haglwerth, and the abbess of Nunnberg; the latter are composed of the cities and twenty-two market towns.

- §. 5. Though in this archbishopric the Roman-catholic doctrines and worship alone are tolerated, yet at the time of the Reformation Lutherani/m was embraced by great numbers, whom archbishop Matthew Langins strove to harrass and extirpate by oppressions and violence. But archbishop John James proceeded more mildly, and in order to reconcile all tempers obtained the Pope's licence to administer the Sacrament in both kinds. Archbishop Welfgang Theodorick of Raittenau in the year 1588 drove great numbers of his Lutberan fubjects out of the country, and his fucceffor Marcus Sittich Count of Hobenembs neglected neither fair means nor menaces and violence, particularly by the quartering of troopers on them, to bring all his fubjects again to the church of Rome, infomuch that it was supposed the whole country was become Roman-catholic. But succeeding times convinced them of this mistake, great numbers openly professing Lutberanism. On this archbishep Maximilian Gandolph left them no other alternative than either to fly their country or abjure their faith. But the most violent flame of persecution here blazed out under archbishop Leopold Antony Eleutherius Baron of Firmian, whose ardour for suppressing Lutheranism in his province was so great that the oppressed party applied for redress to the States of that religion in the Diet, who prevailed so far that in the year 1732 permission was granted to the Lutheran Salzburgers quietly to withdraw, together with their effects; And accordingly above 30,000 persons embraced this indulgence, dispersing themselves in the other Protestant countries of Germany, Prussia, and even in the English colonies in America. In all which several places they were received with that benevolence and encouragement which their inagnanimity deserved; and ever fince that time these emigrations have still continued. The foundations for the advancement of literature in this country are to be found in the article of the capital.
- §. 6. Exclusive of the above (§. 3.) manufactures in metal, a coarse fort of cloth and linen are also made here; and these in conjunction with its afore-mentioned products constitute its foreign trade.

The first church at Salzburg was the work of St. Rupert, who, with the confent of Theodore Duke of Bavaria, founded a church at Wallersee, and another afterwards at Salzburg, and in the year 716 was created Bishop thereof. Arno the fixth of its Bishops, according to the positive affertion of the Salzburg historians, was, in the year 798 created Archbishop and metropolitan over Noricum, Bavaria, a part of Rhætia, Bohemia, Moravia, and Pannonia. These historians further make him legate of the apostolic chair through the whole extent of his metropolitan district. bithop Gebbard for his attachment to the fee of Rome, though in breach of his allegiance to his natural fovereign the Emperor Henry IV. was rewarded with the title of legate of the apostolic chair in Germany, which title afterwards became perpetual to all the archbishops of Salzburg. Since the extinction likewise of the archbishop of Magdeburg, the archbishops of Salzburg are become primates of Germany without any competition. The lands belonging to this archbithopric are of very great value; and came to it partly by donations from the Dukes of Bavaria, the Kings of the Franks, nobles, and private persons, or by purchase.

§. 8. The title of the archbishop is By the grace of God Prince of the holy Roman Empire, and Archbishop of Salzburg, legatus natus of the apostolic chair of Rome, and primate of Germany. In the dexter half topaz he bears party per pale, a lion diamond; but the sinister is damasquined. His supporters are a sword and a croisier, surmounted as it were behind with a cross.

§. 9. An archbishop of Salzburg, exclusive of the above-mentioned ecclefiaftical preeminences of being the born and perpetual legate of the apoftolic fee, and primate of Germany, enjoys also several other important honours. He wears a Cardinal's habit. All appeals too from him lie to the Pope alone in person: By permission from whom he disposes of cannonships in the months referved to the Popes in the concordats, the licences for which are always quinquennial; and at the expiration of that time are renewed. The Emperor Riles him well-beloved, whereas all other ecclesiastical Princes, who are not of princely blood, enjoy only the title of honourable and your reverence. This archbishop has likewise suffragan bishops under him, namely those of Freysing, Ratisbon, Brixen, Gurk, Chiemsee, Scekau, and Lavant: And the four last are even nominated and consecrated by him, and confirmed by his own power, and that too without standing in any need of the Pope's confirmation. The last of these is so extraordinary a privilege that the archbishop of Salzburg is the only instance of it. His temporal preheminences are, that, the electoral archbishops excepted, he is the only archbishop in all Germany who sits and votes in the Diet of the Empire; that in the college of Princes he enjoys alternately with Austria the first seat on the ecclesiastical bench, and likewise in the directory; that he is joint summoning Prince and director of the circle of Bavaria; that he he is invited on certain occasions to the Emperor's table, even though the Empress herself be present, which is looked upon as a very peculiar honour; and that his envoy to the Diet takes place even of the Princes present, as he did in 1663 of the Prince and abbot of Fulda.

§. 10. Its affessiment in the matricula of the Empire is equal to that of an Elector, being fixty horse and two hundred and seventy-seven soot, or 1828 florins; to the chamber at Wetzlar he pays six hundred and eight rixdollars, fixty-nine kruitzers.

- §. 11. The chapter of the cathedral here consists of twenty-four perfons. The prefent hereditary marshal of the archbishopric is the Count of Lodron; the hereditary treasurer the Count of Torring, the post of hereditary cup-bearer here ever fince the year 1660 has belonged to the Counts of Kuenburg; and that of hereditary steward ever since the year 168; to the Counts now the Princes of Lamberg. The first and the two last of these hereditary places are in the disposal of the Archdukes of Austria; Archbishop Frederick III. having conferred these posts as hereditary on Albert and Otho Dukes of Austria. In the year 1701 archbishop John Ernest Count of Thunn instituted an order of knighthood in honour of St. Rupert, which confifts of twelve knights, who bind themselves by the same vow as the knights of the order of St. John, and must prove the antiquity of their nobility. At the head of this order is a grand master. The knights also have a pension; and in order to be qualified for the post of governor of the castle at Salzburg, or of any of the frontier places, must have served ten years in a military capacity.
- §. 12. The principal colleges of the archbishop are the privy or state-council, the consistory, the court of justice, the treasury, and the council of war

- §. 13. His revenues are estimated by Keysler at 800,000 rixdollars; but a person whose knowledge and veracity are equally indisputable and who has long lived at Salzburg, affirms in a manuscript that the incomes arising from all his lands amount totidem annis to no less than betwixt three and four millions of guilders.
- §. 14. The military force of this archbishopric consists only of one regiment of foot containing 1000 men. The fifty halberdeers and the fifty trabants or horse-guards here being rather instituted for the splendor of the court than the military establishment; indeed a greater number of soldiers in this country would be both needless and in convenient, it being by means of its hills and narrow passes well fortisted against any invasions; it has besides very few places sit for the encampment of an army, and little or no grain, not to mention its brave and expert peasantry who would prove a stout defence to it. Every psleg or bailiwick has its rendezvous, to which, on a signals being given by means of cannon planted on the mountains and towers, they repair completely armed, and there wait further commands for marching. The number of peasants here who never fail to hit a mark of a handbreadth are computed at 25,000.

§. 15. In this archbishopric are the following places, viz.

Salzburg, in Latin Salisburgum, anciently Juvavia, the capital of the archbishopric, and the residence of the archbishop, being environed by three thountains named the Imberg, the Schloszberg, and the Munchberg, but on one fide open to a large plain through the midst of which runs the Salza or Salzach, both divisions of the city being joined by a bridge. Salzburg is computed to be 5000 geometrical paces in circuit, being well fortified, and that part of the city which lies to the right of the river furrounded with eight bastions, that on the left side with three. The mountain-castle here which stands in the former is very strong, not only on account of its tofty fituation, but likewife of its works; and in it is the principal arfenal. This fortress is open only once a year, at which time it may be seen, and the garrifon in it is never changed. It is also constantly furnished for a whole year with the necessary provisions, namely with grain, smoaked beef, and marrow-bones for the making of broth as occasion requires. The streets in the city are narrow, and paved in the old fashion, but in other respects it is a well built place. The archbishop's palace in it is a large, stately and comthodious building. Before it is a very beautiful fountain, and opposite to it stands another noble palace called the Neuebau, in which the Diet of the country is held, as also the meetings of all the feveral colleges; and here likewife is the archbishop's library. The Prince's summer-palace called Mirabella is also a grand structure, and contains in it a fine chapel with a very delightful garden. The bishop's palace of Chiemsee, the chapter-house, and the apartments for the cannons, together with the palace of Counts of Lodron and Kienburg are all very elegant buildings. The amphitheatre here cut out of a rock, and which is two hundred and twenty feet in length, flanding in the west part of the city, with the stables on the side of the Monchberg, are likewise deserving particular notice. The cathedral of St. Rupert, confecrated in 1628, is built of free-stone and marble; in it are five organs, with a number of embellishments, and it has also a very grand treasury. The church of St. Peter is the oldest in the city, and near it stands a monastery of Benedictine Monks, in which is a fine library. The university church here, which was confecrated in the year 1707, is also a noble building; as is likewise the church in the archbishop's seminary or the Collegium Valerianum which is a nurfery of ecclefiaftics, together with twentyfeven other churches, feven of which stand close by the convents; not to mention the large hospital of St. John, together with four others, and without dwelling upon the collegium clericorum on the Capuchin mountain before the Steinthor. The university of Salzburg was first founded by archbishop Paris in the year 1620. In 1623 it was completed and given to she Benedictines, and in 1625 a bull was also obtained for it. In the colleges

leges of Rupert and Lodron young noblemen are educated. Saleburg is conveniently fituated for trade. In 1510 it attempted to make itself an Imperial free city, but was reduced to its obedience by archbishop Leonard.

On a hill near it stands the numbery of Nunn, or Nonnberg, which is instituted for ladies.

Hellbrunn, in Latin Clarofontanum palatium, a feat of the archbishop's, with a very pleasant garden belonging to it, lies half an hour's distance from Salzburg.

Klefzbeim, an archiepiscopal castle, lies three fourths of an hours distance from the city, and close by it is the pheafant house of Belvedere.

Lauffen is a town on the Salza with a bailiwick belonging to it. Almost one half of this place was destroyed by fire in the year 1633.

Stauffeneck is a castle and bailiwick lying not far from the river Saal.

Highwers, or Hagelword, a priory feated on a small inland lake.

Raschenberg, a castle, which is the seat of a bailiwick.

Teisendorf, a market-town.

Waging, is also a market-town, feated on the Tachen-see, on the opposite fide of which stands the castle of Lampoding.

Dengling is likewise a market-town.

Tittmaning, a town feated on the Salza and the residence of a bailiss. In the year 1571 this place was set on fire by lightening, and only a few houses left standing.

Mulderf, a town lying on the Inn, and furrounded by Upper-Bavaria, is the feat of a bailiwick, to which belongs Old-Mulderf, Mosling, and Friezing. This town was almost wholly destroyed by fire in the year 1640.

St. Michael Beyrn is a convent of Benedictine Monks.

Mattfee, a market-place with a castle and soundation in it seated on a lake of the same name, is the residence of a bailiss, and was purchased of the cathedral of Passau in the years 1390 and 1398, but continued a sief thereof; the soundation in ecclesiastical matters, being likewise subordinate to this bishopric.

Strafz-Walchen, also called Strafzwald, is a market-town, with a diffrict belonging to it under the direction of a bailiff.

Neumark, also is a market-town. Not far from this place stands the castle of Pfangau.

Altenthan, a mountain-castle, with a district belonging to it, was in the year 1362 transferred from the noble family of Than to the archbishopric.

Liechtenthan is a castle having a bailiwick.

Seekirchen, a market-town near the Waller-see, takes its name from a church, which St. Rupert built there and was his first residence. In this town is a college of canons. Not far from it stands Plain in which is an image of the Virgin much resorted to by pilgrims.

Neuhaus

Neuhaus is a castle and bailiwick.

Aign, a village lying not far from Salzburg, and containing a cold bath. Turn is a castle situated not far from the Salza.

Koppl, a hof-markt or estate, enjoying a low jurisdiction.

Talgen, a parish, belonging to the cathedral, and the residence of an Urbar judge, or præfectus agrestium tributalium, lies on the little river Fusch which issues out of a lake of the same name.

Wartenfels is a castle seated on a mountain, and having a bailiwick.

S. Ægidius, or S. Gilling, a market-town feated on the Aber, or S. Wolfgang-see.

Huttenstein, a castle standing on a hill, and the residence of a bailist.

Hallein, a town, lying on the Salza, and the feat of a district, derive its name from the falt-works in it, which have been described above (§. 3.) The falt-pit lies not far from it near the church of Durnberg, which is dedicated to Our Lady.

Glaneck is a castle and district situate betwixt the Saal and Salza.

Kuchl, anciently called Cuculli, is a market-town feated on the Salza. Golling, a market-town lying on the Salza, is the feat of a baliwick.

Not far from it lies the pass of Lueg, on which, near the Salza, is a narrow way leading over a steep mountain.

Abbtenau is a market-town.

Werfen is a fortress, situated on the Salza, and first built by archbishop Gebbard in the eleventh century, but archbishop John James enlarged its fortifications. Near it is a market-town, which has a bailiwick.

Bischot hofen, on the Salza, is also the residence of a bailist.

Goldeck, a hof-markt and the feat of a bailiwick.

S. Veit is a market-town.

Daxenbach, or Taxenbach, is a market-town with a castle seated on the Salza, and a bailiff's court. In the year 1323 archbishop Frederick III. purchased for 1500 florins the old and new chatellany here, together with its jurisdiction, which the family of Goldeck held as a fief of the arch-

Zell in the Pinzgau, feated on a lake which takes its name from it, is the residence of a bailiff.

Lichtenberg, is a castle, which gives name to a district.

Salfelden, a market-town, feated on the river Saal. Lofer, a market-town, and the feat of a district.

Obf. In this country betwixt the country of the Tyrolese, Upper-Bavaria, and the abbey of Berchtolfgaden, are several passes, as namely that of Strub on the borders of Tyrol; that of Kniepasz on the river Saal; Steinbachpass also on the Saal and the borders of Bavaria; Hirschpukel situate on those of Berchtolfgaden and Luftenslein lying on the Saal.

1'tter, a mountain-castle seated on the confines of Tyrol; gives name to a bailiwick. Under it likewise is HopfHopfgarten, a market-town fituate in a district named Witschenau. Close by it stands the castle of Engelsberg.

Zell in Ziller-thal, a market-town feated on the river Ziller, and the refidence of a bailiff. In the neighbourhood of Figen is found gold.

In all parts of this mountainous country Chamois are very common, efpecially towards the Tyrolese.

Wind sch Matray, a market-town seated in the Tefferegger Thale, is the refidence of a bailiff, and anciently belonged to the Counts of Matray.

Tefferegg is a village, taking its name from the Tefferegger Thale. In the year 1685 the Lutherans of this country suffered a violent persecution under archbishop Maximilian Gandolph.

Mitterfil, a market-town lying on the Salza, is the feat of a bailiwick. The castle of this name stands on a mountain on the other side of the river. In the year 1228 the lands of the ancient Counts of Mittersil were transferred by Duke Lewis of Bavaria (to whom they fell as a vacant sief) to the archbishopric in exchange for its lands of Altenburg.

Rauris is a market-town and the residence of a bailiff.

Geissern, also is a market-town.

Gastein, a market-town seated on the river of the same name, contains a bailiwick, and is samous not only for its warm bath but also for its lead, silver, and gold mines, the last of which, in the time of archbishop Leonhard, yielded great quantities of gold. The inhabitants of Goldeck were anciently possessed of the jurisdiction of this place as a sief from the archbishopric, but they ceded it again in the year 1323.

Great-Arl is a castle and village, and the seat of a district.

S. John's im Pougau, a market-town fituate not far from the Salza, contains a bailiwick.

Radstatt, a town seated on the Ens, which has its source in the neighbourhood of this place, is the residence of a bailisst.

Not far from hence on the river Ens lies the pass of Mandling. On the other side of the Ens stands the town of Old-Markt.

Wagrain is a market-town feated in the Flachau.

Mautterndorf, a market-town with a district annexed to it, belongs to the priory of the cathedral.

Moshaim is a castle, and the seat of a bailiwick.

Obs. The archbishopric of Salzburg is possessed in the dutchy of Carinthia of the district of Stall on the river Moll; as also of the market-towns Vol. V.

Tt

of Sacksenburg on the Drau and Feldsperg; together with the towns of Freisach and S. Andrée; the market-towns of Altenhosen, Huttenberg, and Guttaring, and several other small places. And in Lower-Austria, of the town of Trasmaur, together with the market-town of Arnstorf, and several other places.

The ELECTORATE of B A V A R I A.

- §. 1. DUKE Albert caused a small map of the dutchy of Bavaria to be drawn by Philip Apian, which map was published in the year 1561, and likewise in 1566 a larger one of twenty-four plates, which was never made public. The last of these two charts have been reduced to a smaller fize by Jansson and others, but particularly by the younger Visicher, who has divided his two sheet map which was contracted from it into the bailiwicks, and the same has been done by Homann with some improvements. These maps constitute the seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh in the Atlas of Germany. In the year 1684 George Philip Fink also published a large map of the circle and dutchy of Bavaria with an index to it. The country about Munich was exhibited on a fingle map, which was published by Homann's heirs in the year 1743, and constitutes the seventy-ninth in the Atlas of Germany. Erhard Reych put out the first map of the upper palatinate in the year 1540, and after him Visscher and Homann, not to mention others, also published a map of the same. The last of these constitutes the seventyeighth in the Atlas of Germany. Of the districts of Neumark belonging to the upper palatinate Nik. Ritterhusz has delineated a very good map, which is to be feen in Tom. III. of Blaeu's Atlas.
- §. 2. This electorate comprehending in it all the ecclefiastical and temporal states of the circle of Bavaria, the limits of the circle are in effect also its boundaries; but the other lands belonging to the circle, which lie on the side of the electorate, are divided from it, and in it is only to be seen the parts terminating westward on Swabia, Franconia, and the dutchy of Neuburg and Sulzbach; those terminating southward on the Tyrolese, the county of Werdensels, the lordship of Hohenwaldeck, the archbishopric of Salzburg, and the abbey of Berchtolsgaden; those terminating to the eastward on Upper-Austria, the bishopric of Passau and the kingdom of Bobemia, and those also terminating northward on Bohemia and Franconia. This circuit, however, comprises in it several entire countries of the circle, for which reason it is no easy matter to ascertain with any degree of exactness the proper extent of the electorate, and maps themselves differ with respect to its greatest length and breadth. In the repertorium Bavariæ its utmost extent from north to south is reckoned forty-seven leagues, and from east to west thirty-three. Bavaria of itself is computed to be thirty-six leagues in length, and twenty-one broad. The lands of the electorate in this circle and that of Swabia taken together amount to about seven hundred and twenty-nine geographical square miles.

- §. 3. Upper-Bavaria is partly mountainous and woody and partly marshy, abounding also in large and small lakes; and being likewise partly level, but in general fitter for pasturage than tillage. Lower-Bavaria is for the most part level and more fruiful. In general Bavaria abounds in grain, pastures, fruit, woods and forests; producing also great numbers of cattle and plenty of game and wild-fowl. At Reichenhall and Traunstein are salt-works. Near Bobenmais, in the district of Viechtach, is a mine of copper and silver, and at Reichenthall one of lead. In certain places in particular in the district of Weilheim are quarries of very fine marble. At Moching, Abach, Adelholzen, Wembding, Rosenbeim, and Heilbrunn are medicinal springs and baths. The upper palatinate is extremely mountainous, but withal woody, and has plenty of grafs, being likewife cultivated and producing grain. This country is able to support its inhabitants, particularly by means of the great number of its iron and lead-mines, its large woods and pastures. The Danube which issues out of Swabia waters the electorate from west to east. Below Rain it receives into it the Lech, and near Kelheim the Altmuhl, above Ratisbon also the Nab which has its source both in the Fichtelberge and the upper palatinate; and below that city the Regen which rifes in the district of Zwisel in Lower-Bavaria; below Deckendorf and Plading it takes into it the Ifer, which issues out of Tyrol, near Vilskoven the Vils, and near Innstatt and Passau, the Inn, which also rifes in Tyrol, being ioined below Burkhausen by the Salza. Out of the Danube, the Inn, and the Iser, some small quantities of gold are gathered. The large inland lakes here are faid to be fixteen in number, and the smaller ones one hundred and fixty: Of the former in Upper-Bavaria are the Cheimfee, the Walchensee or Waldensee, the Tegernsee, the Kochelsee, the Staffelsee, the Wurmfee or Wirmsee, and the Ammersee. These rivers, lakes, and ponds abound in fifth, particularly the numerous ponds in the upper palatinate, which have an uncommon plenty.
- §. 4. In all Bavaria are reckoned thirty-five towns, and ninety-five open and inclosed market-towns. According to the repertorium Bavaria, in the several bailiwicks are upwards of 1000 castles, hos-market (or estates invested with lower jurisdiction over the vassals) and seats, which shall be mentioned under each bailiwick. It is also said that in Bavaria are 11704 villages, hamlets, and deferts, which last alone are computed at 4000. In the Tt 2 upper palatinate are thirteen boroughs, and twenty-eight market-towns. The computation of vaffals in the electorate which estimates them at four millions, and those in Bavaria alone at near 3,400,000 exceeds the truth: For by vassals are to be understood heads or fathers of families, with their wives, children, and servants, or as some even say, hearths; whence consequently reckoning six persons to each hearth the electorate of Bavaria must contain in it twenty-four millions of inhabitants, a number not to be supposed. And even were the above calculation only meant of single persons, yet it still greatly exceeds the truth.

The Landflande, or States of Bavaria confift of three classes; namely of the prelates, the knights and nobility, to which also belong the Counts and Lords, and the burghers of the several boroughs and market-towns. The landtage, or Provincial-Diets are very rare here; but a committee, or election of the States, assemble annually at Munich, or as often as the state of affairs requires. In the upper palatinate, ever since its devolution to the Elector of Bavaria in the year 1628, all Diets have been discontinued, or rather the whole political constitution is abolished.

§. 5. In Bavaria no other religious doctrine and exercise than the Romancatholic is tolerated: and thus a timely check was put to the disturbances which began to arise there in the fixteenth century on account of the Reformation; and those not without the countenance of divers of the States of the province. The Lutheran and Calvinist doctrines had indeed obtained a fuperiority in the upper palatinate, but that country falling into the hands of the Elector of Bavaria, the Roman-catholic decerine was restored by force; great numbers however of Lutherans still remained. The collegiate foundations, the abbeys, priories, and other convents here, together with the commenderies, archdeaconries, deaneries, or rural chapters, as also the parishes and chapels in this electorate are distributed among the archbishoprie of Salzburg and the bishories of Eichstatt, Augsburg, Bamberg, Freyfing, Paffau, and Ratisbon. The parishes in the electorate are about 1500. The vicarages, chapels of ease, and other chapels near 2000. And the number of churches in it is faid to amount to 28709. churches are subject to seventy-one rural deans. The remarkable convents are eighty-fix in number, and the collegiate foundations twelve.

§. 6. Solid knowledge and good literature must be owned to the honour of this electorate, to be on a better footing, and to receive more countenance here now than ever. The Benedictines in particular distinguish themselves by their promotion of both. Ingolstadt boasts an university.

§. 7. Manufactures are also increased and improved here; witness those of coarse cloth, woollen-stuffs and stockings, filk-stuffs, velvets, tapestry, very good clocks, watches, and other necessaries: Though its chief exports consist of cattle, grain, wood, salt, and iron.

§. 8. The ancient Boiæ, who were a branch of the Celtee, and came out of Celtia or Gallia about 589 years before the birth of Christ, croffing the Rhine, first seated themselves in Bohemia. But about the time of the Emperor Augu/hus being driven out of the greatest part of the country by the Marcomanni they removed into Noricum, and their fettlement from thence came to be called Bojer or Bayerland, in Latin Bojaria, or Bajoaria, of which in process of time was made Bavaria. In the fixth century on the division of the great Empire of the Franks, among the four sons of Clovis, Bavaria fell under the dominion of the Australian Kings, and was governed by Dukes; the first of whom who occurs in ancient writers with any degree of certainty is Garibald I. who lived under Clotharius King of Austria, and was without interruption succeeded by Taszilo I. Garibald II. Theodo I. and Theodo II. The latter of these divided the large province of Bavaria into four parts, retaining to himself Ratisbon the capital, together with the country eastward of the same, and likewise Noricum. His eldest son Theodebert obtained Rhætia, the capital of which was anciently Bozen, in Latin Bauzanum. On the fecond fon Grimoald he conferred South-Bavaria, or the Sudergau, together with the town of Freyfing: And on his third fon Theodebald, North Bavaria, or the Nordgau, which included the modern upper palatinate, and likewise the city of Nurnberg. Theodo the father and his youngest son Theodebald dying, the whole province of Bavaria fell to the two furviving brothers; Theodebert obtaining North and Middle Bavaria, together with Noricum, and Grimoald's share comprehending in it South Bavaria and Rhatia. Theodebert was succeeded by his son Hugbert, who had for his successor Ottilo, who was followed by Taszilo II. the last Duke of Bavaria; Charles the Great King of the Franks in the year 788, confining this Prince to a convent for certain acts of disobedience, and reassuming to himself Bavaria, appointed it to be governed by Counts. On the division of the monarchy of the Franks among his grandions by Lewis I. Bavaria, together with all Germany, fell to Lewis the German, who refided at Ratisbonne: And on another division made among his sons in the year 876, Karlmann became King of Bavaria, in which fovereignty he was first succeeded by his brother Lewis the younger, and afterwards by his youngest brother Charles the But the latter being deposed by the States of the German Empire in the year 887; and Arnulph natural fon to his brother Karlmann elected King of Germany, Bavaria also escheated to him, and after him fell to his fon Lewis the Child. Both at that time and also after his death Arnulph was Marggrave of Bavaria, and in the year 920 was also created Duke of the same by King Henry I. But though his sons were dispossessed of this dukedom, yet was his fecond fon of the fame name created Pfalzgrave of Bavaria, and he became the founder of the family of the Lords of Schir, or Scheurn, who afterwards bore the title of Witteslbach.

The Emperor Otto the Great made a donation of the dutchy of Bavaria to his brother Henry. King Henry IV. took this dutchy from Otto II. Duke of Bavaria, who had plotted against his life, and in the year 1071 gave it to his fon-in-law Welpho, whose father Azo was a powerful Prince, being sovereign of Milan, Genoa, and many other countries in Lombardy, all which devolved by inheritance to this Duke Welpho and his descendants. From him was descended Duke Henry the Hanghty, who in the years 1126 or 1127 also acquired the dutchy of Saxony, but in 1138 lost both that and the dutchy of Bavaria, on account of his opposing the election of King Conrad III. His fon Henry the Lion was indeed restored to the possession of both these dutchies, but the Emperor Frederick I. likewise put him under the ban in the year 1180, infomuch that he retained only the countries of Luncburg, Brunswick and Nordbeim, which came to him by inheritance from his mother. On the contrary the Imperial fiefs which he held were bestowed on others. The dutchy of Bavaria, from which at that time Tyrol was separate (see vol. iv. p. 229.) fell to Otho the Elder, Pfalzgrave of Wittelsback, whose ancestors, sons to Duke Arnulph, had been unjustly driven out and excluded for above two hundred years. His fon Duke Lewis was also declared by the Emperor Frederick II. Pfalzgrave of the Rhine, and this palatinate his fon Otto was actually possessed of see vol. iv.) His fons Lewis the Severe, and Henry, in the year 1253, dividing their paternal estates amongst them, the former obtaining the palatinate of the Rhine with Upper-Bavaria, and the latter all the other countries. The fons of Lewis the Severe, namely Rudolp, and Lewis the Younger, dividing their patrimony a fecond time, the former of these became the founder of the present electoral-house of the palatinate, and the latter of that of Bavaria. The last-mentioned Lewis, Duke of Upper-Bavaria became likewise Emperor, and in 1329 entered into a compact with the sons of his deceased brother, formally ceding to them the palatinate of the Rhine. together with the upper palatinate, as it was at that time first called. In the year 1340 Lower-Bavaria devolved to him on the failure of the line which possessed it. In 1392 the three sons of his son Stephen divided it amongst themselves, founding three lines, namely those of Ingolfladt, Landthut and Munich; the first of which became extinct in the year 1447, and the second in 1503, but the third still exists. Divers subsequent divisions of this country were made, but ever fince the year 1545 not only all kinds of divisions, but likewise all joint-governments have been discontinued. In the year 1623 Duke Maximilian I. obtained for his house the electoral dignity, and in 1628 also the upper palatinate, both which were confirmed to him at the peace of Westphalia. In 1706 his grandson Maximilian II. was put under the ban of the Empire, but in 1714 was restored to the entire possession of his country. In 1742 his son the Elector Charles Albert was chosen Emperor, but met with little success in his war with Austria. On that account account Maximilian Joseph, his fon and fuccessor in the dutchy and electoral dignity, prudently bestows his greatest attention on the improvement of his country.

- §. 9. The office of arch-steward of the Empire and the electoral-dignity have been long in the possession of the house of Bavaria, which being divided into two branches, namely those of Bavaria and the palatinate (§. 8.) a convention has been made on account of the electoral-dignity; and in the compact of partition entered into in the year 1329 by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria with his brother's fons, it was agreed that the title of Elector should be common to both houses, but they vote alternately. The palatine-house, however, in the year 1356, managed matters so that in the golden-bull the electoral-dignity was exclusively assigned to it, and on gaining this point also appropriated to itself the office of arch-steward. The Elector-palatine Frederick V. being put under the ban, in 1623 the electoral-dignity and office of arch-steward devolved to Bavaria, the former of which was confirmed to it by the peace of Westphalia, but of the latter no mention was made. Bavaria, however, has continued in possession of that office, excepting only from the year 1706 to 1714, during which interval it was exercised by the Elector-palatine. Of the agreement made with the Elector-palatine with respect to the vicariate of the Empire, notice has been taken above.
- §. 10. The title of the Elector is, By the Grace of God Duke of Upper and Lower-Bavaria, as also of the Upper Palatinate; Pfalzgrave of the Rhine, Arch-Steward of the Holy Roman Empire, and Elector and Landgrave of Leuchtenberg. The arms of the Elector are quarterly an escutcheon of pretence. In the last of these quarters is the Imperial monde topaz, in a field ruby, denoting the office of arch-steward of the Empire; in the upper dexter and lower sinister quarter are lozenges saphire and pearl, for the dutchy of Bavaria; and in the upper sinister and lower dexter is a lion ruby crowned topaz, for the palatinate of the Rhine. During an interregnum, when the Elector of Bavaria exercises the vicariate of the Empire, he is allowed to bear the Imperial spread eagle, with his family shield on the breast.
- §. 11. The hereditary offices of the Electorate of Bavaria are that of hereditary master of the houshold, with which, ever since the year 1618, the Barons Haslang have been invested; that of hereditary steward, belonging to the Count of Truchses, p. 265. that of hereditary marshal, of which ever since the year 1411 the noble family of Gumpenberg have been possessed; that of hereditary cup-bearer, which is enjoyed by the Count of Freysing; and that of hereditary huntsman, which so early as the year 1356 was conferred on the Counts of Torring, this grant being again renewed in 1607.
 - §. 12. The Bavarian order of S. George was revived in 1729 by he Elector Elector Albert. The knights of this order are stilled Defenders of the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and must produce unquestionable proofs of the nobility of their ancestry for eight generations in both lines. The Elector is grand-master, and its ensign is a cross enamelled blue with a S. George in the middle, on the reverse of which is the name of the restorer of the order in a cypher, surmounted with the electoral-cap, and at the four angles these letters, I. V. P. F. signifying justus velut palma storebit, i. e. the righteous shall stourish like a palm-tree. This cross is worn pendent to a broad sky-blue ribbon with a black and white border. To this order are appropriated the presecturates of Abensberg and Altmanssein, as also Aicha, Schwaben, Wasserburg, Eggenschen, Aerding, Neumarkt, Stadt am Hos and Bernstein, Riedt and Hirschau, whence accordingly they are always held by knights.

§. 13. In the electoral-college the Elector of Bavaria possesses only the fifth feat, but notwithstanding that is the second of the lay Electors; he is by virtue of Bavaria not only a member of the college of Princes, but has even the first seat and vote in it; the Landgravate of Leuchtenberg also furnishes him with a feat and vote betwixt Savoy and Anhalt; though with respect of the Imperial counties and lordships of which he is proprietor, it is by virtue of Weigenstein only that he takes place in the college of the Imperial Counts of Swabia. The Elector of Bavaria is joint summoning Prince and director of the circle of Swabia, and in the Diet enjoys fix votes. Ever fince the year 1521, at which time he was only a fimple Duke, his affefiment in the matricula of the Empire has amounted to that of an Elector, namely to fixty horse and two hundred and seventy-seven foot, or 1828 florins; and on this footing it has continued from that time, though some few are of opinion that for the upper palatinate and the county of Cham, he ought to pay one half of the Elector-palatine's affeffment. contributions for his other dominions shall be specified in their places. His taxation in the circular matricula is the same with that in the matricula of the Empire. To the chamber at Wetzlar he is rated for the dutchy of Bavaria at eight hundred and eleven rix-dollars, fifty-eight kruitzers and a half; but for the upper palatinate he perfifts in refusing any payment, notwithstanding the Imperial chamber has formally demanded of him a fum equal to one half of what the Elector-palatine is affested at.

§. 14. The principal colleges of the Elector are, the Ministerium, or privy-council; the Dicasterium, or high court of appeals; the college of ducal counsellors, the ecclesiastical council, the council of war, the treafury, the council of trades, mintage and mines. The whole dutchy of Bavaria is under the direction of four prefecturate courts; two of which for Lower Bavaria are at Landshut and Straubing; and the two belonging to Upper Bavaria at Munich and Berghausen. The seat of the government of the upper palatinate lies at Amberg. The prefidents of these prefecturate-courts are all noblemen.

- §. 15. The revenues of the Elector arise out of falt, beer, wine and brandy, oak-mast, venison, wood, mines, coinage, tolls, excise, contributions, and other ordinary sources, exclusive of imposts on extraordinary occasions. His ordinary revenues per annum are estimated at betwixt five and fix millions of guldens.
- §. 16. The military force of the Elector confifts of regulars and militia; the former of these in times of peace amounts usually to about 12,000 men, but in war have been augmented to 25, and even to 30,000. In the year 1753 colonel Beccof formed a scheme for enabling the Elector to maintain 12,000 regulars and 10,000 militia for 860,000 Imperial guilders per annum; whereas on the former sooting such a body required at least the sum of three millions.
 - §. 17. To the electorate belongs
 - I. The dutchy of Bavaria confifting,

I. Of UPPER BAVARIA.

Which is under the direction of two rent-amters, or governments.

1. To the rent-amt of Munich belongs

Munich, in Latin Monachium, a fortified city feated on the Iser, and the capital and refidence of the Elector. The straight and broad streets of this place, and the great number of fine buildings in it both ecclefiaftical and fecular, render it one of the handfomest cities in all Germany, and even in Europe; and it is faid to contain 40,000 inhabitants. The palace here, which was first erected by the Elector Maximilian I. is an elegant structure, containing four courts, viz. the Prinzenhof, which is decorated with feveral brass statues; the Kaiserbof, the Kuchelbof, which is the largest, and the Alte Burg, or old citadel. The things most worthy of notice in this palace are, the large and beautiful Kaiferfaal, a chapel of the Virgin Mary, with a rich treatury in it; the Antiquarium, or chamber of antiquities, in which are two hundred marble statues and busts of Roman Emperors, and some hundreds of other antiques, the greatest part of which were brought from Italy; the chamber of rich curiofities; the Museum, and the Elector's library. In the year 1729 the palace, and particularly the chamber of rich curiofities here fuffered greatly by a fire, and in 1750 a whole wing of it was burnt down. Towards the east stands the Elector's arfenal, and northward lie the park and pleafure-gardens, and near these is the Thurnierhaus, or large edifice for tournaments. On the west-side of the palace and opposite to it, stands the fine house belonging to Count Preyling. In this part is also another palace built by Duke William. In the Vol. V. largeit largest market-place stands a high marble pillar with a brass statue of the Virgin Mary upon it, and two large sountains, and on the sides is the town-house, in which the States hold their meetings, together with several losty houses ornamented with decorations of paintings on the front. The principal ecclesiastical buildings here are the collegiate-church, which is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, that of St. Peter, with the convents of the Augustines, Capuchins, Carmelites, Franciscans and Theatines, as also the Jesuits college, in which is a valuable library, together with the numeries of S. Clara, Bridget and Ridler, the residence of the English society, the hospitals of St. Elizabeth, or the Duke's, and S. Joseph, as also that of the Holy-Ghost.

On the other side of the Iser lies the Au, the remarkable places in which are, the house of Duke Albert, with its chapel, and the Elector's manufactory. Above the Au stands a convent belonging to the order of St. Paul. In Munich are manufactures of velvet, silk, wool and tapestry. It is probable that the ancient city of Campodunum, or Campidonum, stood in this neighbourhood. About the year 1175, Duke Henry the Lion built the city of Munich on a spot belonging to the convent of Schostlar. In 1327 it was greatly damaged by sire, and in 1448 almost entirely destroyed. In 1632 it was taken by the Swedes, and in 1704, 1742 and 1743 by the Austrians, who in the last-mentioned year established a commission of regency at this place.

2. The pfleggericht or—and of Dachau contains in it

Dachau, a market-town feated on an eminence on the river Ammer, on a high hill near which stands an electoral castle. This place had anciently Counts of its own who took their title from it, and were descended from the Counts of Scheurn, but became extinct in the year 1175: The lordship of Dachau, however, was before that purchased by Duke Otho I. A canal leads from this place towards Schleiskeim:

Bruck, or Pruck, also called Upper-bruck, a market-town seated on the siver Ammer near Furstenfeld.

Nympfenberg, a pleasure-house belonging to the Elector, and standing about one half hour from Munich, has fine gardens and water-works in it, together with a canal which leads to Munich.

Schleisheim, a stately seat of the Elector's, about one German mile and a quarter from Munich, is more especially remarkable for a collection of pictures in it by the most celebrated masters, namely by Rubens, Albert Durer and others. Out of the garden belonging to it we come into a large mall planted on each side with limes, at the end of which stands the delicious village of Lustheim, where begins a canal, which on one side leads to Dachau, and on the other salls into the Iser. At this place also is a stud of the Elector's.

Furstenfeld, a large convent of Cistercian Monks, situated on the river Anners.

Inder-

Inderstorf, a priory of regular Canons of the order of St. Augustine, seated on the river Glon.

Daxa, or Taxa, a convent of Augustines.

Thirty-eight castles, noble seats and hosmarkte, or manors with lower jurisdiction, namely Deutenhosen, Haimhausen, Schonbrunn, Lauterback, Mammendorf, Maisach, Menzing, Neuhausen, Simerskausen, Spilberg and Sulzemos.

3. The pfleggericht of Crantsperg, or Crantzberg, derives its name from an old castle in it, and contains Neuftift, a fine abbey of Præmonstratensian Monks.

Weicken-Stefen, or Stephan, an abbey of Benedictines, seated on the river Mosach.

Twenty-eight castles, noble seats and hofmarkte, as namely Cammerberg, Eisenhofn, Haidlfing, Herezell, Hohencammer, Marzling, Massenhausen, Ottenberg, Pislitz, Talhausen and Yetzendorf.

4. The pfleggericht of Pfaffenhofen, in which is Pfaffenhofen, a small town seated on the river Ilm.

Hohenwart, in Latin Alta Specula, and Summontorium, a walled market-town with an abbey of Benedictine Nuns, seated on the river Paar.

Geisenfeld, a market-town seated on the river Ilm, with an abbey of Benedictine Nuns in it, which formerly enjoyed an hereditary prefect.

Scheurn, a convent of Benedictine Monks, standing on the site of the family seat of the ancient Counts of Scheurn.

Twenty castles, noble seats and bosmarkte, as namely Bornbach and Ill-munster, in the latter of which formerly stood a collegiate-church, which in the year 1495 was removed to Munich, Kunigsseld, Puchersriedt, Reicherzhausen, Ritterswert, Robrbach, Rotteneck and Schenkenau.

5. The pfleggericht of Mainburg, in which is Mainburg, a market-town feated on the river Ambs; together with Five castles, noble seats and kofmarkte, or manors, enjoying lower jurisdiction, as namely Meilnhofn, Ratzenhofn, &c.

6. The pfleggericht of Neustadt, containing Neustadt, a small town seated on the Danube.

Irnsing, a hosmarkt.

7. The pfleggericht of Abensperg and Altmanstein, belongs to the Knights of St. George, and contains in it

Abersperg, anciently Abusina, also called Aventinum, a small town and castle seated on the river Umbs, and containing a convent of Carmelites. This place belonged formerly to the Counts and Barons of Abensperg, who took their name from it. On the death of Nicolas, the last of this samily, in the year 1485, his lands as Imperial siefs escheated to the Empire, but in 1493 this town was purchased by Bavaria of the Emperor Maximilian. In it was born that excellent historian Jobannes Aventinus.

U u 2

Altmanslein, a market-town, belonging to the family of Abensperg.

Eszing, a market-town, situate on the Aitmubl, with a collegiate-church in it. On a steep hill near this town stands the castle of Randeck.

Ror, a market-town, containing a priory of canons of the order of St. Augustine.

Paring, a convent of Benedictine Monks, once also a canonry of regular Augustines.

The cattle of Groszkausen, together with the noble seat of Hagnbild, and Offendorf.

8. The pfleggericht of Riedenburg, containing in it

Riedenburg, a market-town, fituated on the Altmubl, with a castle near it on an eminence. At this place formerly resided Counts, who took their name from it, but these became extinct in the time of King Rudolph.

Altmuhlmunster, in Latin Monasterium Alemanne, a commandery of the order of St. John, to which order it fell in the year 1311, having formerly belonged to the Knights Templars.

Schambaupten, a collegiate-church, which was also a priory of regular canons of the order of St. Augustine.

Twelve castles, noble seats and hofmarkte; as, namely, Aichling, Haxenacker, Prun, Tachenstein and Wildenstein.

9. The pfleggericht of Kosching, containing in it

Kosching, a market-town, which is said to have been a Roman station called Cæsarea.

The castles, noble seats and hofmarkte of Helmannsberg, Kassn, Prun and Schlechestein.

10. The pfleggericht of Vohburg, containing

Volburg, a market-town and castle, seated on the Danube, and which had formerly its own Counts, who became extinct in the year 1204.

Gaimersheim, a market-town.

Pforing, a walled market-town, feated on the Danube, and being a very old place, which is anciently faid to have been called Epona.

Sigenburg, a market-town, feated on the little rivulet of Ambs.

Biburg and Munchsmunster, residences of Jesuits, but sormerly Benedictine convents.

Sixteen castles, noble seats and Hofmarkte; as, namely, Wackerstein on the Danube; Lenting, Oettling, Talbait and Train.

11. Ingolfladt, anciently Aureatum, is a fortified town, lying on the Danube, and having large, broad, and well-paved streets in it, being also the feat of a governor. This town contains in it an upper and lower parish-church, exclusive of three others, together with a college and gymnafium of Jesuits, two convents of Monks and one of Nuns, as also an university founded in 1472 and enlarged in 1746, in which is a cabinet of antiquities and a good library. In the year 1632 this town was besieged by the Swedes without without success; but, in 1743, was taken by the Austrians. Ingoldstadt has the privilege of a staple.

To this town belong the pflegs, or bailiwicks, of Gerlfing, Octting and Stainhaim.

12. The pfleggericht of Schrobenhausen, to which belongs

Schrobenhausen, a small town, seated on the river Paar, and containing three churches. Near it also lies a convent of Franciscan Monks.

Fifteen castles, noble seats and hofmarkte: viz. Lower-Arnbach, Sandizell, Gerlbach, Herzhausen, Langenmosen, Oedlzhausen, Satlberg and Steingriff.

13. The ppleggericht of Rain, containing in it

Rain, a small fortified town, situated not far from the Lech, on the little river of Acha, and which, in the thirty years war, was taken by the Swedes, and, in 1704, by the combined forces of the Imperialists and English. Not far from this place, at a fort on the Lech, the famous Count Tilli received a wound in the foot, of which wound he died at Ingolfladt.

Pottmes, a market-town.

Lower-Schonfeld, an abbey of Ciflercian Nuns, seated on the rivulet of Acha, which below this place falls into the Danube.

Thierhaupten, an abbey of Benedictine Monks.

Eleven castles, noble seats and hofmarkte: namely, Gumpenberg, Pahr, Schorn, Rietheim and Walden.

14. The pfleggericht of Donauwerth, in which is Donauwerth, otherwise called Donawert, or Donauworth, and formerly also Schwabischworth, or simply Worth, a town, feated on the river Danube in that part where it receives into it the Wernitz, on the borders of Bavaria, and Swabia. This town contains in it a church dedicated to the Virgin Mary with an abbey of Benedictine Monks confecrated to the Holy Crofs, and subordinate to the cathedral of Augsburg, but belonging to the village of Munster, which has been mentioned as paying contribution to the circle of Swabia, as also a commandery of the Teutonick order, to which belongs the village of Lauterbach. Donauworth formerly depended on the circle of Swabia as a Lutheran Imperial town. Whether it was created fuch by the Emperors Henry VI. Albert I. or Charles IV. historians are not agreed. In the year 1376, the last-mentioned Emperor mortgaged it to the Duke of Bavaria; but, in 1414, the Emperor Sigismund redeemed it, and received it into the Empire, and in 1434 also granted it a charter, whereby it was never to be separated from the same. Accordingly its immediate dependance on it continued till the year 1607, when, having with tumult and violence opposed some unusual processions appointed by the abbey of the Holy Cross, it was put under the ban, and the execution of that fentence committed to the Duke of Bavaria, who took it and kept possession of the place. By the peace of Westphalia, however, it was agreed, on the intercession of the States, that at the Diet of the Empire it should be restored to its former privileges, and enjoy the same immunities in ecclesiastical and civil affairs, which, by virtue of this peace, the other free Imperial States were to be possessed of, and that notwithstanding any claims whatsoever upon the town. But this indulgence was never carried into execution, and Donauwerth actually continues still under the dominion of Bavaria. From the years 1705 to 1714, it was restored to its former immediate dependence on the Empire, but by the peace of Baaden again fell to the Elector of Bavaria. To this town belong feveral lands. In the year 1530, the Imperial pflege of Worth was removed by the Emperor Charles V. to this place, but, in 1536, the latter transferred it to the house of Fugger for the sum of 6600 florins, which the Emperor Charles VII. as Elector, obtained by agreement for his house. This pflege principally contains in it four villages, among which is the village of Lauterbach, which, together with its courts, privileges and emoluments, became, as above, the property of the commandery of the Teutonick order in this town, but the criminal jurisdiction belongs to the Imperial Pflege. In it also is a free Bursch.

Schellenberg, not far from hence, is famous for the defeat of the Ba-varians there in the year 1704, by the united forces of the English and Imperialists, though strongly entrenched.

of Neuburg and the county of Oettingen, which lies betwixt the principality of Neuburg and the county of Oettingen, anciently belonged to the Counts of Hirschberg, on the failure of whom it came as a fief of the bishopric of Ratisbon to the house of Wembdingen, who sold it to the Counts of Oettingen; and these again, in the year 1467, made it over to Bavaria. In the year 1504, Bavaria disposed of it again to Oettingen; but this purchase was never completed on account of the opposition of the burghers, and the money paid for it, which amounted to 20,000 florins, is said to have been returned in 1516. To it belongs

Wembdingen, a small town, in which is a castle and a medicinal bath;

Funfsletten, Lozheim, Nusbuhl, Ammerbach and other places.

16. The phleggericht of Aicha, which belongs to the Knights of St. George, contains in it Aicha, a small town, seated on the river Paar, with an old castle, two churches and a house belonging to the order of St. John. In the year 1633, this place was taken by the Swedes, and, in 1634, laid in ashes by them.

Not far from hence stood the castle of Upper-Wittelsbach, which is the family seat of the Counts of Wittelsbach; but Otho of Wittelsbach having murdered Philip, King of the Romans, in the year 1208 it was demolished, and the stones of it are said to have been used for the building of this little town. Below it stands also the castle of Under-Wittelbach.

Blumenthal, a commandery of the order of St. John, not far from Aicha.

Ainling, a market-town.

U. Bavaria.] G E R M A N Y.

Altomunster, a market-town, with an abbey of Nuns in it of the order of St. Bridget, or S. Saunoz.

Inchenhofen, also a market-town.

Kupach, a market-town. with an abbey of Benedictine Nuns.

Twenty-three castles, noble seats and hofmarkte; as, namely, Affing, Groszbausen, Dannern, Pichel, Griesbeckerzell, Haszlangkreut, Kilkershausen, Upper-Griesbach, Rapperzell, Schonleitten, Winden and Scherneck.

17. The pfleggericht of Friedberg, containing Friedberg. a town, in the neighbourhood of which rifes the river Aicha. This place stands on a hill and has an old castle in it together with two churches. Friedberg is noted for clocks and watches. In the years 1632 and 1646, it was laid in ashes.

Seven castles, noble seats and hofmarkte; as, namely, Stetzlingen and Tasing.

18. The pfleggericht of Moringen, in which is Meringerzell, a hifmarkte,

19. The pfleggericht of Landsberg, containing

Landsberg, a town, feated on the Lech, with an old mountain castle in it, and having formerly Counts of its own. This place contains two churches, together with a college of Jesuits and a gymnasium. In the years 1632, 1633 and 1646, it suffered greatly.

Diessen, a market-town, situated on the Ammersee, with a priory in it of regular canons of the order of St. Augustine. This place was formerly granted to the Counts of Diessen, whose castle stood opposite to the convent.

Raitenbuch, also called Rottenbuch, a handsome priory of regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, founded, in the year 1185, by Guelph IV. the first Bavarian Duke of that name. This priory lies on the river Ammer.

Steingaden, an abbey of Pramonstratensian Monks.

Wessenbrunn, a handsome abbey of Benedictines.

Twenty-seven castles, noble seats and bofmarkte; as, namely, Adelshofen, Aeresingen, Baberen, Durkenseld, Emmingen, Gainezhosen, Haltenberg, Iglingen, Kaltenberg, Lichtenberg, Hurlach, Windach, Pestenacker, Schmiben, Stainebach and Winkl.

20. The pfleggericht of Schongan; in which is Schongau, a small town, seated on the Lech, standing high, and containing in it also a castle, which anciently belonged to the Dukes of Swabia of the Hobenstaussen family, but which, in the year 1266, is said to have been transferred by sale to Lewis, Duke of Bavaria.

Peisenberg, a convent.

21. The pfleggericht, or lordship, of Hohen Schwangau lies on the Lech on the fronties of Tyrol, and anciently belonged to the house of the Guelphs, from whom it came, in the year 1191, to the Dukes of Swabia of the Hohenstaussen family, who, in 1266, transferred it as a gift to the Dukes of Bavaria; but his sovereignty the proprietors have gradually shaken off. In the the fifteenth century the Lords of Baumgarten were in possession of this place till they mortgaged it to the Barons of Freundsberg; but the Dukes of Bavaria redeemed it and at last acquired the absolute property thereof. The circle of Swabia took some steps for the comprehending of this lordship within its taxation; but these measures were opposed by the lords of Baumgarten, and much more so by the Electors of Bavaria. The castle of Hoben-Schwangau stands on a hill adjoining to the Albsee, or lake of Alb.

22. The pfleggericht of Weilheim contains in it some large but a greater number of small lakes; as, namely, the Ammersee, the Walchensee, the Kechelsee, and the Staffelsee. It borders also on the Wurmsee. To this pfleggericht belongs

Weilkeim, a town, feated on the river Ammer, with a small castle in it and a convent of Franciscans. The Counts of Weilkeim became extinct in the year 1331.

Etal, a Benedictine convent, with an academy in it for military exercises.

To the convent belongs

Murnau, a market-town, and Staffelsee, which was once the seat of justice and possessed of criminal jurisdiction.

Ammergaugericht, in which, not far from the convent of Etal, rises the river Ammer. This district comprehends in it the Upper and Under-Ammergau, with some other places.

Polling, a canonicate of regular Augustines, fituated not far from Weil-beim.

Habach, a collegiate-foundation.

Schlechdorf, a canonry of regular Augustines, situated on the Kochelsee.

Benedict-Beyrn, formerly Burin, or Buren, a convent of Benedictine Monks founded in 733 by a person named Landfrid, whom St. Boniface had exhorted to this pious work. In the year 1275, the Emperor Rodolphus I. granted a sceptre to the abbot; but they forfeited this princely dignity by putting themselves under the protection of the Dukes of Bavaria, and the convent has never been able to recover its independency.

Bernried, a canonry of regular Augustines, situated on the Wurmsee.

Andechs, commonly called der heilige berg, or the Holy hill, a convent of Benedictine Monks lying not far from the Ammersee. This convent keeps up the memory of the ancient Counts of Andech, whose original seat was at this place.

On the mountains over which these pipes run are little houses and water-works at proper distances in order to throw the water higher. For the conveyance too of a strong fresh spring used in turning the wheels and other engines, and likewise for carrying off any superfluous salt-water, a most astonishing and durable aqueduct of squared flints one full half hour in length, and five feet broad, with an arched roof, was at a vast expense made some centuries ago, and in many places overlaid with the hardest rosin, which after running to a depth of twelve fathom under the town, and from thence under the gardens and fields, at last emits the water in a strong torrent. This aqueduct is in general between three and four feet in depth, and runs fo swiftly that in a boot with torches one may fail from one end to the other in about a quarter of an hour. In order to proceed on this fubterraneous voyage we descend to a confiderable depth down certain steps made in a tower, till we come to the falt-spring whose superfluous waters run about fifty paces farther till they empty themselves into this little stream of fresh-water. In the aqueduct are five apertures in the form of towers, and through some of these a person may speak from the ramparts of the town with those who fail upon the canal.

II. The UPPER PALATINATE.

HIS country lies in the Nordgau. In the twelfth century the Dukes of Swahia were possessed of it. Afterwards the Emperor Company of Swabia were possessed of it. Afterwards the Emperor Conrad IV. who was also Duke of Swabia, mortgaged it for the sum of 128,000 gold guldens to Otho Duke of Bavaria, and the first of that house who was actual Palatine of the Rhine; but Conrad, or Conradine the Unfortunate, for to the Emperor Conrad, made a total fale of it to the Pfalzgrave and Duke, Lewis the Severe; together with a free gift of all the other places which were not mortgaged. The Emperor Lewis IV. in a compact made with the sons of his brother Rudolph in 1329 ceded to them this country, which was then first named the Upper-Palatinate, by way of distinction from the lower or Electorate-Palatine; and which thus denotes that part of Bavaria which ought to belong to the palatinate. In the year 1354, the Emperor Charles IV. for the sum of 32,000 marks of silver purchased of the Pfalzgrave Rupert the Elder, and his nephew Rupert the Younger, the following caftles, towns and bailiwicks in the upper Palatinate, viz. Sulzbach, bach, Rosenberg, Neidstein, Hertenstein, Hohenstein, Hiltpoltstein, Lickteneck, Turndorf, (otherwise called Durrendorf) Frankenberg, Auerbach, Hersbruck, Lauffen, Welden, Plech, Eschenbach, Pegnitz, Haufzeck, Werdenstein, Hirschau, Neustadt, Sturenstein and Lichtenstein; as likewise the castles of Pleystein, Reichenstein, Reichencek, Haufzeck, Strahlenfels, Spies and Ruprech-Itein, which were Bobenian fiefs. All these several places, together with the town of Bernau, which that Emperor had likewise purchased of the convent of Waldsachsen, were in 1355 incorporated by him with the Kingdom of Bohemia, with an injunction that they should not be dismembered on any account whatever. But in 1373, the Emperor having for the fum of 200,000 Hungarian ducats bought of his fon-in-law Otho, Duke of Bavaria, fon to the Emperor Lewis IV. the Electorate of Brandenburg, which on the demise of John IV. the last Elector thereof had, by the assistance of that Emperor, fallen to the house of Bavaria, and being unable to pay down above one half of that fum, he made over to the Elector of Bavaria, as a fecurity for the refidue, feveral of the above-mentioned places, which had been so solemnly annexed to the crown of Bohemia, reserving, however, a perpetual right of redemption. Under the Emperor Wenceslaus, the Palatines and Electors Rupert II. and III. attacking Bokemia, reduced all the places belonging to the upper Palatinate which had been incorporated with Bohemia, as also Bernau and Rothenberg, and shared them with the Duke of Bavaria, from whom they had received affiliance. The Pfalzgrave's share of these acquisitions, namely Tenesberg, Hohenfels, Sulzbach, Rosenberg, Hersbruck, Auerbach, Turndorf, Eschenbach, Hollenberg, Hertenstein, Rothenberg, Hirschau, and Bernau were assigned to the Pfalzgrave John, fecond fon to Rupert III. whose fon Christopher dying without male-iffue, they devolved to the Pfalzgrave Otho of Moszbach, fourth for to the above-mentioned Rupert III. and his fon Otho junior in the year 1465 by a convention made betwixt him and George, King of Bohemia, was confirmed in the possession of the above places which had been annexed to Bohemia, and he and his heirs were for ever to hold and enjoy the tame as fiefs; but dving in 1499 without heirs, his nephew Philip, Electorpalatine, took possession of these Bobenian siefs, and accordingly they descended successively to his sons the Electors Lewis and Frederick II. as also to his grandfon the Elector Otho Henry, and in 1559, together with the Palatinate ittelf etcheated, to the Simmer line, and were held by the Elector Frederick III. who in 1559 was invested with them as fiefs for himself and his proper heirs by the Emperor Ferdinand 1. In this manner did they continue annexed to the Palatinate till the time of the Elector Frederick V. when that Prince taking upon him the crown of Bohemia the Emperor Ferdinand II. reaffumed the so often mentioned Bohemian fiefs as forfeited, and in 1628 disposed of them to the new Elector of Bavaria, Maximilian I. to be held by the whole Wilhelmina line and their proper heirs according to the actual tenor of the instrument of purchase, together with the principality of the upper Palatinate, as escheated and appertaining to him the said Emperor, and likewise the sovereignty, power, pre-eminence, and all jurisdictions and regalia of all kinds whatever, both over land and people, as a fief derived from his Imperial Majesty and the holy Empire; but it was not till the year 1631 that the Emperor invested this Elector and his heirs with the Bohemian fiefs lying in the upper Palatinate. Thus the dutchy of the upper Palatinate confifts both of Imperial and Bohemian fiefs. To the former relates clause the ninth in the fourth article of the peace of Westphalia, namely, that on the total extinction of the Wilhelmina, i. e. the Bavarian line, the line palatine shall enjoy not only the upper Palatinate, but also the electoral dignity of the house of Bavaria, and shall be invested with them both by unanimous confent, and at one and the same time. In the year 1706, the Elector of Bavaria being put under the ban of the Empire, the Emperor granted the upper Palatinate to the Elector-palatine; but the peace of Baaden in 1714 put an end to his possession thereof. This dutchy intitles not to feat or voice either in the college of Princes or in the circle of Bavaria. The territories of Sulzbach and the district of Villeck belonging to Bamberg divide it into the fouthern and northern parts.

I. In the fouthern part are the following pfleggerichts, viz.

1. The pfleggericht of Amberg, containing

Amberg, the capital of the dutchy and the residence of the Elector's governor, as also of every branch of the regency. This town lies on the Vils, which runs through it, being fortisted, and the largest place in the upper Palatinate. In it is an electoral-palace, as also a cathedral dedicated to S. Martin, together with a college of Jesuits, in which is a beautiful church, to which have been transferred the lands of Castel convent, and three other monasteries. Amberg is said to have been raised from a village to a town in the year 1297. In 1703 it was taken by the Imperialists.

On a mountain near it stands the pilgrimage church of Maria-Hulfe, or Mary's help; and in its neighbourhood is an iron-mine, but under the direction of a particular mine-steward.

Hambach, a walled market-town, seated on the Vils.

Schnaitbach, also a walled market-town.

Ammerthal, a large village containing two feats; and which, in the tenth and eleventh centuries, gave title to Counts.

The castle of Ascha, and the seudal estates of Ebermansdorf, Garmastorf, Gozendorf, Haimbof, Haismill, Kennat, Kimersbruck, Lintach, Mosz, Pruck, Sigars, Teurn, Ursenholn, and Zant.

2. The pfleggerichts of Pfaffenbofen and Hainburg, to which belongs Pfaffenhofen, a market-town in which is a feat.

Lauterhofen, a market-town.

Castel, formerly a Benedictine convent, at present made over to the Jesuits of Amberg. This place was originally a castle belonging to certain Counts of Castel, whose line commencing about the year 975 became extinct in 1220, and is to be distinguished from the Counts of the same name in Franconia. In the year 1098 these Counts gave up their castle to religious uses. We still see here the monuments of several of them; and what more attracts the curiosity of a stranger that also of the renowned Bavarian Knight Seysrid Schweppermann.

Gnadenberg, a convent now lying in ruins, which belonged to the Theatine nunnery at Munich.

The feudal estates of Piefach and Kornstatt.

Hainburg, a castle.

3. The pfleggericht of Neumarkt. In it is Neumarkt, a fortified town, having also a castle. In the year 1633 this place was taken by the Swedes, in 1703 by the Imperialists, and in 1745 by the Austrians. Without the town is a convent of Capuchins.

Seligpforten, a Cistercian abbey of female recluses, standing near a small lake.

The feudal estates of Eresbach, Griesbach, Lotersbach, Teining, Utel-kofen, Waperflorf, and Wofenbach.

The villages of Salern and Zeitlarn on the river Regen, not far from Stadt am Hof, are under a particular judge of their own.

4. The pfleggericht of Rieden, containing Rieden, a market-town, having a castle.

Enflorf, a convent of Benedictine Monks, lying on the Vils.

The feudal estates of Allersberg and Hastback.

At Hir/chwald and Freyhols refide two rangers of the forests.

5: The pfleggericht of Freudenberg, in which is the castle of Freudenberg.

6. The pfleggericht of Hirfchau, at present belonging to the Knights of St. George, and containing in it

Hirschau, a small town, together with

The feudal estate of Weignried.

7. The pfleggericht of Nabburg, in which is Nabburg, a finall town flanding on an eminence, with a fuburb called Venedig lying beneath it on the river Nab. In the year 1431 this place was pillaged by the Bokemians.

Schwarzenfeld, a market-town feated on the Nab.

The feudal lands of Gleeritsch, Gutineck, Hoflarn, Neuses, Saltendorf, Stein, Tanustorf, Weier, Wilhofen, Wolfering, &c.

Trausnitz, a feat lying in a vale on the Pfreimbt, and by some thought to be the place where Frederick Duke of Austria was kept prisoner, though others, with greater probability, hold the castle of Trausnitz, or Treswitz, as being much more strong and secure, to have been the seat of that unfortunate Prince's confinement.

8. The pfleggericht of Neuburg, in which is Neuburg vor dem Wald, a town fituate on the Schwarza, with a castle belonging to it standing on a mountain.

Schwarzhofen, a market-town, also seated on the Schwarza, at the influx of the little river Murach.

Neukirchen, a market-town.

The feudal estates of Altschneberg, Culz, Dieterskirch, Frauenberg, Ketz-storf, Petendorf, Schneberg, Schonau, Tanstein, Treststein, Weislitz, Winklarn and Zangerstein.

9. The pfleggericht of Weterfeld, containing Weterfeld, a castle seated on the river Regen.

Roting and Nittenau, both market-towns, also lying on the river Regen Walderbach and Reichenbach, convents of Benedictine Monks situated on the Regen.

The feudal estates of Hoffe, Kirnberg, Lobenstein, Neuhaus, Podenstein, Schwerzenberg, Stambsried, Steffling, Stockenfeld, Vijzbach, &c.

10. The pfleggericht of Bruck lies in the market-town of Bruck, or Pruck.

11. The pfleggericht of Retz, containing in it

Retz, or Rotz, a small town seated on the Schwarza, and having a residence of Augustines.

Schonthal, a convent of Augustine Eremites.

The feudal estates of Arnstein, Premischl, Pumasried, Schwarzenburg, &c.

12. The pfleggericht of Waldmunchen, in which is Waldmuncken, a small town seated on the Schwarza, the source of which lies in this psleggericht on the borders of Bohemia.

The feudal lands of Biberbach, Geygant, Grauerried and Luxenried.

13. The pfleggericht of Murach, containing in it

Murach, a castle.

Viechtach, a market-town.

The feudal lands of Eiglsberg, Fuschberg, Murach, Pertolskefen, Puln-ried and Schonsee.

14. The pfleggericht of Trefwig and Tenesberg, in which is Tenesberg, or Tennensberg, a ruined mountain-castle.

Moshach and Eszlarn, both market-towns.

Weidhausen, a market-town.

The feudal lands of Gaishaim, Gebhardsried and Misbaeh.

The citadel of Treswitz, or Transnitz, which is a castle seated on the river Pfreimdt. See above under Transnitz in the psleggericht of Nabburg.

II. To the northern part belong the following pfleggerichts, wis.

1. The pfleggericht of Bernau, containing Bernau, a small town on the Nab, which has its source not far from this place in the village of Nab, on the borders of Bohemia. Bernau anci-Vol. V. Z z ently belonged to the convent of Waldsaffen, which the Emperor Charles IV. purchased for Bohemia.

The feudal-lands of Haimkof, Hormanfreit, Tuntenbausen, &c.

2. The pfleggerichte of Waldfaffen and Tinschenreit, containing in them Tinschenreit, a small town, seated on the Nab, with a castle belonging to it lying in ruins.

Falkenberg, a market-town, also seated on the Nab.

Peitl, a market-town.

Neuhaus, a market-town, fituate on the Nab.

Windisch and Eschenbach, the latter of which is a market-town, lying on the Nab, belong partly to the principality of Sulzbach.

Dietersdort, a feudal estate.

Waldfassen, or Waldsachsen, a rich abbey of Cistercian Monks, was founded by Diepold, Count of Voburg, in the year 1133, and received its first Monks from the convent of Walkenried. The former abbots of this place were reckoned princely abbots of the holy Roman Empire; and the assessment of the convent, by a matricula of the Empire, is rated at four horse and twenty-four soot, or one hundred and forty-four (others say one hundred and twenty) florins; but at present Bavaria has exempted it from all imposts. The Elector of Bavaria pays no tax for this convent to the chamber at Wetzlar, though it stands assessed in the usual matricula at one hundred and fixty-two rixdollars, twenty-nine kruitzers. Near the convent lies a market-town.

Comerfreit, a market-town.

Ottengrien, a feudal estate, &c.

3. The pfleggerichte of Kemnat, Waldeck and Pressat; containing in them

Kennat, a small town.

Waldeck, a market-town, with a castle belonging to it seated on a mountain, and which was taken and destroyed by the French army in the year 1704.

Preffat, a market-town, fituated on the Heid-Nab, which has its fource in this pfleggericht, on the borders of Culmbach, and runs into the Weld-nab.

Culmain, also a market-town.

The feudal estates of Anzenberg, Bruck bey Castl, Bruck in Weyr, Diebsfurt, Dolnitz, Ebnat, Eisstorf, Fortschau, Fridnfols, Fuchsmill, Gmund, Hauritz, Neienreit, Pechhofen, Perndorf, Posenreit, Rigelsreit, Schlaknhof, Schoureit, Trabitz, Traunberg, Weissenstein, Weiersberg, Wizlreit and Wolframshof.

Obf. In the fichtelberge is a particular berg-amt.

4. The pfleggerichte of Eschenbach and Gravenwerth, containing in them

Eschenbach,

Eschenbach, a small town.

Gravenwerth, also a small town, situated on the Creussen, which below it falls into the Heid-nab.

Speinshart, an abbey of præmonstratensian Monks.

The feudal estates of Forba, Hoflas, Leizenhof, Menzlas, Mezenhof, Schlammersdorf and Stogntumpach.

5. The pfleggerichte of Turndorf and Holnberg, the latter of which is furrounded by the territories of Brandenburg-Culmbach. These pfleggerichte contain in them

Turndorf, a market-town, and Holnberg, a castle.

6. The pfleggericht of Tumbach lies in the market-town of that name.

7. The pfleggericht of Aurbach contains in it

Aurbach, a small town.

Michelfeld and Weissenobe, both abbeys of Benedictine Monks.

The noble feudal estates of Frankeno, Gunzendorf, Hopfeno, Kirchtornpack, Portenreit, Tagmausz, Traunreit, Troschenreit and Zogenreit.

- 8. The pfleggericht of Hertenstein, or Hartenstein, in which stands the almost ruined castle of that name.
- 9. The lordship of Rothenberg is furrounded by the territories of the Imperial city of Nurnberg and by a part also of the upper-amt of Pegnitz, which belongs to Brandenburg-Culmbach. This lordthip descended from the Counts of Vobburg to those of Zollern, who were afterwards Burggraves of Nurnberg, and formerly granted it as a fief to the family of Wildenstein. The Emperor Charles IV. purchased of the Burgraves Albert the dominium directum over this lordship, and soon after, namely, in 1360, also of Henry of Wildenstein, the dominium utile for the sum of 5080 schocks, each of which contains fixty, of good Bohemian groschen. Prague coined and incorporated this lordship with the crown of Bohemia. In what manner the Pfalzgraves acquired it, and how it fell to Bavaria, may be feen from the above-mentioned general history of the upper-palatinate. The Elector of Bavaria having been put under the ban in the year 1706, this lordship, together with the above-named psleggericht of Hertenslein, was conferred by the Emperor, as a fief of Bohemia, on the Imperial city of Nurnberg, which was actually invested therewith: but this fief it possessed only till the peace of Baaden. To it belongs Rothenberg, a fortress, seated on a mountain, and which was taken and destroyed in 1703, but afterwards repaired so effectually, that the Lustrians besieged it in vain in 1744. Under this fortress lies Schnaitach, a confiderable market-town.

The BISHOPRIC of F R E Y S I N G.

HE territories belonging to the cathedral of Freyling, or Freylingen, and included in this circle, are furrounded by the dutchy of Bavaria, as may be feen in the above-mentioned maps of Bavaria. The founder of this bishopric was St. Corbinian, who, according to Baronius and Hanfitz, went to Rome about the year 710, and was there confecrated bishop of the place by Pope Constantine III. after which he lived as a hermit in France for feven years, and towards the year 717, at which time Gregory II. was Pope, and Theodo Duke of Bavaria, came to Bavaria, where, with the confent of the latter, he built a church in honour of St. Benedict on the hill of Freyling, as also a convent, and was the first bishop of Freyling. This bishopric, by means of donations and purchase, gradually increased in estates, lands and subjects. Its prelate is suffragan to the archbishop of Salzburg. As a Prince of the Empire he possesses the fourteenth place on the bench of ecclefiastical Princes, and fits betwixt the bishops of Paderborn and Ratifbon. In the Diet of the circle of Bavaria he holds the second seat on the ecclefiaftical bench, but is furnmoned next after the Elector of Bavaria. His affeliment in the Imperial matricula amounts to twelve horse and eighty foot, or four hundred and fixty-four florins; but his taxation is faid to be lower. To the chamber at Wetzlar he pays one hundred and fifty-two rixdollars, nineteen kruitzers. The first canons of Freysing were Monks. The chapter at present confists of fifteen canons and nine domicellarii. To this bishopric belongs Freyling, in Latin Frilinga, and anciently Fruxinium, Fruxinia, or Frixinia, the capital and refidence of the bithop, standing on two hills on the little river Mosach, not far from the Iser, and commanding a most delightful prospect into Bavaria, the archbishopric of Salaburg, the counties of Werdenfels and Tyrol, and likewise to the Algan mountains. Of these mountains one, commonly named the Freysing, lies within the city walls, and on it stands the bishop's palace, together with the cathedral and a Benedictine church, as also the collegiate-churches of St. John and St. Andrew, St. Peter's chapel and other public edifices. In the subjacent city also is a large market-place, in the centre of which stands a beautiful marble statue of the Virgin Mary, together with the church of St. George, a gymnasium of Benedictines, a Franciscan convent, an orphan-house and a hospital. Without the city are the bishop's gardens, as also Neuslist, a convent of pramonstratenses. On the other mountain which lies west of the city, and was formerly called Tetmons, is the Benedictine abbey of Weiben-Stephan, and below it the collegiate-church of St. Vits. This city appears to have been at the time of the erection of its bishopric the capital of all Upper-Bavaria. In the year 1116, it was destroyed by Guelpho II. Duke of Bavaria. In 1159 and 1215 (others fay in 1216 and in 1217) as also in 1226, it was totally consumed by fire.

Over the county and jurisdiction of Ismaning, which lies along the Iser, this bishopric, in the year 1272, first obtained the judicial authority. In 1319, all the courts in the villages of Ismaning, Upper and Lower-Vergen, now called Vehring, Engelschalking and Tagolsing were fold to it by Lewis IV. as Duke of Bava ia, who promised likewise, as Emperor, that its tenure of these places should be considered as immediate siefs of the Empire. At Ismaning, otherwise called Ismaning, is a most beautiful seat erected by Bishop John Franz.

To this county belongs also Arching-castle.

III. The Lordship of B U \dot{R} G K R A I N,

Which lies betwixt the county of Hag and Upper and Lower-Bavaria. This lordship belonged to the bishopric so early as the thirteenth century, and after divers temporary alienations was, in the year 1594, mortgaged by Bishop Ernest to the chapter of Freysing. The principal places in it are

Burgkrain, a castle, and Isen, in Latin Isana, a market-town, containing a collegiate-church.

IV. The Lordship, or County, of W E R D E N F E L S,

Which lies betwixt Upper-Bavaria and the Tirolese, is very mountainous and watered principally by the rivers Iser and Loisach. This lordship was annexed to the diocese in the thirteenth century by virtue of a purchase of Bishop Enich. In the year 1423 it was mortgaged to the Duke of Bavaria, but redeemed again in 1425. In it is Werdenfels, a castle, seated on a mountain, below which lies the Wang on the river Loisach.

Germisch, or Germischgau, a market-town, seated on the Loisach, and purchased by Bishop Conrad I. in the year 1249.

Partenkirch, a market-town, also seated on the Loifach, and Mittenwald, a market-town, lying on the Iser. This place was fold to the bishopric, in the year 1294, by Berthold, Count of Eschenlohe. In the instrument instrument of sale that Count says, that he sells to Bishop Enich the county of Partenkirch and Mittenwald, with all its appurtenances.

Obs. The bishopric is also possessed, i. In Upper-Bavaria, of the rentaint of Munich and the amt of Crantsberg, as also of the hosmarkte of of Eisenhosen, together with Upper and Lower-Humbel, Massenhausen and Ottenburg. 2. In Austria, of Waidhoven, Hollenburg and Enzersdorf. 3. In Stiria, of Rottenfels. 4. In Carniola, of the lordship of Bischoflack 5, In Tirol, of the market-town of Innching or Innichen.

The Principalities of NEUBURG and SULZBACH.

§. 1. THE origin of these principalities, which, for the most part, lie in what is called the upper-palatinate, is as follows: George, Duke of Bavaria, of the Landeskut line, dying, in the year 1503, without maleiffue, lest his territories to the Pfalzgrave Rupert, husband to his daughter Elizabetis and fon to Philip the Wife, Elector-palatine; but this inheritance gave rife to a war betwixt him and Duke Albert of Bavaria, of the only furviving line of Munich, in which the palatine-house proved unsuccessful; but, in the year 1507 this war was ended by a full compromise, by virtue of which the children of the Pfalzgrave Rupert retained of the succession of the aforesaid Duke George, the town, castle and amts of Neuburg, Hochstatt, Lauingen, Gundelfingen, Monheim, Hilpoltstein, Heydeck, Weiden, Burkbeim, Reichertshofen, Laber, Allersberg, Flosz, Vohenstrausz, Endorf, Kornbrunn, Hainsberg, Gravsbach and Burgstein; and, on the other hand, the descendents of Duke Albert of Bavaria, the lands of Sulzbach, Lengfeld, Regenstauff, Velburg, Veldorf, Kalmunz, Schweigendorf, Schmidmuhl and Hombauer. These lands were originally called die junge ptalz, but this name they did not retain long. They continued, however, in the house of the Elector-palatine, and at last, in the sons of the Elector Philip Lewis, namely, the Pfalzgraves Wolfgang William and Augustus, were divided into two principalities; viz. into the dutchy of Neuburg and the principality of Sulzbach. Philip William, fon to the former of these Pfalzgraves, became Elector-palatine; but his fons and successors, the Electors John William and Charles Philip, dying both without male-iffue, the palatinate, together with the dutchy of Neuburg came to the Sulzbach line, which derives its origin from the above-mentioned Pfalzgrave Augustus; so that both principalities are possessed at present by the same proprietor.

Neuburg.] G E R M A N Y.

§. 2. The palatinate of Neuburg has always a vote in the circle of Bavaria. Before the latter too obtained the electoral dignity, it had long contests with the palatinate of Neuburg; but the electoral dignity of the Pfalzgrave descending to Bavaria in 1623, the Pfalzgrave of Neuburg voluntarily yielded precedence to the Elector of Bavaria. In 1697, the Pfalzgrave of Sulzbach was unanimously (the vote of the Pfalzgrave of Neuburg excepted) received among the States of the circle of Bavaria, which reception was confirmed by the Emperor in the year 1701; but on this account the Palatine of Sulzbach withdrew for a long time from the circle, and Leuchtenberg opposed the precedence of Sulzbach.

§ 3. In the Diet of the Empire the Elector-palatine is possessed both of seat and voice in the college of Imperial Princes for the dutchy of Neuburg, but for the palatinate of Sulzbach he has not yet received introduction, not-withstanding the whole Diet, in the last century, declared in savor of his claim, and gave hopes that the Psalzgrave of Sulzbach should be admitted as a State of the circle of Bavaria.

§. 4. Before these countries became two principalities they paid to a Roman month twenty horse and one hundred foot, or six hundred and forty florins; but afterwards each principality furnished its own particular quota. Some contests indeed arose on this head betwixt them, but these have ceased ever since the union of the principalities under one Sovereign. For the lordship of Heydeck, the Pfalzgrave of Neuburg pays in particular sive horse and seven foot, or eighty-eight florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar his quota is three hundred and forty rixdollars, seventy-three kruitzers and one eighth; that of Sulzbach being forty-eight rixdollars, fifty kruitzers and five eighths.

§. 5. With respect,

E

I. To the Dutchy of U B U R

It enjoys a government of its own, together with a chamber of justice and a prefecturate-office. In it, indeed, are still some Lutheran siefs, but the prevailing religion here is the Roman-catholic. The bailiwicks belonging to this dutchy lie dispersed. Its remarkable places are,

I. The following land-richter and pfleg-amts: viz.

1. The town and pfleg-amt of Neuburg. In it is Neuburg, the capital of the whole dutchy, and the feat of the government, tribunal and prefecturate, standing in a good situation on a hill on the Danube, and being also well-built and fortified, with a palace in it and a handsome college of Jesuits, which was formerly a nunnery of ladies. At this place likewise is held a court under the direction of the great huntsman of the dutchy. In the years 1632 and 1633, Neuburg was taken by the Swedes and Bavarians; in 1703 by the Bavarians, and, in 1744, by the Austrians.

Grienau, a castle on the Danube.

2. The pfleg-amt of Burkbeim, containing in it

Burkheim, or Purkhaim, a market-town.

3. The landrichter-amt of Grayspach and the pfleg-amt of Monnheim, in which is Grayspach, or Graisbach, a castle, from whence the ancient county of Graisbach took its name.

Lechsgemunt, in Latin Oslia Lyci, a village, in the neighbourhood of which the river Lech runs into the Danube.

Marxhim, a village, fituated not far from the Danube.

Monnheim, a finall town, in the year 1462 destroyed by the Augs-burghers.

Damerfreim, a market-town.

4. The pfleg-amt of Maurn, containing in it

Maurn, a castle.

Welchain, a market-town.

Pergen, a convent.

5. The landvogt-amt of Hochflatt, in Swabia, which contains in it

Hockstatt, a small town, seated on the Danube, and the residence of a Presecturate and a forrester's court. In its neighbourhood, in the year 703, a battle was begun betwixt the Imperialists on the one side, and the Bavarians and French on the other, which was carried into the county of Oettingen, and proved unfortunate to the sormer.

Blindheim, a village, seated on the Danube, not far from Hochstatt, near which the British and Imperial armies obtained a most signal victory over the French and Bavarians. This battle extended from beyond the hamlet of Oberklau and the village of Lutzingen to the village of Morseblingen, all which places belong to this prefecturate.

6. The pfleg-amt of Lauingen, fituated likewise in Swabia, and containing in it

Lauingen, a finall town, feated on the Danube, and originally a Roman colony. In it formerly flood a celebrated gymnasium. In the year 1632, this town was taken by the Swedes.

Hausen, a village.

7. The pfleg-amt of Gundelfingen, lying also in Swabia, and having its feat at Gundelfingen, a small town, on the river Brenz, which below this place falls into the Danube. In it also is a castle.

8. The pfleg-amt of Conflein, which also probably lies in this neighbourhood.

o. The united pfleg-amts of Heydeck and Hilpoltstein in the Nordgau.

I. The pfleg-amt of Heydeck is an immediate lordship belonging to the Empire, and was formerly the property of Barons who took their title from hence. The Elector-palatine defended this place against the Empire, as has been shewn above. The circle of Franconia strenuously endeavoured before the Imperial chamber to wrest it from the Pfalzgraves of Neuburg and to have it reckoned in the circle of Bavaria. This pfleg-amt comprehends in it Heydeck, a small town and castle; together with The villages of Labstatt, Selingstatt, Reut, &c.

2. The pfleg-amt, or lordship, of Hilpoltslein, had also formerly lords of its own. The principal place in it is Hilpoltstein, a small town, containing a castle.

10. The pfleg-amt of Allersberg, in the Nordgau, contains in it Allersberg, a market-town. The Gau, in which this place stood was anciently named Norrogo.

11. The pfleg-amt of Hemmau, in the Nordgau, in which is Hemmau, a small town, and Painten, a market-town, containing a ranger's court.

12. The pfleg-amt of Beretzhausen, in the Nordgau: in which is Beretzhausen, a market-town, seated on the Laber.

Hoben-Rechberg, a castle, standing on a mountain, and Hochdorf, a castle, lying on the Nab.

13. The pfleg-amts of Laber and Luppurg, in the Nordgau, comprehending in them

Laber, a market-town, seated on the river of the same name.

Pillenbofen, a convent, lying on the Nab.

Arlasberg, a convent, situate not far from the rivers Nab and Danube.

Luppurg, a market-town, lying not far from the river Laber, and anciently a diftinct lordship of itself.

Parsberg, a market-town, which, on the extinction of the Barons of Parsberg, descended to the Counts of Schonborn; and Raitenpuech, a castle.

14. The pfleg-amt of Regenstauf, containing in it

Regenstauf, a market-town, seated on the Regen, on a mountain, near which lies a castle in ruins.

The castles of Carlstein, Draxenstein, &c.

15. The landrichter-amt of Burg-Lengenfeld, in the Nordgau, comprehending in it,

1. Burg-Lengenfeld, a small town, seated on the Nab, and containing a forrest-court. This place anciently belonged to the landgravate of Stephaning.

2. The pfleg-amt of Kalmunz, containing Vol. V. A a a Kalmunz,

Kalmunz, a market-town, near which the Vils joins the Nab. This place also formerly belonged to the landgravate of Stephaning,

Pirkensce, a village, with a fine castle in it belonging to the Barons of Franken.

3. The pfleg-amt of Schmidmuhl: in which is Schmidmuhl, a market-town, feated on the Vils, which at this place receives into it the little-river of Lautrach.

II. The landvogt-amt of Neuburg, having its feat in the capital of that name, and being the residence of a judge, castellan and an inspector of buildings, as also of the other officers of the several departments relating to the laws, revenue and government of this country. Under it are the following psleg-amts: viz.

1. The pfleg-amt of Rennerzhofen, which lies in the Nordgau on the river Danube, and contains in it

Rennerzhofen, or Ranerzhofen, a market-town. Pertlzheim, a castle, seated on the Danube.

2. The pfleg-amt of Reichertshofen, containing Reichertshofen, a market-town, seated on the Par, together with Stockau, a castle, also seated on the river Par.

3. The pfleg-amt of Velburg, in the Nordgau, in which is Velburg, a small town. Not far from it lies Old-Velburg.

Adelburg, a castle, seated on the river Laber.

4. The pfleg-amt of Schwandorf, containing in it Schwandorf, a small town, seated on the Nab.

Obs. The lordship of Pleystain, or Bleistein, lies on the borders of Bohemia, betwixt the prefecturate of Treswitz in Lower-Bavaria and the jurisdiction of Vobenstrausz, which belongs to Sulzbach. It was formerly in the possession of the Landgraves of Leuchtenberg, and, in the year 1350, together with the lordship of Reichenstein, annexed as an honorary fief to the crown of Bohemia, but was afterwards disposed of hereditarily to the Electorpalatine in 1418. In the year 1600, a new compact was concluded betwixt the Landgrave George Lewis and the Elector Frederick IV. by virtue of which the latter paid down to the former the fum of 40,500 florins, in order to avert the troubles which threatened him on account of the redemption of this lordship: but the Elector Frederick V. being put under the ban, the lording of Plegstein was refumed by the feudal chamber of Bohemia, and, in the year 1623, conferred on Duke Albert of Bavaria by the Emperor Ferdinand II. who, with the confent of the lord of the fief, in 1626, fold it to Welfgang William, the Pfalzgrave of Neuburg, of which purchase the Emperor Ferdinand II. also granted him the investiture, but only for himself and the maje-heirs of his body. On the decease therefore of Philip Charles, Elector-palatine, and the last of the Neuburg line, in the year 1742, his fucceffor fuccessor in the electorate, Charles Philip Theodore, of the Sulzbach line, took possession of this lordship; but the Emperor Charles VI. having, in 1725, granted the administration thereof to Count Philip Lewis of Sinzendorf, in the year 1745, it was seized by the Austrian army as a sief escheated to the crown of Bohemia, and conferred on John William, son to the above-mentioned Count Sinzendorf. This lordship contains in it Bleistein, a small town and a mountain-castle, which lies in ruins.

II. The PRINCIPALITY of

 $S ext{ } U ext{ } L ext{ } Z ext{ } B ext{ } A ext{ } C ext{ } H$

Has also a particular government of its own, together with a tribunal. The inhabitants and churches here are at present partly Lutheran and partly Roman-catholic. The affairs of the Lutheran consistory here are managed by the government, in which two Protestant counsellors preside. The Lutheran ministry of this principality consists of three dioceses; namely, Sulzbach, Weyden and Vohenstrausz. The two last are immediately under the direction of the government of Sulzbach, and the first also under its inspection.

The principality of Sulzbach comprehends in it

1. The provincial-court of Sulzbach in the Nordgau, containing in it

Sulzbach, the capital of the principality and the residence of the regency and tribunal, as also of the upper forest and final-courts. In it are not many above three hundred houses, but it consists of two parts; viz. Of the upper, which stands on a hill and is divided by a wall from the lower part, which is called the Bach, or Brook. This lower town lies on the Rosenbach, having in it a plentiful spring, whence the inhabitants of the upper-town fetch their water. The Prince's palace here stands on a rock opposite the upper-town to the south-west. Towards the west also lies a fuburb. The Lutheran church within the town has two ministers belonging to it; namely, the inspector and the town-minister, who was formerly also called the superintendant and city-præter. The Lutherans are likewise possessed of a grammar-school here. The Roman-catholic clergy in this town are a dean and four affistants. The Roman-catholics have also a Latin school here, and ever since the year 1733 a Capuchin convent. This town had anciently Counts of its own, who took their name from hence, but failed in the person of Gebbard V In its neighbourhood too is an iron-mine.

The Lutheran parishes here are, 1. Rosenberg and Poppenried; 2. Ill-schwang; 3. Furnriet; 4. Etzelwang, Ehrnhull and Kirch-Rheinbach; 5. Edelsfeld and Kurmreuth; 6. Eiszmansberg, and, 7. Neukirchen.

Aaaz

Konigstein,

Konigstein, is a small market-town, with a castle in it which formerly belonged to the Barons of Breitenslein, and, together with Eschenfelden, constitutes but one Lutheran parish.

Breitenstein, Hauseck, Neidstein and Liebteneck, are castles.

2. In the binternlande lies,

1. The amt and landgericht of Parkstein and Weyden, containing under them Parkstein, a market-town, standing on a mountain, with a fortified castle above it, formerly belonging to the house of Erlbeck, and together with Wildenreuth and Diemenreuth, making but one Lutheran parish.

Eberndorf, or Erbendorf, a market-town, seated on the Wald-nab, and having in it a Lutheran parish-church. This place stiles itself a mine-town.

Mantel a market-town, seated on the Heid-nab, and together with Neu-kirchen and Rothenslatt in the presecturate of Weyden, making but one Lutheran parish.

Kaltenbrunn and Freybung, both market-towns, which, together with Tannsies, constitute but one Lutheran parish. Near Freybung is a lead-mine.

Koblberg, a market-town, and together with Etzenrieth, making but one Lutheran parish.

Thumsenreuth and Krummenab, also constituting a Lutheran parish.

2. The pfleg-amt of Weyden, containing in it

Weyden, a small town, seated in a fruitful plain on the Wald-nab, and anciently fortified. This place contains in it a Lutheran parish-church and a forest-court.

3. The amt or prefecturate of Flosz, in which is Flosz, a large market-town, feated on the little river of the same name, and containing a Lutheran church.

The ancient mountain castle of Flosserburg, which was destroyed by the Swedes.

Wilchenreuth, Peucherfreuth, and Pleszberg, all constituting but one Lutheran parish.

4. The amt or tribunal of Vohenstrausz, which comprehends under it Vohenstrausz, a handsome market-town, having a Lutheran parish-church, and a castle belonging to the prince, called Friderichsburg.

Altenstadt, a village, in which is a Lutheran chapel.

The BISHOPRIC of R A T I S B O N.

- §. 1. THE capital of this bishopric is the Imperial city of Ratisbon. Various are the opinions concerning its original; but the most received notion is that it was founded towards the year 739 by St. Boniface, with the consent of Ottilo Duke of Bavaria, and that Gaubald, or Garibald, was its first Bishop, who had the chapel of St. Stephen for his cathedral. Afterwards either the faid Duke Ottilo, or his successor Taszilo II. removed the bishop's residence to the convent of St. Emeran, but Charles the Great, after the deposition of Taszilo, translated it to the church of Sr. Peter, endowing it anew with lands and revenues. The bishops of this city were for a long time also abbots of the monastery of St. Emeran. But on the contrary, P. Haufitz has maintained the new opinion, namely, that this bishopric so early as the year 697 was founded by St. Rupert prelate of Worms; and thus is of the fame antiquity with the convent of St. Emeran. That in the latter the bishops had their first residence, and were chosen alternately from among its Monks and at the same time were abbots of it. Also that in 798 the bishop's see was removed from the convent to the church of St. Stephen, but the bishops still continued abbots of the former, till at last St. Wolfgang in the year 977 separated the abbey from the bishopric, at which time the lands which had been given to St. Emeran were fo divided that one part of them still belonged to the cathedral, and the other to the Monks.
- §. 2. The arms of this bishopric are ruby a bend pearl. The bishop hereof is a Prince of the Empire, and sits on the bench of ecclesiastical Princes betwixt the Bishops of Freysing and Passau, and on that of the circle of Bavaria between the same prelates. In the matricula of the Empire he is assessed at eight horse and thirty foot, or two hundred and sixteen florins, and his contingency to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar is seventy-four rixdollars, thirty-three kruitzers and three quarters.
- §. 3. The cathedral confifts of twenty-four persons: the Count of Torring is its hereditary marshal, the Baron of Stingelheim its hereditary chamberlain, the Baron of Pfetten its hereditary cup-bearer, and the Count of Taufkirchen its hereditary steward.
- §. 4. The circumference and limits of this diocese are described in the cosmographical accounts for the year 1748, p. 60. It comprehends under it two collegiate churches, twenty-eight abbeys and prelacies, and twenty-nine rural deaneries, to which belong 1383 parishes, chapels of ease and chaplainries, and likewise extends over the Bavarian districts of Holnberg in the upper palatinate, as also over the Roman-catholic parishes in the principality of Sulzbach, the landgravate of Leuchtenberg, and the county of Sternstein.

§. 5. Its bishop, who is a Prince, has his consistory, his council and treasury, exclusive of other country officers.

§. 6. In the Imperial city of Ratisbon the Elector indeed holds the bishop's court, but without jurisdiction. To its temporal dependances belongs

I. The free Imperial lordship of Donaustauf, commonly called Domstauf, which lies about two hour's distance below Ratisbon on the river Danube; being four hour's in length, and as much in breadth. This lordship comprehends under it

Donaustauf, a market-town, seated on the Danube, near which stands the mountain-castle of the same name, which was demolished in 1634. The ferry here belongs to the Elector of Bavaria.

The castles of Schonberg and Adelmanstein: together with

The hofmarkte and villages of Schwablweisz, Degerheim, Sulzbach, Demlingen, Siegenstein, Siessenbach, Lichtenwald, Menzenbach, and Irlbach. Near the two last places the Bohemians were defeated in 1504.

II. The free Imperial Lordship of Werth, or Worth, which, together with those before-mentioned, lies on the Danube, being about two hours in length and one in breadth. This lordship contains in it

Werth, or Worth, a market-town having a castle: together with The villages of Diessenthal, Kirschholz, Kruckenberg, and Frenkhosen.

III. The free Imperial lordship of Hohenburg, which lies in the Nordgau on the river Lautrach, being situated betwixt the Bavarian district of Rieden in the upper palatinate and that of Burg-Legenfeld which belongs to Neuburg. The ancient marggravate of Hohenburg was considerably larger than this lordship, which consists only of the castle of Hohenburg, and a few vassals and subjects.

Obs. 1. To the bishopric also belongs

Hobenburg, a castle, seated on the river Inn, and lying in Upper-Bavaria in the rent-amt of Munich and the psleg-amt of Wasserburg, over which it is possessed of the lower or Vogtey jurisdiction.

Pachlarn, (otherwise called Pechlarn, or Pochlarn) a small town and lordship lying in Lower-Austria. See Vol. iv. p. 168.

At Eberspeunt, Euting, and Wildenberg, all situated in Lower-Bavaria, and likewise in the rent-amt of Landsbut and the psleg-amts of Vilsbiburg, Aerding, and Rottenburg, is a pslegverwalter, or procurator.

2. The cathedral is possessed of certain districts in Irl, as also on the Danube, and at Nabburg, Aufhausen, Pfaffenberg, Schwandorf, Raittenbuch, and Chamb.

The Princely Landgravate of L E U C H T E N B E R G.

§. 1. THIS landgravate lies in the Nordgau, being fituated betwixt the principality of Sulzbach and the pfleg-amts of Nabburg, Tenesburg, and Irejwitz, in the upper palatinate, and belonging to the Elector of Bavaria. Formerly it had Landgraves of its own, the last of whom, by name Maximilian Adam, died without iffue in 1646. Now though the Emperor Maximilian I. had granted the administration of this landgravate to Duke Henry of Mecklenburg in the year 1502, yet Duke Albert of Bavaria, who married Matilda fister to the last Landgrave, received the investirure of it as a fief in 1647; but with respect to the other places ceded them to his brother Maximilian Elector of Bavaria, who contered them on his second son Prince Maximilian Philip. On the death of the latter without issue in the year 1707, and the Elector of Bavaria being likewise at that time under the ban, the Emperor granted the investiture of this landgravate to the Prince of Lamberg, but in 1714 it was again restored to Bavaria.

§. 2. The Elector bears this landgravate in his title but not its arms, which are pearl a pale ruby. On account thereof, however, he enjoys both feat and voice in the college of Imperial Princes, and in the circle of Bavaria. Its affeffment in the matricula of the Empire is fix horse and fourteen foot, or one hundred and twenty-eight florins; and to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar its contingency is one hundred and thirty-five rixdollars, twenty-fix kruitzers and a half.

§. 3. In civil and political matters this landgravate has a director, as also its feudal president, justiciary, and governor, together with the other officers belonging to a principality. In ecclesiastical affairs it is subject to the bishop-ric of Ratisbon.

§. 4. It is divided into four prefecturates, namely,

1. Into the landrichter-amt of Leuchtenberg, which contains in it

Leuchtenberg, a castle and market-town; together with

The feudal lands of Rockensein, Purk, Wildenau, Schirmitz, Kemling, Glaubedorf, Trebjau, &c.

2. The stadtrichter-amt of Pfreimbt, containing in it

Pfreimbt, a small town with a castle, seated on the Nab, which at this place receives into it the Pfreimbt.

Steinbach, an estate, having the privilege of vassalage.

3. The pfleg-amt of Wernberg, in which is Wernberg, a mountain-castle, and market-town.

Lue, a market-town, feated on the Nab.

4. The richter-amt of Missbrunn, which is divided towards the east from the above-mentioned district of Wernberg, and contains in it Missbrunn, a castle; together with Burkhardfriedt, a hofmarkt.

The BISHOPRIC of P A S S A U.

§. 1. THE bishopric or principality of Passau lies betwixt Bavaria, Bohemia, and Austria, being seated on the river Danube. It takes its name from Passau, its capital in which it was sounded after the demolition of Laureacum (now called Ens, p. 312) by the Huns in the year 737: Vivilo, otherwise named Vivilus, or Vivalus, who was at that time archbishop of Laureacum, slying to Passau, where Ottilo Duke of Bavaria granted him the church of St. Stephen. And thus the town became and still continues a bishop's see. The prelates of this place in process of time were frequently stiled by historians either Antistites, Laureacenses, or Patavienses. They were formerly also suffragans to the archbishops of Salzburg. But in the year 1728 Bishop Joseph Dominicus, Count of Lamberg, obtained his bishopric to be declared exempt by Pope Benedict XIII. which privilege Pope Clement XII. confirmed in 1732. And accordingly it is now immediately dependent on the see of Rome.

§. 2. The bishop's title is, By the grace of God—--- exempt, Bishop of Passau, and Prince of the holy Roman Empire. The arms of this bishopric are pearl, a wolf faillant and ruby.

§. 3. In the college of Imperial Princes the Bishop of Passau sits on the ecclesiastical bench betwixt the Bishops of Ratisbon and Trent; but in the circle of Bavaria is the last among the prelates, following the bishop of Ratisbon and preceding the prior of Berchtolsgaden. His assessment in the Imperial matricula is eighteen horse and seventy-eight foot, or sive hundred and twenty-eight florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar he pays ninety-sour rixdollars, sixty-two kruitzers and a half.

§. 4. The cathedral here confists in reality of twenty-three persons, though two of their places continue vacant. At present the office of hereditary marshal of this bishopric is occupied by Prince Lamberg, that of hereditary chamberlain by the Count of Aham and Renhaus, that of hereditary butler by Count Weissenwolf, and that of hereditary steward by the Baron of Benzenau.

§. 5. To

- §. 5. To the episcopal cathedral, so far as its jurisdiction extends over Bavaria, appertain two collegiate churches, together with thirteen abbeys and priories, and ten rural deaneries, which include in them three hundred and twenty-eight places of worship. It reaches also a great way into Austria. See Vol. IV. p. 252.
- §. 6. According to Ertel the revenues of this hishopric amount to 80,000 crowns.

§. 7. To the principality of Passau belongs

Pallau, in Latin Patavia, and originally Batava, the capital, being well built, and lying on the Danube, which at this place and also on this fide receives into it the Ilm or Inn, and on the north fide the Ilz, which is fo famous for beautiful pearls. It confifts of three towns, namely of that which is properly called Paffau, and lies betwixt the rivers Danube and Inn; of the Innstadt, in Latin Civitas Oenana, which stands on the other side of the Inn, being joined with the former by means of a bridge, and standing on the fide of the ancient town of Bojodurum; and lastly of the Ilzstadt, in Latin Civitas Ilzensis, which lies on the north side of the Danube, where it receives into it the I/z. The last of these rivers runs betwixt the Ilzstadt and the mountain of St. George, on which stands the castle of Oberhausz. From this fortress a bridge leads over the Danube into the road to Passau. The city on those sides of it which are surrounded by the water is without walls, but towards the land-fide or Bavaria is fortified both with ramparts and ditches. The cathedral here, which is dedicated to St. Stephen, was, together with the city, burnt down in the year 1662, but rebuilt again with great fplendor. On an eminence near it stands the bishop's palace. Exclusive too of the parish-church of St. Paul and some others, in this city is likewife a convent of Benedictines, which is the oldest in the place, as also a Franciscan and a Capuchin convent, together with a college of Jesuits. On the hill, at the foot of which lies the Innstadt, stands also the pilgrim-church called Mariabulf, and not far from the proper town of Passau on the river Inn lies the convent of St. Nicholas, in which are regular canons of the order of St. Augustine.

Passau enjoys a very good situation for trade. The most ancient account of it appears to be in the Notitia Imperium, which was probably made about the year 427, under the Emperor Honcrius, and in which, under the Duke of Rhaetia, the Nova cohors Batavorum was assigned to the Batavi. It remained under the power of the Romans till after the year 475, when it was taken by the Alemanni. After that it fell under the dominion of the Franks, and continued under the government of the Dukes of Bavaria. The Emperor Otto III. made it wholly subject, in the year 999, to the bishopric. In 1181, 1662, and 1680 it was almost entirely consumed by fire, and in 1316 and 1354, a considerable part of it was also reduced to ashes. Vol. V.

11. The

In 1552 the religious peace, which is usually called the treaty of Passau, was concluded here.

2. The provincial jurisdiction of Oberhausz, to which belongs Oberbaufz, a citadel, seated on a mountain, which takes its name from St. George, and lies on the north side of the Danube over against the town of Passau, to which a bridge leads over that river. Somewhat lower than this citadel, but on the same mountain, stands also the citadel of Nieder-kausz. Both of them are well fortified, excepting on the side towards Passau, which needs no fortification, the mountain on that side being very steep. In the year 1741 these citadels were taken by the Bavarians and French, and in 1742 by the Austrians.

Windorf, a market-town, feated on the Danube.

Hauzenberg, also a market-town.

The prefecturates of Hauzenberg, Straszkirchen, Ratzmansdorf, Hakelberg, and Kellberg.

3. The seigniory of Viechtenstein, to which belongs. Viechtenstein, a citadel, seated on the Danube. And Kasten, a nobleman's seat.

4. The feigniory of Hafner, or Upper-Zell, to which belongs Hafnerzell, a market-town, which is the feat of a prefecturate. And Griesbach, also a market-town, having a prefecturate-court.

5. The feigniory of Fursteneck, to which belongs Fursteneck, a citadel. And Berlafreut, a market-town.

6. The feigniory of Leoprechting, to which belongs

Leoprechting, a citadel.

Hueteren, a market-town, lying on the Ilz, and being the feat of a prefecturate.

Rornbach, also a market-town, in which is an amt-court.

Kaltenstein, a citadel, near the foregoing place. And

The prefecturate of WALDKIRCHEN.

- 7. The judicial prefecturate of WALDKIRCHEN, in the market-town of that name.
 - 8. The seigniory of Wolfstein, in which is Wolfstein, a citadel.

Freyung, a market-town: together with

The upper and lower prefecturates.

9. The feigniory of Wegschaid, which lies within the territories of the Mihel-quarter of Upper-Austria, and contains in it Wegschaid, a market-town.

10. The feigniory of Riedenburg lies opposite to the foregoing, on the river Inn, being surrounded by the Upper-Bavarian presecturate of Braunau and the Lower-Bavarian presecturate of Griesbach. In it is Riedenburg, the capital, and a market-town.

11. The feigniory of Obernberg, also lying on the Inn, and surrounded by the Upper-Bavarian pfleg-amts of Riedt and Braunau. Near the citadel of Obernberg in it is a water-toll.

Rem. This bithopric is moreover possessed, 1. In Upper-Austria. 1. Of the county of Neuburg, which lies not far from the town of Paffau. See Vol. 1v. p. 182. 2. Of the citadel of Stahrenberg and Pihrenstein, and the market-town of Ebersberg. See Vol. IV. p. 186. 2. In Lower-Austria. 1. Of the town of Mautern. See Vol. IV. p. 168. 2. Of the places of Abstotten, Amstotten, Greifenstein, Kinigstetten, or Konigstetten, St. Andrew, &c. See Vol. Iv. p. 168, & feq. 3. Of the market-town of Schwadorf, fee Vol IV. p. 167, and the church at Marbach, or Marsbach. See Vol. IV. p. 176.

The Princely County of S \mathcal{T} E R N S \mathcal{T} E I N

Lies dispersed in the Upper-Palatinate.

THIS county formerly belonged, as an immediate Imperial feigniory, to the Lords of Pflug, and afterwards to the Barons of Heydeck. But the electoral Saxon general John, Baron of Heydeck, being, in the time of the Schmalkaddisch war, put under the ban, Ladislaus, popel of Lebkowitz, obtained it in fief of the Emperor, who also, in 1641, raised it to a princely county. In the year 1642 the house of Lobkowitz, on account thereof, obtained both feat and voice in the circle of Bavaria; and being introduced, in 1653, into the council of the Princes of the Empire, the princely voice was grounded on this princely county. Its arms are three stars argent, in a field azure. To a Roman month it contributes only thirty-eight florins. But to each chamber-term is rated at one hundred and twenty-two rixdollars, forty-five kruitzers. To it belongs

- 1. Neustadt, or Neustadl, a small town and citadel, seated on the Nab. above Weiden.
- 2. Sternstein, a little village, with a desolate citadel belonging to it lying in the neighbourhood of the foregoing place.

3. Waldau, a citadel.

4. Waldturn, a citadel and market-town, lying between the landgravate of Leuchtenberg and the Sulzbach prefecturates of Flosz and Vohenstrausz. And

5. Schonfee, a small town which is environed by the upper palatine prefecturate of Neuburg. B b b 2

The Princely Provostship of

B E R C H T O L S G A D E N.

§. 1. HIS provostship, together with its territory, is environed by the archbishopric of Salzburg and the Lower-Bavarian psleg-amt of Reichenhall. Its territory is wholly mountainous, and contains in it fome inland lakes, as namely the Konigsee, which is the largest of them, and out of which flows the Aiben, which pours itself into the Salza; the Upper, Hinder and Tauben-sec.

§. 2. This provostship was erected in the year 1108 by Irmgard, Countess of Harburg and her sons Beringer and Cuno Counts of Sulzbach, in honour of John the Baptist and St. Peter, in the wood of Berchtolsgaden, or Berchtesgaden, and filled with regular canons of the order of St. Augustine. From 1387 to 1404 it continued without a provost, and incorporated with the archiepiscopal table of Salzburg; but in the last-mentioned year its original conflitution, together with all its ancient privileges, was again restored, and in 1455 it was rendered exempt from the spiritual jurisdiction of the archbithop of Salzburg, and made immediately subject to the papal chair. The archdukes of Austria are hereditary curators and protectors of it.

§. 3. The title of its provost is: By the grace of God--- of the boly Roman Empire Prince, and provost of the highly noble and princely Imperial foundation of Berchtolsgaden. The arms of the provoftship are two keys, placed in form of a St. Andrew's cross, in a field gules.

§. 4. In the council of the Princes of the Empire this provost enjoys both feat and voice on the spiritual bench between the Prince of Heitersheim and the princely Provost of Weissenbrug. In the circle of Bavaria he sits on the spiritual bench between the bishop of Passau and the abbot of St. Emmeram. To a Roman month he gives two horse and twenty foot, or one hundred and four florins. And to each chamber-term is to pay one hundred and twenty-one rixdollars, fixty-fix kruitzers and three quarters.

8. 5. The chapter here confifts of twelve persons. In the year 1754 the Pope gave this foundation an order-cross, which at the point of death is to impart full absolution.

§. 6. The Prince and Provost here has a regency and consistory of his own. He belongs to the province of the archbishopric of Salzburg, and appears at the provincial Diets thereof.

§. 7. To the territory of the provostship belongs

1. Berchtolsgaden, or Berchtesgaden, which is the cloyster itself, as also the market-town lying near it, on the Alben.

2. Schel-

2. Schellenberg, a market-town, likewise seated on the river Alben.

3. The gnodshafts of Aue, Bischosswise, Konigsee, Rambsaue, Salzberg, Schonau, and Schwarz.

Rem. From this Roman-catholic country many Protestant inhabitants emigrated in the year 1732, particularly from Hernhausen.

The Countrof H A A G.

- §. 1. THE county of Haag terminates to the east on the river Inn, being environed by the Upper-Bavarian pfleg-amts of Wasserburg and Schwaben, as also by the Lower-Bavarian pfleg-amts of Neumarkt, Dorfen, and Aerding, and the seigniory of Burkrain in the bishopric of Freysingen. From east to west it is near three German miles in length, and from south to north above two.
- §. 2. The first possessions of this county were the Lords of Gurren, from whom it descended in the first half of the thirteenth century by inheritance to Seysfrid of Frauenberg. In the year 1509 the Emperor Maximilian I. raised Sigisfmund of Frauenberg and his sons to the dignity of Counts of the Empire. The Emperor Charles V. conferred on the house of Bavaria the expectancy of the Imperial siefs of the Counts of Haag, which donation was confirmed by the Emperor Ferdinand I. But the last of the Counts of Haag, named Ladislaus, dying in 1567, Bavaria took possession of the county, putting off the allodial heirs with money.
- §. 3. The Elector of Bavaria bears this county neither in his title nor arms: But the arms for it are a reined steed courant, in a field verte. On account of this county the Elector enjoys both seat and voice in the circle of Bavaria on the secular bench betwixt Sternstein and Ortenburg, and with the latter maintains a dispute about rank, but nevertheless is in possession of the precedency. He permits, indeed his envoys at the Diet of the Empire to legitimate themselves on account of this county by the directory of the Empire, but holds to no college of Counts thereof. The county of Haag pays to one Roman month sour horse and ten soot, or eighty-eight florins; and to each chamber-term is rated at eighty-one rixdollars, sourteen kruitzers and a half.
- §. 4. It is reckoned a pfleg-amt belonging to the rent-amt of Munich, having an electoral administrator, a provincial judge, a treasurer, and a fief-provost of its own, as also other officers, and contains in it

J. And

1. And principally Haag, a market-town, with a citadel.

2. Ramsau, a cloyster of Hermits of the order of St. Augustine, sounded at Haag in the year 1414 by George of Frauenberg. From 1550 to 1593 it was not supplied with Monks. At present it belongs to the Augustines of Munich.

The PRINCELY ABBEY of St. E M M E R A M, in Ratisbon.

§. 1. THE abbey of Benedictine Monks at St. Emmeram, or Emeran, is fituate in the Imperial city of Ratisbon. It is faid that St. Emmeram, an itinerant bishop, arrived in the year 649 in the days of Theodo I. Duke of Bavaria, at Ratisbon, where he was very amicably entertained by that Prince. That after his departure in the year 652, he was falfly charged with having debauched this Duke's daughter; that her brother Lambert purfued him on this account, and came up with him at Helfendorf in Upper-Bavaria, where he caused him to be cut to pieces. That his mangled body was brought to Ratisbon, and there buried, and his innocency revealed by a miracle, for which reason Duke Theodo I. in the year 696 erected a cloyster to his honour, which cloyster in 697 obtained its first abbot. But at that time, and probably ever fince the year 680, Duke Theodo II. governed in Bavaria, who must therefore be the founder of the cloyster, provided the year affigned be just, but this again others deny, maintaining the cloylter to be older. P. Hansitz, who afferts, that the bishopric of Ratisbon is of equal date with this cloyster, and that both of them were founded by bithop Ruprecht in the year 697: He is likewise of opinion, that the first bishops had their seat in this cloyster, and that the Monks had also a like right with the canons of the church of St. Peter, in regard to the election of a bishop; so that the bishops were chosen alternately out of the Monks, and were at the same time abbots of the cloyster. In the year 798, it is true, that the episcopal see was removed out of the cloyster to the church of St. Stephen, but yet the bishops remained abbots of the clovfter, and retained under their jurisdiction the estates belonging to it, agreeably to the nature of a cathedral cloyster, till at length, namely in the year 977, St. Wolfgang separated the abbey from the bishopric, and thus divided the estates, with which St. Emmeram was endowed, one part thereof descending to the bishopric, and the other to the Monks. These last, who thus could no longer attain the episcopal dignity, after the death of St. Wolfgang disputed this division, and hence arose the long contests which which subsisted between the bishopric and the cloyster on account of the ancient revenues of the latter. About the year 1132 abbot Engelfried, by the help of false records, obtained an exemption. This opinion of Hanfitz, the princely abbot of St. Emmeram, J. B. Kraufz has warmly combated in some writings of his, and on the contrary maintained, that the cloyfter was far older than the bishopric. That either Ottilo Duke of B_{d-} varia, or Taszilo had removed the episcopal see to the cloyster, but that the Emperor Charlemagne, after deposing Tajzilo, had removed it again from thence to the church of St. Peter, and also anew restored thereto its incomes and estates; and that he also immediately subjected the cloyster to the see of Rome. That the bishops, indeed afterwards, till the time of St. Wolfgang, retained the dignity of an abbot in the cloyster, but that the estates of the cloyster were never given up to their management, but always remained immediately subject to the Kings and Emperors. That after St. Wolfgang, no bishop was ever advanced to the dignity of an abbot in the cloyster, and that from that time it began to enjoy the sweets of its first immediacy on the Empire.

- §. 2. In the year 1731 the Emperor Charles VI. renewed, or rather confirmed the princely dignity, which the Emperor Albrecht had already conferred on it. The title of its abbot is, By the Grace of God —— of the Holy Roman Empire Prince, and of the Imperial free foundation of the Empire at St. Emmeram in Ratisbon Abbot. He sits at the Diet of the Empire on the Rhenish bench of prelates, between the abbot of St. Cornelius Minster and the abbess of Essen. In the circle of Bavaria he enjoys both seat and voice on the spiritual bench between the provost of Berchotsgaden and the abbess of Lower-Minster in Ratisbon. In the year 1682 his Imperial matricular evaluation was fixed at thirty-two florins. To each chamber-term he contributes eighty-seven rixdollars, eighty-three kruitzers and a half. The Dukes of Bavaria are patrons and protectors of this abbey, with respect to its estates in Bavaria, which are also the most considerable belonging to it, and likewise its best.
- §. 3. The church of this cloyster boasts of keeping, even to the middle-finger of the right-hand the complete body of St. Denis the Areopagite, which was stolen out of the abbey of St. Denis in France; though the latter also maintains that it is still actually in possession thereof; notwith-standing which, as well in the cathedral church at Bamberg, as in the church of St. Vite in the citadel at Prague, the head of this Saint is shewn, and at Munich in the palace-chapel is a hand of him. This church moreover contains in it other remarkables.

The COUNTY of ORTENBURG.

§. 1. HIS little county lies in the Lower-Bavaria, being surrounded by the pfleg-amts of Vilshoven and Griesbach, belonging to the rent-amt of Landshut, and also by the seigniory of Neuburg.

§. 2. Its Lord and inhabitants are addicted to the Protestant religion as laid down by Luther.

- §. 3. The Counts of Ortenburg (otherwise called Ortenberg, or Artenberg) are descended from Count Rapot I. who was son to Engelbrecht III. Duke in Carinthia, and born Count of Sponheim and Ortenburg in that dutchy. These Counts have an old dispute still depending at the chamber judicatory with the Elector of Bavaria on account of their Imperial immediacy; Bavaria contesting this point, and wanting to make them subject to him, as they actually are with respect to the seigniory of Mattigkesen, in the rent-amt of Burghausen. In the year 1574 Duke Albrecht of Bavaria, however, caused the expectancy to the Imperial sief of these Counts to be conferred on him by the Emperor Maximilian II.
- §. 4. The title of these Counts is: Of the Holy Roman Empire Count, defeended of the ancient family of Ortenburg, Krichingen and Putlingen. Their arms are a pale argent, in a field gules. At the Diet of the Empire they belong to the Wetterau college of Counts thereof, and in the circle of Bavaria sit on the secular bench betwixt Haag and Ehrenfels. Their Imperial matricular evaluation is two horse, or twenty-four florins; and to each chamber-term they pay sixteen rixdollars, twenty-three kruitzers. The yearly revenues of these Counts amounts to about 13,000 florins.

§. 5. This county contains in it

1. Old-Ortenburg, a citadel and market-town.

2. New-Ortenburg, a citadel.

3. The villages of Seldenau and Steinkirchen.

The PRINCELY ABBEY of Lower-Munster at Ratisbon.

THIS abbey of Nuns was founded by Judith, daughter to Duke Arnold, or Arnulph of Bavaria, confort to Duke Henry I. of that dutchy, and grandmother to the Emperor Henry II. The first building of this cloyster is placed in the year 900. The title of its abbess is: By the Grace of God — of the Holy Roman Empire Princess, and of the Imperial, free bighly-noble foundation of Lower-Munster in Ratisbon Abbess. At the Diet of the Empire she possesses the thirteenth place on the Rhenish bench of prelates, and in the circle of Bavaria the seventh on the spiritual bench. Her Imperial matricular evaluation was in 1683 fixed at ten florins, but to each chamber-term she is to pay fifty rixdollars, sixy-seven kruitzers and a half. This foundation with respect to spiritual affairs stands under the bishopric of Ratisbon. The Elector of Bavaria is protector of it. The ladies of the foundation may marry out of it, and their manner of life is not claustral.

The SEIGNIORY of E H R E N F E L S.

THE feigniory of Ehrenfels, or Ernfels, lies in the dutchy of Neuburg, and its pfleg-amt of Beretzhausen, being situated on the river Laber. Anciently it belonged to the Bavarian family of Stauff, which in the year 1432 purchased of the Lords of Laber the market-town of Beretzhausen, fituated below the fort of Ehrenfels, and was also possessed of the fort of Sinching, which lies in the pfleg-amt of Haidau in Lower-Bavaria, as also of other estates. In the fifteenth century it was divided into the lines of Ebrenfels and Sinching. The latter became extinct in the fixteenth century in its male-heirs, upon which its females disposed of the citadel and manor of Sinching to the family of Sensheim. The line of Ehrenfels was also posfessed of the citadels of Kefering and Triftlfing in the above-mentioned Lower-Bavarian pfleg-amt of Haidau, and likewise of the seigniory of Schonberg; but came gradually to great decay, and fold off one feigniory after another, till at length John Bernhard of Stauff, the last of this name, alienated likewise in 1567 the seigniory of Ehrenfels to the Pfalzgrave Welf- \mathbf{V}_{OL} . \mathbf{V}_{\star} C c c gang of Neuburg, with refervation, however, of its dependency. I cannot find that the Elector-palatine, as Duke of Neuburg, holds to any college of Counts at the Diet of the Empire on account of this immediate Imperial Teigniory; but in the circle of Bavaria he is possessed both of seat and voice on account thereof. To each Roman month it pays thiry-fix florins. Its contribution, or quota to the chamber-terms must be included in those of Neuburg, as I find it not assigned in the new usual matricula.

The citadel of Ebrenfels stands on a mountain hard by the market-town of Beretzbausen.

The PRINCELY ABBEY of UPPER-MUNSTER in Ratisbon.

Lewis the German, by whom it was founded in the year 896: The title of its abbess is: By the Grace of God, of the Holy Roman Empire-Princess, and Abbess of the Imperial free foundation of Upper-Munster in Ratisbon. At the Diet of the Empire she is possessed of the fourteenth place on the bench of Rhenish prelates, and in the circle of Bavaria of the eighthor last on the spiritual bench. Her Imperial matricular evaluation was in the year 1684 fixed at ten florins, but to each chamber-term she is to pay fifty rixdollars, six kruitzers and a half. With respect to spirituals the foundation stands under the bishopric of Ratisbon. Of it the Elector of Bavaria is protector. The ladies of the soundation lead no claustral life, and may marry out of it.

The SEIGNIORIES of SULZBURG and PYRBAUM.

§. 1. THESE seigniories lie in the upper-palatinate, the seigniory of Sulzburg being surrounded by the psleg-amt of Neumarkt, and that of Pyrbaum by the same psleg-amt, as also by the Neuburg amt of Allersberg, and the marggravial territory of Onolzbach.

§. 2. For

§. 2. For many ages back they have been in the possession of the Lords of Wolfstein, who in the year 1522 were raifed to the dignity of Barons of the Empire, and in 1673 to the state of Counts thereof. So early also as the thirteenth century they were possessed of immediate estates in sief of the Emperor and Empire, namely of the citadel of Adlenburg, or Heimburg, as also of forty marks arising to them out of the vogtey of Berngau. Of the Counts of Hirschberg they held likewise in fief at the very same time the jus castellaniæ of Sulzburg, together with the lands and incomes belonging to them, and frequently at that time stiled themselves from thence. On the Bavarian fide it is alledged, that the fort of Sulzburg, after the death of Gebhard, the last Count of Hirschberg, which happened in the year 1304, fell to the Dukes thereof. In the year 1330 the Emperor Lewis IV. Duke of Bavaria, ceded it to the family of Durwang; and his fon Lewis, Marggrave of Brandenburg, in 1347 to Albrecht of Wolfstein, whose ancestors had been possessed thereof, promising likewise to redeem it of Henry of Durwang. Under the Emperor Charles IV. the superiority over the fort of Sulzburg was disputed with the Dukes of Bavaria, Lewis and Stephen, and reclaimed as a fort of the Empire which had fallen to the Emperor and Empire, on the extinction of the Counts of Hirschberg. This lapse indeed the Dukes were obliged to own, and in 1353 the Lords of Wolfstein compelled them to restore the so often mentioned fort to the Empire. From that year the Lords of Wolfstein were, on account of the faid fort and its appendages, deemed immediate feodaries of the Empire. Among these appendages was originally comprized the market-town of Pyrbaum, but from the year 1480 that town was mentioned in the Imperial feudal letters as a peculiar feigniory. In 1562 Duke Albrecht V. of Bavaria, caused the expectancy of the Imperial fief of Wolfstein to be conferred on himself and his house by the Emperor Ferdinand I. which expectancy was confirmed to him by the following Emperors, and at last, namely in the year 1658, by the Emperor Leopold. But the electoral-house of Bavaria being put under the ban in the beginning of the eighteenth century, and the Counts of Wolfflein deeming its expectancy to their Imperial fief become extinct, they procured the said expectancy of the Emperor Joseph for Count Adolphus of Rechtern, and the male fief-heirs of his body, on whom also it was actually conferred in the year 1708. By the peace of Baaden, however, this expectancy of the Counts of Rechtern became void; nevertheless in the year 1729 Count Christian Albrecht of Wolfstein obtained that the aulic-council of the Empire should pronounce an Imperial local commission for the dismembering of his Imperial fief from the hereditary estates of the archbishop of Salzburg and the Duke of Saxe-Gotha. Upon this denunciation therefore ensued in 1732 the Imperial sentence: That upon the extinction of the male-issue of Wolfstein, to the Electors of Bavaria were indisputably due those Imperial siefs which are by name expressed in the seudal letters of the Ccc2

Emperor Charles IV. of the year 1353, and likewise in those letters which followed thereon, and that they could on no account be withheld from them: But it likewise enacted on the other hand, that in this very case the allodial heirs were directly to be admitted to the specified seventyeight properties, and therein to be protected in the most effectual manner by the Imperial authority, and also obliged to contribute their quota to the matricular evaluation of the house of Wolfstein to the Empire and Circle. But the Elector of Bavaria not only opposed to this Imperial sentence the Remedium supplicationis, or Revisionis (which was dismissed) but also in 1740, on the death of the above-mentioned and last Count of Wolfstein, put himself instantly in possession as well of the Imperial siefs as also of the allodial estates of the Count, and Bavaria has even yet disputes on this head with the allodial heirs of Wolfstein. These allodial heirs are the descendants of the heiress-daughters of the last Count Christian Albrecht; one of whom, named Charlotta Amelia, was married to Count Charles Augustus of Hohenlohe-Kirchberg; and the second, named Henrietta, to Count Charles Maximilian of Giech.

§. 3. The extinct Counts of Wolfstein were of the Protestant religion as taught by Luther, of which religion also are the inhabitants of these seigniories. The Imperial matricular evaluation of these seigniories is two horse and four foot, or forty florins; and to each chamber-term they pay twenty-five rixdollars, thirty-two kruitzers. At the Diet of the Empire the Elector of Bavaria joins himself to no college of Counts on account of these seigniories, but in the circle of Bavaria he has on account thereof both seat and voice, between Ehrenfels and Hohen-Waldeck.

§. 4. Over these seigniories the Elector has appointed an administrator.

We shall now take notice of

I. The Seigniory of SULZBURG, in which is

1. Upper-Sulzburg, the capital, being a citadel feated on a mountain with a market-town belonging to it. The latter is divided into the fore and hinder. The hinder-town as an ancient appenage of Lower-Sulzburg was allodial. This town of Lower-Sulzburg stood also on the mountain not far from the Upper, belonging to the latter and its jurisdiction, and being also originally only a residence of a noble castellan, and long in the possession of the Lords of Gundelsingen. It appears, that on this occasion some great privileges were granted to this noble seat, such as its being surrounded with walls, and it likewise was deemed free and proper by the possession. But the Lords of Wolfstein brought this citadel again to themselves in the year 1403, as also in 1513; and in 1496 they made a donation of one half of it in fief, and in 1514 of the other half also to the holy Roman Empire-From that time particular mention is made of it in the seudal letters.

2. The villages of Hoffen, Elmansdorf, Bachhaufen, Konnersdorf, Grafebof, Kerkhofen, Oberndorf, Sulzkirchen, Ohausen, Kruppeck, Rocksdorf, Wettenhofen, and the Sandmuhl, are all given out by the allodial heirs as property.

3. Zum Grab, a finall cloyster, in which this seigniory is possessed of a right in common with the abbey of Plankstetten.

II. The Seigniory of PYRBAUM, in which is

1. Pyrbaum, a citadel and market-town.

2. The villages of Obern-Hembach and Pruppach, which belong to the allodial estates, and according to some accounts, in conjunction with the foregoing place, constitute of themselves the confined territory of the seigniory of Pyrbaum. But others reckon also the villages of Asselfebwang, Menning, Ebenried, &c. in it,

3. The villages of Muhlhausen and Bierberbach, together with their appendages are particularly mentioned in the fief-letters, having been ceded to the Lords of Wolfstein in the year 1362 by the Emperor Charles IV. after their first investiture as fiefs of the Empire, which happened in 1353, but which investiture became vacant by the extinction of the Lords of Heywerk. At Muhlhausen stood a castle or nobleman's seat, which, in the fisteenth century was the residence of a collateral-line of the Lords of Wolfstein. The village of Bieberbach stands under the territorial jurisdiction of the bishop of Eychstadt.

Rem. The above places belong all to the confined territory of these seigniories; but exclusive of them, it is likewise possessed in foreign territories, particularly in the amt of Neumarkt in the upper-palatinate, of other villages, hamlets and subjects, all belonging to these seigniories, and over which it formerly enjoyed burgherly jurisdiction, quit-rent, subsidy, tax and military-service, these places being given out as hereditary, proprietary estates. The ruinous mountain-castle and stem-house of Wolfstein stands not far from the town of Neumarkt. Exclusive too of the cloyster of Sceligenpsorten, situate in the territory of Bavaria, the seigniory of Upper-Sulzburg is likewise possessed of other immunities and prerogatives.

The SEIGNIORY of

HOHEN-WALDECK.

§.1. THIS feigniory lies in Upper-Bavaria, being furrounded by the prefecturates of Wolfershausen, Aibling and Aurburg, as also by Tyrol.

It is very mountainous and contains in it the Schliers and Stumpf see.

§. 2. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Waldeck, who were hereditary Vogts of the foundation of Schliers, and enjoyed the chamberlain's office of Freyling, with other prerogatives. Wolfgang of Waldeck, the last of his line, dying in the year 1483, his fifter's fon, George Hohenrainer obtained of the Emperor Maximilian his Imperial fiefs; but this Lord also, who was the last of his name, dying in 1487, Hochbrand Sandizeller, who was likewise a sister's son of the aforesaid Wolfgang, obtained these sies of the Empire; and after his death, which happened in the year 1502, Wolf of Machfalrain, or Maxelrain, purchased of the sons of Sandizeller their right therein. Since that time, as well between the Lords of Waldeck as also between the following possessions of their seigniory; namely, those of Hobenrain, Sandizell and Maxelrain on the one fide, and the Dukes of Upper-Bavaria on the other fide, long disputes have subsisted on account of the fovereignty over this feigniory, which at length, namely, in 1559, were compromised in such a manner, by Archbishop Michael of Salzburg, in the Diet of the Empire at Augsburg, that Duke Albrecht of Bavaria renounced the fovereignty over Mulpach, Wallenburg, Waldeck, Schliers and the estates belonging thereto (those of the foundation of Schliers excepted) though with some refervation on account of religion, polity and future mine-works; and that Wolf of Maxelrain acquired by exchange, in the years 1560 and 1561, of Duke Albrecht the Schliersee, together with the lower or vogtjurisdiction, and likewise the criminal-jurisdiction, over the estates of the foundation, though with this proviso, namely, that after the extinction of the male-race of the Lords of Maxelrain, not only the fovereignty throughout the whole, but also the fiefs of the holy Roman Empire, together with the treasury or cofferer of Schliers and the vogt-jurisdiction granted to the see and foundation by his Imperial Majesty, should revert to the house of Bavaria. In the year 1636, the Lords of Maxelrain were raised by the Emperor to be Counts of Hohen-Waldeck. In 1734, Count John Joseph, of Hoben-Waldeck and Maxelrain concluded his line; upon which this feigniory fell to the Elector of Bavaria. The stem-house of Maxelrain, from which this now extinct family takes its name, lies in the prefecturate of Airling in Upper-Bavaria, not far from the market-town of Aibling.

§.3. The Elector of Bavaria joins himself to no college of Counts of the Empire, at the Diet thereof, on account of this seigniory, but in the circle of Bavaria is possessed of a voice on that account. To a Roman month it pays twenty florins, and to each chamber-term is rated at ten rixdollars, seventy-three kruitzers.

§. 4. The most remarkable places in it are,

- 1. Hoben-Waldeck, a village. The ancient castle of Waldeck lies in ruins.
 - 2. Schliers, a collegiate-foundation, feated on the fee, or lake, of Schliers.
 - 3. Miesbach, or Muspach, a market-town.
 - 4. Wallenburg, or Waldenberg, a citadel.

The SEIGNIORY of

B R E I \mathcal{I} E N E C K.

§.1. THIS feigniory lies in the upper palatinate; and the places belonging to it are within the liberties of the pfleg-amt of Neumarkt, being dispersed up and down in the dutchy of Neuburg.

- §. 2. The places and estates of which this seigniory consists were taken by the Imperial general Count John of Tilly, in the time of the thirty years war, and raised by the Emperor, under the name of Breiteneck, to an Imperial seigniory; and Count Tilly was, on account thereof, received, in the year 1648, at the Diet of the circle at Wasserburg, among the States of the circle of Bavaria. But the Counts of Tilly becoming extinct in the year 1724, in the person of Count Ferdinand Laurence, the sief-estates fell to the Elector of Bavaria, and the hereditary ones to the last Count's sister, named Maria Anna Catherina; who was consort to Antony, the elder Count of Montfort.
- §. 3. The Elector of Bavaria, at the Diets of the circle thereof, is possessed of the voice of Breiteneck, but at the Diets of the Empire joins himself to no college of Counts on account of this seigniory. To a Roman month its contribution is fixed at twenty florins, and to each chamber-term at thirty-five rixdollars.

§. 4. In it we shall take notice of,

I. The fief-estates which fell to the Elector of Bavaria: namely,

- 1. Of Freyenstadt, or Freystadt, which is a small town, seated on the Schwarzach.
- 2. Of Holenstein, a citadel and market-town, lying on the borders of the bishopric of Eichstett.

3. Of Hohenfels, which is a market-town, seated betwixt the towns of Velburg and Burglengenfeld.

- II. Of the allodial estates which fell to the Countess of Montfort; as, namely,
 - 1. Of Breiteneck, a citadel and market-town, lying not far from Dietfurt.

2. Of Helfenberg, a citadel, which is feated not far from Velburg.

The free IMPERIAL CITY of

R \mathcal{A} \mathcal{T} I S B O N.

REGENSBURG, in Latin Reginoburgum and Ratisbona, by the authors of the middle age also called Imbripolis and Hieropolis, and in English Ratisbon, is a pretty, large, fortified and populous town, feated on the Danube, over which it has an old bridge confifting of large free-stone, and into which, below the town, runs the river Regen. The magistracy and burghers here are addicted to the Protestant religion as taught by Luther. The Protestant ministry here consists of one superintendant and eleven ordinary preachers. The largest church belonging to the Lutherans is that of the Trinity, but they have also a gymnasium, in which are eight teachers. Of the four spiritual immediate States of the Empire; namely, the bishopric and the Imperial foundations of St. Emmeram, Lower and Upper-Munster, we have treated above in their order. We likewise find here a college of Jesuits, together with a cloyster of St. James, instituted for Scotsmen of the Roman-catholic religion, as also the collegiate-church of Altkapell, the nunneries of St. Clara and St. Paul, and the hospital of the Holy-Cross. This town was anciently the capital of Bavaria, and the feat of the Dukes. The Emperor Frederick I. fet it free from the dominion of the latter, annexing it immediately to the Empire; in which annexation, Wenceslaus, the Emperor, in the year 1387, promifed to maintain it. In 1486, Duke Albrecht of Bavaria managed matters fo skilfully that this town, being fallen greatly in debt, voluntarily paid homage to him; but the Emperor Frederick III. reclaimed it in 1489 to the Empire, and accordingly the Duke was obliged, in the year 1492, to return it. At the Diet of the Empire it is possessed of the first place among the Imperial towns on the Swabian bench, but in the circle of Bavaria of the last on the secular bench thereof. Its Imperial matricular evaluation was fixed, in 1692, at one hundred and fifty florins, and to each chamber-term it pays one hundred and forty-eight rixdollars, fixty-seven kruitzers and a half. Ever since the year 1662, a constant Diet of the Empire has been here continued without interruption, which Diet has never fince been removed, excepting in 1713, when it was transferred for some time, on account of the plague, to Augsburg; and, in 1742, for a few years to Frankfort. The States of the Empire meet at the council-house. The Diet, it is true, brings in a great deal of money to this town, but yet does not reap that benefit therefrom which might be expected. In it is an important falt-staple and trade, and from this place to Vienna large quantities of corn, wood, and all manner of provisions are shipped. In the years 1546 and 1601, some solemn conferences were fruitlessly appointed at this place on religion betwixt the Protestant and Roman-catholic divines. In 1703, the Elector of Bavaria made himself master of it. In the years 891 and 954, it was wholly burnt down, and afterwards also it fuffered very frequent and great damages by the same dreadful calamity.

Vol. V. D d d THE THE

C I R C L E

O F

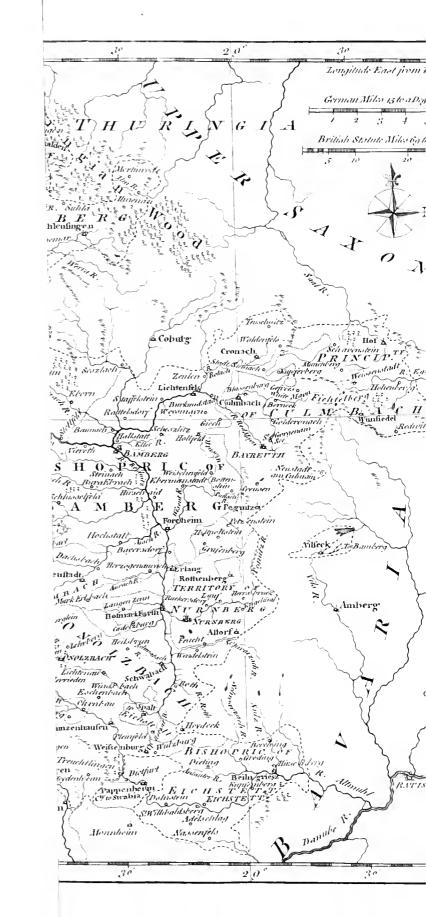

FRANCONIA.

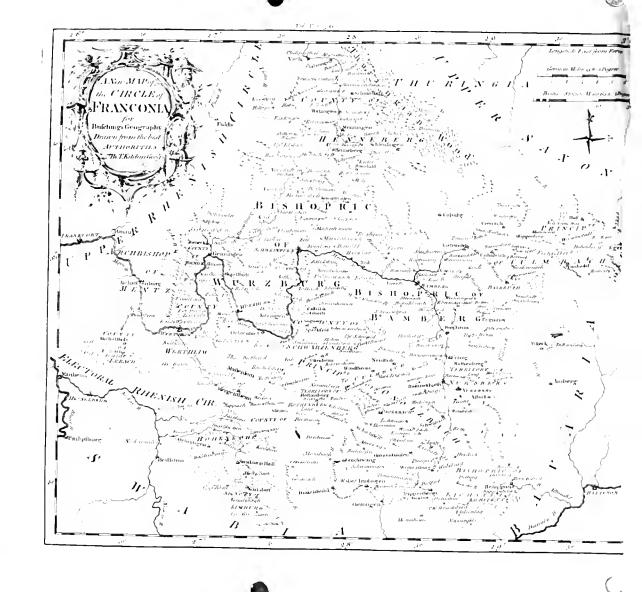

Of FRANCONIA in general.

F Franconia, Sebastian of Rothenhan delineated the first chart towards the middle of the sixteenth century; which chart Munster has inserted in his Cosmographia. In the year 1638, the brothers George and George Conrad Jung published another, and that a large chart, which Loschge republished at Nurnberg as well on a large as on a common and even on a small scale. At the same time also Nic. Rittershus put forth a chart of Franconia, but this is not of any great confideration.

§. 2. The present Franconia, which lies betwixt Thuringia and Swabia, almost in the very heart of Germany, about the river Mayn, belonged formerly, for the greatest part of it, to Thuringia, and in part also to Alemannia, the country of the Slavi, or Wends, who dwelt between the Mayn and the Rednitz, and perhaps also in part to Bavaria. Probably it was dismembered from Thuringia in the time of Charlemagne, and added to East-Franken. Afterwards the appellation of East-Franken, in Latin Francia orientalis, in a limited sense, was applied only to this country; but neither this limited denomination, nor that of Frankenland, or Franconia, occurs in authentick monuments hardly before the eleventh century. All this, as well as that the country, in the eighth century, was governed by Counts before the time of Charles Martel, Duke of Australia, and also under him and his fons Karlmann and Pipin, as likewise in the ninth century under the Carlovingian Kings, Mr. John Gottlieb Gonne has shewn in his treatise, De Ducatu Franciæ Orientalis. The same author has also remarked that East-Frankenland, after the foundation of the German Empire, was never fo entirely subjected to a Duke as Bavaria, Swabia, Thuringia and Saxony; but that a great part of this country was, from the beginning of the German Empire, immediately subject to Kings. Of the Dukes of Franconia, of the tenth century, Conrad I. was elected King of the Germans in the year of the or 912. In the eleventh century the German crown came again to the Frankish Dukes, and that at first to Conrad II. who was chosen King in 1124, and afterwards also became Emperor. That Prince was succeeded in the fame dignity by his fon Henry III. grandfon to Henry IV. and greatgrandson to Henry V. who was the last Emperor of the ducal Frankish house that line becoming extinct in him in the year 1125. This Emperor ceded the dutchy of Franconia to his fifter Agnes, confort to Frederick of Hohenstaufen, Duke of Swabia and son to Conrad III. who was possessed of a county in the Kochergau; and thus the house of Hobenstaufen became at the fame time possessed of the dutchies of Franconia and Swabia. Conrad III. exercifed the ducal rights also in Wurzburg, was created King of the Germans, and transmitted by inheritance the dutchy of Franconia to his son Frederick, who had his feat at Rothenburg. This last, however, dying without iffue, this dutchy fell to Conrad, fon to the Emperor Frederick I. who was also Duke of Swabia. At last the dutchies of Francouia and Swabia ceased in the house of Hobenstaufen.

§. 3. Anciently in the present Franconia were several Gaus or Pagi, the principal of which shall be mentioned. Of the Nordgau a considerable part belonged to it, which part again comprized in it feveral leffer gaus and counties. It even extended through the bishoprics of Aichstett and Bamberg, as also through the principalities of the marggravate of Brandenburg, both above and below the Gebirge, through the territory of the Imperial city of Nurnberg and other smaller territories. The Rangau, or Ratengau, extended itself on both fides the Rednitz, and the part situate on the right fide of that river belonged to the Nordgau. The Volcfeld terminated on the foregoing Gau, lying betwixt the Mayn, the Rednitz and the Aurach, which at Bamberg falls into the latter) as also betwixt the Volkach. Thus a part of the bishopric of Wurzburg belongs thereto. Of the noble Grabfeld and the lesser Gaus here, a part is to be sought for in the bishopric of Wurzburg, the princely county of Henneberg and the principality of Coburg. The Gau of Waldsaszin (otherwise called Waldsazi, or Waltsaze) lay betwixt Wurzburg and Wertheim. The Moingau, which was also written Moynachau, &c. extended, on the right of the river Mayn, from Frankfort to the Teuber and confequently quite to the county of Wertheim. In the Dabergau, or Ddd2 Tubergau, Tubergau, was situated, among others, Mergentheim. The Mulachgau, or Mulecgau, and the Oringau, or Orgau, are to be sought for in the county of Hohenloke. Of the Kraichgau a part also is to be reckoned as belonging to this dutchy; and of the Kochengau, which lies on the river Kocher, a part is to be found in the county of Limburg. In the middle age East Frankenland extended to the Rhine, comprizing in it also the Albegau, Angerisgau, Einriche, Kunigeshundra, Lobdengau, Loganacgau, Nitehe, Nithersi, Rheingau, &c.

§. 4. Of the ancient provincial judicatories in Franconia there are still some existent; as, namely, the Imperial provincial-jurisdiction of the burggravate of Nurenberg, the Imperial provincial-jurisdiction of Hirschberg, in the bishopric of Aichstett, and the Wurzburg provincial-jurisf-diction, of which more fully below in their proper place.

§. 5. A considerable part of the East-Frankenland of the middle age, which was situate to the north and west, belongs at present to other circles; and of the modern Frankenland, the immediate nobility of the Empire in that county are possessed of a considerable part, but the remaining and greatest part thereof constitutes the circle of Franconia; of which we here treat.

Of the CIRCLE of FRANCONIA in particular.

§.1. OF the circle of Franconia, first Sanson, and after him Jaillot, de Witt, Valk and Dankerts delineated land-charts; but these charts come not up to those which John Bapt. Homann has published on two sheets in his Atlas of Germany, number sixty-sive, though even these are still in want of great improvement.

§. 2. This circle terminates on those of Bavaria, Swabia, the Electoral-Rhenish, Upper-Rhenish and Upper-Saxon circle, as also on Bohemia. It is one of the smallest circles, its extent amounting only to about four hundred and eighty-four geographical square miles.

§. 3. The present States of the circle divide it in such a manner into sour benches, that to the spiritual bench of Princes belong the bishoprics of Bamberg, Wurzburg and Eichstadt, together with the Teutonick order; to the secular bench of Princes, Brandenburg-Bayreuth, Brandenburg-Anspach, Henneberg-Schluesingen, Henneberg-Rombild, Henneberg-Schmalkalden, Schwarzenberg, Lowenstein-Wertheim and Hohenlohe-Waldenburg; to the bench of Counts

Counts and Lords, Hobenlobe-Neuenstein, Castell, Wertheim, Rieneck, Erbach, Limburg-Geildorf, Limburg-Speckfeld, Seinskeim, Reigelsberg, Wiesentheid, Welzheim and Hausen; and to the bench of Imperial cities, Nurnberg, Rothenburg, Windskeim, Schweinsurt and Weisenburg. But I shall treat of these States of the circle in the order they give their voices, beginning however with Bamberg, which calls over the votes, though it gives its own last. The order of these voices is thus; viz. Wurzburg, Brandenburg-Bayreuth, Eichsladt, Brandenburg-Auspach, the Teutonick order and Henneberg-Schleusingen; after which follow the rest in the order set down above according to their benches.

- §. 4. The funmoning Princes for this circle are the Bishop of Bamberg and the Marggraves of Brandenburg-Bayreuth and Anspach. The latter, by virtue of an agreement made in the years 1712 and 1719, which agreement was confirmed by the Emperor, take their turn in summoning every three years. The directory the circle of Bamberg appropriates to itself alone, but at fuch time as the epifcopal-fee is vacant the chapter wants to have the administration thereof. The Marggraves of Brandenburg, however, dispute this with both, and, though in the year 1559 an agreement was made between Bishop George of Bamberg and the Marggrave George Frederick of Brandenburg, 'That at the Diet of the circle, in the deliberations of all and every the matters relating thereto, the proposition, direction, inquest, conclusion, conceiving of the recess and chancery, are to belong and are due to the bishop of Bamberg alone: 'yet on the side of the Marggraves it is alledged, that these words are only to be understood with respect to the directio durantibus horis consessitis, with which Bamberg ought to rest satisfied: but, even supposing there were more in it, that this agreement was annulled by the peace of Wesiphalia, and should the Brandenburg Condirectorium ever come to take place, Brandenburg-Onolabach has also claimed its turn in it. The Diets of the circle have for a long time been ordinarily held at Nurnberg; but the chancery and archives thereof are kept at Bamberg.
- §. 5. This circle, with respect to France, is reckoned among the hither circles of the Empire. In the year 1682, it concluded a league with the States of the Upper-Rhenish circle on this side the Rhine, and likewise with the States of the Westerwald; in 1683 and 1684 with the Bavarian and Swabian circles; in 1691, 1692 and 1700, again with the latter; in 1697 with the remaining Lutheran circles, and, in 1702, with the Electoral-Rhenish, Upper-Rhenish, Austrian and Swabian. In the year 1682, the military arrangement of the whole Empire being, in time of peace, simply fixed at 40,000 men; to the share of the circle of Franconia sell nine hundred and eighty horse and 1902 soot; and at the division of the 300,000 slorins to the operation-chest of the Empire, in 1707, the quota of this circle was rated at 22,696 florins, forty-seven kruitzers. The office of captain of the circle is still in vogue here and filled up.

§. 6. In point of religion this circle is one of the mixed. To the chamber-judicatory of the Empire it presents one Roman-catholic and one Protestant affessor. The death of the former is notified by the chamber to the Roman-catholic, and that of the latter to the Protestant summoningoffice of the circle: The latter notifies to the circle the director of the bench of Counts and cities of the Empire, and at the same time proposes one or two persons. The States deliberate thereon, and either simply receive the persons proposed, or add another, making a declaration of it by the directors of both benches to the princely protestant summoning-office of the circle. Upon which at length, after an alternately administered support on the fide of the supreme Protestant directory, a common presentation and responsory writing is addressed to the chamber-court, and transmitted to the directors of the bench of Counts and Imperial cities for their fubscription and signing. Upon this the presentation-writing is either directly fent by the directory of the Imperial cities, which at length subscribe it, to the chamber-court, or returned to be transmitted to the summoning Princes of the circle. If the three benches of the fecular States of Franconia are not able to come to an agreement concerning the presentation, each bench apart sometimes presents a candidate, one of whom is chosen by the chamber-court.

The Bishopric of B \mathcal{A} M B E R G.

- §. I. OF this bishopric Joh. Bapt. Homann has published a land-chart, which is still very defective, but in the Atlas of Germany constitutes the sixty-sixth.
- §. 2. To the north it terminates on the principality of Coburg and the Vogtland, to the east on the marggravial principality of Brandenburg-Bayreuth above the Gebirg, and also on the territory of Nurnberg; to the south likewise on the territory of Nurnberg, the marggravial principality of Brandenburg below the Gebirg, and the principality of Schwarzenberg; and to the west on the bishopric of Wurzburg. Its greatest extent amounts in length to about fifteen, and its greatest breadth to above ten, German miles.
- §. 3. The bottom or foil of this bishopric produces all forts of grain, vegetables, and fruits in abundance, as also wine: among the last articles are to be reckoned in particular the wines of Altenburg, Beringsfield, and Zeiler. It yields likewise saffron, and a very good fort of liquorice, the latter of which grows in great plenty at the capital town of Bamberg in particular, near which also are such numbers of laurel, sig, lemon, and orange-trees, that this spot is stiled, by some, the little Italy of Germany. Their breed of cattle here is also important. The bishoptic of Bamberg yields likewise good woods, and some battery works. The Mayn, which issues out of this principality above the Gebirg, traverses the north part of this country, and receives the Rotach and Itz, and more particularly the Rednitz, in Latin Radantia, the latter of which comes out of this principality below the Gebirg; below Forchbeim it receives into it also the little river Wisent, and after that the still lesser rivers of Aisch, (anciently Ascha, and Eisga) Reich-Eberach, Rauhe-Eberach, and Urach.

§. 4. The principality of Bamberg, contains in it eighteen boroughs, and fifteen market-towns. Land-States it has none. The whole country is zealously addicted to the Roman-catholic doctrine and worship.

§. 5. This country belonged anciently for the greatest part of it to the powerful Counts of Babenberg. Of these Count Henry left two sons behind him, namely Reinhard and Albrecht, whom Adolphus, bishop of Wurzburg, attacked in the year 902, but was beaten by them. Count Reinbard was stabbed in an unlucky battle by Count Conrad, brother's fon to the Emperor Lewis III. But his brother Albrecht wanting to revenge his death, purfued the faid Count and flew him. Upon this King Lewis III. caused Count Albrecht to be summoned before the Diet of the Empire at Trebur, there to answer for himself; but he not appearing, he besieged him in his strong castle of Altenburg; upon which Albrecht either willingly furrendered to the King, or was feduced to come to him to the camp, where he was beheaded as a rebel. This Prince therefore being the last of his house, the county of Babenberg fell, in the year 908 to the Empire. The Emperor Otto III. made a donation of it to his fifter's fon, Henry Duke of Bavaria, who was chosen King after him. This latter resolved to convert the county of Babenberg into a bishopric, which happened accordingly in the year 1006. The King and his confort Cunigunda confiderably endowed this new bishopric, and Eberhard, the King's chancellor, who was made the first bishop thereof in the year 1007, was not only confirmed by Pope Benedict VIII. but also exempted from all archiepiscopal jurisdiction. The like and even still greater privileges and prerogatives were obtained of Pope Clement II. by the fecond bishop thereof named Suidger of Mayendorf.

§. 6. Thus the bishop of Bamberg stands immediately under the papal see, and within his own diocese may even act as archbishop. From the Pope he receives, in lieu of a good round sum, the pallium. King Henry, the sounder of this bishopric, has appointed the King of Bokemia upper cup-bearer to it; the Elector-palatine upper sewer; the Elector of Saxons upper marshal; and the Elector of Brandenburg upper chamberlain of the bishopric; which offices they receive in fief of each reigning Prince and Bishop. These Electors again invest four ancient families of the nobility of Franconia with the four under offices: The office of under cup-bearer being enjoyed by the samily of Ausses; that of under sewer by the samily of Bibra; that of under marshal by the samily of ______, ever fince the time that the samily of Ebnet became extinct in the year 1728; and the office of under chamberlain by the samily of Rotenban.

§. 7. The arms of this bishopric are a lion sable, in a field Or, over which is a band argent traversing the whole. The Prince and Bishop of Bamberg, at the Diet of the Empire in the council of the Princes thereof, is possessed, on the spiritual bench, of the fourth place. He is co-summoning Prince and director of the circle of Franconia, demands the voices of the States thereof, and gives his own last. The Imperial matricular evaluation of this bishopric, which formerly amounted to 1088 florins, was, in the year 1685, fixed at four hundred and fifty-four but amounts at present only to four hundred and thirty-seven. To each chamber-term it pays five hundred and seventy-four rixdollars, seventy-eight kruitzers and three quarters.

§. 8. The highly worthy chapter here confifts of twenty capitulars, and fourteen Domicelli. The Sovereign receives its approbation or confent on important occasions.

- §. 9. The episcopal vicar presides among the clergy, and determines their disputes. To him lie all appeals from the spiritual under-court, or consistory, which decides in matrimonial cases; but from the vicariate appeals lie to Rome. The princely ordinary aulic judicatory, or regency, consists of a president, a chancellor, and about twenty aulic councellors. Under it stand the bye-courts of St. Stephen, St. Gangolph, and St. James; as also the provincial-court at Pamberg, the pupil-court, and police-court, the penal or criminal-court, and the office of under-bailist, or the vicedom-office, to which appertain all foreigners, and subjects who live under foreigners, &c.
- §. 10. The princely aulic-chamber and upper receipt office have the care of the Prince's revenues. Each of these offices has a president of its own, and the latter also represents the aulic military council, whose bufiness it is to look to military affairs.

§. 11. This principality contains in it

1. Bamberg, anciently called Babenberg, the head and residence town, seated upon hills near the river Rednitz. Whether it was at first called Papenberg, i. e. Pfassenberg, or that it stood there and bore its name before the bishopric and cloyster sounded in it, or that it should rather be called Bavenberg, that is on the Berg or mountain, I shall not determine. The proper town, as surrounded in most parts of it with walls and a ditch, is not large, but it has an extensive suburb, and is in general well built and populous. The Rednitz intersects it in two places, out of which three different different parts have arisen. In the upper part, which stands upon a mountain, is the princely refidence of Petersburg, built by Bishop Letharius Francifcus, in the year 1702 in a new and extensive manner; as also the great cathedral church of St. George, in which is to be found the monument of King Henry II. the founder of the bithopric, and his confort Canigunda, together with a confiderable treasure of relicks and jewels. In it likewise is the cathedral of St. Stephen and St. James, together with the grand and rich Benedictine cloyster of Monchsberg, and the nunnery of St. Theodore. In the middle part of the town, which has a communication with the upper part by means of a lofty stone-bridge, are many fine houses, as also the ancient episcopal palace of Geyerswerth, together with a noble orangery, a fine church of the Jesuits, who have the inspection of the university here, which was founded under the title of Academia Ottonina, by Bishop Melchior Otto, and was dedicated on September 1, 1648; the parish-church of St. Martin, that of St. Mary, three monasteries, two nunneries, and a hospital. A long and broad bridge leads from the middle part of the town to the suburbs of Treuerstadt, in which are to be seen the old foundation of St. Gangolph, and the Dominican nunnery of the holy sepulchre. The first building of this town is placed in the year So4. In the years 984, 1124, 1134, 1138, and 1158, in it were held Diets of the Empire, and in 1644, 1645, and 1673, Diets of the circle of Franconia. The Emperor Charlemagne removed some Slavi to this place.

The old fort stands upon a high mountain about half an hour's distance from the town, being for the most part in ruins.

Near the village of Seehof, which lies about one hour's distance from the town is the princely noble summer-residence of Marquardsburg, which is so named from its builder Marquard Sebastian Schenk, of Staufenberg.

2. The chamber-office, which consists of four parts: namely,

1. Of Hallstatt, under which is Hallstatt, a market-town, seated on the Mayn, into which the Leuten-bach and Eller pour themselves at this place. Hallstatt was formerly larger than at present. Charlemagne caused some Slavi to be removed thither.

The villages of Gundelsheim, Memmelsdorf, Oberhait, Raszdorf, and Viereth.

2. Guszbach, under which are the places of Guszbach, Ebing, Ebensfeld, Herschdorf, Upper and Under-Oberndorf, Zapsendorf, and Zuckshuth.

3. Strullensdorf, under which is Strullensdorf, Freusdorf, Fohra, Hirschaid, Oberngreuth, and Unterngreuth.

4. Geiszfeld, under which is Geiszfeld, Lindach, Litzendorf, Lohndorf. Melkendorf, Mistendorf, Neuffa, Podelndorf, and Schammelsdorf.

3. The prefecturate of Eckolsheim, in which is Senftenberg, a ruinous castle. And

Vol. V. Eee Acijderf,

Adelsdorf, an iron-foundery.

4. The prefecturate of Reiffenberg, in which is Reiffenberg, a castle.

5. The bailiwick of Forchbeim, in which is

For chheim, or Vorcheim, a fortified little town, feated on the river Wisent, which at this place falls into the Rednitz. In the town is a foundation, and a Franciscan cloyster. Whether Pontius Pilate was born here, or at Forchheim in the Speyergau, now called Fors, or rather at neither, are questions of less importance than at which of these two places the King's manor of Forchheim is to be sought for, namely, where, in the ninth and tenth centuries, several Diets of the Empire were held, and royal acts dispatched? Charlemagne removed some Slavi thither. King Henry II. made a donation of this town, in the year 1006, to the new erected bishopric of Bamberg. In 1552 it was taken by the troops of the Marggrave Albrecht of Brandenburg, and in 1632 by the Swedes.

About forty villages.

6. The prefecturate of MARLOFSTEIN, in which is Marlofstein, a citadel, conferred by Count Godfrey of Hohenlohe, named Bruneck, in the year 1340, on the bishopric.

Markt.

Markt-Schorgast, a market-town.

25. The presecturate of LEUGAST, containing

Leugast, a market-town, which in the year 1385 was purchased by the abbot Henry of Langheim.

26. The prefecturate of TEUSCHNITZ, in which is Teuschnitz, a small town and citadel.

Northalben, also called Nordheim, a market-town.

Hasalach, and other villages.

27. The captainship of Cronach, in which is Cronach, or Cranach, anciently called Crana, a well fortified town, feated on the rivulet of Cranach, which at this place falls into the Rotach. Near it also stands the mountain-fortress of Rosenberg. In the year 1122 Ulrich of Marchen made a donation of this town to the bishopric. In 1632, 1633, and 1634, it was besieged in vain. In it yearly is held what is called the bee-tribunal, or the Judicium Mellicidorum.

Waldenfels, or Wallenfells, a market-town, and the original place of the ancient Lords of Waldenfels.

Under-Rodach, which lies on the river Rodach, and other places.

28. The prefecturate of FURTEMBERG, in which is Furtemberg, a decayed citadel. And Furth, a village.

44. The canton of Vilfeck lies in the upper-palatinate, containing in it Villeck, Vilfeck, a small town and citadel, seated on the Vils, and which, in the years 1634 and 1641, was laid waste by the enemy, but again restored.

Rem. 1. To the provostship of the chapter belongs a part of the manor of Furth, of which more shall be said under the marggravial principality of Brandenburg-Onolzbach below the Gebirg. 2. The abbey of Benedictine Monks of Weissenote, or Weissenote, otherwise called Weissenou, and in Latin Alba Augia Nariscorum, in the neighbourhood of the town of Grafenberg; as also that of Michelfeld, situated not far from Aurbach, and which belong to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Bamberg, have been mentioned before 3. Of the presecturates, places, and estates of the bishopric of Bamberg in the dutchy of Carinthia an account has already been given in Vol. 1v.

The Bishopric of W U R Z B U R G.

§. I. Of the bishopric of Wurzburg, J. H. S. (that is, Seyfrid) has delineated a chart, which John Hofmann of Nurnberg engraved, after whose death John Bapt. Homann obtained the plates, and published it with some further improvements, and at length sent abroad under his own name somewhat more accurate. The last of these charts is to be sound in the Atlas of Germany number sixty-seven.

- §. 2. This principality terminates to the east on the bishopric of Bamberg, the principality of Schwarzenberg, the county of Castell, the Limburg seigniory of Speckfeld, the marggravial principality of Brandenburg-Onolzbach below the Gebirg, and the seigniory of Rothenburg; to the south on the county of Hoben-lobe; to the west on the Teutonick masterdom of Mergentheim, the county of Wertheim, the archbishopric of Mentz, the county of Rieneck, and the foundation of Fulda; and to the north on the princely county of Henneberg, and the principality of Coburg. Its greatest extent amounts in length to about twenty-one, and in breadth to fixteen German miles.
- §. 3. The bishopric of Wurzburg is fertile in corn, pasture, and divers sorts of fruits and plants, as also in wine; the very best Franconian wines even growing in it, particularly near Wurzburg and Klingenberg. The Mayn, which comes out of the principality of Bamberg, traverses a great part of this country, and in it also receives the Franconian Saale, which has its source in this principality on the borders of Henneberg, after which it enters into the country of Wertkeim. The Tauber and Jaxt also traverse the southern parts of it.

extant

- §. 4. In this principality we find thirty-three boroughs and about ten market-towns. Provincial-States it has none.
- §. 5. The prevailing religion here is the Roman-catholic; but there are also Luther an and Calvinist churches within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction and territory of Wurzburg, which from time to time, preser to the Diets of the Empire grievous complaints of oppression and injustice. In the sixteenth century this bishopric abounded in protestant inhabitants. To the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the bishopric of Wurzburg belong sixteen land-deanries, which are held at Buchheim (in the archbishopric of Mentz) at Buhlerthan, Dettelbach, Ebern, Iphosen, Gerolzhosen, and Karlstadt, (in the last of which are two, namely one for the upper and one for the lower district) at Krautheim (in the electorate of Mentz) at Mellerichstadt, and Mergentheim, (the latter of which belongs to the high and Teutonick masterdom,) at Moszbach in the electorate palatine, at Munnerstadt, and Neckar-Ulm, (which latter lies in the masterdom of Mergentheim,) at Ochsensurt, and Schlusselseld; and nineteen prelatures, to which are, moreover to be added three noble soundations.
- §. 6. It is true, that the holy Bishop Kilian came about the year 686, for the first time, to Wurzburg, where at that time resided Gozbert Dake of Thuringia, whom he baptized in the year 687. But yet he was not the first bishop of Wurzburg, St. Burchard first obtaining this office about the year 741, being also placed there and confecrated by St. Boniface. On this Bishop Burchard the Frankish King Pipin conferred the dutchy of Frankenland, as understood at this day: But it being demonstrable that the modern Frankenland was, in the time of King Pipin, no peculiar and feparate country, and that the name of East-Franken, or Frankenland, was not then appropriated to the modern Frankenland, so King Pipin could not have made a donation of the present dutchy of Frankenland to the church of Wurzburg. In the acts of the Emperor Lewis I. and likewise in those of Arnulph, are adduced twenty-fix churches, together with certain marks, tithes, and arriere-bans, which Karlmann, Pipin, and other religious people made a donation of to St. Burchard and the church of Wurzburg; but by these can neither the extent of the episcopal jurisdiction, nor that of the dutchy be proved, especially as before, namely, both under and after Karlmann and Pipin there were indisputably Counts in Frankenland. And just as little does the tenth part of certain royal incomes from East-Frankenland, which was bestowed on the church of Wurzburg, together with the right of receiving the Slavi into the estates of the church, and the immunity imparted to it, ferve as a proof of the dutchy. Neither can the ducal title, which the bishops of Wurzburg bear at this day, be derived from Charlemagne, Conrad I. Henry I. Otto I. II. and III. Henry II. or Conrad II. For either the acts, which are produced in support of them, are spurious, or no mention is made in them of the dutchy of Frankenland. One act extant of the Emperor Henry V. confirms to the bishops of Wurzburg only the jurisdiction over the estates of their church; and though even that act of the Emperor Frederick, I. which is produced, had no figns of spuriousness about it, yet it proves the dignity of a Duke of Frankenland just as little as the carrying a fword before them, and the hereditary aulic officers do; for the former barely shews their temporal jurisdiction, and the latter this bishopric enjoys in common with other German sees. The bishops of Wurzburg, however, began, towards the middle of the fifteenth century, to stile themselves Dukes of Frankenland, and it is generally held that Bishop Godfrey was the first who made use of that title. But it appears that his predecessor Sigismund, born Duke of Saxony, also stiled himself, on account of this descent, simply a Duke, and that without the addition of Frankenland, as he then also first inserted the sword in the episcopal seal, whereas the bishops, his predecessors, were represented in the seal only with a crosser. His fucceffor Godfrey not only retained the fword in the feal, but also the title of Duke, and added to it that of East-Frankenland, which latter title, however, was not always used. Such an addition was the easier brought about as these prelates at that time frequently stiled themselves Bishops of Wurzburg, and Dukes of Frankenland. The succeeding bishops also retained that title, but it cannot be maintained that the bishopric acquired thereby any new rights. And though the Emperor Charles IV. by an act passed in November, 1347, either conferred on, or confirmed to the bishopric of Wurzburg, on account of the dutchy of Frankenland, which belonged thereto of old, the provincial tribunal of Frankenland; yet the Emperor only took that for granted which had been alledged to him concerning the ancient rights of the church of Wurzburg; nay he even issued this letter at a time when the validity of his election was not yet decided; and in his fucceeding letters of confirmation, which he conferred on the bishopric of Wurzhurg, nothing occurs concerning the dutchy and provincial tribunal in Frankenland. Nor did the Emperors Wenzel, Sigismund, or Frederick III. nor even at the beginning Maximilian I. invest the bishops of Wurzburg with the dutchy of Frankenland. We find, indeed, in an act of that Emperor's, bearing date 1510, a confirmation of the dutchy of Frankenland; but a bare confirmation gives no new right, and is of no avail when that right has not been actually granted by the predecessors; which the succeffors thus confirm.

§. 7. The title of this bishop is—— Of the holy Roman Empire Prince and Bishop of Wurzburg, and Duke of East-Frankenland. His arms, on account of the bishopric, are an ensign gules and argent, obliquely waving and quartered, and supported on a lance Or, in a field verte; and on account of the dutchy of Frankenland a cross-striped quarterly gules and argent, with three points terminating gules. Behind the shield armorial project a crosser and a sword.

- §. 8. The bishops of Wurzburg cause a naked sword to be carried before them. In the year 1752 Pope Benedict XIV. granted them the privileges of bearing the archiepiscopal pall and cross; but in other respects they are suffragans to the archbishops of Mentz. At the Diet of the Empire the Prince and Bishop of Wurzburg is possessed of the fifth place on the spiritual bench in the council of the Princes of the Empire; but in that of the circle of Franconia he has, on account of this bishopric, the sirst voice. His Imperial matricular evaluation amounts at present to eight hundred and sifty florins; but in this is also included the evaluation of the seigniory of Reigelsberg, as also those of the Imperial villages of Gockheim and Sennfeld, though not that likewise of the Wurzburg share in the country of Henneberg. The latter also is not included in the Wurzburg evaluation to a chamber-term, which amounts to eight hundred and twenty-six rixdollars.
- §. 9. The highly worthy chapter here consists of twenty-two capitulars, and thirty domicelli. The four hereditary offices of the bishopric probably existed before the time of the Emperor Frederick I.
- §. 10. What is called the Imperial provincial tribunal of the dutchy of Franconia is properly a Wurzburg provincial tribunal, which the bishops appoint in their principality, by virtue of their sovereignty, as the neighbouring States firmly maintain, appealing to a letter of the Emperor Wenzel's, bearing date in 1384, in which letter the bishop is permitted to establish a provincial tribunal in his country.
- §. 11. The episcopal high colleges are the spiritual, namely, 1. The spiritual regency, which proceeds in particular on such matters as relate to the episcopal jurisdiction. 2. The vicariate, which determines all disputes relating to religious persons and things, and 3. The consistory, which has the management of matrimonial affairs. From these two last an appeal lies to the metropolitan, or the papal nunciature. 2. The temporal, which are 1. The privy-council, to which belong the most important matters. 2. The regency and aulic-council, which judges in all criminal and civil affairs, and again consists of four tribunals, viz. the judicium jurisdictionalium, the judicium causarum civilium, the seudal and the penal tribunal. 3. The aulic tribunal, to which an appeal lies from the provincial. 4. The provincial tribunal mentioned above (§. 10) which judges in matters of inheritance, guardianship and the like. 5. The upper council, to which belong matters of police: And 6. The town-council.
- §. 12. The episcopal revenues are estimated at 4 or 500,000 guldens. Cameral matters here are under the inspection of the princely aulic-chamber.
- §. 13. This Prince and Bishop maintains five regiments of foot and horse, military affairs here being subject to the aulic council of war.
- §. 14. The more accurate description of this principality occurs under two principal heads, we being to describe Vol. V.

 F f f

 I. The

I. The capital town, and the princely prefecturates.

1. Wurzburg, in Latin Wirceburgum, and also so early as before the close of the tenth century called Herbipolis, the head and refidence town, lying on the river Mayn, and being well fortified and further defended by the fort of Marienberg, or Frauenberg, which stands on a high and rocky mountain without the town; in which is an episcopal palace and a well provided magazine, as also a church, from whence the mountain and the palace have their name, and which is the oldest church in all Franconia. town itself is divided into eight parts, viz. into four quarters and four suburbs, containing the new princely refidence-palace; a very noble building, of which bishop John Philip Francis, Count of Schonborn, laid the groundstone in the year 1720; and which bishop Frederick Charles, who was also a Count of Schonborn, finished. The noble cathedral church of St. Kilian also lies here, and nigh it stands the remarkable burying-chapel of the house of Schonborn; together with the collegiate-church of St. John the Evangelist in New-Munster, which at first was called The house of the Saviour; the collegiate and parish-church ad Utrumque S. Johannem in Haugis; the parishchurch and foundation of St. Burchard, instituted for noblemen; the parish-church of St. Peter and St. Gertrud in Pleichach; the foundation of St. Ann, instituted for ladies; the abbies of Benedictine Monks of the order of St. Stephen and St. James, a college of Jesuits, four monasteries and two numeries; as also a house and a church of the Teutonick order, together with a house and church of the order of St. John, an university, first founded in the year 1403, and which after falling to decay, was restored again in 1582 by bithop Julius, and confecrated in 1591 with another church *, and a college or feminary dedicated to St. Kilian; the great hospital of St. Julian, inwhich also is a church; the aulic, the Theodorian, and the burgher-hospitals. Over the town is fet a vicedom, under which stand the town-council and the pledge-house, together with the tax and impost-offices. Here is also a foundery for cannon and bells. At what time and by whom the palace, and after that the town of Wurzburg were built is uncertain. the former was anciently the feat of certain Thuringian Dukes. In the years 960, 1168, 1246 and 1286, some Diets of the Empire were held here. In 1587 bishop Julius banished four Protestant counsellors and many burghers out of the town; but the refidue of the Protestant inhabitants, which constituted almost one half of the burghership, he brought back to the Romish church. In 1631 the town and palace were taken by the Swedes.

^{*} To this church belong the revenues of the ancient cloyfter of Marienburghausen, which lies not far from Hassurt, together with those of Hausen, seated above Kiszingen. It likewise draws to itself other incomes from the villages of Birnfeld, Breidensee, Kreutzthal, Munchhof, Sodenberg, Wisten-Sachsen, &c.

The

II. The places, prefecturates and kelleries appertaining to the provostship of the chapter; as, namely,

1. Ochsenfurt, in Latin Oxovium, a small town, seated on the Mayn, over which at this place a stone-bridge has been built. Here is also a land-deanry.

2. Little-Ochsenfurt, a village, lying on the other fide of the Mayn.

3. Eubelstadt, or Eivelstadt, a market-town, seated on the Mayn, about two hours distance above Wurzburg, and near which is a chapel of the Holy Cross to which frequent pilgrimages are made.

4. Randerfacker, or Rantzacker, a large village on the Mayn, lying about one hour's distance above Wwzburg, and having a very good growth of Franconian wine.

5. Eusenheim, or Eisenheim, a market-town, situated between Karlstadt and Gemunden.

6. Sulzdorf, a village, feated on the Tauber.

7. Tiefen-Stockheim, also a village, lying two short hours from Iphofen, and belonging, for the greatest part, to the provostship.

III. The places appertaining to the chapter; as, namely, Kundorf, Hockheim, Stelle, &c.

IV. The following cloysters: viz.

1. Eberach, in Latin Ebracum, an abbey of Cistercian Monks, founded, in the year 1126, on the Middle-Eberach within the limits of the bishopric of Bamberg, being very considerable and one of the richest cloysters in Germany, its abbot having the inspection of seven neighbouring monasteries and three numeries of the same order. Formerly the hearts of the deceased bishops of Wurzburg were carried to this place. In 1525, it was reduced to ashes by the mutinous peasants. The Emperor Charles IV. conferred on the bishopric of Wurzburg the protection of this cloyster, which protection was confirmed by Charles V.

2. Bronnbach, or Brunnbach, a Cistercian monastery, lying on the Tauber.

3. Comburg, a secular foundation of knights, situated not far from the Imperial city of Swabian Hall, and, till the year 1488, a Benedictine abbey. In 1587, the Imperial chamber-tribunal, after a thirty years process, confirmed the jurisdiction of the bishopric of Wurzburg over this place.

4. Schonthal, a Ciftercian monastery, lying on the Jaxt.

5. Upper-Zell, in Latin Cella Dei superior, a monastery of Pramonstratenses, lying about two hour's distance below Wurzburg on the Mayn.

6. Under-Zell, in Latin called Cella Dei inferior, a nunnery of Præmonstratenses, situated hard by the foregoing.

7. Theres, a Benedictine monastery, seated on the Mayn, between Hasfurth and Markt-Steinach.

8. Bildhausen, a Cistercian cloyster, lying in the neighbourhood of Mun-nersladt.

9. Neustadt, a Benedictine cloyster, situated on the Mayn above Ro-thenfels.

10. Trieffenstein, a provostship of regular canons of the order of St. Augustine lying on the Mayn below Rothenfels.

Rem. The bishopric of Wurzburg is also possessed of the Imperial vogtey, together with all the immunities depending thereon over the Imperial villages of Gochscheim and Sennfeld, which lie not far from Schweinfurt.

Of the FRANCONIAN PRINCIPALITIES of the Marggraves of Brandenburg in general.

§.1. THE marggravial principalities of Brandenburg in the circle of Franconia, namely, the principalities of Bayreuth and Anlback, constitute the burggravate of Nurnberg, it having been gradually enlarged by Imperial and Royal investiture, by inheritance and purchase. burggravate takes its name from the ancient Castrum Noricum, afterwards called Nurnberg, as being the feat of the ancient Burggraves, and probably received its beginning in the twelfth century; at least the first Burggrave of Nurnberg, of whom we have any certain knowledge; namely, Godfrey of Hobenlobe, makes his appearance in an act of the Emperor Conrad III: bearing date 1138. Conrad, Count of Zollern, is to be found as Burggrave of Nurnberg in an act which bears date fo early as the year 1164, and from him the burggravial dignity has constantly, and indeed hereditarily, continued in the house of Zollern, having been conferred upon it as an Imperial fief; at least it is certain, that from the Burggrave Frederick I. who died in the year 1218, all the succeeding Burggraves have been of the house of Zollern. Burggrave Frederick II. (whom others call Frederick III. and who, as the Brandenburg historians affert, was already by rank a Prince) obtaining of the Emperor Rudolph I. the investiture of this burggravate in 1273, the Electors gave him testimony, that his father, and others of his predecessors, had received the burggravate of his Majesty in fief; or, as the words properly run, they testified that the King of the Romans had in their presence granted to Frederick, Burggrave of Nurnberg, all the estates which his father and others of his ancestors were wont to receive, to be held by him of his Majesty: but the King granted to this Burggrave, according to the words of the letters of investiture, the Comicia Burggraviæ in Nuremberg, as likewise the Burg which he had in Nurnberg, together with the right of garrifoning the gate fituated at the Burg, the provincial-tribunal, in which the Burggrave was to prefide in the name of the Emperor; the right of taking precedency in the town-court among the King's bailiffs, and, as well in civil as criminal matters, receive two thirds of the dues and penalties paid; moreover, that he should likewise collect the taxes arising from all forts of manufactures in the town, as also the imposts on all immoveable goods from the other part of the bridge, together with the average and hand-fervice during the time of harvest, and have the right of chace and the third tree in the wood, as likewise of all timber lying therein; that he should be possessed of the forest-court from the bridge, as also of the places of Werd, Buch, Schwant and the citadel of Creusen, and the jurisdiction over the cloyster of Steinach, and have ten pounds in money from the bailiff's office at Nurnberg, with ten pounds more arising from the toll there, and the other siefs, which he and his ancestors held of the King's predecessor's. The King also, in case the Burggrave Frederick should die without male-heirs, invests his daughters with this Imperial sief: but disputes have arisen concerning the meaning of the Comicia Burggraviæ in Nurmberg, of which mention is made in the letters of investiture. The Nurnberg writers affirm, that this expression denotes barely a jurisdiction or office; but the Brandenburg authors affert that it denotes in this place a country, or a seigniory, with the right of supreme power over it.

§. 2. From the above-mentioned Burggrave Frederick II. is descended the present royal and princely house of Brandenburg. John III. and Frederick V. (by others called Frederick VI.) fons to the Burggrave Frederick IV. (or Frederick V.) divided the burggravial lands among themselves in such a manner, according to his regulation, that the former obtained the countries above the Gebirg, and the latter those below it. In the year 1415, the Burggrave Frederick V. (or Frederick VI.) obtained of the Emperor Sigifmand the electoral mark of Brandenburg, and after the death of John III. his brother, also the countries situated above the Gebirg. His eldest son, the Marggrave John, ceded to his next brother the right of primogeniture and the succession to the electorate and lands thereof; upon which the old Elector divided his countries among his fons in fuch a manner that the eldest, Marggrave John, obtained the Franconian principality above the Gebirg; the fecond, namely, the Marggrave Frederick I. the electoral mark of Brandenburg; the third, viz. the Marggrave Albrecht, the Franconian principality below the Gebirg; and the youngest, named the Marggrave Frederick, a share in the old mark, and had also his residence at Tangermund. The Elector, Frederick II. ceded, as he became old and infirm, and was without male-heirs, the electoral mark to his brother, the Marggrave Albrecht, who was also possessed of the entire burggravate of Nurnberg, and, in the year 1473, made a perpetual regulation of succesfion, by virtue of which the mark of Brandenburg, with all the countries belonging thereto, was without any division to belong to the Elector only; but the burggravate of Nurnberg was to have only two reigning lords, one of whom was to possess the principality above the Gebirg, and the other that below it; which regulation the Emperor Frederick V. confirmed at a public Diet of the Empire. This Elector died in the year 1486. His eldest son, John, was Elector of Brandenburg, and his second son, the Marggrave Frederick IV. or the elder, obtained the principality of Ansbach: the third, namely, the Marggrave Sigismund acquiring the principality of Bayreuth: but this last dying without iffue in the year 1495, the second obtained the whole burggravate, or both principalities, into which it is divided: but these were again shared among his sons Casimir and George, the former former obtaining the principality of Bayreuth, and the latter that of Ansback. Albrecht, fon and successor to the former, dying in the year 1557, George Frederick, the fecond fon and fucceffor, also obtained the principality of Bayreuth; but after his death, which happened in 1603, both these principalities fell to the electoral Brandenburg line; on which Christian, second fon to the Elector John George, obtained the principality of Bayreuth, and Joachim Ernell, his third son, that of Anshach; the lines founded by both of whom are still in being. Erdmann Auguslus, son to the Marggrave Chriflian, propagated the Bayreuth reigning line. On the contrary, his brother, George Albrecht, founded the collateral line of Culmback, which, in the year 1726, on the extinction of the former, became the reigning line, and still continues to be fo. Frederick and Albrecht, fons to the Marggrave Joachim Ernest, arrived successively to the regency of the principality of Ansback, and in like manner also three grandsons of the latter; of whom only the youngest, named the Marggrave William Frederick, had succession.

§. 3. The Marggraves of both lines bear the following title; viz. Marggraves of Brandenburg in Prussia, of Silesia, Magdeburg, Cleves, Juliers, the Berg, Stettin and Pomerania, of the Cassiubi and Wendi, of Mecklenburg and Crossen Dukes, Burggraves of Nuraberg, Princes of Halberstadt, Minden, Camin, Wenden, Schwerin, Ratzeburg and Mors, Counts of Hohenzollern, the Mark, Ravensberg and Schwerin, and Lords of Ravenstein and the countries of Rostock, Stargard, &c. Their arms, on account of the Marggravate of Brandenburg, are an eagle gules having weapons Or, together with trefoil-stalks of the same in the wings, all placed in a field argent. On account of Magdeburg, a shield quartered gules and argent. On account of Cleve, eight fleurs de lys Or, ranged in form of an united St. Andrew's cross, and bordered in the middle by a shield argent in a field gules. On account of Juliers they bear a lion sable in a field Or. On account of the Berg, a lion crowned gules and azure in a field argent. On account of Stettin, a griffin gules, crowned Or and weaponed, in a field azure. On account of Pomerania, a griffin, gules, weaponed Or in a field argent. On account of Cassilian, a griffin sable turned to the finister fide, weaponed Or, in a field of the fame. On account of Wenden, a grirlin transversely friped, gules and verte, in a field argent. On account of Mecklenburg, a buffalo's head, fable, having horns argent and crowned gules, with a ring argent running through his nofe, which is to be feen in the vizor or fight. On account of Crossen, an eagle sable with wings, tail and weapons expanded in a field Or, on whose breast is a crescent argent, and over it a small cross of the same. On account of Jagerndorf, an eagle Jable with a filver hunting-horn on his breast in a field argent. On account of the Burggravate of Nurnberg, a lion fable prepared for combat, with open gneulle and a red tongue exerted, weaponed and crowned in a field Or placed on another shield, shield, which is intersected five times to the dexter-point, gules and argent. On account of Halberstadt, a shield divided argent and gules. On account of Minden, two keys argent placed in form of a St. Andrew's cross in a field gules. On account of Camin, an anchor-cross argent in a field gules. On account of Wenden, in Mecklenburg, a griffin Or in a field azure. On account of Schwerin, a divided shield, in the upper part of which is a griffin Or in a field azure, but the under part green with a filver border. On account of Ratzeburg, a cross waving and argent in a field gules. On account of Mors, a fefs fable in a field Or. On account of Hohenzollern, a shield quartered fable and argent. On account of the Mark, a fess chequered, gules and argent, in a field Or. On account of Ravensberg. three chevrons; gules, ranged over each other in a field argent. On account of Schwerin, an arm issuing out of a cloud accompanied with silver and bearing a ring. On account of Roflock, a buffalo's head placed obliquely to the dexter fide and crowned gules, with an exerted red tongue and filver horns in a field Or; and, on account of Stargard, a shield divided gules and Or.

The Marggraves of Brandenburg-Ansbach still style themselves Counts of Sayn and Witgenslein and Lords of Limburg, and add to their shield armorial a lion-rampant Or with a sull face and a double tail, in a field gules, for the county of Sayn, together with two perpendicular sesses fable in a field argent, on account of Witgenslein; an oblique silver—and three wild boars heads sable, in a field of the same, on account of Freusburg; and a double towered citadel, argent, environed with a rampart, in a field gules, on account of the seigniory of Homburg.

§. 4. Among the privileges of the reigning Marggraves of both houses is the following; namely, that in the Emperor's name they exercise the Imperial land-jurisdiction of the burggravate of Nurnberg. The jurisdiction thereof extended formerly not only over the Nordgau and Franconia, but also as far as Bavaria, Swabia and the Rhine, and even to Swisserland and the Netherlands: but at present it is confined to narrower bounds, and several States of the Empire, particularly Bamberg and Nurnberg, who appeal to their own privileged provincial tribunals, refuse acknowledging any such jurisdiction. At first the Burggraves sat in judgment in person; but the Emperor Charles IV. granted them, in the year 1348, the privilege of appointing a provincial-judge in their stead, who is also appointed by them. At present it is commonly held at Ansbach, and that four times a year. From it an appeal lies to the supreme tribunal of the Empire, but the sum in dispute must amount to eight hundred guldens.

§. 5. Both the reigning Marggraves fill up also in common a council-college, which has its director, counsellors and chancery in common.

§. 6. These Franconian principalities are erroneously styled Marggravates; for such countries they never were, not even though the Burggraves of Nurnberg have been also Marggraves of Brandenburg: and thus they are more properly called principalities of the burggravate of Nurnberg above and below the Gebirg; or, the former, the principality of Bayreuth, and the latter that of Ansbach.

The PRINCIPALITY of CULMBACH, or BAYREUTH.

§.1. CAptain-engineer J. A. Riediger has represented this principality on a chart of two sheets, which Seutter of Augsburg has engraved, but that neither beautifully nor just. Another chart, improved in many particulars, for which improvements we are indebted to the labours of M. F. Cnopfs, has been published by Homann's heirs; and this chart in the Atlas of Germany constitutes the sixty-ninth; but the share of the Prince of Bayreuth in the Underland is not to be found in it.

§.2. This principality confifts partly of the proper principality above the Gebirg, and partly of a part of the country below it. The upper-land terminates on the bishopric of Bamberg, the seigniories of Giech and the Vogtland, as also on the seigniory of Asch, Bohemia, the Upper-Palatinate and the territory of the Imperial city of Nurnberg. The under-land belonging to the principality of Bayreuth is environed by the territories of Nurnberg.

Ansbach, Rothenburg, Schwarzenberg and Bamberg.

§. 3. The principality of Bayreuth is partly mountainous, and partly has a very fandy bottom, but this with good cultivation produces various forts of herbs and fruits. In general this country has every thing in it which is necessary for the support of man, wine alone excepted. With respect to its minerals, which are to be found on, at, and near the Fichtelberg, the principal of these are its good clay and sealed earth, as also its filver, and a plenty of marble of all colours, together with crystals, iron, vitriol, sulphur, antimony, copper, and lead. Its ancient filver and gold mines are fallen to decay. There are also some good acidulæ here. The most remarkable natural cavities in this country are those in the presecturate of Streitberg. Among the mountains here the Fichtelberg, in Latin Mons piniferus, is the most remarkable. This mountain extends from Bischofgrun in the upper-presecturate quite through the captainship of the presecturate of Wunsiedel as far as Eger in Bohemia, or from west to east above four geographicals.

graphical miles, and from the fource of the Saale in the captainship of the presecturate of Wunsiedel above Weissensladt, quite to the town of Kemnath in the upper-palatinate; or from north to fouth also four miles. Its name it has from the great number of pines with which it is covered; but it produces also fir and beech, and in some places likewise oak, elm, and lime. From this wood the peafants, living at and about the Fichtelberg, derive most of their subsistance, in regard that they burn it partly to coals, and partly in winter bring it down in sledges to fell. It is one of the highest mountains in all Germany, containing in it many deferts and rocks, and those very lofty, as also numbers of bogs and morasses. The principal eminences or mountains belonging to it are the Losburg or Luchsburg, in which is the greatest number, and those too the most unsurmountable rocks or cliffs in the whole country, and in these are several cavities, as namely the Cossein, and the lofty Farmleuten, from which we have a free and very extensive prospect; the Ochsenkops, which is reputed to be the highest part of the Fichtelberg, and the Schneeberg. On this last mountain on the border of the upper-palatinate, about three hours distance to the west of Wunstedel beyond the village of Vordorf, in a high defert called the See Lobe, is the deep Fichtelsee, which is about one hundred and fifty-four paces in circumference, but at present so covered with moss and bulrushes that a person may pass over it.

Out of this See or lake, arises the White-Mayn, which, near Steinhausen in the captainship of the prefecturate of Culmbach, unites with the Red. which receives its fource above Hornleinsreuth. After this union of their waters these united streams obtain the simple name of Mayn without any adjunct, and enter into the bishopric of Bamberg. Out of the Fichtelsee issues also the Nabe, or Fichtelberg Wald-Nabe, which nigh Wildenau unites its streams with the Heyd-Nabe, which arises in the Fichtelberg out of what is called the Nassen-Heyd, betwixt Warmen-Steinach and Muhlmeussel. Eger rises between Gefrees and Bischofgrun out of a mountain called the Heyde, which forms a part of the Fichtelberg, and runs into Bohemia. The Ro/zlau, by which its waters are encreased, comes also out of the Fichtelberg. The Fichtelberg, Vogtland, and Thuringian Saale rifes at the Fichtelberg in the Zellerwald, not far from the borough of Zelle, out of a fountain there which is called the Saalbrunn, and runs into the Vogtland. The Pegnitz rises in the captainship of the presecturate of Bayreuth; not far from Moritzreuth, running through the territory of Nurnberg into the Rednitz, which passes through the Under-land into the bishopric of Bamberg, and there among other small streams receives into it also the Aiseb, which takes its rife in the Under-land of the principality of Bayreuth. These rivers abound

§. 4. This principality contains in it fix head towns, as they are called, together with ten others, and twenty-fix market-towns. The provincial college in many forts of good fish.

college here, which confifts of a director and council, has its refidence at Bayreuth.

§. 5. The Protestant Lutheran church, which is the prevailing sect in this country, stands under the inspection of a general superintendent, who resides at Bayreuth, and is also a special superintendent at that place; besides whom there are nine other special superintendents, namely at Culmbach, Hof, Munchberg, Wunsiedel, Neustadt on the Aisch, Bayersdorf, Christian-Erlang, Dietenhofen, and Burgbernheim, exclusive of the inspector of Rednitz. But there are also Calvinists and Roman-catholics here, who in some places, are permitted the exercise of divine worship.

§. 6. For the propagation of learning here are, erected the Latin schools at Culmbach, Neustadt on the Aisch, Wunsiedel and Munchberg, together with the gymnasium at Hof, the collegium illustre at Bayreuth, the university of Er-lang, and the gymnasium incorporated along with it.

§. 7. At Christan Erlang, St. George am See Creussen, and Hos, are carried on the principal manufactures of this country. At the first place in particular are made stockings and hats by the French Calvinists, who have settled there. At the second place is made a brown and white porcelain, into the former of which silver and gold are very ingeniously and durably annealed, as also the marble of the country polished and worked into any form. At Creussen is made a fine earthen ware, and at Hos woollen-cloth. Of these manufactures large quantities are exported, and a considerable trade carried on therein.

§. 8. According to the manner in which the burggravate of Nurnberg was divided, the offices of hereditary marshal and hereditary sewer remained to the principality above the Gebirg, the families which administered these hereditary offices having their siefs there. But this principality is at present possessed of four hereditary offices: namely of the office of hereditary marshal, which the Barons of Kunsberg at Wernstein have enjoyed ever since the year 1623; the office of hereditary sewer which, ever since 1744, has been held by the Counts and Lords of Schonburg: the office of hereditary chamberlain held by the Lords of Luchaun; and the office of hereditary cup-bearer enjoyed by the Barons of Kolzau.

§. 9. In 1660 the Marggrave Christian Ernest founded on his travels at Bourdeaux, in memory of the peace of the Pyrenees and Oliva, an order called 1' ordre du brasselet de la concorde, which was worn at a blue ribbon round the left arm. In 1710 he revived this order, but changed his symbol into a blue enamelled octagonal cross, with a plate fixed on each side of it towards the middle; in which plate were to be seen his own and his confort's name placed under a coronet, and a Prince's cap is interwoven with each other, with the following circumscription round it, viz. Constante & eternelle sincerité; in which the first letters of each word exhibited also their names; and on the other was seen between two olive branches, which transpierced the two crowns, the word Concordant: Between the cross, by which the golden plate was surrounded, were seen two black Prussian, and the like number of red Brandenburg eagles. This cross was worn about the neck at a blue ribbon. The Marggrave George William, as here-ditary Prince, so early as the year 1705, laid the ground for the order of sincerity, which in 1712, on his entrance upon the regency, he completed. This last order the Marggrave Frederick revived in 1744, and it is commonly called the order of the red eagle. The present symbol of the order is a square, white, enamelled cross of gold, which is worn pendent at a scarlet coloured watered ribbon, reaching from the neck to the breast. In the star, which the Knights of this order bear on their breasts, is seen the Brandenburg red eagle, and the following circumscription round it viz. Sincerè & constanter. The reigning Marggrave is head and master of this order.

§. 10. The reigning Marggrave of Brandenburg-Bayreuth has, on account of the principality of Bayreuth, both feat and voice in the council of the Princes of the Empire, and is also co-summoning Prince of the circle of Franconia, see above, p. 389. To a Roman month he pays three hundred and twenty-nine florins, and to each chamber-term three hundred and thirty-eight rixdollars, fourteen kruitzers and a quarter.

§. 11. The princely colleges here are, the high ministerial and privy-council college, in which the Marggrave himself presides, and under which stand the privy-expedition, and the privy-chancery; as also the regency-college and regency-chancery, together with the aulic tribunal, the tribunal for noble siefs, the chamber-college, the seudal-court, the consistory, and the matrimonial tribunal. The business of the mines is under the inspection of the mine-offices at Golkronach, Wunsiedel, and Nayla. The principality itself is divided into presecturate and provincial captainships, as also into upper-presecturates, to which belong towns and amts.

§. 12. Keyster says that the Prince's revenues here, in 1730, scarce amounted to 550,000 guldens, but that they might be improved to a much greater sum. And we are assured, that by good oeconomy, they might be made to amount to one million of guldens.

§. 13. This Marggrave always keeps up a guard of horse, and a small body of hussars, as also two regiments of soot, besides which a militia is maintained here, which is appointed by the towns and presecturates, and in the captainship of Bayreuth consists of ten companies, in that of Culmbach of eleven, in that of Hos of nine, in that of Wunsiedel of eight, in that of Erlangen of sive, and in that of Neusladt on the Aisch of two battallions, the first of which consists of sive and the second of seven companies. The province has its own commissariate-office of war.

§. 14. In the more accurate description of this principality its divisions into prefecturate and provincial captainships, and upper-prefecturates are to be followed.

ı. In

I. In the UPPER-LAND is

I. The prefecturate-captainship of Bayreuth, to which belongs

1. Bayreuth, or Bareuth, the residence of the Marggrave, and the first among the fix head towns, as they are called, of this principality, being the feat likewise of the above-mentioned (§. 11.) high-colleges, as also of the prefecturate-captainship, and the mint-town of the marggravate. It is environed by three streams, namely by the Red-Mayn, the Misselbach. and the Sendelbach. The princely palace here was burnt down in 1753, but rebuilt again in a grand and beautiful tafte. The places of worship belonging to the town are the Lutheran principal church, together with that of the spital and the Calvinist church, as also the Roman-catholic chapel. In the town too is a superintendency. The gymnasium illustre here was founded by the Marggrave Christian Ernest in the year 1664, whence it is named after him Christian-Ernestinum. At Bayreuth also is a seminary, and in the well built fuburbs before Frederick's gate is an orphan-house. The greatest part of the seigniory of Bayreuth fell, on the death of the last Duke of Meran in 1248, to the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. but a part of it he became possessed of in another manner. The present residence town of Bayreuth was at that time but a very mean place, and of less consideration than the present village of Altenstadt Bayreuth, which lies not far from it. In 1430 it was reduced to ashes by the Hussites. In 1553, 1605, 1621, and 1624, it suffered greatly by fire.

2. St. Gorgen am See, a town, fituated on the Brandenburg Weyker, lies about half an hour's distance from Bayreuth, having been founded in the beginning of the eighteenth century by the Marggrave George William, and by the Marggrave Frederick endowed with a proper town-council, and many important privileges. St. Sophia's church, which was dedicated in 1715, is called the chapel of the order and knights, that Marggrave allotting it for the meeting-place of the order of Sincerity which he had instituted. The princely palace here is grand, and has a very fine pleasure-garden belonging to it. In this town also is a princely administrator, together with an orphan and a correction-house, as also a manusacture of white and brown porcelain, in the latter of which gold and filver are very durably annealed: And here also the marble of this country is polished and wrought into all manner of forms.

- Rem. The Brandenburg Weyber here is an inland lake fituated between the town of Bayreuth and the village of Bindloch below the wood, which is called the Hobenvarth, extending itself for about one hundred acres, and being rich in fish, and also having itlands in it, on which pleasure-gardens are built, and in a harbour on it lies a pleasure-ship of the Marggrayes. In causing it to be made in the years 1508 and 1509.

Hhh 2 149)

1499 there was nothing of it to be seen, the Marggrave Frederick IV.

3. St. John, a citadel, a church-village, and prefecturate. Near this place the Marggrave George William founded a hermitage in the midst of a thick wood, where he used to reside towards the end of summer.

4. Heynerfreuth, a village and prefecturate.

5. Entmansberg, a citadel and church-village, which once belonged to the Barons of Stein, but as an open fief has been occupied by the Marggraves of Bayreuth. At this place is a princely administrator.

6. Weydenberg, a market-town, with a princely and noble citadel belonging to it. In this town is a princely treasure, or revenue-office.

7. Schretz and Glashutten, two citadels and villages, over which a princely amt-man exercises jurisdiction. At Schertz the Marggrave George Albrecht used to reside.

8. Sanspareil, a citadel and seat of a treasure or revenue-office.

9. Wonsees, a market-town, having a prefecturate-office. The Emperor Charles IV. permitted this place in 1355 to be made a walled town.

10. Streitberg, a mountain-citadel, market-town, and prefecturate, wholly furrounded by the bishopric of Bamberg, and lying not far from Ebermanstadt. In this place a yellow marble is dug.

Rem. In the prefecturate of Streitberg lies the village of Alberndorf, which is otherwise called the Heydenstadt, or Hundsbrucke, being about 1000 paces in circuit. About one quarter of an hour's distance from thence is a large rock excavated by nature, and named the Hoble Lock. This cavity is spacious, and not far from it is a still more remarkable hollow called the Wizzelock. Between Streitberg and the parochial village of Muggendorf, which belongs to this presecturate, are other cavities in which are found clear springs, crystals, and large bones.

11. Thusbronn, a parochial-village and prefecturate, also environed by the territories of Bamberg and Nurnberg.

II. The captainship of Culmbach, to which belongs

1. Culmbach, the second of the six head towns, as they are called, and formerly a residence of the Marggraves, lying in a sertile and beautiful valley on the White-Mayn, and being also the seat of the presecturate-captainship, a superintendent, a revenue and cloyster-office, and containing in it likewise a Latin school. This town fell, on the extinction of the Dukes of Meran, in the year 1248, to the Counts of Orlamund, and by them was at first mortgaged to the Burggraves; but in 1338 they came to an agreement, that in case Count Otto of Orlamund should die without issue, this place, with some others, should descend to the Burggrave John II. which accordingly happened. In 1430 Culmbach was reduced to ashes by the Hussies: In 1553 roughly handled by the enemies of the Marggrave Albrecht, and in 1708 greatly damaged by fire.

Above the town stands the mountain-fortress of Blassenburg, or Plassenburg, which by way of distinction from the old ruinous fortress there, is called New-Blassenburg. This fortress devolved at the same time with the town of Culmbach, from the Dukes of Meran to the Counts of Orlamund, and from them to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, and was formerly a residence of the Marggrave of Brandenburg-Bayreuth; and denominated not from this strong citadel, but the town of Culmbach which lies below it. The fortress has a commandant of its own, and in it are kept the common archives of the Prince. In 1554 it was taken and demolished after a long siege by the bishops of Bamberg and Wurzburg, and the town of Nurnberg; but in 1557 they were compelled to pay to the Marggrave George Frederick the sum of 175000 florins, towards rebuilding it, which this Marggrave also accomplished; and in 1608 it was still surther fortished by the Marggrave Christian.

- 2. Himmelkron, a parochial-village, with a marggravial palace in it, fituated in a pleasant valley on the White-Mayn, amidst fine meadows, gardens, fields, and woods. The palace here was built by the Marggrave George William, and the Marggrave George Frederick Charles erected a riding-house at this place; and for the more commodious attendance on the heron-chase also another building called the Falkenbaube. Formerly there stood here a nunnery of ladies of the Cistercian order, which was founded in 1280 by Count Otto I. of Orlamund, out of his own palace and the place of Pretzendorf. In 1338 this village was ceded, together with Culmbach and Plassenburg, by Count Otto II. of Orlamund to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, by Way of recompence for right of protection; but in 1569 was fecularized, and converted into a marggravial foundation, or revenue-office, which is divided, as they are called into nine quarters. The buildings of the old cloyster were repaired by the Marggrave Christian Ernest, and rendered fit for the reception of himself and court; and, exclusive of the garden here, he likewise laid out a walk of 1000 paces in length. At the old foundation-church a proper Protestant minister officiates, and in it is a buryingplace of the Marggraves.
- 3. Wirsberg, a borough and prefecturate. A good green vitriol is prepared at this place.

4. Stambach, a parochial-village, in which is a princely prefecturate.

- 5. Schauenstein, a citadel and market-borough, or, as it is also called, a small town, in which is a presecturate. The Burggrave Frederick V. purchased this place, with some other villages, in the year 1386 of the house of Riegel, for 12617 lb. weight of hellers.
- 6. Helmbrecht, a citadel, market-town, and prefecturate, purchased at the same time with Schauenstein of the samily of Riegel.

7. Seubelfdorf and Casendorf, both parochial-villages and prefecturates.

III. The provincial-captainship of Hof, to which belongs

1. Hof, in Latin Curia, Curia Variscorum, or Curia Regnitiana, the third among the fix head towns of this principality; and lying on the river Saul, which above this place receives into it the Upper, and below it the Under-Regnitz. Hof has three suburbs belonging to it, being likewise the feat of the provincial-captainship, and a revenue, as also of a spital and cloyster presecturate, and a superintendent. In it too are sour churches, together with a gymnasium, and a good woollen manufacture. In the records of the thirteenth century this place is simply called Curia Regnitz and Hof, but afterwards came to be called Regnizhof. It stands in the ancient country of Varifeia. The old town here was built in the year 1080 near the citadel which was then already in being; but the new town was founded towards the beginning of the thirteenth century by Otto I. and II. Dukes of Meran; and in the year 1248, on the death of the latter, coming to Otto Count of Orlamund, it was carried on by him; and about the year 1250 finished by Henry the Elder, Vogt of Weyda, to whom it came by purchase, with its annexed jurisdiction. In 1323 the Emperor Lewis invested the Burggrave Frederick IV. of Nurnberg with this town and feigniory; and in 1373 Henry, Vogt of Weyda disposed of it, together with other places, to the Burggrave Frederick V. But there are still several noble male fiefs here fituated in the figniory of Hof, which are fiels of the Counts of Reusz-Plau. This town was miserably laid waste by fire in the years 1299, 1430, 1507, 1517, 1625, and 1690.

In its territory a good red, gray, and black marble is dug. Among the gray marble here is a fort sprinkled with red spots like drops of blood.

2. Neylau, in Latin Naila, a market-town, feated on the Selbitz, and having in it a judge and a mine-amt. At this place is a Calvinist German church. The mines here yield copper and iron, and in these parts green marble also is dug.

3. Rekau, a market-town, and the feat of a prefecturate, which the Burggrave Frederick V. purchased in the year 1384 of Henry of Rehau for the sum of eight hundred Hungarian gold guldens.

4. Upper-Kotzau, a citadel and parochial-village, which Prince George Albrecht, fon to the Marggrave George Albrecht by a second marriage, purchased in the year 1701, and resided therein. From him and his consort, who was daughter to the, at that time, upper amt-man John Peter Lutze, are descended the present Lords of Kotzau.

IV. The prefecturate-captainship of Wunstedel in which at Schonwald, in the prefecturate of Selh, as also at Kotigen-Bibersbach, and Groschlatsgrun, which lie not far from Redwitz, and at Fischern, a village standing under the protection of Bayreuth not far from Hohenberg, are medicinal springs.

To this presecturate belongs

1. Wunfiedel, (not Wonfiedel) the fourth of the head towns, as they are called, of the principality, lying in the Fichtelberg on the river Roszlau, and owing owing its foundation to the tin-mines which were formerly there. This place to early as the year 1326 was a town, and by the Emperor Lewis was prefented with immunities equal at that time to those of the town of Egg; which immunities were confirmed by Charles IV. in the year 1355. In it is the prefecturate-captainship and mine-amt, as also a superintendency, and a Latin school. To the hospital here belongs the noble estate of Upper-Hochstadt. This place appertained at first to the samily of Becksterg or Vogtsberg. In 1282 King Rudolph invested the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. with it. In 1321 the Burggrave Frederick III. and IV. purchased the burg or castle of Wunstedel of the samily of Vogtsberg. In 1462 this town gave a check to the Hussites by its brave resistance. In 1434, 1541, and 1607 it sustained great damage by fire; and in 1731 was almost wholly destroyed, but was again built in a better manner. The inhabitants here deal in wrought plate, and died woollen and linen stuss.

Rem. The country of New-Wunsiedel has been named in the manor of Boeckler, or Buckler, but at present we say the town and six presecturates of Wunfiedel.

2. Thierstein, a mountain-citadel, seated on the Titersbuch, and containing a prefecturate.

3. Thierskeim, a considerable market-town, having a presecturate. Both these places were disposed of by the Marggraves of Meissen in the year 1415 to the Burggraves John III. and Frederick VI.

4. Arzberg, or Arzburg, a market-town, in which is a prefecturate.

5. Schirnding, a citadel, feated on the borders of Bohemia, and containing in it a prefecturate.

6. Hobenberg, a market-town and mountain-citadel standing not far from the river Eger, and the feat of a prefecturate.

In the village of Fischern, which stands under the Particular of Bayreuth, is an acid spring.

7. Selb, a market-town and hunting feat of the Prince, which is a prefecturate.

At Schonwald is an acid fpring.

8. Markleuthen, a market-town, and the feat of a prefecturate, lying on the river Eger.

9. Kirchlamitz, a market-town, containing a prefecturate.

no. Weissenstadt, anciently Weissensirchen, an old little town, situated on an eminence on the Eger, in a very rugged and stony country, and containing formerly some good mines of tin and crystal, as also the mine-jurisdiction above the Gebirg. In this place is a prefecturate. This town, together with the citadel of Rudolphslein, commonly called Rollenslein, the family of Hirschberg bequeathed to the cloyster of Waldsachsen, by which it was disposed of in 1348 to the Burggraves John and Albrecht. It has obtained town privileges and immunities in the same manner as Wunstedel has, but has been greatly reduced by war, fire, and the declension of its mines.

The Weissensladt Weyker See or lake, is one of the largest in this principality, containing to the number of three hundred acres. The river Eger supplies it with water, and in it are bred very delicious carp and perch.

Rem. In the market-town of Redwitz, which is for the most part environed by this presecturate-captainship, is a spiritual inspection of Bayreutb, but the place itself, together with its district, belongs to the town of Eger in Bohemia, and is walled.

V. The upper-prefecturate of Lichtenberg, to which appertains

1. Lichtenberg, a market-town and citadel. This place is the feat of the upper-prefecturate, and in its nighbourhood the copper and iron-mine of Friedensgrube, as also many forts of marble are found.

Between Upper and Under-Steeben is a medicinal spring. 2. Thierbach, a market-town, containing a prefecturate.

3. Geroldfgrun, a parochial-village, near which is an acid fpring.

- 4. Schwarzenbach am wald, a parochial-village, in the district belonging to it is dug a gray marble with yellow spots in it as if of some glittering metal.
- 5. Lauenstein, anciently called Lowenstein, a citadel and market-town, in which is a prefecturate. Hard by it is a copper-foundery. This place the Counts of Orlamund possessed themselves of after the extinction of the Dukes of Meran, and stiled themselves therefrom.

6. Ludwigstadt, a market-town.

VI. The upper-prefecturate of Munchberg: To it belongs

1. Munchberg, in Latin Monchberg, a small town, which is the seat of the upper-prefecturate, a judge-amt, revenue-amt, and a superintendency, and contains in it a Latin school. The Burggrave Frederick V. purchased this place in 1373 of Henry Vogt of Weyda.

2. Hallerstein, Sparneck, and Zell, all parochial-villages, standing under one officer. Near the latter rifes the river Saale.

3. The feven united villages, as they are called, namely Abornberg, Almbranz, Mayerhof, Layberfreuth, Jessen, Werrenbach, and Oelsnitz, were purchased by the Burggrave Frederick V. in the year 1384, of the samily of Sparneck, for nine hundred pound weight of hellers, or 3600 slorins. It is the custom here for the burghermasters and council to fill up yearly on Innocents day, at Abornberg, the vacant places, and appoint the burghermaster-office, as also to treat of their common concerns.

4. Stockenroth, a citadel and village, feated on the river Saale, and containing in it a prefecturate.

5. Muschen, a village, which the Emperor Lewis, in the year 1325, and Charles IV. in 1355, permitted to be walled.

VII. The upper-prefecturate of Gefrees, to which belongs

1. Gefrees,

1. Gefrees, a small town, in which the upper amt-office has its feat.

This place suffered great damage by fire in the year 1757.

2. Berneck, a small town, and the seat of a presecturate, which was mortgaged by the Counts of Orlamund to the Burggraves, and in 1338 it was agreed, that if Count Otto died without issue it should descend to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, which accordingly happened.

- 3. Goldcronach, a small-town, seated on the river Cronach, which runs quite through the middle of it, and containing an amt and a mine-office. This place was first begun to be erected in the year 1365, a gold mine being at that time discovered there, which proved very beneficial, but in 1669 declined. In 1695, however, some gold was sound here, of which double ducats were coined. Before the year 1365 this place arose out of three gentlemen's seats. In 1559 and 1630 it was burnt down. In these parts also is found a variety of marble.
 - 4. Stein, a village, containing an amt-office.

VIII. The upper-prefecturate of Creusen, to which belongs

1. Creusen, in Latin Crusina, a small town, seated on the Red-Mayn, in which is the upper amt-office, and where great quantities of fine earthenware are also made. This place probably belonged to the burggravate before the year 1251, but in that year the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. suffered himself to be invested therewith by the Emperor Conrad. The Burggraves anciently caused money to be coined there.

2. Old-Creusen, a village. The Emperor Charles IV. granted to the Burggrave Frederick V. the liberty of raising this place to be a walled town.

IX. The upper-prefecturate of Pegnitz, to which belongs

1. Pegnitz, a small-town, seated on the Pegnitz, and containing in it the upper-amt and revenue-office. This place came from the crown of Poland to the burggravate, King Wenzel, in the year 1402, granting it in fief, together with some other places, to the Burggrave John III.

2. Lindenbard, a parochial-village, in which is a prefecturate-office.

3. Plech, a market-town, containing an amt-office, belonging to which is the village of Spies, the citadel whereof is fallen to decay.

X. The upper-prefecturate of OSTERNOHE, fituated in the parochial-village, and mountain-citadel of Osternoke, which lies near the seigniory of Rothenburg, belonging to the upper-palatinate.

XI. The upper-prefecturate of Neustadt at the Culmen, to which belongs 1. Neustadt am Culmen, am rauben Culmen, or between the Culmen, a small town, taking its name from the two mountains between which it lies. In it is the upper amt-office. The citadel of Culmen and some other villages it is the upper amt-office. The citadel of Culmen and some other villages were mortgaged by the Landgrave Frederick of Leuchtenberg, and his son Frederick, in the year 1281, to the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. for the sum of sour hundred marks of silver, who afterwards divested themselves Vol. V.

thereof; upon which, in 1282, the Burggrave obtained the investiture of it of King Rudolph. In the year 1730, the Emperor Charles IV. granted the Burggrave Frederick V. the liberty of building a town between the two fortresses of the rough and flight Culm.

2. The villages of Kirchen-Leibach and Wirbenz.

2. In the Under-Land.

I. The prefecturate-captainship of ERLANG: to which belongs,

1. Erlang, the last of the fix head-towns, as they are called, of this principality, lying not far from the Rednitz, which at this place receives into it the Schwabach, and consists of two towns, namely the Old and New, the latter of which is otherwise called Christian-Erlang, and is environed with a wall of free-stone; but this is not yet quite finished.

Old-Erlang, a very ancient place, which belonged to the Ratingau and in which a church was built for the use of the Slavi, whom Charlemagneremoved thither. This town is sour hundred paces long, but not by a great deal so wide. It has a peculiar magistracy of its own, and after the great fire, which happened there in 1706, was rebuilt again with greater regularity. So early as the year 1632 it was likewise destroyed by the same dreadful calamity. In it is a Protestant Lutheran church.

New, or Christian-Erlang, a town, which was begun to be erected in 1686 by the Marggrave Christian Ernest, and was named from him, lies close by Old-Erlang, being distinguished therefrom by nothing else than the straightness of its streets. This place is one of the finest towns in all Germany, its streets being perfectly straight and broad, and the houses in the principal of them two flory high, excepting the corner ones which are three story. In it is a square of eight hundred paces, which is not yet quite finished; as also a market-place one hundred and ten paces long and broad, the east side of which is occupied by the maggravial palace, built of freestone three stories in height; and behind it is a very large, pleasant and fine garden, planted with rows of chestnut and lime-trees, a Protestant Lutheran church, together with one for the French Calvinists, and another. for the German Calvinifts. The first of these churches is the finest. In 1704 Christopher Adam of Trockau founded a riding academy here; but in 1743 the Marggrave Frederick removed thither the Frederick university, which had been founded by him at Bayreuth in 1742, and which, on the fourth day of November, was observed accordingly with great solemnity. and substituted into the place of the above-said riding academy. The gymnafium here too was incorporated with it. This university has a church of its own. The refugee French Calvinists have set up some considerable manufactures in this town, among which those of stockings and hats are the most profitable. Erlang, Erlang, is the feat of the prefecturate captainship, as also of a council-college of justice, of a college of commerce, and a superintendency.

2. FRAUENAURACH, a market-town and prefecturate, which takes its rife out of a nunnery of ladies, which formerly stood here. This nunnery was founded between the years 1250 and 1260, and secularised towards the middle of the fixteenth century.

- 3. Eschenau, a market-town, which together with its territory, is environed by the territory of Nurnberg, and he one large hour from Herelzberg. The Marggrave Frederick purchased this place of the family of Mussel, and restored it to the administration of its own Amtman. Eschenau is a Bohemian sief.
 - II. The provincial captainship of Neustadt on the Aisch, to which belongs
- they are called, of this principality, and takes its furname from the rivulet of Aisch. This town is the seat of the provincial captainship and a revenue presecturate, and contains in it a Prince's palace and a superintendency, under which stand thirty-sour persons, as also a parish church, a hospital with a church in it, and a Latin school.
 - 2. Dachsbach, a market-town and citadel, in which is a prefecturate.
- 3. Emskirchen, a market-town with a vogtey in it, which was purchased in the year 1362 by Godfrey of Seekendorf for the sum of 1200 lb. kellers. The French colony here has a church to itself.
- 4. Frauenthal, once a nunnery, but at present a cloyster-amt, together with its church is incorporated into one parish with Equarbosen, in which is an amt-office, or administration.
- 5. Munchaurach, also once a monastery, and at present a cloyster-amt, situated on the rivulet of Aurach, containing a parish-church. At this place is a colony of French who have a church of their own.
- 6. Munchsteinach, once a monastery, and now a cloyster-amt with a parish-church belonging to it.
- 7. Birkenfeld, formerly a Cistercian nunnery for ladies, founded in the year 1276 or 1278, and now a cloyster-amt incorporated into one parish with the Schauerheim.

Rem. The Aifchgrund, in which the above places lie, and which takes its name from the Aifch, which runs through it, is a fertile tract of ground abounding in tinkel or spelt, meadow-land, wine, venison and sish.

III. The upper-prefecturate of BAYERSDORF, to which belongs

1. Bayersdorf, a close, well built market-town seated on the Rednitz, and which in the year 1355 obtained of the Emperor Charles IV. town-privileges, for which reason some call it a borough. This place is the seat of the upper-presecturate, a revenue and a judge-amt, as also of a superintendency. In it the Jews have a large school. Bayersdorf was purchased by the Burggrave Frederick V. in 1391 of the cloyster of Munchaurach.

Iii 2 2. Utten-

2. Uttenreuth, a borough seated on the Schwobach, and the greatest part of the inhabitants of which are of Bayreuth and its prefecturate.

3. Bruck, a village feated on the Rednitz, in the Fraisch, or criminal-jurisdiction of Bayreuth, in which are also subjects of Nurnberg, and the Knights of the Empire. To this place Charlemagne removed several of the Slavi. In the year 1282 the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. obtained this town in sief of the Emperor Rudolph.

4. At Brand, Dennenloke and Kalkreuth, a part of the inhabitants are fubjects of Bayreuth, and belong to this upper-prefecturate.

IV. The upper-prefecturate of Hoheneck, to which belongs

1. Hobeneck, a mountain-citadel, partly fortified and environed by the mountains around it, on which are vineyards. In the year 1387 an Imperial prefident fentence was iffued out against the Burggrave Frederick V. after he had laid out one hundred marks of gold on this fortress and its appendages.

2. Ipsheim, in ancient records termed Ips, a market-town seated on the Aisch, below the foregoing mountain-citadel, and in which is a revenue-amt.

3. Mark-Lenkersheim, a market-town, containing a presecturate.

4. Mark-Burgel, or Birgel, also called Bergel, a market-town seated on a high mountain near the river, with two churches in it and a criminal amt-office. This is a very ancient place, mention being made of it in the oldest records, and that so early as the eighth century. The Burggrave Frederick IV. purchased one part of it, together with the toll, in the year 1307, of Count Frederick of Trukendingen; and soon after also the other part, called Lower-Hoffen, of the samily of Baldern, of the house of Oettingen, for the sum of 11,500 florins. Upon this the Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1355 conferred on it both town and market jurisdiction, with other privileges.

5. Mark Burgbernheim, a market-town containing a vogtey and superintendency, and which on account of the adjoining Wildbad, which is a good mineral-water, was invested with particular privileges by Charlemagne, Lotharius II. Henry VI. Charles IV. Lewis IV. and the Elector Albrecht of Brandenburg. Formerly this place belonged to the Counts of Trubendingen, of whom it was purchased in 1280 by the Burggrave Frederick II. or III.

6. Randerfacker, a large village feated on the Mayn, and of which mention has been already made. This place has a vogt in common with the bishopric of Wurzburg.

V. The upper-prefecturate of Neuhor. To it belongs

1. Neubof, a market-town, in which is the upper-amt, and a revenue-office.

2. The prefecturate of Bonn and DIETENHOFEN. In it Bonn, a village.

Dietenhofen, a borough and citadel, containing a superintendency.

3. Mark Erlbach, a small town, in which is a criminal prefecturate-office.

Rem. The Marggraves of Brandenburg-Culmbach are possessed of confiderable fiefs in the arch-dutchy of Austria, which we have treated of in Vol. iv. These fiefs descended to them from the time of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, to whom the Eurggrave Frederick IV. granted affiftance against his competitor, Duke Frederick of Austria, enabling him to overcome his antagonist. Upon which the Emperor made the Burggrave a prefent of the rich Austrian nobility, whom he had taken prisoners in the battle, together with their fiefs, which prisoners the Burggrave released on condition, that they should receive their fiefs for ever of the Burggraves, as the donation letters of 1328 testify. The Emperor Charles IV. confirmed this donation in 1363 in such manner, that the Burggraves of Nurnberg, on account of all their fiefs in the dutchies and feigniories of the Dukes of Aufiria, were to have the Roman Emperors, or Kings, and the Empire as their Superiors for ever. The number of these noblemen amounted to about 1160, and the fiefs to thirty-two counties and feigniories, and two hundred common fiefs.

The BISHOPRIC of E I C H S T E T T.

§. 1. O F the bishopric of Eichslett, or Aichstadt, John Baptist Homann has published a pretty good land-chart, which in the Atlas of Germany constitutes the sixty-eighth.

§. 2. This principality terminates on the upper-palatinate, Upper-Bavaria, the dutchy of Neuburg, the county of Pappenheim, and the principality of Onolebach, by which also several detached parts of it are environed.

§. 3. The principal rivers by which this country is watered are the Altmubl, which comes out of the principality of Onolzbach, and in this bishop-ric receives in it the little rivers of Anlauter, Schwarzach and Sulz, after which it enters into Upper-Bavaria. The Under and Upper-Retzat run also through some parts of this bistopric.

§. 4. In it we find ten towns and one market-town. Land-states there are none here. The inhabitants are Roman-catholic. The episcopal jurisdiction is divided into eight rural decanates, which have their residence at Eichstett, Berching, Spalt, Herrieden, Hilpoltstein, Eschenbach, Neumark and Ingolstadt.

Ingolftadt. The ancient rural-decanates of Autorf, Gunzenhausen, Wasser-Trubendingen and Weissenburg, are at present no longer in being, having come over if not with all, yet at least with most of the passines and filials belonging to the Protestant religion.

§. 5. The place in the Nordgau, on which the town of Eichslett now stands belonged anciently to the Counts of H rschberg, one of whom, named Juitger, or Suigger, cedea it to St. Boniface, and the latter to his sister's son Wilibald (for such he was held.) At that time this place lay waste, nothing more than a chapel standing on it. But Wilibald sounded a cloyster here, and near it houses were gradually built, out of which arose a town at length, which from the vast oaks near it obtained the name of Eichslett. Boniface consecrated his relation first priest, and in the year 741, or as is more generally supposed in 745, bishop of Eichslett. This first bishop of Eichslett, pope Benedict XIII. canonized. Towards the erecting of this bishopric Count Suigger gave a part of his estate. But Gebhard, the last Count of Hirschberg, in the year 1291 bequeathed his whole county to it, though a fief of Bavaria, and that notwithstanding the Dukes of Bavaria had not agreed to this disposition.

Upon this there arose disputes between the Dukes and the bishopric, which however were at length decided. The Dukes of Bavaria accepted the testament, and ceded to the bishopric the greatest part of the county, but reserved to themselves the jurisdiction thereof. In 1309 bishop Philip caused the testament of Count Gebhard of Hirschberg to be confirmed by the Emperor Henry VII. The other estates, of which the bishopric consists, have been for the most part acquired by purchase.

§. 6. The episcopal title is: By the Grace of God — Bishop and Prince of Eichstett. The episcopal arms are a crosser argent, in a field gules. A bishop's mitre crowns the shield, and behind it appears a sword and a crosser. Formerly also the bishops stiled themselves Arch-chancellors of the Holy See of Mentz, and maintained, that by virtue of this dignity, they were possessed, during the vacancy of that archbishopric, of several privileges. The bishop of Eichstett is perpetual chancellor of the university of Ingolstadt.

§. 7. This bishop sits in the council of the Princes of the Empire on the spiritual bench between the bishops of Worms and Speyer, and at the Diets of the circle of Franconia between the reigning Marggraves of Branden-burg-Culmbach and Onolzbach. His Imperial matricular evaluation amounts to two hundred and forty-six florins; and to each chamber-term he pays two hundred and eighty-sour rixdollars, sourteen kruitzers and a half. As a prelate he stands under the archbishop of Mentz.

§. 8. The highly worthy chapter here confifts of fourteen capitulars, and fourteen domicelli, who must be all of a nobility suitable to the foundation and the character of gentlemen, and swear to sixteen degrees of descent.

th.mco

fcent. At the cathedral church here were anciently founded thirty-five canonicates, or prebends, five of which are not of equal value with the rest. These canonicates are all divided alternately by the chapter, which also has the presentation of twenty-two vicarships in Eichstett.

§. 9. The office of hereditary-marshal of the bishopric, the Counts Schenken of Castell enjoy; that of hereditary-chamberlain, the Barons of Schaumberg; that of hereditary cup-bearer, the Barons of Eybe; and that of hereditary sewer, the Lords of Leonrodt.

§. 10. The principal princely colleges here are, the spiritual council, the regency, or the aulic-council, and the aulic-chamber. The episcopal territories are divided into eleven upper or administratory prefecturates, some of which again have some under-amts beneath them.

8. 11. The right of holding the Imperial prefidical-court at Hirschberg in this bishopric, is possessed by the electoral-house of Bavaria from ancient times, that house having been invested therewith by the Emperor; but on account thereof, it has had frequent disputes with the bishopric. These disputes, it is true, were adjusted in a friendly manner in the years 1380 and 1381, but fprung up anew, and were again removed in 1392 by a stipulation; on which occasion also the letters of immunity granted by the Emperor Lewis to the bishopric in the year 1330, to be subject to no other judge but the Emperor and his aulic-judge, were confirmed. In 1420 the Emperor Sigismund annulled this presidical court. But the electoral-house of Bavaria renewing it in 1749, and holding it at Buchsheim under the open heavens, new disputes arose upon this between that house and the bishopric of Hoch/tift, which disputes relate principally to the immunity maintained by the latter from the jurisdiction of this presidical court, and is still carried on before the Imperial aulic-council, without having ever been decided. The limits of the presidical court are according to the prescription of the seudal letters affigned as follows: The prefidical court of the county of Hirschberg begins above the Pfruning at the Danube, where the Laber falls into that river at Sinzing, and runs up along the Danube, and fo far into it as a horse extends in length or a person can reach with a spear, passing on quite to Neuburg on the Ried, and as far as Bergen to the cloyster there; but the cloyster lies in the provincial jurisdiction of Graifpach, reaching from thence to the forest, which is called Ottenberger, and belongs to the provost of Rebderf, and towards Upper-Eichstett as far as that village. These two villages just mentioned are confined to the two prefidical courts of Graifpach and Hirschberg; they have letters from both prefidical courts, and in these may be seen the limits. From thence it runs along the wood of Weiffenburg, extending beyond that wood; but the wood belongs to the prefidical court of Graifpach, and reaches to Neufling; from thence it passes on to Neukaus, afterwards to the village of Walting, in which are two parishes, and there it has a small rivulet within its limits by which the two prefidical courts are divided from thence it runs to Altheidek into the village there next to Mauk along the road from Weissenburg to Nurnberg quite to Roth and the Rednitz, and along the latter before Schwabach till that river mixes its waters with those of the Schwarzach, and also along the Schwarzach quite to the Aichenbruck, and from thence to Rasch, and farther still to the Raschbach on Stockelsberg quite through the village to Trautenshosen, and through that village towards the Thierstein; from thence again to the Farther Laber and quite down along the Laber till that river falls again into the Danube at Sinzing.

§. 12. Thus much premifed, now follows the more accurate description of this principality. To it therefore belongs, and that,

I. To the UNDER-BISHOPRIC.

- 1. Eichstett, or Aichstadt, the episcopal residence, lying in a valley on the river Altmubl. The present episcopal residentiary-palace, and the building which stands over against, and in which are the princely, spiritual and temporal colleges, together with their chanceries and registratures, were built a-new by Bishop Francis Lewis, Baron Schenk of Castell. In the cathedral-church here, besides the great choir, is, moreover, the choir of St. Willibald, together with nine prebendaries for as many canons; and in it were pretended to be found, in the year 1744, the bones of St. Willibald, in honour of whom John Antony II. caused a new costly high altar to be raised, which was dedicated in 1745. At the parochial and collegiatechurch here, or the new collegiate-church of our Lady, is a foundation confifting of a provost, a dean, a cathedral and a town-minister, as also of some canons. At St. Walburg's church is a nunnery of Benedictines, and in it, in the high altar there, are laid up the breast-bones of that Saint, which yield the fo celebrated Walburg oil*. We find here also a college of Jesuits with the Seminarium Willibaldinum, a Dominican cloyster, a cloyster of regular canonesses of the congregation of our Lady, a Capuchin cloyster and
- * This cloyster stands on a rocky mountain. The altar in the church is as broad as the church itself, and perhaps a rock. Above it is a small cavity, the sides and bottom of which are lined with gold, and a stone covers it. This is called the cossin, and contains the breastbones of St. Walburg, out of which an oil is said to slow and force itself through the stone, where it is collected in drops which are received into a golden trough, and from thence conveyed into a golden bowl; after which it is distributed into small vials for the use of pilgrims and benefactors reforting thither, and employed for miraculous cures. This holy slux happens twice a year, namely, in the spring and fall, and that on the name and translation of St. Walburg; but sometimes it issues not, and very often it appears at different seasons of the year. Somewhat deeper than the church stands the brewhouse, and this, at the very time in which the moisture runs out of St. Walburg's grave, is so full of water that there is neither working nor staying in it. The vapours, which are held here for oil, neither burn nor swim upon the surface of water, but persectly mix themselves therewith. Vid. Francis Rothsscher's Atlas and Jubilee Year, P. iii. p. 367. Seq.

church in the east suburbs, and before the town another church on the Altmubl, which is called the Holy Ghost. Of the original of this town some account has been given above, §. 5. In 908, Bishop Erchambold obtained of the Emperor Lewis the liberty of surrounding the then cloyster with a wall, and therein to establish an ordinary market with a toll.

2. Marienstein, a cloyster of regular canonesses of the order of St. Augustine; and,

Eichstett.]

3. Rebdorf, another of regular canons of the same order, lying on the Altmuhl. These two cloysters stand hard by the town and the Willibald'sberg.

II. The prefecturate of the provincial-vogtey is an upper-prefecturate, and its upper amt-man is always at the fame time provincial-vogt at the Willibald'sberg. The estates of this prefecturate are among the first with which this bishopric was endowed. In it is,

- 1. The strong citadel of St. Willibald'sburg, which stands upon what is called Willibald'sberg, being situated about a quarter of an hour's distance from Eichstett, on the other side the Altmubl. In this citadel the bishops had their residence till the year 1725. In it also the princely archives together with the princely library are kept. It is fortissed with four bastions, and to the north and east also with a ditch which is dug into the rock and contains likewise an arsenal.
- 2. The vogt-amt, or prefecturate, of Wellheim, lying in the village of that name, and near which, on a pretty high rock, stands a citadel which descended from the Counts of Helfenstein to the bishopric.
- 3. Upper-Eichstett, a village, seated on the Altmuhl, and containing an iron soundery of the Prince's, as also a losty surnace in which iron stoves and other things are cast. Formerly this village was only a nobleman's seat. This place devolved by exchange from the Counts of Oettingen to the bishopric.
- 4. Moszbrum, a gentleman's feat, anciently belonging to the Knights Templars and afterwards to the Knights of St. John, by whom it was disposed of, in the year 1329, to Bishop Marquard I. for the sum of 1200 pounds weight of hellers.

5. Adelschlag, a village.

6. Pfunz, a pleasure-house of the Prince's, situated about one hour's distance below Eichstett, and disposed of, in the year 1475, to the bishopric.

7. Hoffletten, a citadel and village which, in the year 1466, was purchased of a noble family.

III. The upper-prefecturate of HIRSCHBERG took its rife out of the ancient county of Hirschberg, of which we have treated above, §. 5. In it is

Vol. V. K & K Altmubl.

Altmubl, and at which the ancient Counts of Hirschberg had their ordinary residence. At present the upper aut-man usually resides there.

2. Blanksletten, a Benedictine monastery, fituated on the Sulz.

3. Beilngriefz, a small town, seated on the Altmubl, which below this place receives into it the Sulz.

4. Berching, also a small town, lying on the Sulz, and containing in it an under amt-office and a rural decanate.

5. Greding, a little town, feated on the Schwarzach, and which has of old belonged to the bishopric. At this place is an under amt-office.

6. Great-Hebing, a large village, fituated on the Schwarzach and belonging to the chapter.

- 7. Toging, an under-prefecturate, lying in the citadel and village of that name, which is feated on the Altmuhl on the borders of Bavaria.
- 8. Friebertshofen, which, together with the estates of Reckenhofen, Hernsherg, Landershofen, Littershofen and Ottenhofen, was purchased by Bishop Frederick, in the year 1398, for the sum of 2700 florins.

9. Erlingshofen, purchased in 1332, and Eyerwang, purchased in the year 1472.

IV. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of Kupfenberg: to which belongs,

1. Kupfenberg, a citadel, feated on a mountain on the river Altmubl, under which lies also a little town. This place came, in the year 1301, by purchase to the bishopric.

2. Arnsberg, a citadel, standing on a high rock on the river Altmubl. The Dukes of Bavaria disposed of this place, in 1475, to the bishopric for the fum of 14000 florins.

- 3. Enkering, a village, near which stands the old ruinous citadel of Rumburg. John of Absperg disposed of this place, in 1546, to the bishop-ric for the sum of 18600 florins.
- 4. Kunding, or Kinting, a village, feated on the Altmuhl, which at this place receives into it the Schwarzach. This village was purchased, together with the estates of Haunstettin, Mettendorf, Irlahill and Buch, in the year 1561, for the sum of 9800 florins.

V. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of TITTING-RAITENBUCH, to which belongs,

1. Titting, or Dieting, a citadel, lying on the Anlauter, and which, in the year 1544, was disposed of to the bishopric.

2. Raitenbuch, a large village, with a small citadel belonging to it which was purchased by the bishopric, in the year 1469; of the cloyster of Rebdorf, for the sum of 13000 florins.

3. Haussen, formerly a nobleman's seat, purchased in 1617.

4. Pechthal, a citadel, which, in the year 1557, came by purchase to the bishopric.

5. The

5. The royal villages, or the ancient Imperial administration of the royal villages, was held by the old Counts of Hirschberg in fiel of the holy Roman Empire. On their extinction it reverted again, in 1303, thereto, and afterwards, for many years, was granted for life to feveral noblemen, who deserved well of it. The Imperial administrators here had their refidence in the Imperial city of Weiffenburg, to which this Imperial administration, with all its high and low jurisdiction, was mortgaged, in the year 1530, by the Emperor Charles V. In 1629, the city was obliged to cede this administration, at the Imperial command, to the bishopric of Eichstett; but by the peace of Westphalia it arrived again to the possession thereof; in which possession it continued till the year 1680, when an Imperial commission mediated, that the Imperial city of Weissenburg should, of the villages belonging to this Imperial administration, retain Wengen, but cede the rest to the bithopric of Eichslett on its refunding the mortgage upon it. The villages appertaining to the bishopric are Kabldorf, Petersbuch and Byburg, together with the hamlet of the Holy Cross.

VI. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of UPPER-MESZING: to which belongs,

1. Upper-Meszing, a citadel, standing on a mountain, with a village belonging to it. This place was purchased, in 1465, of the Teutonick order for the sum of 11700 florins.

2. Jetenhofen, a citadel, which, in the year 1587, reverted to the bishopric as a suppressed fief. At this place is an under amt-office.

3. Burggriesbach and Lauterbach, two citadels, which were disposed of, in the year 1398, to the bishopric for the sum of 14600 florins.

4. Tambausen, an estate purchased by the bishopric in 1398.

VII. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of Dolnstein: to which belongs,

1. Dolnstein, a citadel and small town, lying on the Altmubl, and which, after the extinction of the Counts of Hirschberg, came to the Counts of Oettingen, from whom it descended to the Lords of Heydeck, and from them to William of Rechberg, from which last it came, in 1440, for the sum of 3000 florins, to the bishopric.

2. Mernsheim, a village, in which is an under amt-office.

VIII. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of NASSENFELS, which is among the very first possessions of the bishopric. In it is,

1. Nassensels, a citadel and borough, seated in the district in which once shood the town of Aureatum.

2. The villages of Mublhausen, Meckenlobe and Buchskeim. At the last of these places the Elector of Bavaria held, in the year 1749, the presidicalcourt of the county of Hirschberg under the open sky.

II. To the UPPER-BISHOPRIC.

IX. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of Sandsee, which is surrounded by the principality of Onolzbach, the commandery of Oettingen belonging to the Teutonich order, and the administratory-amts of Heydeck and Hilpolissein, appertaining to the dutchy of Neuburg. This prefecturate was sold, in the year 1302, by Count Gebbard of the Hirschberg to the bishopric of Eichstett for 2400 pounds weight of hellers. To it belongs,

1. Sandsee, a mountain-citadel.

2. Pleinfeld, a confiderable market-town, seated on the Retzat, and,

3. Fugenstall, a parochial-village.

X. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of Wernfels-Spalt, together with Abenberg, is environed by the principality of Onolzbach. To it belongs,

1. Wernfels, a citadel, lying on the Retzat, and which was fold to the bishopric, in the year 1284, for 1000 pounds weight of hellers.

2. Spalt, a finall town, feated on the Retzat, with two collegiate foundations in it, which, in 1619, were united. At this place also is a rural decanate. The Burggrave Conrad V. of Nurnberg disposed of this town, which was at that time but a market-town, under certain conditions, to the bishopric of Eichstet, in the year 1277, and, in 1295, fully.

Of the citadel of Sandeskron, which was fold at the same time, no traces.

now remain.

3. Zuin-heiligen Blut, a church to which pilgrimages are made. Near it stands a guest-house of the Franciscans.

4. The parochial-villages of Middle-Eschenbach and Wasserzell.

5. Abenberg, a citadel and small town, in which is an under amt-office. At this place the ancient Counts of Abenberg had their residence, whose county, long before their extinction, descended to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, and was sold by the Burggrave Conrad V. in the year 1266, for 4000 pounds weight of hellers, to the bishopric of Eichstett. Not far from this place is a glass foundery for mirrours.

6. Marienburg, a nunnery of Augustines.

7. Veitsaurach, a parochial-village, situated on the Aurach.

XI. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of Abrberg-Obrnbau, is environed by the principality of Onolzbach, and contains in it,

1. Abrberg, a citadel, standing on a mountain.

2. Obrnbau, a small town, seated on the Altmubl, and formerly belonging to the Counts of Oettingen.

3. Cronheim, a citadel and village, in which is an under amt-office. Nicolas Fugger fold this place in the seventeenth century to the bishopric.

4. Great-

4. Great-Lellenfeld, a parochial-village.

5. Eybburg, a citadel, which Erasmus of Eyb disposed of, in the year

1622, to the bishopric for the sum of 21,500 florins.

XII. The upper, or administratory-prefecturate of WAHRBERG-HER-RIEDEN, which is also environed by the principality of Onolebach, and contains in it,

1. Wabrberg, a citadel.

2. Herrieden, originally named Hasenried, a small town, seated on the Altmubl, with a collegiate soundation in it erected by Charlemagne as a Benedictine cloyster, but soon after converted into a collegiate soundation, which gave occasion to the building of the town. At this place also is a rural-decanate. In the year 1316, Herrieden was besieged by the Emperor Lewis V. at which time also it was taken and destroyed. In 1450 and 1490, it was consumed by fire, and, in 1633, taken by Duke Bernhard of Saxe-Weymar.

3. Aurach, a citadel, purchased in the year 1510. In this citadel is a forest and amt-office.

Rem. In Upper-Bavaria, the rent-amt of Munich and the administratory-court of Riedenburg, the bishopric of Eichsleit is possessed of the seigniory of Flugelsberg and Hosmark Mayren, which were purchased by Bishop John Antony I. for the sum of 100,000 florins.

The PRINCIPALITY of ONOLZBACH or ANSBACH.

§. 1. OF the principality of Onolzbach, or the share of the marggravate of Onolzbach, in the burggravate of Nurnberg below the Gebirg, John George Vetter has delineated a good chart, which was engraved by Michael Kauffer, but has this remarkable in it, that the territories of both Marggraves are extended quite to the gates of the city of Nurnberg.

§. 2. This principality terminates on the Under-land of Bayreuth, the bishopric of Bamberg, the Imperial city of Windsheim, the principality of Schwarzenberg and the seigniory of Seinsheim, as also on the bishopric of Wurzburg, the county of Castell, the territory of the Imperial city of Rothen-burg, the counties of Hobentobe and Limpurg, the territory of the Imperial city of Swabian Hall, the provostship of Elwangen, the county of Oettingen, the Imperial city of Dunkelspubl, the dutchy of Neuburg, the county of Pappenbeim, the Imperial city of Weisenburg, the bishopric of Aichstadt, the seigniory of Pyrbaum and the Upper-Palatinate.

$. 3. In.

§. 3. In it are, indeed, fome fandy and mountainous tracts, but this country, taken in general, is better than that of Bayreuth, abounding in corn, tinkel, or fpelt, as also in barley and oats, together with the fruits of the earth and trees, and likewife in tobacco, having down all along the Mayn also a good product of wine. On account of the good pastures here its breed of cattle also is excellent. There are likewise here all forts of game and fish, together with some medicinal springs. In the upperprefecturate of Hohentrudingen is found marble, and in some places also iron-mines. On other mine-works no money is laid out here. The principal river of this country is at first called the Retzat, and rifes partly in this principality above Upper-Dackstetten, where it is also called the Under, or Franconian-Retzat, and partly in the county of Pappenbeim, not far from Dettenbeim, where it is termed the Upper, or Swabian. Both these rivers unite, not far from Gemund, upon which this united river bears the name of Rednitz, in Latin Radantia, and receives into it, below Furth, the Pegnitz, after which it is called by some the Regnitz, but by others still the Rednitz, and falls into the Mayn in the bishopric of Bamberg. The Altmulti has its rife in the Under-land of Bayreuth, and that in the prefecturate of Mark-Burghernheim, which belongs to the upper-amt of Hoheneck, entering foon after into the principality of Onolabach, and running through the upper part of the bishopric of Aichstadt into the county of Pappenheim. The Jagli, or Jaxt, comes out of the princely provostship of Elwangen, and passes through a tract of this country into the country of Hohenlohe. The Wornitz, or Wernitz, has its rife in the county of Hohenloke, not far from Frankenau and Schillings/wrft. In the principality of Onolzbach it receives into it the Sulz, after which it passes on into the country of Oettingen. The Tauber comes out of the territory of Rothenburg, and passes through this principality into the bishopric of Wurzburg. The Mayn only washes a small part of this country.

§.4. This principality contains in it fixteen boroughs and feventeen market-towns.

§. 5. The whole country professes the Protestant doctrine and form of worship taught by Luther. The preachers here are divided into nine decanates, which are held at Crailskeim, Feuchtwang, Gunzenkausen, Langenzenn, Leuterskausen, Schwabach, Uffenbeim, Wassertrudingen and Weimersheim. At Schwabach is a colony of French Calvinists, which has a church of its own and enjoys the free exercise of its religion.

§. 6. At Ansbach is a gymnasium illustre, and in the towns are some small Latin schools.

§. 7. The inhabitants here subsist by the breeding of cattle, by tillage and the culture of wine and tobacco. In the towns are divers mechanics and manufactures, among the latter of which are principally to be reckoned the manufactures of tapistry, stockings, cloth, stuffs, gold and silver lace, as also also of wire, needles, and many other things at Schwabach, together with the porcelain manufactory at Anspach, and those of leather at Flachslanden and Langenzenn, as also the mirror manufactory at Sollnbofen.

- §. 8. The reigning Marggrave of Brandenburg-Onolebach has, on account of this principality, both feat and voice in the council of the Princes of the Empire, and is also co-summoning Prince of the circle of Franconia. Vid. p. 389 To a Roman month he pays three hundred and twenty-nine florins, and to each chamber-term three hundred and thirty-eight rixdollars, fourteen kruitzers and a quarter.
- §. 9. On the division of the burggravate of Numberg, two hereditary offices below the Gebirg remained to the principality; namely, those of hereditary chamberlain and hereditary cup-bearer: The Lords of Eib execute the former, and the Lords of Seckendorf the latter. This principality is also empowered to fill up the offices of hereditary marshal and hereditary fewer; and that in as ample a manner as the principality above the Gebirg disposes of four hereditary offices; but they continue notwithstanding vacant.
- §. 10. The princely colleges here are, the privy-council, the aulic and regency-college, as also that of the council of justice, the court of appeals, the chamber and provincial council college, the war-council college, the fief-court, and the confiftory and matrimonial-courts. The principality itfelf is divided into upper-prefecturates, under which again stand vogts, judges, town-vogteys, and cloyster-administrations.

§. 11. The yearly revenues of its Prince are estimated at near one million of guldens. Whether under this fum be comprehended the revenues arising to the Marggrave from the county of Sayn-Altenkirchen in the circle of Westphalia, I am not able to determine.

§. 12. The military force of this Prince confifts of a life-guard of horse, and one regiment of toot of feven companies.

§. 13. Now follow the princely upper-prefecturates, together with the prefecturates, boroughs, market-towns, and the principal places and villages standing under them.

I. The aulic revenue-amt of Onclabach, to which belongs

1. Onolabach, or Ansbach, (the latter of which names is only an abbreviation of the former) in Latin called Onoldum and Onoldinum, the princely refidence and head town, lying on the Under-Retzat. This place is the feat of the above-mentioned princely colleges, of the aulic revenue-office, and a mint; and in it also is held the Imperial presidical-court of the burggravate of Nurnberg. The residentiary palace here of the Prince was built, the greater part of it, by Marggrave George Frederick in the years 1587 and 1588, but suffering considerably by fire in 1710 was partly rebuilt in a much more beautiful manner than before, and likewife enlarged by the addition of some new grand edifices. The public library here was founded by the Marggrave Charles William Frederick in the year 1738, and, in conjunction with the princely cabinet of medals, conveyed in trust to his house. The princely chancery and regency chamber here are fixed in the old buildings belonging to the foundation of St. Gumbrecht which have been repaired. This foundation was erected by one Gumbrecht in the fecond half of the eighth century as a Benedictine monastery, but in the middle of the eleventh century was converted into a foundation of canons, and in 1563 fecularized. It has its own foundationary amt-office. Imperial prefidical court-house here, together with the council-house, the town or St. John's church, in which is to be seen the new burying-vault of the Princes, as also the new building of the gymnashum illustre Carolinum which was opened in 1737, the correctionhouse erected in 1727, and the Yews school, are all to be seen in what is properly called the town. Without it we find the porcelain manufactory erected in 1710, together with the caserns for the foot, which are built between it and the citadel suburbs. In the latter stands also the large seigniorial brew-house, together with what is called the Prince's garden, and pleasure-house. Behind the well laid out Jager-street lies the beautiful large court-garden here, with the costly green-house and orangery. New-Aulage is a new fuburb lying on the fouth-fide of the town. In the Herried-Suburb is the church-yard of the Holy Crofs, and in the Upper-Suburb the spital, together with the orphan-house and the widow-house. The town owes its foundation to the above-mentioned building. In 1139 there had long been a parish-church at Ansbach; and in a record of 1259, this place is stiled Civitas. The Burggave Frederick IV: purchased the town, together with the decayed castle of Dornberg in the year 1331, of the Counts of Oettingen, to whom it came by inheritance, on the extinction of the family of Dornberg, for 23,000 pound weight of hellers: In 1634 it was garrifoned by Imperial foldiers, and at the same time the whole principality, together with the adjoining countries, fequestered, and an Imperial temporary administration established, but this continued only for Onolzbach has been frequently damaged by fire, particuone year. larly in 1719.

2. The vogt-amt of Vestenberg and Bruckberg, in which is Vestenberg, a borough.

Bruckberg, a princely pleasure-palace, seated in a fine spot on an eminence, behind which is a mountain, from whence we have a delightful prospect. The Marggrave William Frederick purchased this place of Jul. Dieterich Theodore of Crailsheim, and caused it to be built and ornamented in a fine taste.

Under-Bibert, a parochial-village.

3. The vogt-amt of Lebrberg, to which belongs

Lebrberg, a market-town, seated on the Under-Retzat, and having a small citadel.

Birkenfels,

Birkenfels, a decayed citadel.

4. The vogt-amt of Flachslanden. In it is Flachflanden, a borough, having a good leather-manufactory.

5. The vogt-amt of Weidenback, in which is Weidenbach, a parochial-village.

Trierfdorf, a confiderable princely farm, having a pleasure-castle and park.

II. The upper-prefecturate of Schwabach. In it

1. Swaback, one of the head-towns of this principality, and a principal mint-town of the circle of Franconia, as also the feat of the upper-amt, which takes its name from it, and likewise of a decanate, lying in a very fruitful fpot on a river of that name, in a rugged and mountainous bottom, and being indeed not large but very populous. Exclusive of the Lutheran parish-church here, as also of a hospital with a church in it, and the Latin school, in this town likewise is a French Calvinist church, and a Yews school. In the market-place here is a fine fountain adorned with cascades and jet d' Eaus. The mint, which was erected in 1733 and 1754, is very commodiously laid out. The new suburb before the Zollner gate is built in a very regular manner. Formerly there was a letter-foundery here, in which the Schwabach letters, which were invented at and denominated from this place, were cast. Exclusive of the common handicrast trades, here are also pencil-makers, and artificers in gold and filver-lace; as likewise gold, silver, Leon or Spanish steel, and iron wire-drawers; together with brass-turners, who make sleeve-buttons, model-cutters, needlemakers, whose work is held in great repute far and near, and who make above thirty different forts of needles; artificers in brafs, who among other things make fine metal shoe-buckles; stocking-weavers, of whom there are two hundred mafters in this town, who employ about three hundred looms; tobacco-spinners, tapistry-weavers, who make fine tapistry, and divers of whom have removed to Vienna, Berlin, Drefden, Stuttgardt, and other places, and there fet up the like manufactures; cloth and stuff-makers, cloth-shearers and preparers. In this town also is prepared an exceeding fine and beautiful meal, which is exported far and near. Schwabach belonged anciently to the Dukes of Schwaback, and was made a donation of in 1133 to the cloyster of Eberack, by Duke Frederick I. who arrived afterwards to be Emperor; which cloyiter disposed of this place in 1281 to King Rudolph I. From this last it descended to the Counts of Nassau, who fold it to the Burggrave of Nurnberg, which fale by some has been ascribed to the Emperor Adolphus of Nassau. But there is a letter of purchase extant, by which the first, Burggrave Frederick V. purchased the markt of Schwabach at the same time with the forts of Kammerstein and Kornburg, namely in 1364, in which very year also he was invested with those places by the Emperor Charles IV. In 1528 Vol. V. LII those those writings which are called the Articles of Schwabach were drawn up here, and were the beginning of the Augsburg confession. In 1529 an assembly of the Protestant States was held here. In 1632 it was besieged, taken, and plundered by the Imperialists, and at the same time miserably laid waste by samine and a plague. In 1686 the first French resugees settled at this place.

At Kanmerstein, which is a parochial-village lying near it, was anciently a citadel, where the administrators of the present upper-presecturate of Schwabach originally resided. Out of the stones of the ruinous citadel here the Calvinist church at Schwabach was built.

Reickenbach, a parochial-village and citadel.
2. The judge-amt of Wendelstein has its feat at Wendelslein, a well-built market-town, seated on the Schwarzach, and in which the Imperial city of Nurnberg is possessed of a co-seigniory. The Burggrave Frederick II. or III. purchased this judge-amt of the Landgraves of Leuchtenberg.

3. The judge-amt of Schwandt, which takes its name from Schwandt, a very ancient, large, and well built market-town, which formerly enjoyed a criminal-court, and a peculiar territorial district of its own.

4. The judge-amt of Kornburg, lying at Kornburg, a large market-town, in which is a marggravial toll. The citadel here, together with certain estates belonging to it, appertains, ever since the year 1753, in which year the family of Rieter became extinct, to the hospital of the Holy Ghost in Nurnberg. The town itself was purchased in 1364 by the Burggrave Frederick V.

III. The upper-prefecturate of CADOLZBURG, to which belongs

1. Cadolaburg, a confiderable market-town, with a strong citadel in it, and the seat of the upper-amt-office. The seigniory of Cadolaburg was obtained by the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. in the year 1248, out of the ducal inheritance of the samily of Meran, and in 1265 he invested therewith the abbey of Elwangen, but with a proviso that the fealty thereof should cease whenever he should obtain male-heirs, for which reason it was held by that abbey only for fixteen years. This place was formerly a burggravial residence; and the Marggrave Charles William Frederick also frequently resided there, and that too for a long time.

2. The town-vogtey-amt of Langenzenn, which has its feat at Langenzenn, anciently-named Cinna, or Cenna, once a market-borough, but now a small town, seated on the river Zenn, in which is a good leathern manufactory. At this place also is a decanate. The ancient provostship here of Augustine canons is secularized, and belongs, ever since the year 1621, to the princely house of Bayreuth.

3. The judge-amt of Rosz-stal, in the parochial village of Rosz-stal, the citadel citadel belonging to which was formerly much celebrated. This place devolved in the year 1292 from the family of Heydeck to the burggravate.

4. The judge-amt of Habersdorf, in the parochial-village of Habersdorf, * or Great-Habersdorf.

5. The Hofmark Furth is a large commercial and exceeding populous place, feated on the river Rednitz, into which, below this town, the Regnitz runs. Hofmark Furth is built irregularly, the new street excepted, but contains notwithstanding many grand and fine houses. In this town refide an uncommon number of mechanics and artizans: Such as cannot be received into the gilds or fraternities at Nurnberg, or for whom the dues run too high, fettling here, where every person is certain of meeting with reception. The Yews, who are very numerous at this place, constitute one third of the inhabitants; and have a great school and a printing-house in the town. In the Lutheran church here the Imperial city of Nurnberg is possessed of the right of patronage. The inhabitants are partly subjects of Brandenburg-Onolabach, and partly of Nurnberg, and partly also of the chapter of Bamberg. The Burggraves of Nurnberg also held here anciently the Imperial prefidical-court; but the chapter of Bamberg purchased the prefidical jurisdiction in civil matters, in lieu of the yearly payment of fifty florins for itself and subjects at Furth and other places: The very subjects too of the chapter in and about Furth are obliged to give in vearly twenty-three measures of oats to the seigniory of Cadolzberg, and perform foccage in other respects. The safe conduct commissariate-amt of Onolabach exercises all criminal jurisdiction. With this Hosmark are incorporated certain villages.

IV. The upper-prefecturate of Burgthann, to which belongs

1. Burgthann, a mountain-citadel, feated on the Schwarzach. This place was obtained by the Burggrave Frederick II. or III. in the year 1288, of the Emperor Rudolphus. In it is the upper-amt and a revenue-office.

2. Upper-Ferrieden, a parochial-village, so named by way of distinction from the neighbouring village of Under-Ferrieden. The Burggrave John II.

purchased this place in the year 1335 of the chapter of Aickstadt.

3. The vogt-amt of Schonberg, which is at Schonberg, a citadel and parochial-village. The Imperial city of Nurraberg has contested the criminal jurisdiction here with the marggravial-house.

V. The upper-prefecturate of Roth, to which belongs

1. Roth, a small town, seated on a rivulet of the same name, which below this place runs into the Rednitz. Roth is the seat of the upper-presecturate, and contains in it a ruinous castle, with a small Latin school. In this town also are weavers of stockings, Spanish lace, and stuffs; and Roth contains in it also an Imperial asylum for such as have been accidentally guilty of manslaughter.

2. The judge-amt of Georgens-Gmund, having its feat at Georgens-Gmund, which is a parochial-village.

VI. The upper-prefecturate of STAUFF, containing

1. Stauff, a citadel, in which is the upper-amt-office. The Burggrave Frederick IV. was invested with this place in the year 1328 by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria.

2. Thalmeszing, a market-town, seated on the Schwarzach.

3. The vogtey-amt of Geyern is possessed in common by the Marggraves with the Barons Schenken of Geyern, whose share in it is reckoned to appertain to the noble canton of Altmubl. To this place belongs Geyern, a citadel, feated on a mountain.

Ettenstadt, a parochial-village. Nurstingen, a market-town.

VII. The fortress of Wilzburg, or Wulzburg, stands on a high mountain, not far from the Imperial city of Weissenburg, and was formerly a considerable abbey of Benedictine Monks, which in the year 1588 was converted into a fortress, and obtained by the Imperialists by stipulation in 1631.

VIII. The upper-prefecturate of Gunzenhausen, to which belongs Gunzenbausen, one of the chief towns of this principality, lying on the A'tmubl, and the place where the upper amt-man has his seat, as also the seat of a revenue-office, and a decanate. Exclusive of the parish-church here, in it also is a hospital with a church. This place was formerly in the possession of the Lords of Seckendorf, and was sold in 1368 to the Burggrave Frederick V.

2. The vogt-amt of Weimerskeim, in which is Weimersheim, a borough, containing a decanate on a mountain. Hard by this place stood the citadel of Fliglingen.

3. The revenue-amt of Weissenburg, or Witzburg, which lies in the Imperial city of that name.

4. The administratory-prefecturate of Wald, situated in the parochial-village of Wald, on the Altmubl, and purchased by the Burggrave Frederick V. in the year 1375 of Conrad Fuchsen, which Burggrave was in the same year invested therewith by the Emperor Charles IV. After this it was given in fief to some noble families, but reverted again in 1749.

IX. The upper-prefecturate of Hohentrudingen. In it is

1. Hobentrudingen, a citadel, lying near the Hanenkam, or Haynkam, (which is the name of a particular tract of country) and the house from whence the ancient Counts of Trubendingen, or Hobentrubendingen, derived their original. After these Counts had sold this citadel, together with the annexed seigniory, to the Counts of Oettingen, they had their residence at Gich and Gugel, and their seigniory in that tract extended over Seszlitz, Bannach, and Stuffenberg; but at last they declined so greatly as no longer to stile themselves Counts, but only Lords of Trubendingen. Their estates and siefs fell partly to cloysters, as for instance to Lankheim, and were partly partly made away with by sale. Their arms were two bends gules, in a field argent. The Burggrave Frederick V. brought this fortress, together with Heydenbeim, to his own house in the year 1366.

2. The administratory-presecturate of Heydenheim has sprung up out of an ancient cloyster there. This presecturate has its seat in the market-town of Heydenheim.

3. The administratory-prefecturate of Ostheim, lying in the borough of Ostheim. To this prefecturate also belonged the decayed castle of Rechenberg.

4. The administratory-prefecturate of Berolzheim, in the market-town of that name, which lies not far from the Altmuhl.

5. The judge-amt of Wettelskeim, fituated in the parochial-village of the fame name.

6. The administratory-prefecturate of TREUCHTLINGEN, which has its seat at Treuchtlingen, a market-town, lying on the Altmuhl, with a citadel in it, and a Protestant and Roman-catholic church.

7. The administratory-prefecturate of Sollnhofen, situated at Sollnbosen, a market-town, lying on the Altmubl, and having a house for the making of mirrours.

X. The upper-prefecturate of Wassertrudingen, to which belongs Wassertrudingen, one of the head towns of this principality, lying on the Wernitz, and containing in it a citadel, and being likewise the seat of the upper-amt and revenue-office, as also of a decanate. This place anciently belonged to the Counts of Hohentruhendingen, from whom it fell successively to the Counts of Oettingen and Hohenlohe, and in 1371 was disposed of for 33,000 lb. weight of hellers to the Burggraves of Nurnberg. In the year 1634 this place suffered greatly by fire.

2. The cloyster-amt of Aubausen, seated in the parochial-village of Aubausen on the Wernitz, and in which formerly stood a cloyster of Benedictines.

3. The prefecturate of ROCKINGEN, in which is Rockingen, a parochial-village and citadel. And Reichenbach, also a village and citadel.

4. The administratory-prefecturate of Schwaningen, which is seated at Schwaningen, or Upper-Schwaningen, a borough, containing a princely palace, with a fine pleasure-garden to it.

5. The vogt-amt of Wittelshofen, which has its feat at Wittelshofen, a borough and citadel, lying on the river Sulz.

XI. The upper-prefecturate of WINDSBACH, to which belongs

1. Windsback, a small town and citadel, lying on the Rednitz, and the seat of the upper-amt and a revenue-office. This place belonged anciently to the Counts of Oettingen, of whom one of the samily of Dornberg purphers.

chased chased it, and gave it to his daughter, who was consort to one of the family of Heydeck, as a portion. Of this last Burggrave, Frederick II. or III. purchased it in the year 1292.

2. The cloyster-amt of Heilsbrun. In it is Heilsbrun, or Hailsbron, a finall town, seated on the rivulet of Schwabach, and taking its name from a medicinal spring there, which the Marggrave Charles William Frederick caused to be opened a-new and surrounded with a wall. This place formerly contained in it a cloyster of Cistercians, founded in 1132, but in 1582 this cloyster was converted by the Marggrave George Frederick into a gymnasium illustre, and the revenues belonging to it allotted to the use of the young students. This gymnasium belonged in common to both the reigning Marggravial houses; but was abolished in 1737, at which time each house applied its share in it to the use of the gymnasium in their own residence-towns.

3. The administratory-prefecturate of Merkendorf, which has its feat at

Merkendorf, a small town, sold by Engelbard of Wolden, in the year 1368, to the Burggrave Frederick V. In the year 1648 this place was reduced to ashes. Till 1719 it belonged in common to the two marggravial houses; but in that year came to the house of Onolzbach alone.

4. The administratory-prefecturate of WAITZENDORF, situated at Waitzendorf, which is both a borough and citadel. This place was also possessed by the princely house of Onoleback, in common with the princely house of Culmback, till the year 1719.

XII. The upper-prefecturate of FEUCHTWANG: To it belongs

1: Feuchtwang, a town, feated on the river Sulz, and in which is the upper-amt, a revenue, and administration-office, as also a decanate. Near the town church here formerly stood a foundation of regular canons. At this place also is a Latin school. Feuchtwang was anciently an Imperial city, but was mortgaged by the Emperor Charles IV. to the Burggraves for the sum of 50,000 florins, and fully ceded by the Emperor Ruprecht in the year 1365, on the payment of 20,000 florins more. In 1388 it was reduced to ashes, and in 1645 taken with difficulty by the Bavarians.

2. The cloyster-administration-amt of Sulz, which has its feat at Sulz, a citadel and borough, lying on the river of that name, and formerly containing a numbery for ladies.

3. The vogt-amt of Bechhofen, which has its feat at Beckhofen, a market-town, lying on the river Wieset, and having a finall castle.

4. The vogt-amt of Forndorf, fituated at Forndorf, a citadel and village.

XIII. The upper-prefecturate of CREILSHEIM, to which belongs

1. Creilsheim, a town, seated on the river Jaxt, and containing a citadel.

In this town lies the upper-amt and revenue-office, as also a cipitation-office, a decanate, a Latin school and a hospital. Creilsheim was purchased in the year 1399 of the Landgrave John of Leuchtenberg.

Betwixt this town and Burgberg flood the citadel of Flugelau, which was purchased at the same time with Creilsheim of the Landgrave of Leuchtenberg.

2. The revenue-amt of Bemberg and Wiesenbach. In it is Bemberg, a borough, formerly containing a citadel.

Wiefenbach, also a borough.

3. The revenue-amt of Anhausen and Lobenhausen, in which is Anhansen, a borough, formerly containing a cloyster of Augustines.

Lobenhausen, a borough, situated on the Jaxt, and which in the year 1399 was purchased of the Landgrave John of Leuchtenberg. The citadel here is fallen to decay.

4. The revenue-amt of Gerhardsbron. In it is Gerhardsbron, or Gerabron, a market-borough, which, together with the ruinous old castle of Werdeck, was purchased in 1399 of the Landgrave John of Leuchtenberg.

5. The exchequer administratory-amt of Goldbach, which has its feat at Goldback, a parochial-village and citadel.

Rem. This village, together with Reinsbron, Neuenkirchen, and Ingelftadt, as also a part of Giebelftadt, and other places and estates, belonged formerly to the noble family of Geyer, the last male-heir of which, named Henry Wolfgang, was created Imperial Count of Geyer, in the year 1685, and his seigniories and estates exempted from the Imperial collectanean of nobles, and raised to a county of the Empire, he himself being also received in 1693 into the circle of Franconia on the bench of Counts both to seat and voice, after engaging for a certain matricular evaluation. But this Count dying without male-heirs the greatest part of his estates devolved to the electoral-house of Brandenburg, to which house he bequeathed them in 1696, and so early as the year 1704 also ceded them. The Marggrave Charles William Frederick marrying the royal Prussian Princess Frederica Louisa, obtained with her the estates formerly belonging to the Counts of Geyer, which estates were mostly added to the upper-presecturates of Creilsbeim, Creglingen, and Uffenbeim.

XIV. The upper-prefecturate of Colmberg, to which belongs

1. Colmberg, a mountain-citadel and a market-town. The Burggrave Frederick IV. purchased this place in the year 1318, together with Lauter-shausen, of Count Frederick of Trubendingen for 6,200 lb. weight of hellers.

2. The vogt-amt of Leutershausen, which has its seat at Leuterskausen, a small town, seated on the river Altmuhl, and containing a decanate. The Burggrave Frederick IV. purchased this place in the year 1318 of Count Frederick of Trubendingen for 6,200 lb. weight of hellers, at which time it was only a borough.

3. The

3. The judge-amt of Brunst, in the village of that name.

4. The vogt-amt of Jochsberg, formerly belonging to the noble family of Seckendorf.

Tochsberg is a citadel and parochial-village feated on the river Altmuhl.

5. The revenue-office of Infingen, which is a parochal-village, lying within the limits of the Imperial city of Rothenburg.

XV. The upper-prefecturate of Creglingen. To it belongs

1. Creglingen, a small town and citadel, lying on the Tauber, and being the feat of an upper-amt and a revenue-office. This place anciently belonged to the seigniory of Brauneck; but Brauneck is to be sought for below under the canton of Odenwald.

2. The prefecturate of TAUBERZELL, fituated in the parochial-village of Tauberzell, which lies on the river Tauber.

3. The vogtey of the four Mayn-villages, in which the provost of Wurzburg has the possession of certain tithes, but pays the Marggrave yearly protection-oats and protection-money, for the security and desence of his These villages formerly belonged to the seigniory of Brauneck, subjects. and are Stefft, a market-town, feated on the Mayn, and which has thriven greatly ever fince the year 1726, when divers immunities were promifed to such manufacturers and merchants, as inclined to fettle there. In this tract grows a pretty good wine.

The parochial-villages of Sickerhausen, Obernbreit, Martinskeim, Upper-Ickelsheim, and Gnotstadt.

4. The prefecturate of Segnitz, fituated in the village of that name, which lies on the river Mayn. In this prefecturate the Lords of Zobel are possessed of a share.

The following places which belonged to the Counts of Geyer, who became extinct in 1708, and which fell, in the manner above described under the article Goldbach, to the Marggraves of Brandenburg-Onelzbach: viz.

Reinsbron, a citadel and borough, feated in the neighbourhood of the little town of Creglingen, in which is an administrator's office, and to which also belong the two following places: namely,

Ingelifiadt, a citadel and village, lying between the Mayn and the Tauber.

Neuenkirchen, a parochial-village.

Giebelstadt, a citadel and village, situated not far from Ingelstadt, and partly belonging to this prefecturate.

XVI. The upper-amt of Uffenbeim, to which is annexed.

Uffenbeim, a small town, seated on the Gollach, and in which is a princely palace, as also the upper-amt, and a revenue-office, together with a decanate, a magnificent town-church, dedicated in 1731; a spital-church, and a Latin school. This place belonged anciently to the foundation of Fulda, and fo early as the twelfth century to the Counts of Hohenlohe, by whom it was fold in 1378 to the Burggraves of Nurnberg. 2. At

2. At Egerskeim, a parochial-village, is an upper-amt bailiff. This town is inhabited by the subjects of various Lords.

3. Hoblach, in ancient records called Hobenhech, a village, which is the original place of the Counts of Hohenlohe.

4. The revenue-amt of Maynbernbeim, having its feat at Maynbernheim, a finall town, lying not far from the river Mayn, and which in the year 1366 was a town, and came in 1500 to the marg-gravial-house.

5. The revenue-amt of Stephansberg, which has its seat at Stephansberg, a citadel and borough, situated not far from the river Mayn, and environed by the territory of Wurzburg. This place was purchased in the year 1502.

6. The revenue and judge-amt of Little-Lankheim, fituated at Little-Lankheim, a market-town, which lies not far from the foregoing place. The aint-office here is also denominated from the ruinous citadel of Castell, situate not far from it.

7. The revenue-amt of Brixenstadt, which has its seat at Brixenstadt, or Prichsenstadt, a small town, lying on the borders of the county of Castell, and which was purchased by the Burggrave Frederick V, in the year 1381, of King Wenzel of Bohemia. In 1632 this place was taken by the Imperialists, by whom it was plundered and laid waste. Here is still an ordinary Imperial immunity or asylum, for such as have accidentally been guilty of man-slaughter.

8. The prefecturate of Furstenforst, which takes its name from a ruinous citadel, and is environed by the bishopric of Bamberg, being situated in the neighbourhood of Burg-Haszlach.

XVII. The marggravial-house of Onolzbach is also possessed of a share in the large village of Randersacker in the bishopric of Wurzburg.

Of the Teutonick Order in general, but in particular of the Masterdom of Mergentheim, and the Bailiwick of Franconia.

§. I. THE Teutonick order was founded in the year 1190 in Palestine, and the Knights of this order were called Knights of the Virgin Mary, or brothers of the Teutonick house of our Lady of Jerujalem. They are to bind themselves by vow to the defence of the Christian religion and the Holy Land, and likewise to the service of the poor and ficks Yol. V.

to be all of them Germans, and of true ancient nobility. Pope Celestine III. confirmed this order in 1191, subjecting it to the rule of St. Augustine. A like confirmation enfued also from the Emperor Henry VI. For its first superior or head was chosen Henry of Waldpott Bassenheim, to whom succeeded in the dignity of grand master Otto of Karpen, Henry Bart and Hermann of Salza. The Saracens proving too powerful in Palestine the lastmentioned grand master retired from Jerusalem to Venice, where he received an embaffy from Duke Conrad of the Mafau, who applied to him and. the Teutonick order for affistance against the ethnical Prussians. The order complied with the request of this embassy, the property of all lands which it should gain of the Prussians being secured to it by the stipulations of 1226 and 1228, and the country of Culm and Dobrina likewise ceded to it. The grand masters therefore removed first from Venice to Marburg, and afterwards to Marienburg in Prussia. The order, indeed, gradually subdued all Prussa, Courland, Semigallia, and Livonia, but again lost these countries. But the grand master Albrecht, Marggrave of Brandenburg obtaining, in 1525, a part of Pruffia, in fief, as a fecular dutchy, of the crown of Poland; the Knights, who were displeased with this innovation, returned to Germany, where they elected, in 1526, Walther of Cronberg as succesfor to the Teutonick master Di Theodorick of Cleen, on whom was conferred by the Empreor Charles V. the title of administrator of the grand masterdom in Pruffia. From that time, however, there were no longer any particular Teutonick masters created in conjunction with the grand masters, and the administration of the grand masterdom is ever since become a mere title.

§. 2. The superior of this spiritual order, or the grand and Teutonick master stiles himself: Administrator of the grand masterdom in Prussia, master of the Teutonick order in Germany and Italy, and Lord of Freudenthal and Eulenberg. He is a spiritual Prince of the Empire, and enjoys a high rank in the council of Princes thereof on the spiritual bench, sollowing next after the archbishops, and thus preceding all the prelates: On the contrary, in the circle of Franconia he is the last of the spiritual Princes, and gives his voice between Onolebach and Hemberg. On account of the countries which constitute him a State of the circle of Franconia, he pays an Imperial and circular matricular evaluation of one hundred and twenty-four florins, and to each chamber-term contributes two hundred and thirteen rixdollars, six kruitzers and a half.

§. 3. The arms and enfigns of this order are an erect cross fable, in a field argent, which arms Pope Celestine III. granted to it. In the field too is a cross Or, which was conferred by King Henry of Jerusalem, and in its center is seen the Imperial eagle bestowed by the Emperor Frederick II.

At each of the four corners is a lily Or, which was added to these arms by St. Louis of France.

§. 4. These Knights must be of true old German nobility and prove their descent. Both Roman-catholics and Protestants may be invested with the order, and the Protestant Knights are permitted to marry. On solemn occasions the Knights wear a white mantle with a black cross upon it, edged with a rim of silver. In other respects their dress is the same with that of other seculars, though not ornamented with the liveliest or gayest colours, and they bear a golden cross, as before described. This order has also its priests, who are subject to the rules of St. Augustine.

§. 5. The feigniories and estates, which the Teutonick order is still possessed of in Germany (for of them only we shall here speak) and which they obtained partly by purchase and partly by donation, lying contiguous, they would form a confiderable principality. These estates confist in general of what is properly called the mafterdom of Mergentheim and twelve bailiwicks. The regency at Mergentheim confifts of a vice-statholder, presidents, house-commendaries and purveyors, together with a certain number of privy, regency, spiritual and chamber-counsellors. The bailiwicks, or provinces here, are to this very day divided into the bailiwicks of the Prussian and German territories. The former consist of the bailiwicks of Alface, Austria, Coblenz and Etsch; the latter of the bailiwicks of Franconia, Old Biesen, Westphalia, Lorrain, Hesse, Saxony, Thuringia and Utrecht. These bailiwicks are governed by provincial commendars (in Latin stiled commendatores provinciales, or archi-commendatores) who are chosen out of the counsellors, or consiliarii, and confirmed by the grand-master. These, together with the counsellors, constitute the chapter, which is either fummoned to Mergentheim, or some other place, belonging to the order, and both are possessed of the right of choosing a grand-master. In the chanceries of the bailiwicks, besides the provincial commendars, sit also some counsellors, who are Knights of the order, together with a certain number of bailiwick or chancery-counfellors, and fecretaries and clerks of that office. In weighty matters appeals lie from these chanceries to the grand-master. The bailiwicks here are divided into commendaries, in Latin commenda, which are administered by commendars and again subdivided into prefecturates. A house-commendar looks to all judicial matters, discussing the fmaller and referring affairs of greater importance either to the common or provincial-commendar, under whom he stands. To the four last of the above-mentioned bailiwicks, and their annexed commendaries, for the most part, all Protestant Knights coine; but these again, as well as the Romancatholics, are subject to the grand-master.

§. 6. In what is properly the masterdom here the grand-master exercises such superiority, or sovereignty, as an immediate State of the Empire enjoys, and is also invested with such over the greatest part of the commendaries of the bailiwick of Franconia. The provincial-commendars of the bailiwicks of Alsace and Coblenz are immediate States of the Empire, and at the Diet thereof enjoy both seat and voice. On the contrary, the other provincial commendars here are considered and treated as subjects to those in whose territories they reside.

M m m 2

§. 7. To the circle of Franconia belongs only the proper masterdom of Mergentheim and the bailiwick of Franconia, and of them too we are here properly to treat; but in order to lay before us, in one view, what belongs to this order in Germany, I shall here present the reader with a general but impersect sketch of it.

I. The Masterdom of

$M \quad E \quad R \quad G \quad E \quad N \quad T \quad H \quad E \quad I \quad M.$

In it is,

- I. Mergentheim, Mergenthal, or Marienthal, in Latin Vallis Mariæ Virginis, a small town, seated on the Tauber, and the residence of the grand and Teutonick master, as also the seat of the regency above described, §. 5. In it too is a gymnasium, together with a seminarium presbyterorum & alumnorum and an amt-office. Henry of Hobenlobe, who had been Teutonick master, made a donation of this place, in the year 1220, to the order. In 1631, this town was taken by the Swedish general and field-marshal Count Guslavus Horn, and with its appendages made a seigniory in his savour, and the Protestant doctrine introduced there; but this regulation did not continue long. At Mergentheim is a rural-deanry belonging to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Wurzburg.
- 2. Neuhaus, a citadel, standing on a mountain not far from the town, and the ordinary residence of the grand and Teutonick Master. In it is an amt-office.
- 3. The vogtey of Huttenheim, fituated in the great village of that name, about one hour's distance from Scinsheim, in which co-inheritance divers seigniories are possessed of a share.
 - 4. The prefecturate of DALLAU. 5. The administration of Hilsback.
 - 6. The administration of Heuchelheim.
 - 7. That of Kirnbach.
 - 8. That of Stupferich.
 - 9. That of Weingarten.

10. The prefecturate of WEINHEIM.

11. The commendary of Horneck, which belongs also to the domains, and not to the bailiwick, of Franconia. This district is a fief of the bishoptic of Worms, and, by virtue of a stipulation of the year 1712, whenever a bishop a bishop of Worms or a grand Teutonick master dies, is within a year and day to be received in sief of each commendator there. To it belongs

Horneck, a citadel, lying on the Neckar, and Gundelsheim, a market-town, seated on the same river.

Rem. The commendator of Horneck is at the same time upper amtmen of the territory of Scheuerberg.

12. The prefecturate of NECKARSULM, which has its feat at Neckarfulm, a small town, near which the rivulet of Sulm falls into the Neckar. At this place is a rural deanry belonging to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Wurzburg.

- 13. The prefecturate of Kirchhausen is environed by the territory of the Elector-palatine; and, because the subjects belonging thereto continued faithful and obedient above others to the order during the peasants war in the sixteenth century, they have obtained for themselves and posterity certain prerogatives superior to those of others.
 - 14. The citadel and prefecturate of STOCKSBERG.

15. The prefecturate of VAINGEN.

- 16. The commendary of Sebus at Kron-Weissenburg in the Lower-Alface.
- 17. The commendary of Frankfort, on the river Mayn. See above, p. 144.

18. The commendary of Mentz.

19. The commendary of Spire. See above, p. 144.

II. The Bailiwick of F R A N C O N I A,

Which takes its name, indeed from Franconia, but the commendaries belonging to it lie not all there, but partly in the neighbouring and partly even in distant countries.

In the circle of Franconia lie the following; viz.

I. The commendary of Oellingen or Ellingen, which is furrounded by the Onolzbach upper-préfecturate of Gunzenhausen, and contains in it,

1. The prefecturate of Oellingen: in which is Oellingen, or Ellingen, a little market-town, lying on the Swabian Retzat, with a fine citadel belonging to it. This place is the usual residence of the provincial commendator of the bailiwick of Franconia. In it also is a house commendator, an architect and a purveyor. Not far from it too stands a cloyster.

Weiboldshausen, a Protestant parochial-village.

The villages and hamlets of Abersfeld, Blasenhof, Guntersbach, Lauter-bron, Oberndorf, Ottmannsfeld, St. Veti, Veits-Erlbach and Zell.

Hettingen, a Protestant parochial-village.

Alesheim, a village, for the most part belonging to this presecturate; and Several mills.

2. The prefecturate of Stopfenheim, confisting of Stopfenheim, a borough, in which is a citadel and a Roman-catholic parish-church.

3. The prefecturate of ABSBERG: in which is Absberg, a large village, containing a citadel and a Protestant parish-church.

The hamlets and petty places of Geisselberg, Grusbuhl, Hohenweiler, Langla, Langweid, Neuherberg and Rehebul, together with divers single farms and mills, as also

The greatest part of the villages of Wachstein and Pfohefeld.

4. The prefecturate and vogtey fituated in the Imperial city of Dinkelsbuhl, in the circle of Swabia. See above, p. 298.

5. The prefecturate fituated in the Imperial city of Nordlingen, which also lies in the circle of Swabia. See above, p. 289.

11. The commendary of Viernsberg is environed by the under-land of the principality of Culmbach, as also by that of Onolabach. That it lies in the marggravial Brandenburg territory is, among others, made out by the following observation: viz. that the Imperial vogtey of Burgbernbeim, the proprietors of which are the Marggraves of Bayreuth, is possessed of the criminal-jurisdiction here quite to the gate of Viernsberg. This commendary was formerly a seigniory belonging to the samily of Viernsberg. In 1235, the Burggrave Conrad II. of Nurnberg purchased it of Count Godfrey of Hobenlohe, to whom Lewis of Viernsberg was obliged to cede it, by way of recompence for the damages he had done that Count; and Viernsberg being an Imperial fief, the Emperor Frederick I. confirmed this sale the very same year. Frederick, son to the Burggrave Conrad V. was a Knight of the Teutonick order, and his father presented him with the incomes of this seigniory, which from that time has been vested as a commendary in the Teutonick order. To it belongs Viernsberg, a fine mountain-citadel, beneath which lies a hamlet; together with

The villages and hamlets of Old-Bernheim, Bockfaib, Breitenau, Buch, Buchheim, Flatengreuth, Mockenau, Berg, Dorflein, Hofen, Lower-weiler, Efzbach, Brachbach, Froschendorf, Kemmaten, Limbach, Morzbach, Upper-Bibert, Rappenau, Sondernohe, Taubersbach, Wippenau and other subjects and estates.

III. The commendary of Nurnberg has its feat in the Teutonick house in the Imperial city of Nurnberg, and comprizes in it,

1. The revenue-amt, to which belongs the village of Rothenbach, with fix fingle farms near Nurnberg, and many other estates.

2. The prefecturate of Postbaur: in which is Postbaur, a Roman-catholic parochial-village: and Kemmaten, also a village.

3. The prefecturate of Eschenbach: in which is Eschenbach, a small town, of about two hundred houses: together with The petty villages of Adelmannsdorf, Bitterbach, Waitzendorf, and Reutern.

IV. The commendary of Wurzburg has its feat at Wurzburg, in which is a house and church of the Teutonick order; but its appendages we are at present ignorant of.

V. The commendary of Munnerstadt, in the town of that name and the bishopric of Wurzburg, the appendages of which also I am not able now to affign.

In the circle of Swabia.

VI. The commendary of Heilbronn has its feat in the Imperial city of that name, in which is a fine house belonging to the Teutonick order. To this commendary appertains Wimmenthal, a large village, lying not far from the town.

Sondheim, a village, feated on the Neckar.

Dalbeim, or Thalbeim, a village, and Degmarn, lying on the Kocher.

VII. The commendary of Oettingen has its feat in the head-town of the Counts of that name. The principal places belonging to this commendary have been shown above, p. 236.

VIII. The commendary of Kapfenburg lies between the county of Oettingen, and the provostship of Elwangen, and was formerly a prefecturate of the Counts of Oettingen. To this commendary, exclusive of other estates, belongs

Kapfenburg, a citadel and village; and Lauchbeim, a small market-town, together with

The villages of Brastelburg, Hohenloch, Michelfeld, Waldbausen, and several other hamlets.

IX. The commendary of Ulm has its feat in the Imperial city of that name, and comprizes, exclusive of other estates, Bollingen, a village.

Bettingen, also a village; and Setzingen, a village, feated on the river Lonthal.

Rem. Concerning the ancient commendary of Winnenden, or Winnendels. See above, p. 195.

In the circle of Bavaria.

X. The commendary of Donauwerth, having its feat in the town of that name, which was formerly an Imperial city, but at present belongs to the Elector of Bavaria. To this commendary, among other places, is also annexed Lauterbach, a village, which, with the jurisdiction and all rights and fruits thereof, belongs to the commendary; but over which the Imperial adminishration of Worth is possessed of the blood-bann, or criminal-jurisdiction there, as has been mentioned above, p. 333.

XI. The commendary of Blumenthal, which lies in Upper-Bavaria, the rent-amt of Munich and the administration-court of Aicha. See above, p. 334. where this commendary has, through mistake, been affigned to the order of St. John.

XII. The commendary of Gankofen, or Genghofen, having its feat in the market of this name, which lies in Lower-Bavaria in the rent-amt of Landshut. See above, p. 343.

XIII. The commendary of Ratisbon, fituated in the Imperial city of Ratisbon, but of the appendages to which I am able to adduce nothing at prefent.

In the electoral Rhenish circle.

XIV. The commendary of Fritzlar, feated in the town of that name, which belongs to the Elector of Mentz, but the appendages to which I am also ignorant of.

In the upper Rhenish circle.

XV. The commendary of Kloppenheim, which has its name from the village of Kloppenheim, in the seigniory of Wishaden, belonging to Nassau-Saarbruck-Using. See p. 93. The appendages to this commendary also are unknown to me.

In Silefia.

XVI. The commendary of Namslau, situated in the town of Namslau, in the principality of Breflau.

XVII. The feigniory of Freudenthal, lying in Upper-Silefia, on the borders of Moravia, and being a guardianship, which, exclusive of the little town of Freudenthal and Wurbenthal, and the borough of Engelsberg, comprizes in it several villages. This commendary is more circumstantially described under Silefia.

In Moravia.

XVIII. The feigniory of Eulenberg, which lies in Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz. The market-town of Eulenberg is called in the Moravian Sowinec. See Vol. iv. p. 106.

XIX. The feigniory of Busow.

The remaining bailiwicks belonging to the Teutonick order, but which are not annexed to the circle of Franconia.

III. The BAILIWICK of

A L S A C E and B U R G U N D Y.

This bailiwick comprizes in it the following commanderies: viz.

In the circle of Swabia,

- 1. The commandery of Alschausen. The provincial commandator of the bailiwick of Alsace and Burgundy has his feat at the citadel of Alschausen, and on account of this commandery enjoys both seat and voice at the Diets of the circle of Swabia, and likewise at the Diet of the Empire. See above, p. 258.
 - 2. The commanderies of Robr and Waldstetten. See above, p. 258.

3. The commandery of Meinau. See above, p. 259.

- 4. The commandery of Beuggen, in the Brilgau. The village of Beuggen, or Beucken, lies near the forest-town of Rheinfelden. See above, p. 259. This commandam is also called Bruggen; but this appears to be an error of the press.
 - 5. The commandery of Freyburg, in the Brifgau. See above, p. 259.

In Swifferland,

- 6. The commandery of Hitzkirch, or Hirzkilch, fituate in what formerly conflituted the county of Robr, but which now passes under the title of the free amts. The commandery-house here stands hard by the Heidiger See, or lake.
 - 7. The commandery of Basel,

In the Sundgau,

8. The commandery of Muhlhausen, which is in league with the cantons.

Vol. V. Nnn g. The

G E R M A N Y. [Austria.

9. The commandery of Rixbeim, in the village of Rixbeim, or Rixen, and the prefecturate of Landfer.

10. The commandery of Ottmarsheim, or Ottmarsen, a market-town, also lying in the prefecturate of Landfer, not far from the Rhine.

In Upper-Alface.

11. The commandery of Gebweiler, fituated in the abbey of Murbach.

12. The commandery of Ruffach, which is a town feated in the Upper-Mundat, and belonging to the bishopric of Straszburg.

13. The commandery of Kaisersberg, which being formerly an Imperial city, lies in the land-vogtey of Hagenau.

In Lower-Alface.

14. The commandery of Andlau, which is a finall foundationary-town.

15. The commandery of Strafzburg.

Rem. Whether the crown of France has, agreeably to the treaties of Ryswick and Baaden, again restored the commandaries of the bailiwicks of Alface and Lorrain, which were taken, in the foregoing century from the Teutonick order, and conferred upon the order of St. Lazarus, I know not.

IV. The BAILIWICK of

A U S T R I A.

Of this bailiwick I have treated in Vol. iv. p. 156. but not fully; for which reason I shall here give a more ample account of it. To this bailiwick belongs,

I. The Teutonick court of Vienna, with the church in it of St. Elizabeth. At this place is the feat of the provincial-commandator of the bailiwick.

458

2. The commandery of Neustadt, in Lower-Austria.

3. The commandery near Gratz, which is the principal town in all Stiria, and on an eminence, in which the Teutonick house stands on the rivulet of Leeb.

4. The commandery of Meretintza and Great-Sonntag, in Lower-Stiria, fituated between the towns of Pettau and Fridau, not far from the river Danube.

5. The commandery of Laybach, lying in the head town of Carniola. See Vol. iv. p. 210.

6. The

459

6. The commandery of Mottling and Tschernembl in Carniola. See Vol. iv. p. 216.

7. The commandery of St. George, in the Sandhof, as also that of Frei-fach in Carinthia, in the territory of Salzburg.

8. The commandery of Linz, which is the head-town in all Upper-

Austria. See Vol. iv. p. 178.

Rem. Formerly there was also at Brixen, in Tyrol, a commandery belonging to this bailiwick; but, in the year 1622, this commandery fell to the Jesuits at Gorz.

V. The BAILIWICK fituated on the

$E ext{ } T ext{ } S ext{ } C ext{ } H ext{ } and ext{ } the ext{ } G ext{ } E ext{ } B ext{ } I ext{ } R ext{ } G,$

Which is in Tyrol, and has been described in Vol. iv. p. 229. To this bailiwick belongs,

1. The commandery of Wegenstein.

2. The Teutonick house of Trent.

3. The commandery of Lengmosz on the Ritten.

4. The Teutonick house at Storzing.

5. The jurisdiction of Schlanders.

VI. The BAILIWICK of

C O B L E N Z:

The provincial commandator of this bailiwick, who has his residence at Cologn, enjoys both seat and voice at the Diets of the circle of West-phasia and likewise at the Diet of the Empire. See Vol. iv. p. 552. To it belongs,

1. The commandery of Coblenz, in the archbishopric of Treves.

2. The commandery of Linz, in the archbishopric of Cologn.

3. The commandery of Cologn.

4. The commandery of Waldbreitbach and Rheinberg, situated in the archishopric of Cologn.

5. The commandery of Trarr.

6. The commandery of Muffendorf.

7. The commandery of Mecheln, in the Netherlands, which is called Pitzenburg.

VII. The BAILIWICK of

O L D - B I E S E N.

The commanderies belonging to this bailiwick lie partly in Germany and partly in the Netherlands, and the bailiwick itself received its rise in the year 1220.

1. The commandery of Old-Biesen, in Latin Domus Juncetana, lies in the bishopric of Liege. See Vol. iv. p. 333.

2. The commandery of New-Biesen, or simply Biesen, is seated in the Imperial city of Cologn.

- 3. The commandery of Maastricht, in which is a Teutonick house and a church, and the seat also of the provincial-commandator of this bailiwick.
- 4. The commandery of Sierstorp, in the dutchy of Juliers. See above, Vol. iv. p. 403, where the mistake made concerning it is to be corrected.

5. The commandery of Bernsheim.

6. The commandery of Gemmert, in the dutchy of Brabant, as also its Meyerey of Bois-le-Duc, lying not far from Helmont.

7. The commandery of Beekevort, also situated in the dutchy of Brabant, in the Louvain quarter, and province of Sihen.

8. The commandery of Gruterode and Feucht.

9. That of Beckenfurt.

10. The commandery of Oedingen and Holt.

11. The commandery of Ramersdorf.

12. That of St. Peter's Voeren, fituated in the dutchy of Limburg.

13. The commandery of St. Giles, at Aix la Chapelle.

VIII. The BAILIWICK of WESTPHALIA.

This bailiwick lies in the circle of Westphalia, and comprizes in it the following commanderies: viz.

1. The commandery of Munster. See Vol. iv. p. 320.

2. The commandery of Ofnabruck. See Vol. iv. p. 339.

3. The commandery of Duisburg. See above, p. 593.

4. The commandery of Brakel, in the bishopric of Paderborn.

5. The commandery of Welmen.

6. The commandery of Mahlenburg.

7. The commandery of Molheim.

IX. The BAILIWICK of

L O R R A I N.

To this bailiwick belong, among other places, the following commanderies: viz.

- 1. The commandery of Treves, which is the principal town of the archbishopric of that name
 - 2. The commandery of Beckingen.
 - 3. The commandery of Meinstedel.

X. The BAILIWICK of

H E S S E.

This bailiwick comprizes in it the following commanderies: viz.

- 1. The commandery of Marburg, wherein the provincial-commander of this bailiwick refides. See Vol. iv. p. 193.
 - 2. The commandery of Schiffenberg. See Vol. iv. p. 208.
- 3. The commandery of Upper-Forsheim, in the upper-presecturate of Alzey, in the electorate-palatine.

XI. The BAILIWICK of

S A X O N Y:

Containing in it,

- 1. The commandery of Lucklum, in the dutchy of Brunswick-Wolfen-buttel, where the provincial-commandator has his refidence.
 - 2. The commandery of Langeln, situated in the county of Wernigerode.
- 3. The commandery of Dommitzsch, which is a market-town in the electoral-circle.
- 4. The commandery of Burow, lying in the Prince of Zerbst's share of the principality of Anhalt.
- 5. The commandery of Weddingen, situated in the bishopric of Hildesheim.
 - 6. The commandery of Gottingen, in the principality of Calenberg.

Rem. The ancient commandery of Acken, in the dutchy of Magdeburg, was fold to the electoral-house of Brandenburg. Whether the commandery of Dansdorf, which I also find mentioned, be still in being, and to be found in the parochial-village of that name, in the electoral circle and the prefecturate of Belzig, I cannot affirm with any degree of certainty.

XII. The COMMENDARY OF THURIN RINGS IA.

In it is,

1. The commandery of Griffstadt, on the Unstrut, situate between Weiffensee and Sachsenburg.

2. The commandery of Liebstadt, on the Saale, lying not far from Jena, and being the head-town of this bailiwick.

3. The commandery of Negelstett, or Nielstett, on the Unstrut, situate not far from Langensalza.

XIII. The BAILIWICK of

According to common report, this bailiwick is suppressed: but as the new genealogical, schematical, Imperial and political-manual, mentions by name the present provincial-commandator thereof, it must be still in being, though I am not able to give any account of it.

The Princely-County of H E N N E B E R G.

§.1. JANSSON, Schenk and Valk, have published land-charts of this county, but their charts are greatly surpassed by that published by Homann's heirs in the year 1743, which were delineated by J.G. Kusel under the inspection of Joh. Jacob Zink, aulic-counsellor of Saxe-Meinungen. This chart, in the Atlas of Germany, constitutes the seventieth.

§. 2. This county terminates, to the east, on the principalities of Coburg and Schwarzenberg; to the north, on those of Gotha and Eisenach; to the west, on the landgravate of Hesse and the bishopric of Fulda, and, to the south, on the bishopric of Wurzburg. Its extent, from north to south, amounts pretty nearly to fix German miles; and, from west to east to about five and a half.

§. 3. In

§. 3. In most of its districts agriculture is pursued with tolerable profit and success. In some places also tobacco is cultivated. Near Ihmenau are even yet mines of copper and silver, and with respect to those of iron and steel they are still more numerous here. At Salzungen and Schmalkalden is made salt, and in some places also are medicinal springs. The principal river in this country is the Werra, which comes out of the principality of Hildburghausen, and near the village of Sigritz enters the country of Henneberg where, after dividing itself into two parts, it receives into it the little rivers of Schleusz, Schwarza, Felde, and other smaller streams, continues its course through this country into the landgravate of Hesse.

§. 4. In it we find ten boroughs and five market-towns.

- §. 5. No other religion than that of the Luiberans is usually practised here, excepting that at Schmalkalden is also a Protestant Calvinist church. At Schleusingen is a gymnasium, and in the other towns are also petty Latin schools.
- §. 6. Besides the fustian-manufactures at Meinungen and Subla, and those likewise for arms, iron, and steel at Subla and Schmalkalden, there are no other manufactures of any consideration in this country.
- §. 7. The very ancient family of the former Counts of Henneberg first began to assume that title in the eleventh century. In the thirteenth century it was divided into three principal lines; namely, into those of Schleufing, Aschaeb, and Hartenberg. In the year 1310 Count Berthold X. was raised to the princely dignity; notwithstanding which the Princes of Henneberg have generally made use of the title of Count. Exclusive of what is even at this day reckoned as belonging to the princely county of Henneberg, that house has also been in the possession of the present principalities of Coburg and Hildburghausen, which are called the new seigniory of Henneberg; as likewise of the presecturate of Fischberg, which the soundation of Fulda has again released, and several other places, which are now fallen to the bishopric of Wurzburg. In 1554 the Princes William and George Ernest entered into a league of succession with the princely houses of Saxe-Coburg and Hesse. But the male stock of Henneberg becoming extinct in the year 1583 in the person of Prince George Ernest, the proper princely county, or old feigniory of Henneberg, devolved to Saxe-Coburg, and the town and seigniory of Schmalkalden wholly to the house of Hesse. The places and estates, which the bishopric of Wurzburg has obtained, were incorporated with that fee before the extinction of the Princes of Henneberg. The abovementioned country foon departed from the line of Saxe-Coburg, and was both possessed and governed in common by the electoral house of Saxony, and the Dukes of Saxony, Altenburg, and Weimar. The Elector John George I. left his share therein to his youngest son Duke Maurice. But the princely sharers of the county coming to consider the inconveniency of their government thereof came to an agreement in 1660, at Weimar, concerning a division of the country, by which division the electoral house of Saxony obtained the share it is possessed of at this day. Duke Frederick William II. founder of the line of Altenburg, obtained the towns and amts of Meinungen, Maszfeld, and Themar, as also the vogtey of Behrungen and other places for his share; which places, after the death of his son Duke Frederick William III. which happened in 1672, fell to Duke Ernest III. founder of the line of Gotha, and after his death were divided in such a manner between his third and fourth fons Bernbard and Henry, that the former obtained Meinungen, Maszfeld, Wasungen, Sand, Breitungen, and Salzungen; the latter, Rombild, Behrungen, Themar, and other places. Duke Bernhard of Saxe-Meinungen transmitted his country hereditarily to his fon Duke Ernest Lewis, and the latter also to his son Duke Antony Ulrich. Duke Ernest of Rombild dving without heirs in the year 1710, his share of the country fell to the princely houses of Meinungen, Gotha, Saalfeld, and Hildburghausen. Duke William of Saxe-Weimar obtained in the division of 1660 the present Weimar share in this princely county; which was, indeed, divided among the lines of Weimar and Eisenach, which were descended from him: But in 1741, the latter of these lines becoming extinct, it fell again entirely to the former. At present the princely county of Henneberg has the following Lords for its possessions, namely, the Elector of Saxony, the Dukes of Saxe-Weimar, Meinungen, Gotha, Coburg-Saalfeld, and Hilburghausen, and the Landgrave of Helle-Callel.

§. 8. The above-mentioned Saxon Dukes bear this country in their titles, in as much as on account of their feveral shares therein, they still themselves princely Counts of Henneberg. The armorial shield of Henneberg is divided into four fields. In the first and fourth is a pillar crowned in a field gules, and in the second and third a hen sable, with red comb and crest, placed on a mount verte, in a field Or. The Dukes of Saxony, after the extinction of the princely male line of Henneberg, adopted the Henneberg hen into their armorial shield.

§. 9. At the Diet of the Empire in the council of Princes thereof is, on account of the princely county of Henneberg, one voice, which is alternately possessed by the Elector of Saxony and the Dukes of Saxe-Weimar and Hildburghausen. At the Diets of the circle of Franconia, on account thereof, are three voices on the bench of Princes, which are called the Henneberg-Schleusingen, the Henneberg-Rombild, and HennebergSchmalkalden voice. In the beginning of the sixteenth century the bishopric of Wurzburg wanted, on account of the estates formerly belonging to Henneberg which it is in possession of, to have also a voice in the circle, but was not able to procure one. The Imperial and circular matricular evaluation of this country amounts to one hundred and ninety florins, which evaluation is divided in such a manner that the Elector of Saxony on account of Schleusingen, contributes thereto the sum of forty-seven florins, fifty

fifty-nine kruitzers and a half; Saxe-Meinungen the fum of fifty-five florins, fixteen kruitzers and a quarter; Themar, or Saxe-Gotha, thirteen florins, fifty-five kruitzers and a half; Behrungen, or Saxe-Hildburghausen, two florins, twenty-nine kruitzers and three quarters; Melis, or Saxe-Gotha, fortyfive kruitzers; Ilmenau, or Saxe-Weimar, ten florins, seventeen kruitzers; Kalten Nordheim, or Saxe-Weimar, also ten florins, seventeen kruitzers; Rombild thirty-three florins; and Schmalkalden, or Heffe-Caffel fixteen. With respect to the chamber-terms, there occur, on account of this country, in the usual matricula, the following articles: viz. Henneberg-Schleusingen pays to each term one hundred and ninety rixdollars, thirty-fix kruitzers; the Elector of Saxony feventy-nine rixdollars, fixteen kruitzers; Saxe-Meinungen fixty-three rixdollars, thirty-nine kruitzers; Saxe-Weimar thirteen rixdollars, eighty-one kruitzers and three quarters; Saxe-Eisenach thirteen rixdollars, eighty-one kruitzers and three quarters; Saxe-Hildburghausen two rixdollars feventy-eight kruitzers; Saxe-Gotha fixteen rixdollars, feventyfeven kruitzers; Hesse-Cassel, on account of Henneberg-Schmalkalden, also nineteen rixdollars, eight kruitzers and a half; the billiopric of Wurzburg, on account of the Henneberg lands, forty rixdollars, thirty-three kruitzers: and Saxe-Meinungen, on account of Henneberg-Rombild, eighty-one rixdollars, fourteen kruitzers and a half. The princely Counts of Henneberg are hereditarily marshals of the bishopric of Wurzburg.

§. 10. Having given this general account of the country of Henneberg, we are now more accurately to describe the shares which each of the above-mentioned (§. 7.) princely houses is possessed of in this princely county.

I. The electoral house of Saxony,

In its share of the country which reverted to it on the death of Duke Maurice William of Saxe-Zeitz, administers all regency and chamber matters by what is called a superintendent-amt, or superintendency. Consistorial affairs here the consistory looks to, and the country itself is divided in the following manner: viz.

1. Into the town and prefecturate of Schleusingen. In it is Schleusingen, formerly the residence-town of the Princes of Heineberg, and at present the seat of the electoral Saxon superintendency, lying on the little river Schleusz, and having a citadel. This town is not large, and on account of the adjoining Thuringian wood, has but little land sit for tillage. In it, however, is a superintendency, and a gymnasium, which Prince George Ernest caused to be consecrated in the year 1577, and which belongs in common to all the Dukes of Saxony, who are possessed of any share in the princely county of Henneberg. Schleusingen also contains a commendary belonging to the order of St. John which was founded in 1291. The town-Vol. V.

council here is immediately subject to the Prince. This place was entirely consumed by fire in 1553, and the greatest part of it also in 1632.

The Wilhelmsbrunn is a medicinal spring rising in a woody tract about one half hour's distance to the fouth of Schleusingen.

Hirschbach, a village, feated on the Erla, wherein are some iron forges. Hindernau, a parochial-village, together with divers other villages and feats.

2. The prefecturate of Suhla, to which belongs

Subla, an open town, lying on the river Hasel, and being the seat of a superintendency. This place contains in it some manufactures of steel, as also sustains and ticks, which were once however of greater importance than at present. Formerly also there was a salt-work here. In the year 1590 this town suffered greatly by fire, in 1634 still more, and in 1753 so very much that above seven hundered houses were burnt down in it.

Heinricks, a borough, feated on the Hafel, and containing some steel and iron foundaries.

Marisfeld, a parochial-village.

3. The prefecturate of KUHNDORF, in which is to be remarked

Kuhndorf, a large parochial-village, with a citadel in it. Not far from this place stands the high mountain of Dolmar, on which is erected a fine seat and pleasure-building.

Dillstatt, a village seated on the Hasel.

Rehr, a parochial-village, fituated in a very fruitful tract.

Schwarza, a parochial-village, with a citadel in it, and a paper-mill, belonging to the Counts of Stolberg-Wernigerode, under the jurisdiction of the Elector of Saxony. Count Albrecht, who, in the year 1549, concluded the line of Rombild-Aschach, and had for wife Catherine daughter to Count Botho of Stolberg, resided at this place.

4. The prefecturate of Benshausen, which is governed by the officers of Kubndorf, and one half of which formerly belonged to the princely house of Hesse, which house exchanged its share therein in 1619 for the Saxon share in the prefecturate of Hallenberg. In this prefecturate is to be remarked

Benshausen, a borough.

Viernau, a village and farm. And Ebertshausen, a parochial-village, containing a nobleman's estate.

5. The domain and farm of Vesta, originally called Vestau or Vesta, lies on the river Schleusz, which not far from hence runs into the Werra, and was formerly, namely in 1131, an abbey of Præmonstratensian Monks, as also, till the time of Prince William IV. the buryal-place of the Counts and Princes of Henneberg. The great cloyster-church here is still in being. At this place also is a stud of horses. It is to be observed by the way that the name of this place shews that the Werra was anciently called the Westar. See p. 35.

6. The domain and farm of Robr, situated a quarter of an hour's distance from the above-mentioned village of Robr under the prefecturate of Kubn-dorf, and formerly a nunnery. Near the old cloyster-building here stands a finall church.

II. The ducal house of Saxe-Weimar is possessed of

1. The old Weimar share, which consists of the presecturate of ILMENAU, and comprizes in it Ilmenau, a finall mine-town, feated on the Ilm, hard by the Thuringian wood, which formerly belonged to the Counts of Kerfenberg, by whom it was disposed of in 1343 to the Counts of Henneberg for the sum of 2000 marks of fine silver, and by the latter for some time mortgaged to the Counts of Schwarzburg, till at length, after many revolutions, it came again to Henneberg. In the years 1603 and 1624 this place sustained great damage by fire, and in 1752, together with the castle and arsenal, was entirely burnt down, excepting six houses which stood in the suburbs. The mine-office has the inspection of the copper and silver-mines here, but these were formerly much more considerable than at present. The Latin school here is of no consideration.

The parochial-villages of Mertinrode and Haida.

2. That part which formerly constituted the share of Saxe-Eisenach, namely,

1. The prefecturate of Lichtenberg, or Ostheim. To which belongs

Lichtenberg, a mountain-citadel, which, in the year 1525, was laid waste by the peafants.

Ostheim vor der Rhone, a small town, receiving its surname from the mountain of Rhone, which extends itself from Melpers on the Ulster quite beyond Bischofssheim. In this town, as co-heirs and noblemen, reside the Lords of Stein, Altenstein, Fehde, Mansbach, Thann, &c. In it also is an inspection-office which has the care of the parishes belonging to it.

Helmerskausen, a market-town, seated on the Herpf below the old castle of Hutsberg. At this place also is a free farm, called the farm or seat of Henneberg, which has always been considered as an appendage to the castle of that name, for which reason it still belongs to the Duke of Saxe-

Meinungen.

Sundheim, Heflar, and other villages.

Rem. In p. 22, fee a remark on this prefecturate.

2. The prefecturate of KALTEN-NORDHEIM, in which is Kalten-Nordheim, a market-town, containing an old castle called Zur Meerlinsen, and lying on the Felde. In the year 1634 this place was set on fire by the Croats, and almost wholly reduced to ashes.

O o o 2 Kalten-

Kalten-Westbeim, a parochial-village.

Kalten-Sundheim, a market-town, situated on the Felde.

The villages of Erbenkausen, Reichenhausen, Oberweyd, Mittelsdorf, and Andenhausen. The latter of these places is reckoned by the foundation of Fulda as belonging to the prefecturate of Fischberg. See p. 20.

Rem. In the Fulda prefecturate of Fischberg, which was formerly mortaged to the Princes of Henneberg, see p. 19, the princely house of Saxe-Weimar took possession in 1741 of the following hereditary estates, subjects, rents, revenues, &c. belonging to Henneberg; namely of several meadows and fields, together with all taxes, quit-rents, reliefs, jurisdiction and superiority, &c. thereto belonging; as also of several mills and inns; of the rivulet of Felde, which runs from Kalten-Nordheim through Fischbach; of Diedorf, and the whole presecturate of Fischberg; of the abovementioned little village of Andenbausen; of the several parishes, churches, and schools in the presecturate of Fischberg; of two estates and four seudal houses at Fischbach; together with two estates at Wiesenthal, and a nobleman's seat at Diedorf. Compare p. 19.

III. The ducal house of Saxe-Weimar.

This house is possessed of the greatest share in this country, which share lies in the middle thereof, extending from the boundaries of the principality of Eisenach quite to the bishopric of Wurzburg. To it belongs

1. Meinungen, or Meiningen, a town, feated amidst high mountains on the river Werra, which Duke Bernhard of Saxony, on his obtainment of it in 1681, chose for his residence, and caused a new palace, with a chapelor church, to be built, naming it from his consort Elizabethenburg, and in this palace as well the princely library and cabinet of medals, as also the Henneberg archives, which belong in common to the electoral and princely houses of Saxony, are to be seen. At this palace likewise the princely regency, the chamber and consistory have their seats. In the town we find one parish-church, together with a Latin school, an orphan-house, and a house of correction and spinning. It contains also a superintendency. The manusactures of sustain here were formerly more considerable than at present, the burghers applying themselves now to the culture of tobacco. In the year 1542 this town came by exchange from the bishopric of Wurzburg to the Counts of Henneberg in lieu of the presecturate of Mainburg. In 1461 and 1475 it suffered greatly by fire.

2. The prefecturates of Meinungen and Maszfeld, comprehending

1. The Werra-Grund, in which is Under-Maszfeld, a parochial-village and citadel.

Upper-Maszfeld, also a parochial-village.

Grimmenthal, in popish times a celebrated place of pilgrimage, and at present containing a hospital.

The parochial-villages of Leutersdorf, Vachdorf, and Belrieth, in the last of which is a citadel.

2. The Juchjen Grund, lying on the rivulet of Juchjen, and containing in it Juchsen, a parochial-village, in which is a princely domain, and a nobleman's seat.

Rutschenhausen, or Rixenhausen, also a parochial-village.

Sophienlust, formerly called the Memelsfeld-hof, which Sophia Elizabeth, dutchess by marriage of Saxe-Meinungen, purchased of the last owner Baumbach, and caused to be enlarged and improved, calling it after her own name.

3. The Sulzfeld-Grund, in which is Sulzfeld, a parochial-village.

Henneberg, also a parochial-village, with a domain. On a mountain near this village stood the stein-house of the Counts of Henneberg, which building, in 1525, was reduced to ashes by the rebellious peasants. Prince Henry XIII. was the last who resided therein, and also died there in 1405.

Hermansfeld, a parochial-village, near a small lake, and therein an island, on which formerly stood a chapel dedicated to St. Wolfgang, to which frequent pilgrimages were made. There is now a hunting-house standing here, which is still called Zum Wolfgang.

4. The Herpf-Grund, feated on the brook of Herpf, and containing Herpf, a parochial-village, which is environed with a wall. At this place formerly were co-heirs. The adjoining mountain of Zur Gebe is reckoned the highest in this princely county.

Bettenhausen, a parochial-village.

Seba, a small village, containing a free farm, and near it a small but very deep lake.

Stepfershausen, containing a nobleman's estate, together with Solz, are-both parochial-villages.

Dreysigacker, also a parochial-village, with a domain belonging to it. 5. Wilmars, a village, in which also are some subjects of Baron Stein.

6. Berkach, a village, containing subjects both of Wurzburg and Baron Stein.

Rem. The following villages are all noble, and immediately subject to the Prince: viz.

Ellingshausen, a parochial-village, Helba, Wolkershausen, Landsberg, Rippershausen, Trebs, Geba, Gleimershausen, Hesselbach, Harles, Einordhausen, Schwiggershausen, and Renthwertshausen.

3. The prefecturate of WASUNGEN. In it

Wasungen, a very ancient little town, seated on the river Werra, with an old citadel in it. The inhabitants of this place apply themselves to the culture of tobacco. In it too is a pretty Latin school. In the year 1596 Bernhard Marshal of Oshbeim sounded a nunnery for ladies at this place.

Metzels and Schwallungen, both parochial-villages.

Lower-Schmalkalden, a village.

4. The prefecturate of SAND. In it is Sinnershausen, an estate, which was formerly a monastery.

Georgenzell, also formerly a cloyster.

Zilbach, a hunting-house: And

The parochial-villages of Rose, in which is a nobleman's estate, Frittels-bausen and Lower-Katza.

5. The prefecturate of Frauenbreitungen. In it is Frauenbreitungen, a market-town, feated on the river Werra. Formerly there was an Augustine nunnery at this place which anciently belonged to the foundation of Hersfeld. King Henry IV. too frequently residing here, it was from thence also called Konigsbreitungen.

Altenbreitungen, a village, seated on the river Werra.

Wernsbausen, a parochial-village.

The noble estates and seats of Knollenbach, Kramersdorf, Neuenroda, Farnbach, Meimershof, and Beyeroda.

6. The town and prefecturate of SALZUNGEN. In it is Salzungen, a small town, seated on the Werra, and taking its name from the salt-springs there. Of these salt springs there are two in particular, one of which rises in the town, and this is reckoned the best, its water being eight loths * rich. The other lies before the Nappen-gate, and the water of this is only between fix and seven loths. The pannery here, or the right of salt-works, depends on chancery-writ.

Not far, or at most about one quarter of an hour's distance from the town, is an acid spring called the Grundhof.

On a mountain too at no great distance from the town of Salzungen, formerly stood a citadel, named Frankenstein, which had its own Lords.

7. The prefecturate of ALTENSTEIN belonged anciently to the Lords Hunden of Wenkheim, together with the high and low jurisdiction thereof; but these Lords becoming extinct in 1722, it reverted, as an open fief, to the princely house of Saxe-Meinungen. In it is Altenstein, a citadel.

Schweina, a large market-town, with a citadel and an orphan-house in it.

The villages of Steinbach, Gumpelstadt, and Walfisch, together with the feats of Profisch and Erbach.

^{*} A German loth is half an ounce. The richness then, I suppose, of this water consists in so many half ounces of salt to a certain portion of lymph.

Rem. In this prefecturate are also situated the following noble places, which are immediately subject to the Prince: viz.

Liebenstein, a ruinous citadel, below which lies

The Sauerbrunn, a small village, with a church in it, and taking its name from a good acid spring there.

Wenigen-Schweina, a village.

Upper-Zell, a village, in which are the feats of Clausberg and Taxberg. Tiedle sz, a village, containing the citadel of Feldeck and the Reussenber.

8. The prefecturate or ancient feigniory of ROMHILD, formerly belonging to the Hartenberg-Rombild line of the house of Henneberg. Count Bertbold, the last of this line, borrowing a considerable sum of money of the Counts of Mansfeld, as a security for it mortgaged to them the whole seigniory of Rombild. This Count therefore dying without heirs in the year 1549, the Counts of Mansfeld took possession of the seigniory which was opposed by the Princes of Henneberg of the Schleusing line. In 1555 the Counts of Mansfeld ceded to the Dukes of Saxe-Weimar the entire succession of Rombild, together with the mortgages of Lichtenberg and Bruckenau, in exchange for the prefecturate of Oidisleben, and the sum of 50,000 guldens. After the extinction of the line of Saxe-Rombild in the year 1710, two thirds of this seigniory came to Saxe-Meinungen, and one third to Saxe-Coburg-Saalfeld. In it is Rombild, a town, containing a citadel called the Glucksburg. In Rombild also is a superintendency and a Latin school. Near the town-church formerly was a soundation of twelve canons. In the year 1606 this place was almost entirely consumed by fire. In 1676, 1714, and 1723 it suffered again, though not in so great a degree, by the same dreadful calamity.

On a mountain not far from the town stood the citadel of Hartenberg, or Hartburg, formerly the residence of a particular branch of the Henneberg line, which afterwards became extinct. Duke Henry of Saxony caused some pleasure-buildings to be erected at this place in the year 1701.

The villages of Hayna, Milz, Hindfeld, Menthausen, Westenfeld, Gleichenbergen, Lind, Sundheim, Eicha, or by the Eiche, Zeilfeld, and Sulzdorf also belong to this seigniory, together with one half of Schwiggerhausen, the other half of it belonging to the Lords of Bronsart, and the cent or hundred of Rothbausen and Rappershausen, the sormer of which villages belongs as to the rest to the cloyster of Bildhausen, and the other to the samily of the Truchses. In the co-hereditary village of Trapsladt, the presecturate of Rombild, the kellery of Konigshosen, the chapter of Wurzburg, and the Barons of Faust are possessed each of a share, but the Directorium is vested in the presectuate of Rombild alone.

IV. The Dukes of Saxe-Gotha and Coburg-Saalfeld are possessed of

I. The prefecturate of THEMAR

After the following manner; that is to fay, the former is possessed of one third and the latter of two thirds thereof. This prefecturate comprizes in it

- 1. Themar, an old little town, fituated on the Werra, and containing in it the amt-office, and a decanate, as also a petty Latin school. This place carries on a considerable trade in wool. In the year 1634 the greatest part of it was burnt by the Croats.
- 2. The villages of Ehrenberg, Grimmeltshausen, and Wachenbron, the last of which stands upon a mountain, together with the parochial-villages of Exdorf and Dingsleben, as also those of Reurit, Lengfeld, &c.

3. Troftatt, a farm or domain, on which formerly stood a nunnery.

V. The ducal house of Saxe-Hildburghausen is possessed of

The prefecturate of Behrungen, containing

Bebrungen, or Bebringen, anciently named Baringe, a parochial-village, and the principal place of this prefecturate.

VI. The Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel is possessed of

That tract which formerly constituted the seigniory, and forms the upper-presecturate of Schmalkalden, having been purchased by Henry Landgrave of Hesse, and by Elizabeth widow to Prince John of Henneberg, in the year 1360, of the Burggrave Albrecht of Nurnberg, for the sum of 4,300 gold guldens. After the extinction of the Princes of Henneberg, the Landgraves of Hesse, by virtue of a treaty of succession, obtained to their own share of this seigniory also the other part, in which are the following prefecturates: viz.

1. The prefecturate of SCHMALKALDEN, containing Schmalkalden, a town, fituated at the foot of the Thuringian wood, on a rivulet of the same name, which at this place receives into it the Stille. Schmalkalden is a pretty large, thriving, and populous town. On a hill near it stands the citadel of Wilhelmsburg, formerly called Walderf, but having been entirely rebuilt by the Landgrave William IV. is, on that account, named after him. In the centre of the town stands an old house of the Prince's called the Hessenber. Elizabeth, sister to the Landgrave Philip, and dutchess of Saxony, having made it her place of residence towards the middle middle of the fixteenth century. In this town also is a collegiate-church, in which were formerly twelve canons, together with a town-church, which is possessed in common by the Lutherans and Calvinists, and a Latin school. The salt-pits here in conjunction with the neighbouring mines of iron and steel, as also the forges, bring in considerable advantages to the town, which carries on a great trade in iron and steel wares. The meeting, which the Protestant Princes held here in the years 1529, 1530, 1531, 1533, 1535, 1540, the league which they concluded here in 1531, and the theological articles drawn up by Dr. Luther, which they caused to be consisted by their teachers, have rendered this town of great note in history.

Several villages.

2. The vogtey of Herrenbreitungen. In it is Herrenbreitungen, or Burgbreitungen, a borough, seated on the river Werra opposite to Frauenbreitungen, and formerly containing in it a celebrated monastery of Benedictines, which was secularized in 1553, and is now become a citadel.

Drusen, a parochial-village.

3. The vogtey of Barchfeld, having its feat in the great parochial-village of the same name, which lies on the Werra. At this place is a noble seudal court belonging to Hesse.

4. The cent or vogtey of Broterod, to which belong the borough of Bro-terod, the Infelberg, and Little-Schmalkalden.

5. The prefecturate of HALLENBERG, which formerly belonged in part to the house of Saxony, whose share in it was, in the year 1619, received by Hesse in exchange for one half of the cent of Benshausen. In this prefecturate is Hallenberg, a ruinous citadel, seated on a mountain, together with The parochial-village of Steinbach, and some others.

The PRINCELY COUNTY of S C H W A R Z E N B E R G.

§. I. A Tolerable view of this county is to be had in Vetter's chart of the principality of Onolzbach. It is for the most part environed by the bishopric of Bamberg, the county of Castell, and the seigniory of Speckfeld; as also by the Underland of the principality of Bayreuth, the principality of Onolzbach, and the bishopric of Wurzburg. This county in its greatest extent, as it lies contiguous, is four German miles long, but in some parts only half a one, though in others above sive quarters of a mile broad.

Vol. V. Pp

§. 2. The inhabitants here are partly of the Protestant Lutheran, and partly of the Romish church.

§. 3. The ancestors of the present Princes of Schwarzenberg were originally stiled Lords of Seinsheim. These Lords came to be divided into the lines of Seinsheim and Schwarzenberg, the former of which was first raised to the dignity of Baron, and afterwards to that of Count, and flourishes still in Bavaria. The latter procured that other country in Franconia, and in 1417 was raised to the dignity of Baron, in 1566 to that of Count of the Empire, and in 1671 to the state of Prince, which princely dignity Joseph Adam obtained in 1747 for all his posterity. These Princes also are possessed of the princely landgravate of Klettgau, of the seigniory of Gimborn and Neustadt, of the dutchy of Crumau and several seigniories in Bohemia, (see Vol. iv. p. 82, 85, &c. and also in Stiria, (see Vol. iv. p. 475.

§. 4. The title of the reigning Prince is, Prince of Schwarzenberg, of the boly Roman Empire princely Landgrave in the Klettgau, Count of Sulz, Dake of Crumau, and Lord of Gimborn, of the boly Roman Empire hereditary audick judge of Rothweil, and Lord of the feigniories of Murau, Wittingau, Frauenberg, Postelberg, Wildschutz, Worlick, Reissenstein, Dragoniz, Protowin, Winterberg, and Chinau. His arms are a shield quarterly, the first and sourth fields of which are argent and azure, divided eight sold length wise, on account of Schwarzenberg; and in the third and sourth quarter is seen a black raven picking out the eyes of a Turk's head, in memory of the fortress of Raab in Hungary which was taken from the Turks in 1598, by Count Adolphus.

§. 5. In the year 1674 the Princes of Schwarzenberg obtained, on account of the princely county of Schwarzenberg, both seat and voice in the council of the Princes of the Empire, and, so early as the year 1672, a place on the bench of Princes in the circle of Franconia. Their Imperial and Circular matricular evaluation on account of this princely county, and likewise on account of the seigniory of Seinsheim, is forty-nine florins. To each chamber-term they contribute, on account of Schwarzenberg or Hobenlandsberg, sixteen rixdollars, and on account of Schwarzenberg thirty-five.

§. 6. At the citadel of Schwarzberg resides the princely regency over the princely county of Schwarzenberg and the seigniory of Seinskeim. The chancery-director here is at the same time upper-amtman of the nine prefecturates, of which both countries consist, and over which is also appointed a Centgrave whose business is to look to the criminal jurisdiction. For the regulation of the Protestant churches and subjects here is appointed a Protestant consistory; but the Roman-catholics stand under the bishopric of Wurzburg.

§. 7. The prefecturates in the princely county of Schwarzenberg are the following: viz.

z. The

1. The vogt-amt of Mark-Schainfeld, having its feat at

Mark-Schainfeld, a market-town, in which is a Roman-catholic parish-church. The princely house of Schwarzenberg is invested by Brandenburg-Onolzbach, with the criminal jurisdiction of this place, and by Wurzburg also with the criminal jurisdiction there. Not far from it lies Schwarzenberg, a mountain-citadel, from which the Princes and the country obtain their name.

Under-Leimbach, a Protestant parochial-village.

2. The vogt-amt of Geiselwind, which has its seat at Geiselwind, a market-town, containing a Roman-catholic parith-church.

3. The vogt-amt of Seebausz, having its seat at Seehausz, a citadel, standing on a small sea or lake, which citadel Frederick Lewis Baron of Seinsheim disposed of with other possessions to the house of Schwarzenberg.

The ancient mountain-citadels of Hohen-Landsberg and Hohen-Kottenheim are laid waste.

Weigenheim, a parochial-village, which is wholly Protestant, and lying about one short hour's distance from Uffenheim.

Nordheim, a Protestant parochial-village, disposed of by the Seinskeim line to that of Schwarzenberg.

Krassolzheim, or Krasselsheim, a Protestant parochial-village. Dornheim, a parochial-village, inhabited by Roman-catholics.

4. The vogt-amt of Erlack, having its feat at Erlach, a village, lying between Ochsenfurt and Ketzingen, and containing in it a Protestant and a Roman-catholic parish-church, as also a citadel.

5. The administratory-prefecturate of MARK-BRAIT, which has its feat at Mark-Brait, or Under-Brait, a small town, situated on the Mayn, and containing in it a Protestant parish-church, notwithstanding which there are two Roman-catholic fathers there. This place was sold by the Seinskeim line to that of Schwarzenberg.

6. The administratory-prefecturate of Michelbach, which has its seat at Michelbach on the Luck, a village, situated between the territory of the Imperial city of Rothenburg and the Onolzbach upper-prefecturate of Creilsheim. In this village is a citadel and a Protestant parish-church.

Rem. The seigniory of Seinsbeim occurs hereaster among the counties and seigniories of this circle in its proper place.

The PRINCES of

LOWENSTEIN-WERTHEIM.

Who in the circle of Franconia have obtained both voice and feat on the bench of Princes, are derived from the following origin. Pfalzgrave Frederick the Victorious, who after the death of his brother Lewis IV. in the year 1449, took upon him the guardianship of his son Philip then under age, but afterwards retained the electorate-palatine for life; made, indeed, a promise that he would never marry, but notwithstanding this promise took Clara of Tettingen, or Dettingen, to wife, on whom he begat two legitimate fons, named Frederick and Lewis, and to these he bequeathed the seigniories of Scharfeneck, Weinsberg, Neustadt on the Kocher, Meckmuhl, Utzberg, and Umstadt, but with consent of his brother's son Philip, whom he adopted and appointed as his son and succeffor in the electorate. But Frederick the elder of his two fons dying in 1474, he allotted these seigniories in inheritance to his younger son Lewis: After his death, however, the Pfalzgrave Philip obtaining the electorate, he allowed the faid Lewis only the feigniory of Scharfeneck, claiming all the rest to himself; and on the contrary gave him the county of Lowenstein, which has been already described; which county he was obliged, in the year 1510, to receive in fief as a subject of Duke Ulrich of Wurtemberg, whence as at that time so it also yet stands under the sovereignty of Wurtemberg. The Emperor Maximilian created this Lewis a Count, and from him it is that the present Princes and Counts of Lowenstein-Wertheim derive their descent. This Count died in 1524. His grandson Count Lewis married Anna, third daughter to Count Lewis of Stolberg, Konig stein, and Wertheim, by which marriage the counties of Wertheim, Rochefort, and Montaign, together with the seigniories of Breuberg, Herbemont, and Chassepierre devolved to the house of Lowenstein. This Count also died in 1611. His son, Count Christopher Lewis, married Elizabeth, daughter to Count Joachim of Manderscheidt, and thus brought the county of Virnenburg, with other estates, to the house of Lowenstein. This Count Christopher is the founder of the elder and Protestant line of this house; which is stiled the Lowenstein-Wertheim-Virnenburg line, and still continues in the State of Counts. His brother, Count John Theode ick, founded the Roman-catholic line of Lowenstein-Wertheim-Rochefort, which, in the year 1711, obtained the dignity of Prince of the Empire, and of these we are here properly to treat. In the year 1730 this line was admitted in the circleof Franconia to the bench of Princes, on a promise of accepting and paying down a matricular evaluation of fixteen florins, till fuch time as it should should have provided itself with immediate Imperial estates, on which the usual evaluation, and that suitable to a Prince of the circle might be grounded. At the Diet of the Empire it as yet enjoys neither place nor voice in the council of the Princes thereof. And as the princely voice in the circle of Franconia is not founded on the share which this line possesses in the county of Wertheim, so the description of that county is not to be sought for here but lower down, under the countries in its proper place.

The COUNTY of HOHENLOHE.

§. 1. OF this county Mr. John Charles Chapuzet has delineated a good land chart, which Homann's heirs caused to be engraved in 1748, and in the Atlas of Germany is the feventy-first.

§. 2. This county borders on the masterdom of Mergentheim; the bishopric of Wurzburg, the princely territory of Hazfeld, the principality of Onolzbach, the territories of the Imperial cities of Rotenburg and SwabianHall, the dutchy of Wurtemberg, and a part of the electorates of Mentz, as also on the palatinate. According to Chapuzet's chart, its greatest extent from west to east is about five German miles and three quarters, and from north to south six and a half. It was anciently much larger, and formed nearly one third of all Franconia. Its name it derives from the family seat of Hobenloch, otherwise called Holloch, Honloch, Hollo, &c. which stood not far from the present Brandenburg-Onolzbach town of Uffenheim, near the village of Hollach.

§. 3. It has its mountains, valleys, and plains. The fouth-fide of the first furnishes the traveller with a prospect of fine vineyards, which in some places adjoin to each other for several hours distance. The north-side is proper for agriculture, and on the tops of these mountains are commonly found valuable woods of oak, fir, pine, beech, and birch, in which a great variety of game find shelter. In the valleys is good meadow-ground, whence also the breed of cattle here is good. Their agriculture also turns to good account, particularly about Vehringen and Kupserzell. At Weiszbach is a salt-work. At Mainhard, Hosselbronn and Under-Eppach are medicinal springs. There are also here rivers, brooks, and lakes, or ponds, abounding in fish. To the first belong, 1. The Kocher, which issuing out of the territory of the Imperial city of Swabian-Hall enters into the county of Höhenlohe, and out of the latter into the dutchy of Wurtemberg.

2. The

- 2. The Jagst, which comes out of the principality of Onolzbach, and, after quitting the county, enters into the archbishopric of Mentz. 3. The Tauber, which runs into the presecturates of Schillingsfurst and Weikersheim, and passes out of the latter into the masterdom of Mergentheim. 4. The Wernitz, which rises at Frankenau not far from Schillingsfurst, and passes through the territory of Rothenburg into the principality of Onolzbach.
- §. 4. This county contains in it ten cities, three market-towns, and twelve citadels.
- §. 5. The Reformation, which was begun here in 1540 was thoroughly completed in 1556; fo that ever fince that time the whole country has acknowledged the Protestant Lutheran church. But in 1667 Count Lewis Gustavus of Hobenlobe-Schillingsfurst going over to the Roman-catholic church. and his elder brother Count Christian of Hohenlohe-Bartenstein soon after following him, hereupon arose many vexations and grievances to the Protestant subjects in the Hohenlohe-Waldenburg countries, at that time under Counts, but now under Princes, from the year 1718, though still more from 1728, and most of all from 1744. The state of the church here is as follows: First, there are three churches in common belonging to the whole house of Hohenloke, namely those at Oehringen, and the seudal parishes of Oettelfingen and Schupf, of which a larger account has been given below. Next, there are still fifty-nine parishes in the county; for to the principal line of Neuenstein belong thirty-seven, and to that of Waldenburg twenty-two. About the year 1579 was erected a general or upper confistory at Oehringen, before which all cases of greatest importance in the church, and likewise the matrimonial affairs of the whole county were to be brought. At that time also confistorial regulations in common were made; but as all manner of inconveniences were found to arise therefrom, so matters relating thereto were decided at the Protestant adminiftration-office of Oehringen, or at the particular confistory and the inspectionoffice in each feigniory to which they belonged, though always according to the rule of the above-mentioned confistorial regulations; or if they regarded the county in common, were maturely confidered, at the option of the Sovereign, at the particular confistories and inspections, and at the Senium Evangelicum an end put to them according to the votes and deliberations made.
 - §. 6. The youth here receive their instruction as well in the gymnasium at Ochringen, as in the Latin schools of the other towns.

§. 7. According to Mr. Hanselmann's researches and illustration of the origin and propagation of the family of Hobenloke, we must form to ourselves the following conception of it. Conrad the Wise, Duke in Franconia and Lorrain, had a son named Otto, whose third son Cuno, or Conrad, gave rise to the younger line of this ducal Franconian samily, and whose share in the dutchy of East-Franconia consisted chiefly of the country between the Mayn and the Tauber, in that tract where the citadels of Hobenloch, Brauneck and Speckfeldt, and the fort of Bernheim lie. The third fon of this last, viz. Hermann Count of East-Franconia, who lived towards the close of the tenth, and in the beginning of the eleventh century, was possessed in the dutchy of Franconia principally of a share in the countries on the Tauber, Jagft, and Kocher, of which the county of Hohenlobe at this very day confifts. His great reputation appears from hence, namely that he had for his confort in his fecond marriage the mother of the Emperor Conradus Salicus. But that Princess being his assigned father's brother's widow, and fuch marriages being at that time with difficulty allowed; we should with still greater probability derive this Count Hermann, to whom all the Counts of Hohenlohe owe their original, from Duke Eberhard of Franconia, brother to King Conrad I. as the folidly learned Mr. Counfellor Christian Ludwig maintains we ought to do. Be this as it will, Siegfreid the eldest son of this Count Hermann founded the old extinct line of Hobenlobe at Weickersbeim, and from the second son Eberhard, who resided at the citadel of Hobenloch, is descended the present house of Hobenlobe. Ulrich and Godfrey, fons to the latter, and who lived in the twelfth century, feem first to have stiled themselves from the citadel of Hobenloch. Ulrich had his residence at Uffenheim, and probably from him descended the Dynastæ of Uffenheim and Speckfeld, who occur till the close of the thirteenth century. Count Godfrey is the first known Burggrave of Nurnberg. Frederick the Elder, grandson to this last, had in his son Conrad two sons, named Godfrey and Conrad, who shared the lands of Hobenlobe among them. Conrad the younger fixed his residence at the castle of Brauneck, there sounding a peculiar line; but the elder Count, named Godfrey, retained his residence at the castle of Hobenloch. From Albrecht, eldest son to the latter, is descended the line of Speckfeld, which became extinct in 1412; and the fecond son, Crato, or Craft I. propagated the still flourishing house. George his grandfon in the fifth generation, and who died in 1551, is the general stem-father to the present Counts; his son by his first wife, namely Lewis Casimir, founding the principal line of Neuenstein, and his fon, by a fecond venter, named Eberhard, founding the principal line of Waldenburg.

The capital line of Neuenstein divided itself in the following manner: viz. of Crast and Philip Ernest, grandsons to their sounder, the sormer retained his seat of Neuenstein, and of his grandsons, the Counts Charles Lewis and John Frederick, the first resided at Weickersheim, and the latter at Oehringen; but the sormer dying in 1756, his share upon that sell to the latter. Count Philip Ernest began the line of Langenburg, which in his grandsons was divided in such a manner that Count Albrecht Wolfgang sounded the Langenburg line; Count Christian Crast that of Ingelsing, and Count Frederick Eberhard the collateral line of Kirchberg, which are all still in being. It is true that, in the year 1744, the princely dignity was offered them by the Emperor; but they have, as yet, scrupled to accept it.

The present capital princely line of Waldenburg is divided as follows: Count George Frederick the Younger, grandson to Eberhard, sounded a particular line of Schillingsfurst after the division made by the brothers: Philip Charles, his grandson by his eldest son Count Christian, is the sounder of the collateral-line of Bartenslein, which resides partly at Bartenslein and partly at Psedelbach; and his second son, Lewis Gustavus, propagated the Schillingssurst line. The whole of this capital line was raised, in the year

1744, to the dignity of Princes of the Empire.

§. 8. The Princes of the younger Waldenburg capital line style themselves, Of the holy Roman Empire, Princes of Hohenlohe, Counts of Waldenburg, and Lords of Langenburg, &c. but the Counts of the elder Neuenstein line style themselves Counts of Hohenlohe and Gleichen, and Lords of Langenburg Cranichfield, &c. The arms of the princely Waldenburg capital line are, on account of Hohenlohe, a shield quarterly, in whose first and fourth quarters argent are to be feen two leopards fable running directly against each other in a field argent; and in the fecond and third upper-quarters, a lion advancing and crowned Or, with an open throat, a red exerted tongue and a double rolled up tail in a field fable; and, in the lower ones, on account of Langenburg, eight black rustres in a field Or. The arms of the Neuenstein capital line are also a shield quarterly, in whose first and fourth quarters are to be feen, in a field argent, two leopards fable running over each other; and in the second and third, above, a lion crowned Or in a field fable, and below it eight black rustres in a field Or: In a middle shield also is a lion crowned Or in a field verte.

§. 9. At the Diet of the Empire the Princes and Counts of Hobenlobe belong to the Franconian college of Counts of the Empire, and at the Diets of Counts are possessed of fix voices, with the right of precedency in the Franconian college; but at the Franconian Diets they have only two voices, which follow directly after those of the Princes. The matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle for the house of Hobenlobe amounted formerly to two hundred and fifty-six florins, but has been reduced to one hundred and forty-sour. To this sum the Waldenburg line contributes fifty-six, and the Neuenstein line eighty-eight florins. To each chamber-term the sormer of these lines pays sixty-seven rixdollars, seven kruitzers and a half; and the latter, eighty-nine rixdollars, twenty-nine kruitzers and a half.

§. 10. The right of primogenitureship has hitherto been introduced only into the Langenburg line, and that in the year 1718, at which time it was confirmed by the Emperor. The senior of each of the two principal lines is at the same time administrator of the feodal lordships thereof. Each reigning line has its peculiar chancery and officers.

§. 11. The more accurate description of the county of Hokenlobe falls under three principal divisions: we being to describe

I. The places in common to the whole house of Hohenloke; which are,

1. Oehringen, in ancient records styled Oringowe, Orengawe and Orengew, the capital of the county, feated on the rivulet of Ohrn, which runs between the old and new town. One half of this place belongs to the Ochringen line, and the other to the whole of the princely or Waldenburg capital line. The former has its residence at the magnificent castle here, to which adjoins a fine pleasure-garden. The building called the Stone-house is a grand structure enclosed by a wall with a spacious court to it, and belongs to the princely Waldenburg line. At this place also is a building which is allotted for the residence of the Countess-dowager. The churches and preachers there are also in common. Of the former there are two here, viz. the foundation and principal church and that of the spital. The lazar-house has a chapel, and the burial-place without the town has also a church. Of the general, or upper-consistory, which formerly was held here, an account has been given, §. 5. At present the common confistory of Hohenlobe-Pfedelbach is held here, as likewise a peculiar confistory of the Neuenstein line. The gymnasium here was, in the year 1735, formed on the plan of a gymnasium illustre. In this town also are kept the common archives. Oebringen was a town fo early as the thirteenth century.

In its neighbourhood lie the mountains of Galberg, Lindelberg, Verreberg, Pfaffenberg and Heynberg; the two first of which yield excellent fruit, and the others a fine wine.

2. Oettelfingen, a feodal parish, seated in the masterdom of Mergentheim, which is at present occupied by the Senium evangelicum of Hohenlohe, but was formerly held in sief of the county by the samily of Rosenberg.

3. Schupf, a feodal-parish, situated in the noble borough of Under-Schupf, which lies not far from Oettelfingen.

II. The prefecturates and places belonging to the princely Waldenburg capital line.

The Bartenstein line,

Which pays eleven florins, thirty-two kruitzers and a half to the matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle of the Waldenburg capital line, is possessed,

1. Of the prefecturate of BARTENSTEIN; in which is Bartenstein, a fine refidentiary-palace, feated on a mountain, near which a confiderable number of houses are built. This place is incorporated into one parish with Ettenhausen, a parochial-village.

Herrentbierbach and Riedbach, both parochial-villages. 2. The prefecturate of HERRENZIMMERN: in which is Herrenzimmern, formerly called also Weyprechtzimmern, a village, which is the residence of the amt-office, and united into one parish with

Pfutzingen, a parochial-village, to whose church also belongs the village of Russelhausen.

3. The prefecturate of SINDRINGEN, at Sindringen, a small town, seated on the Kocker, with a citadel which formerly belonged to the Lords of Weinsperg, but came, by the marriage of a Countess of Hobenlobe with Gebbard of Weinsperg, to the house of Hobenlobe, having been made a donation of to the former by way of dowery.

4. The prefecturate of Schneldorf, feated in the village of that name and purchased, in the year 1537, between the Onolzbach prefecturate of Creilsheim and Fenchtwang.

The Pfedelbach line,

Which pays eleven florins, thirty-two kruitzers and a half to the matricularevaluation of the Empire and the circle of the Waldenburg capital line, is possessed,

1. Of the prefecturate of PFEDELBACH: in which is Pfedelbach, a large market-town, taking its name from the little rivulet which runs through it, and a refidentiary-palace.

Charlottenberg, a palace and village.

2. The prefecturate of MAINHARD, which has its feat at Mainbard, a parochial-village, with a citadel, a mint and a mineral-bath in it; but the last is neglected.

The

The Schillingsfurst line,

Which pays thirty-two florins, fifty-five kruitzers, to the matricularevaluation of the Empire and the circle of the Waldenburg capital line, is possessed of the following places: viz.

1. Of Waldenburg, a small town with an old castle, and seated on a high mountain in a woody tract. Their drinking-water the inhabitants are under a necessity of carrying about one hundred steps high. At the parish-church here is a superintendant, or upper-preacher. Waldenburg also contains an amt-office.

In the united parish-village of Goldback formerly stood a monastery.

2. Eschelbach, a parochial-village.

3. Kupferzell, a parochial-village, with a castle and an amt-office, lies on the river Kupfer.

At Hosselbron, an united parochial-village here, is a medicinal-spring.

4. Eschenthal, a parochial-village, to which belongs the filial parish-church of Rublingen.

5. Under-Steinbach, a parochial-village and the feat of an amt-office commonly called the amt in the Obrnthal. The united parochial-village here of Gleichen had formerly a strong citadel.

6. Geilenkirchen, a parochial-village and amt-office, lying within the land-protection of Swabian-Hall.

7. Under-Munkbeim, a parochial-village.

Rem. In the parishes of Geilenkirchen and Under-Munkheim, which in Chapuzet's chart are placed in the territory of Hobenlohe, the princely line of Hobenlohe-Schillingsfurst is possessed of Ensklingen on the Kocher and Altdorf on the Buhler, which in the same chart are to be seen in the territory of the Imperal city of Swabian-Hall, together with that Imperial city; and in respect to the two sirst enjoys also certain privileges in common with Hobenlohe-Kirchberg.

8. Adolzfurt, a citadel and parochial-village, also the seat of an amt-office.

9. Under-Heimbach, a parochial-village.

10. Schillingsfurst, a double and confiderable residentiary-palace, situated on a mountain, with a borough adjoining to it which is the seat of an amtosffice, and had a communication with

11. Frankenau, a large market-town, lying directly below it, with which it is also united under one civil community. In the year 1757, divers privileges and immunities were promised to all who should settle at this place, particularly to handicraftsmen and manufacturers. The parish-church here is Protestant, but in the present century many Roman-catholic inhabitants

inhabitants have also been received here. In its neighbourhood rifes the river Wernitz.

- 12. Bellershausen, a village, containing a Protestant church.
- 13. Wildenholz, a parochial-village.

III. The prefecturates and places belonging to the principal line of Neuenstein.

1. The line of Ohringen,

Which contributes to the matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle, paid by the principal line of Neuenstein, fifty-one florins, twenty kruitzers, is possessed of the following places: viz

1. Of one half of the capital town of Oebringen, of which we have treated above.

2. Of Neuenstein, a small town, with a citadel which, in the year 1351, was erected into a town, and is the seat of an amt-office.

At Under-Eppach, a village incorporated into one parish with Neuenstein, is an acid fpring.

- 3. Kirchenfall, a parochial-village, fituated on the rivulet of Sall. The amt-office, which had formerly its feat here, has been united with that of Neuenslein.
- 4. Neufels, a village, feated on the Kupfer, and which was formerly a finall town containing a citadel.
- 5. Michelbach, a parochial-village and the feat of an amt-office. Not far from hence are to be feen the remains of the old fortress of Gabilstein.
- 6. Cappel, a village, in which is a fine pleasure-garden of the lord of the country.
- 7. Beutingen, or Langen-Beutingen, in ancient records called Buttingen, a large borough, with a parish-church in it and an amt-office, belonging to the canton of Odenwald.

8. Baum-Erlinbach, a parochial-village.

9. Ornberg, a parochial-village, feated on the Kocher, and which formerly conftituted a peculiar prefecturate of itself.

10. Zweiflingen, a village with a chapel, and the feat of an amt-office.

11. Orendelfall, a parochial-village, belonging to the cloyster of Schonthal, but the curate whereof, by virtue of an agreement made in the year 1579, stands under the jurisdiction of Hobenlohe.

12. Gnadenthal, formerly a nunnery of Cistercians, distant about one small German mile from the Imperial city of Swabian-Hall, and containing a parish-church.

The following places belonged to the line of Weickerskeim, and are fince fallen to that of Oebringen: viz.

13. Ernspack,

13. Ernspach, a borough, situated in the Kocherthal, and containing an amt-office, a paper-mill, and some iron, copper and brass-founderies.

14. Forchtenberg, a small town, situated near the river Kocher, on the ascent of a hill, and being the seat of an amt-office.

15. Weiszbach, a village, seated on the Kocher, and containing a salt-work.

16. Niedernhall, a small town, lying on the Kocher, and in which the Elector of Mentz is possessed of a share. See Vol. iv. p. 529.

17. Kunzelsau, a market-town, situated among high mountains on the river Kocher, and carrying on a great trade. This town is cohereditary, and its present coheirs are Hohenlohe-Oehringen, the Elector of Mentz, the bishop of Wurzburg and the foundation of Comburg. The citadel here was formerly called the fortress of Bartenau. In this town is also an amt-office belonging to Hohenlohe-Oehringen.

18. Durrenzimmern, a parochial-village.

19. Hobbach, also a parochial-village, seated on the river Jagst.

- 20. H llenback, a borough, and the feat of an amt-office, which appears in records so early as the ninth century.
- 21. Herbsthausen, a village, where, in the year 1645, the French general Turenne was defeated by the Bavarians.

22. Adolfhausen, a parochial-village.

23. Vorbachzimmern, also a parochial-village. The parish-church here is alternately filled up by the Hobenlobe houses of Oebringen and Bartenstein.

24. Elpersheim, a parochial-village.

25. Weikerskeim, a small town, having a citadel, and lying on the river Tauber. This town is the seat of an amt-office and a superintendency.

Hard by it stands the citadel of Karlsberg, which takes its name from Count Charles Lewis.

26. Scheftersheim, a parochial-village, seated on the river Tauber, and formerly containing a cloyster.

27. Nassau, a parochial-village.

28. Louisgarde, a hunting-seat, and the spot on which formerly stood the cloyster of Lockgarten, which was filled with Monks of the order of St. Augustine.

29. At Munster this line is possessed of the right of patronage, according to an agreement made in 1556 with Zeifolph of Rosenberg.

2. The Langenburg line.

Which contributes to the matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle paid by the principal line of Hokenlohe-Neuenslein, the sum of twelve florins, thirteen kruitzers and one third, and is possessed.

1. Of Langenburg, a town, with a strong residentiary-palace in it, and seated on a high mountain, in the valley beneath which runs the river

faght. The ancient superintendency here was, in the beginning of the present century, annulled in name, and the inspection of the churches and schools here committed to the care of each particular aulic and town preacher. At this place also is an amt-office. The ancient Dynastæ of Langenburg or Langenberg, were in being in the thirteenth century.

2. Lindenbronn, a pleasure-house with a park belonging to it, seated about three quarters of an hour's distance from the above-mentioned town.

3. Bachlingen, a parochial-village.

4. Billingsbach, also a parochial-village.

5. Under-Regenbach, a parochial-village, feated on the Jagst.

6. Belsenberg, a parochial-village, in the neighbourhood of Ingelfingen.

3. The Ingelfingen line,

Which also contributes, to the matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle, as paid by the principal line of Hobenlobe-Neuenstein, the sum of twelve florins, thirteen kruitzers and one third, and is possessed

1. Of the prefecturate of Ingelfingen in which is Ingelfingen, a small town with a residentiary palace, seated on the river Kocher.

On the mountain near it on this side the river Kocher, are to be seen the remains of the ancient citadel of Lichteneck. The citadel of Stein was also situate over against the town, and in the territory of Hermersperg stood the cloyster of Frauenzimmern.

Crispachhofen, a parochial-village.

2. The prefecturate of Schrotzberg, containing Schrotzberg, a citadel and borough, which in 1558 and 1609 came by purchase to Hohenlobe-Neuenstein. The criminal jurisdiction here is an Imperial sief. In 1671 this place was entirely ceded, by virtue of the recess, to the house of Langenburg, in lieu of its share in the town of Oebringen, which was possessed by them in common.

Crailshausen, a village with a filial church in it, which belongs to the parish of Schrotzberg.

4. The Kirchberg line,

Which also contributes to the matricular-evaluation of the Empire and Circle paid by the principal line of Hobenlobe-Neuenstein, the sum of twelve florins, thirteen kruitzers and one third. This line is possessed

1. Of the prefecturate of Kirchberg, in which is Kirchberg, a small town and residentiary palace, seated on the river Jagst. In 1758 this place suffered great damage by fire.

Lendsidel,

Lendfidel, a confiderable borough, which formerly had feveral owners to it, but at present belongs almost entirely to Hobenlobe. .To the parish here appertains the filial church of Bembach.

Rupertshofen, a parochial-village.

Gaggstatt, also a parochial-village, together with the filial village of Miftlau, in which formerly stood a nunnery of Benedictines.

The citadel of Leonfels was formerly possessed by the family of Velberg.

2. Of the prefecturate of Dottingen, containing Dottingen, a citadel, lying on the river Kocher, with a parish-church in it and a spital.

Steinkirchen, a parochial-village, in which the foundation of Comburg is possessed of the right of patronage. From this parish which is incorporated with

The citadel of Thierberg, a family formerly took its title.

Hohenlohe-Kirchberg is also possessed of a share in the parishes of Steinach, Enszlingen, and Under-Munkbeim.

Rem. Out of the limits of the county of Hohenlohe the line of Hohenlobe-Schillingsfurst is possessed of the seigniory of Wilhermsdorf, which belongs to the noble canton of Altmubl, and the principal line of Hobenlobe-Neuenstein enjoys one half of the county of Gleichen in Thuringia.

The COUNTY of A S T EL

- §. 1. THE county of Castell lies for the most part on the Steigerwald, between the princely county of Schwarzenberg, the feigniory of Limburg-Speckfeld, the bishopric of Wurzburg, and the Brandenburg-Onolzbach prefecturate of Little-Lankheim. The prefecturate of Remlingen is environed by the bithopric of Wurzburg and the county of Wertheim. It was formerly far more confiderable than at present, but by wars, bad oeconomy, infolence, division among the brothers, and the erection of cloysters, has been greatly reduced. The bishopric of Wurzburg has in particular brought to itself some considerable places in this county, as for instance the towns of Gerolzhofen and Volkach, (the latter of which is mortgaged to the bishopric) and also that of Schwarzach.
- §. 2. The Counts of Castell are descended from the old Dukes of East-Franken, by means of the Counts of Rothenburg, yet Count Gerlach, who lived about the year 1019, and fome of the succeeding Counts stiled themfelves Counts of Hoben-Castell, by way of distinction from the Counts of Castell in the Nordgau, from whom the now extinct Counts of Sulzback derived their descent. In the thirteenth century the house of Castell divided itself into three branches. The first of these branches sprung from Count Henry II. and became extinct in his fons; the fecond arose from Count Hermann III. and ended in his grandfons; and the third from Count Frederick II. who has propagated that line. Conrad III. and George III. fons to Count Wolfgang, who confiderably improved the county and died in the year 1546, divided it, in consequence of their father's will, into two equal shares. Their brother, Henry V. who at first was an ecclesiastic, obtained of his brother George, after the death of Conrad, one half of his faid brother's fliare, and both of them entered into an agreement, in the year 1586, on account of the division of the county. Wolfgang VI. son to Count George III. who founded the principal line of Remlingen, had for his fuccessor Wolfgang George, who divided his seigniory in such a manner that his eldest son, Wolfgang Theodorick, had his seat at Castell, and Frederick Magnus, the younger son, his at Remlingen. Godfrey II. son to Count George III. founded the principal line of Rudenhausen.

§. 3. This county is at prefent, for the most part, a sief of Wurzburg, but the Counts enjoy also their own considerable feodal-court; in matters relating to which they do not regulate themselves by the bishop's feodal-court, but by the rights commonly prescribed. Ever since the year 1168, they have been hereditary cup-bearers to the bishopric of Wurzbarg. By virtue of the hereditary union entered into, in the year 1560, between Count Conrad III. Henry V. and George III. which was afterwards confirmed by the Emperors Ferdinand I. in 1562, and by Maximillian II. in 1566, each particular senior of the whole samily is at the same time administrator of the feodal seignories of the whole house, and is invested only with the office of hereditary cup-bearer by the bishopric of Wurzburg.

§. 4. The arms of the Counts of Castell are a shield quarterly gules and argent.

§. 5. At the Diet of the Empire they are possessed of two voices in the college of the Imperial Counts of Franconia; and in the circle of Franconia they enjoy seat and voice betwixt Hobenlobe and Wertheim. Their matricular-evaluation to the Empire and Circle, since the year 1678, has been only eighteen florins; that is to say, on account of Castell sour florins, thirty kruitzers; on account of Remlingen the like sum; and on account of Rudenbausen, nine florins. To each chamber-term this county pays eighteen sixdollars, eighty-sour kruitzers and a half.

I. The elder principal line of Castell-Remlingen, which again divides itself into two lines, is possessed

1. Of the prefecturate of CASTELL, at the Steigerwald, which takes its name from the ancient mountain-citadel and family feat of Castell, which in 1525 was wholly laid waste by an insurrection of the boors. Below it, however, still lies the village of the like name. In 1332 Count Hermann III. ceded one half of the prefecturate of Castell, and likewise of the prefent ruinous citadel, to the Burggraves of Nurnberg; but Count Wolfgang Theodorick exchanged the Marggrave of Brandenburg's share in the village of Castell in lieu of the other subjects of Castell, by which means it reverted again entirely to that house; nevertheless the ground on which the old citadel of Castell stood is still a sief of Brandenburg-Onolebach, and the Onolebach prefecturate of Little-Lankbeim, which belongs to the upper-prefecturate of Uffenbeim, is yet commonly called the prefecturate of Castell. We are to remark here

Castell, a village, situated below the ruinous mountain-citadel of that name, with a new and fine residentiary palace in it, which Count Wolfgang Theoderick caused to be erected, and at which one of the collateral lines of the Remlingen principal line resides.

Wiesenbron, a village and citadel, the greatest part of which was brought to the county by Count Conrad III.

Burklein, a cloyster, near which the rivulet Ebe has its rife.

Wustenfelden, a hamlet.

Castell.

Rebweiler, a finall village or hamlet, which is the feat of the coufins of the Counts of Castell.

2. The prefecturate of Remlingen is formed out of those parts of the prefecturates of Remlingen, which belonged to the ancient race of the Counts of Wertheim who became extinct in 1556, and of which some places descended by stipulation to the Counts of Castell, Conrad-III. and George III. their mother being father's sister to Michael the last Count of Wertheim. These places consist of

A share in the market-town of Remlingen, in which also that of Lowenstein-Wertheim, and the bishopric of Wurzburg are possessed of parts.

The villages of Under and Upper-Alterheim, as also that of Billings-bausen.

II. The younger principal line of Castell-Rudenhausen is possessed of the Prefecturate of Rudenhausen at the Steigerwald, in which is Rudenhausen, a village, containing a residentiary-palace.

Aptschwind, a parochial-village: together with
The hamlets of Kreuth, Sambach, and Riedern.

The COUNTY of WERTHEIM.

S. 1. HE county of Wertheim lies betwixt the archbishopric of Mentz and the bishopric of Wurzburg, a part of it being bounded also by the county of Erbach. The Mayn runs through it, and in this county receives into it the Tauber. Exclusive of other fruits and natural productions it yields also a good growth of wine.

§. 2. The ancient Counts of Wertheim in 1398 divided this county into two parts and feveral governments. Count John, the elder brother, obtained for his share the town of Wertheim, together with the presecturates of Remlingen, Freudenberg, and Lautenbach; and Count Michael, the younger brother, the feigniory of Breuberg, together with the prefecturate of Schwanberg. From this division arose two several lines in this house, but these lines, in 1556, became extinct in male heirs in the person of Count Michael. By his confort Catharine Countess of Stolberg and Konigstein he left a daughter four months old, and named Barbara, who died fourteen days after him, and to her succeeded her mother. His father-in-law, Count Lewis of Stolberg and Konigstein, endeavoured to bring over the fief of the county of Wertheim to himself and posterity, and in 1556 actually obtained the regalia from the Empire, together with the Bohemian and Fuldan fiefs. He also exerted himself in respect to those of Wurzburg, and in the same year a capitulation was proposed to him by the Wurzburg chancery, by which the Wurzburg fiefs were greatly extended. Accepting them therefore, as is faid in behalf of the Lowenstein side, out of ignorance; he obtained the investiture for himself, the male-heirs of his body, and both his eldest daughters, viz. the above-mentioned Catherine, Countess dowager of Wertheim, who afterwards married Philip Count of Eberstein; and Elizabeth, who was first consort to Count Theodorick of Manderscheidt, and afterwards, namely in 1594, to William, Baron of Krichingen. His third daughter, Anne, confort to Count Lewis of Lowenstein, was passed over in the capitulation; notwithstanding which the father ordered in 1566 that all his daughters should make the best of, enjoy and possess his allotted counties and feigniories, to be held in equal flures by them and their pofterity: Which paternal ordination the three Konigstein husbands to these daughters, namely the Counts of Eberstein, Manderscheidt, and Lowenstein, folemnly accepted and confirmed. But Count Lewis of Stolberg and Konigstein dying in 1574, Count Lewis of Lowenstein in his own name, and that of his lady and male-heirs, in conjunction with both his brothers-inlaw Eberstein and Manderscheit, took possession of the county. In 1576 these three sharers came to an agreement relating to the government thereof in common. But the second Konigstein heiress, being married in 1594 to William, Baron of Krichingen, this last sought to annull the father's ordination, for which reason Lowenstein refused to admit him into the partnership. It is true, that in 1596 they came to a previous agreement, but that agreement was not adhered to; so far from it that this second sister, who was married to the Baron of Krichingen, after the death of her eldest sister. caused Julius bishop of Wurzburg, in the name of the Wurzburg investiture, and under a pretence that Anne, Countess of Lowenstein, was incapable thereof, to deprive the latter and her husband in 1598, by force of arms, of the greatest part of the county of Wertheim. But at last the Lowenstein house arrived to the quiet possession of their share of the county, which it still retains.

The origin, history, and division of the Lowenstein or Lowenstein-Wer-theim house has been shortly described above under Schwarzenberg and Hohenlohe.

§. 3. The arms for the county of Wertheim are a crescent eagle sable, in a field Or, and on account of Breuberg two sesses, in a field argent.

§. 4. At the Diet of the Empire the Princes and Counts of Lowenstein-Wertheim are possessed on account of this county of two voices in the Franconian college of Counts; but the princely line refuses any longer to adhere to it. At the circle of Franconia they enjoy both seat and voice betwixt Castell and Rieneck. To a single Roman month each of the two principal lines contributes twenty-six florins, thirty kruitzers, and to a chamberterm both unitedly pay eighty-six rixdollars, sifty-one kruitzers.

§. 5. The proprietors of the county of Wertheim are hereditary chamberlains of the bishopric of Wwzburg. Their under-chamberlains have been from time of old the Zobels of Gibelliadt.

§. 6. A considerable part of the county of Wertheim, the bishopric of Wurzburg, on the extinction of the old Counts, brought to itself, and a small share thereof is likewise come to the Counts of Castell. The rest the Princes and Counts of Lowenstein-Wertheim posses; but as I am not able justly Rrr 2 to affign the present share of the latter, it is most advisable to describe the county according to the state in which it was possessed by the last Counts thereof. Those parts therefore which have descended to Wurzburg and Castell shall be taken notice of so far as I am acquainted with them, but think it necessary here once for all to observe that the places and estates next following, are partly Imperial Bohemian, Wurzburg, and Fuldan siefs; and partly also Wertheim property. Thus to the ancient county of Wertheim belonged

1. Wertheim, the capital thereof, lying on the river Mayn, which at this place receives into it the Tauber, after having divided the town. In it are two Lowenstein-Wertheim residentiary palaces, as also a parish-church, at which in 1419 was sounded a canonry, and which the Lutherans as well as Roman-catholics make use of in common, together with a Latin school. The magistracy here however is wholly Protestant. The town with its appendages, and the old Wertheim stem-house, are held in sief from the crown of Bohemia; but one third of the criminal jurisdiction of Wertheim is a sief of Wurzburg. On the other side of the Mayn lies Kreutz-Wertheim.

At the entrance of the town lies the confiderable feat of Zur Alten. Heid, which is also a Bohemian fief.

2. The prefecturate of REMLINGEN, containing

1. Remlingen, a market-town, in which the house of Lowensein-Wertheim, the Counts of Castell and the bishopric of Wurzburg are possessed of a share, and which is a Fuldan sief; but the old citadel, which formerly stood here, was a sief of Wurzburg, and the regalia at and about Remlingen are bestowed in sief by the Empire.

2. Helmstatt, anciently called Halbingstatt, a parochial-village.

3. Uttingen, also a parochial-village.

4. Holzkirchen, a borough, having a cloyster, and being a fief of Fulda.

5. The cantred, or criminal jurisdiction of Michelriedt.

6. The parochial-villages of Derdingen, Urphar, Eichel, and Rembach.

7. Heidenfeld, a market-town.

8. Lengfurt, or Lengfeld, a borough. 9. Tieffentbal, a parochial-village.

10. Erlenbach, also a parochial-village.

11. Holzkirchhausen, likewise a parochial-village:

12. Zell, or Bosenzell, a village.

13. Buttelbron, one half of it a village.

N. B. From N° 7 to 13 the bishopric of Wurzburg is possessed of. See p. 409.

14. Billing skausen, a village.

15. Upper-Altenheim, also a village.

16. Lower-Altenheim, likewise a village.

N. B. These three last the Counts of Castell enjoy.

Rem. The above-mentioned parochial-village of Erlenbach refigned it-felf in 1409, under certain conditions, to the protection of the Counts of Wertheim, but arrived again to its former freedom in the year 1556 on the death of Count Michael. Upon which the bailiff, sheriffs, and community, as a free people, voluntarily refigned themselves up a-new, under certain conditions, to the protection of the Count of Konigstein and his daughter Catherine, as the then possessor of the county of Wertheim, and in 1574 subjected themselves also in like manner to the house of Lowenstein, paying it homage.

3. The prefecturate of FREUDENBERG, in which is Freudenberg, a town and citadel.

Boxel, or Boxthal, a parochial-village.

Ebnet, or Ebenheit, also a parochial-village.

N. B. These several places are to be found above under the bishopric of Wurzburg, see p. 409.

4. The prefecturate of Schwangerg, in which is Schwamberg, or Schwanberg, a borough and citadel, ceded to the Counts of Wertheim in the year 1296 by the ancient Lords of Boxberg.

Hartheim, a market-town and citadel, see above p. 409.

Bulfrigheim, a parochial-village.

Waldstetten, also a parochial-village.

N. B. These two last parochial-villages are possessed by Wurzburg. Giszigheim, a parochial-village.

The seats of Waigerstetten, Hoffelden, Betzwiesen, and Wolferstetten.

5. The prefecturate, citadel, and borough of Konigheim, which is a Bohemian fief, and lies in the territory of the archbishopric of Mentz. See above, Vol. iv. p. 519.

6. The prefecturate of Lautenbach, in which is Lautenbach, a citadel and parochial-village, feated on the Mayn.

The villages of Dutenbrunn, Robrback, Wernfeld, and Steinfeld: toge-ther with

The right protection over the cloyster of Brumbach, or Brumbach, but this Wurzburg at prefent enjoys. See above, p. 410.

7. The feigniory of Breuberg belongs in common to the houses of Low-enstein-Wertheim and Erbach, being a fief of Fulda. The ancient Lords of Breuberg were a considerable house. Their male line became extinct in the fourteenth century in the persons of Arroes and Eberhard, Lords of Breuberg, each of whom was possessed of one half of this seigniory. Arroes, who died so early as the year 1329, bequeathed his half to his daughter Mecktild, her husband, and their heirs; and in case she died without issue, to her sister Cunigunda, who was married to Conrad of Trymberg, and her heirs; whom also Henry, abbot of Fulda, invested therewith in the year 1323. Eberhard, who died so early as the year 1324, obtained of Henry, abbot of Fulda, for his daughter Elizabeth, confort to Count Rudolphus of Wertheim and Luckart, but who was first consort to Conrad, Lord of Weinsperg, and afterwards to Godyrey, Lord of Epstein, the investiture of his half of the feigniory of Breuberg. Her share therefore of this feigniory continued in the Counts of Wertheim till the extinction of their male race, on which it descended in the following manner to the house of Erbach. Mary, aunt by the father's side to Michael the last Count of Wertheim, and confort to Eberhard Schenkens, Lord of Erbach, was, in 1549, declared by virtue of a cameral sentence heiress to the fixth part of the inheritance of her late father; but in 1551 came to the following agreement concerning this right of inheritance, namely, that as long as Count Michael of Wertheim should leave behind him legitimate male heirs of his body, they should enjoy it; but in case of his death without male heirs, the fons of the Counters Mary, Counts of Erback, or their ligitimate male heirs and posterity were to succeed to her portion of the seigniory of Breuberg, which last accordingly happened. The above-mentioned share of Luckart in one half of the feigniory of Breuberg came by her fecond marriage to the house of Epstein. Her grandson Eberhard of Epstein ceded this share in 1441, with right of redemption, to his son-in-law Philip Schenken Lord of Erback, for the sum of 9000 guldens of Francfort currency. And Anne the last daughter of the house of Epstein marrying Boto Count of Stolberg, the brought the right of redemption to one half of Breuberg to the Stolberg house, of which also Count Lewis of Konigstein and Stolberg availed himself, and redeemed the Epstein half of the seigniory of Breuberg from the Counts of Erbach, which he afterwards conferred on his three daughters, as mentioned above (§. 2.) in the history of the county of Wertheim. And thus it continued for a long time in the poseffion of three Lords; but the families of Eberstein and Manderscheidt becoming extinct, it descended to the house of Lowenstein-Wertheim alone, in which house also it still continues, though that of Stolberg is by no means fatisfied with it, but even yet bears the seigniory of Breuberg in its title.

This feigniory constitutes a prefecturate which Lowenstein-Wertheim and Erbach are possessed of in common, and in which are to be remarked the following places: viz.

Breuberg, a strong mountain-citadel, seated on the rivulet of Mumling, and containing a chapel. The costly aqueducts, which formerly surnished this citadel with water, were demolished by Turenne in the year 1675; but there is still a very deep well in the citadel.

Sandbach, a parochial-village, fituated below Breuberg, to the church of which the citadel is united, and the last Wertheim Counts, who were Lords of Breuberg, lie buried in it.

Neuftadt in the Rosenau, which has the title of a small town, but is incorincorporated into one parish with Sandbach. In its church Divine Service is performed only every fourteen days.

Hochst, or Hoest, a populous borough with a Protestant parish-church in it, lying on the river Mumling, and formerly containing a Benedictine nunnery, which stood under the inspection of Fulda. This place belonged to the Elector-palatine.

Grumbach, Crumpach, or Mumling-Grumbach, a village, which had anciently Lords of its own, but which probably belonged to the Breuberg line. This place takes its furname from the river Mumling, on which it stands.

Kirch-Brambach, otherwise called Braubach or Branbach, a parochial-village with a Protestant church in it, and formerly containing a citadel.

Bellstein, or Beilstein, a village.

Seckmanern, a village with a church in it, which had formerly a curate of its own, but is now incorporated into one parish with that of Vielbrun, a parochial-village.

8. The prefecturate of LITTLE-HEUBACH, or HEIBACH, also called HEIDBACH, which has its feat in the market-town of that name, lying on the river Mayn, and being well-built and inhabited. In this town is a citadel, and in 1753 it obtained the right of holding yearly two fairs for horses and cattle. Heubach was disposed of by the Counts of Erbach in the year 1721 to Prince Dominicus of Lowenstein-Wertheim, but on condition that on the extinction of his male line the place should revert gratis to it in the state it should then happen to be, no account of any charges for its improvement or other expences being to be brought to the male heirs of the house Erbach at such time extant; and that in case the female descendants of Lowenstein-Wertheim should oppose it, the male line of Erbach should be entitled of their own authority, and that without any judicial proceedings, to enter upon possession of the E/cheat. the male line of Erbach should drop first, and after them also the male line of Lowenstein, that in such case the daughters of both sides or their heirs were to divide Little-Heibach among them in such manner that the heirs of each line should obtain one half thereof. The Protestant subjects were to be in no wife aggrieved in the exercise of their religion, nor the Simultaneum to be introduced into the parish-church there, and neither in nor near the borough any Roman-catholic chapel to be built, but the princely house was to confine the exercise of the Reman-catholic religion, both for itself, its court, and officers, to the limits of the citadel. The Protestant curate was to be appointed by the princely house, but the person fo pitched upon was to be referred for examination to the confiftory of Erback, and on obtaining from thence a good testimony to be consecrated and presented by one or two curates out of the seigniory of Breuberg. That when ever the Protestant curate or schoolmaster, or the subjects of the place place should think themselves interrupted or agrieved in the quiet and sull enjoyment of their revenues and the exercise of the Protestant religion, and the misunderstanding should be of such a nature as not to be adjusted in a friendly manner, both houses were in such cases to choose certain arbitrators for the judicial decision of the same; and in case the house of Lowenshein should be negligent in this point, or refuse to abide by the determination of the arbitrators, the house of Erbach should be entitled to redeem the borough with its appendages, on paying down the redemption money, &c.

Rem. The house of Lowenstein-Wertheim is also possessed of the county of Lowenstein under the jurisdiction of the Duke of Wurtemberg, (see above, p. 214, as likewise of the seigniories of Chassepierre, Cugnon, Herbemont, Feullr, Orgeo, Havresse, Hatton, and of one third of Neuchateau in the dutchy of Luxemburg, (see Vol. iv. p. 280;) as also of the county of Virnenburg in the circle of Westphalia, (see Vol. iv. p. 484; and the several seigniories in Bohemia, as namely Heyde and Altsattel, both which lie in the Pilsner circle, &c. together with several places belonging to the estates of the immediate nobility of the Empire.

The COUNTY of R I E N E C K.

THE county of Rieneck (not Reineck) is environed by the archbishopric of Mentz, the county of Hanau, and the bishopric of Wurzburg being fituated on what is called the Spefzhart. This county had anciently some considerable Counts of its own, who held their estates in sief of the Elector of Mentz, the bishopric of Wurzburg, and the Elector-palatine. Their line became extinct in 1559 in the person of Count Philip, upon which the county was divided as follows: that is to fay, the bishopric of Wurzburg refumed its fiefs, which confifted of the prefecturates of Rothenfels, Schonrain, and Aura in the Sinnegrund, already mentioned. But the prefecturate of Wildenstein, or cantred of Eschau, a palatine fief, was ceded in property by the Elector-palatine in the year 1560 to the Counts of Erbach; and the rest of this county fell to the archbishopric of Mentz, which first fettled a part of it on Margaret, of the house of Erbach, relict to the last Count thereof, but afterwards disposed of the said part in sief, in the year 1673, to Count John Hartwig of Nostitz, and in 1684 one half also of the Biebergrund, together with a fourth of the little town of Rieneck, and the village of Schaibach to the Counts of Hanau. The Elector of Mentz, fo early as the year 1567, was admitted, on account of this county, in the affembly of the circle of Franconia to feat and voice; besides which the right of feat and voice on account of this county at the Diets of Franconia, and likewise at that of the Empire, and the college of the Counts of Franconia was disposed of to the above-mentioned Count of Noslitz. At prefent this county pays to each Roman month twenty-eight florins, namely on account of Rieneck eight florins, fifty-four kruitzers; and on account of Lobr nineteen florins, fix kruitzers. Under the nine hundred rixdollars, twenty-one kruitzers and a half, which the elector of Mentz pays to each chamber-term, is also included his evaluation for Rieneck. We are to remark here

1. The share of the Counts of Rieneck in this county, containing in it Rieneck, a small town and citadel, seated on the rivulet of Sinn, and of which the county of Hanau is possessed of one fourth. See Vol. iv.

Schaibach, a village, also feated on the Sinn, of which likewise the county of Hanau possesses one fourth.

2. The share of the archbishopric of Mentz, or the presecturate of Lohr, to which belongs

Lohr, a small town, near which the rivulet of the same name falls into the Mayn. At this place also is a rural chapter, and a very good manufacture for the making of glasses and mirrours.

Flammersbach, a parochial-village. Wiesen, also a parochial-village.

The COUNTY of \boldsymbol{E}

- §. 1. O F the county of Erbach, Bernard Kanzler has delineated a chart which is to be found in the Atlas of Blaeu and Jansson. This chart however stands in need of improvement and distribution. Schneider's history and lineage-table of the house of Erbach is also to be met another chart of this county.
- §. 2. The county of Erbach lies on the Odenwalde, being environed by the archbishopric of Mentz, the electorate-palatine, the upper county of Katzenelnbogen, and a part of the county of Wertheim. Its length amounts to above five and its breadth to four German miles and a half.
- §. 3. It is indeed a mountainous country, but well cultivated, and also pretty fruitful. The more barren lands are suffered to rest between five Vol. V. and and ten years; after which the bushes, heath, and whatever else they are over-run with, are cut down in time of harvest, dug and tore out with the roots, and a part also of the turf, and being laid together in heaps, as soon as they become dry, are fet on fire; the ashes of which are spread abroad, and then is the land ploughed up and fown. This labour is called grubbing. In general there are cultivated yearly in this county about 73,911 coombs of rye, spelt, wheat, barley, oats and buck-wheat, which are sufficient for the use of the inhabitants. They also cultivate yearly to the amount of 44,000 coombs of potatoes. The best pastures and meadows here lie in the vallies. There are also annually prepared at least three hundred centners of pot-ash in this county. The wine in the prefecturate of Schonberg on the Bergstrasz is called the Bergstraszer; but that which grows near Reichenberg is better and not unlike Rhenish. The wine of Wildenstein also is good, but the other wines here are of no great value. Its forests are become thin, and many pieces of ground which were formerly taken up with woods have been converted into arable land; but at prefent they begin again to plant wood. The breeding of cattle here is pretty confiderable. There are good stone-quarries and marble here. Formerly, but that only for a little while, fome mines of filver, copper, lead and quickfilver were likewife worked here, and there are even still some good mines of iron, which are kept open; and in the finelting-furnace near Furstenau are yearly smelted, within the space of twenty weeks, about 3360 centners of that metal; and near Michelstadt, and in the villages of Schellnbach and Gammelsbach are iron forges. The rivulets which take their rife in this country, among which the Munling is the principal, all discharge themselves into the Mayn, Rhine and Neckar, and abound in fish.

§. 4. The inhabitants amount to between twenty-three and twenty-four thousand souls. The country, as well as the house of Erbach, professes itself of the Lutheran church. Its exports consist of fine meal made of spelt, oats, buck-wheat, wood, coals, pot-ash, cattle, iron, nuts, honey and wax. The wooll produced here is manufactured into cloth.

§. 5. The ancient Dynastee of Erbach, after their attainment of the palatine-office of hereditary cup-bearer, generally styled themselves Schenken, or cup-bearers, of Erbach, or Schenken Lords of Erbach. In the year 1532, the Emperor Charles V. with the consent of Lewis, the Elector-palatine, raised Schenken Eberhard, Lord of Erbach, and the legitimate heirs of his body and descendants, to the State of Counts of the Empire, and the seigniory of Erbach to the degree of a county. Count George Albrecht, great-grandson to the said Eberhard, who died in the year 1647, had, among other children, two sons, who sounded two principal lines of the house of Erbach: that is to say, Count George Lewis that of Erbach, and Count George Albrecht that of Furstenau. The former of these lines became extinct in the year 1731, in the person of Count Frederick Charles, upon which its share in this country fell to the latter, which is divided again into three lines; namely, into those of Erbach-Erbach, Erbach-Schonberg and Erbach-Furstenau.

§. 6. The county of Erbach is for the most part a sief of the Elector-palatine, and on the raising of the house of Erbach to the dignity of Counts, the feodal-rights were expressly reserved to that of the Elector. The office of hereditary cup-bearer, which the Counts of Erbach hold in sief of the Elector-palatine, was first obtained by George, Lord of Erbach, who lived in the first half of the thirteenth century; but, according to others, his grandfather Eberbard, Lord of Erbach, who is placed in the twelfth century, was the first hereditary cup-bearer to the palatinate on the Rhine.

§. 7. The title of this family is, Counts of Erbach and Lords of Breuberg. Their arms are a shield quarterly, whose first and fourth quarters are divided gules and argent; on the former of which they have two stars argent, but on the latter a star gules, for the county of Erbach. The second and third quarters have two sesses gules, in a field argent, for the seigniory of Breuberg.

§. 8. The Counts of Erbach are possessed of two voices at the Diet of the Empire in the college of the Counts of Franconia. At the circle of the same they sit between Rieneck and Limburg. To each Roman month they pay forty florins, and to one chamber-term twenty-seven rix-dollars, two kruitzers and a half.

§. 9. At Michelfladt is a regency in common, and likewise a common superintendency of the Counts of Erbach. The affairs of the Empire and Circle are managed in common by a privy-council.

§. 10. To the county of Erbach belong the following prefecturates: viz. Erbach, anciently called Erdtpach, an old citadel and a small town, seated in a narrow valley amidst high mountains on the river Mumling. The proper and original town of Erbach consists only of fixteen houses, which stand by the citadel, and together with it, are surrounded with a wall; but without this wall many other houses have been built, which have the appearance of a suburb. This place was incorporated anciently into one parish with Michelstadt, but obtained a chapel, which at length acquired the right of a parish-church.

The village of Erbach lies at no great distance from the town, and through it runs a rivulet which on a meadow hard by the town finks into the earth, and below it passes through a mountain, on the other side of which, close by the Stockheim mill, it issues out again, and at length runs into the Mumling.

Wurzberg, a village, which is partly the property of Erbach, but for the most part is a fief of Hesse-Darmstadt. The latter share in it is possessed by the family of Ingelbeim. This place pays taxes to the canton of Odenwald.

Together with nine other villages.

2. The prefecturate of MICHELSTADT.

Michelfield, the most considerable place in the whole county, is a small but ancient town, formerly containing a provostship which belonged to the cloyster of Lorsch. At this place lies the common regency of Erbach, as likewise their common superintendency. Close by the town is an iron-toundery.

Bullau, a village, with a chapel in it, is incorporated into one parish with Michelfladt.

Eulenbach, or Eulbach, is an ancient place, which was formerly a small village, but is at present only a seat belonging to the family.

Stockheim and Zell, formerly called also Mangolts Zell, are likewise ancient villages.

3. The prefecturate of Freienstein, or the upper-cantred, belonging to the line of Erbach-Furstenau. In it is Freienstein, a citadel, fortified in the ancient taste and seated on a mountain named the Weckberg, which is in most places very steep and lies on the borders of the palatinate.

Berfelden, formerly called Buerfelden, Bauerfelden, or Bayerfelden, a parochial-village and an ancient place.

Gammelsbach, a village, in which are iron-founderies.

Hesselbach, a village, over which the abbot of Amerbach appoints judges.

Schellnbach, a village, containing a chapel and an iron-foundery.

Senszbach, a village, which is divided into the Upper and Lower Sc-nszbach.

Exclusive of eight other places.

4. The prefecturate of Furstenau: containing

Furstenau, an old citadel, seated in the Plumgau, or Blumenau, which is also called the Rosenthal, and is a sief of the Elector of Mentz. Near this place is a surnace for the smelting of iron.

Steinbach, a village, having an iron-work and forge, and formerly also containing a nunnery.

Gutersbach, an old village, formerly containing a parish-church.

Hiltersklingen, a village, one half of which is simply called Hiltersklingen, but the other Hiltersklingen on the Hort. The former of these, with all its rights and emoluments, belongs to the house of Erbach; but the latter to the archbishopric of Mentz, and therein to the upper presecturate of Starkenberg; notwithstanding which Erbach is possessed in it of the government and criminal-jurisdiction.

Langen-Brambach, otherwise called Brabach, or Braubach, a village.

Upper-Mosau, also a village, formerly containing a parish-church, and having likewise the right of patronage, belonged to the commandery of the order of St. John at Worms.

Rebbach, a feat belonging to the family, but which formerly constituted a parochial-village.

Together.

Together with four other places.

5. The presecturate of Reichenberg: in which is Reichenberg, a citadel, feated on the borders of the upper county of Katzenelnbogen.

Reichelskeim, a parochial-village.

Berfurt, a village, which is divided into Kirch-Berfurt and Pf. Ifin-Berfurt. In the former is a finall church, or chapel. The latter belongs, with respect to its ground-jurisdiction and government, to the foundation of the Holy-Ghost at Heidelberg.

Gerspenz, a village, which is divided into the Upper and Lower, and lies on a rivulet of the same name. This place, in conjunction with Upper-Keinspach, which is also a village, constitutes a particular cantred, or criminal-jurisdiction. The village of Under-Keinspach was formerly a sef of Fulda, but the Elector-palatine purchased the superiority thereof.

Exclusive of eight other places.

6. The prefecturate of Schonberg. In it is Schonberg, anciently called Schonenburg, a citadel, which is a pass leading out of the Bergstrasze into the Odenwald. In the valley below it lie some houses which form a small village, the cantred, or criminal-jurisdiction of which belongs to Heppenbeim, a kellerey of the Elector of Mentz. The citadel and village are incorporated into one parish with Benjheim in the archbishopric of Mentz.

Elmshausen, or Elmanshausen, a village, in which is found lead-ore, and the third part of which has been conferred by the Elector-palatine on the house of Erbach.

Gadernheim, or Gadern, an old village.

Grunau, a parochial-village, producing a good growth of wine.

The villages of Reichenbach and Rimpach; the latter of which lies separate; together with fix other places.

7. The prefecturate of Konig, confishing of Konig, a parochial-village, which is an ancient place and a fief of the Elector of Mentz; together with

The Furstengrund, which is incorporated into one parish with Konig.

8. The prefecturate of WILDENSTEIN, or the cent-amt of E/chau, formerly belonged, as a palatine-fief, to the Counts of Rieneck, and has now of a long time been mortgaged by them to the house of Falkenstein. On the extinction of the Counts of Rieneck it reverted, as an open fief, to the Elector-palatine, and by him was ceded, in the year 1560, to the house of Erbach, as property. In it is Wildenstein, a citadel, feated on the Speszbart, and below which lies a village.

Eschau, a parochial-village.

Hochstadten, also called Hofstadten, a village with a church in it, and incorporated into one parish with Eschau.

Rem. The borough of Little-Heibach, which, till the year 1721, belonged to this prefecturate, was fold to the princely-house of Lowenstein-Wertheim. See above, in the county of Wertheim.

q. The half of the feigniory and prefecturate of Breuberg: concerning which fee above, under the county of Wertheim.

Rem. The prefecturate of Dannenberg-Seeheim, which, in the year 1504, was wrested from the house of Erbach, during the Bavarian war, by William, Landgrave of Hesse; and again, in 1510, restored in a great measure to it, though as a Hessian fief, was fold in the year 1714, after many disputes about it, by the house of Erbach to Hesse-Darmstadt for the sum of 207500 florins. It confifted of the following places: viz. Dannenberg, or Tannenberg, a citadel, which was laid waste in 1399; of Seebeim, a village situated below it; of Bickenbach, also a village, near which was situated the citadel of Bickenbach, which was the family feat of the ancient lords of Bickenbach; and likewise of the villages of Alsbach, Bedenkirchen, Balkhausen, Great-Robrbeim, Jugenheim, Staffeln, Malchen and Wurzelbach. These places belong, to this very day, to Zwingenberg, which is an upper-prefecturate of Hesse-Darmstadt. See above, p. 75. The house of Erbach has been possessed also of a share in the fortress of Habizheim and its appendages; but this fortress, in the years 1530 and 1664, was alienated to others, and at present is principally possessed by the house of Lowenstein-Wertheim.

The SEIGNIORY of L I M B U R G.

§. 1. OF the proper feigniory of Limburg, Homann's heirs, in the year 1749, published a chart, which in the Atlas of Germany constitutes the seventy-second, and took its rise from the measurements which the Lords of the county caused to be made; but might and ought to have been much more accurate than it is.

§. 2. This feigniory lies in Swabia, being environed by the dutchy of Wurtemberg, the provostship of Elwangen, the principality of Onolzbach and the territory of the Imperial city of Swabian-Hall; and in its greatest extent, from south to north, is almost five German miles, but from west to east only four and a half. The seigniory of Speckfeld, which belongs to it, lies in Franconia, being environed by the princely county of Schwarzenberg, the feigniory of Scinfberm, the county of Castell and the bishopric of Wurzburg. In length above two German miles, and between one and one and a quarter broad. Through the former runs the river Kocher, which in it receives the rivulets and brooks of Roth, Eisbach, Egelpbach, &c. having their rise therein. The rivulet of Bubler also rises in this seigniory.

§. 3. The ancient Lords, but afterwards the Counts, of Limburg, who were the hereditary cup-bearers of the holy Roman Empire, and always free, divided themselves into two principal lines; namely, into these of Speckfeld and Gaildorf. The latter became extinct in its male-heirs in the year 1690, and the former in 1713, in the person of Count Volrath. 'The electoral-house of Brandenburg, in the year 1693, caused the expectancy of the Imperial fiefs of Limburg to be conferred on itself by the Emperor Leopold, which expectancy the Emperor Joseph, in 1706, and the Emperor Charles VI. in 1712, thought fit to ratify. The last Count of Limburg therefore dying in the year 1713, the King of Prussia took possession of his country, but at length ceded it to the allodial heirs, and the Emperor fequestrated the Imperial fiefs, but, in 1728, conferred the investiture of them on King Frederick William, as Imperial Sub-vaffal. In the year 1742, King Frederick II. transferred these Limburg Imperial fiels to the princely house of Brandenburg-Onolabach; which translation was approved of by the Emperor Charles VII. in the year 1744. In 1746, the Marggrave Charles William Frederick of Brandenburg-Onolabach determined at length, by an agreement, the tedious disputes with the allodial heirs of Limburg, which agreement was also appproved of by the King of Prussia as well as by the Marggrave of Brandenburg-Culmbach, and, in 1748, interchanged and ratified. By virtue of this agreement the allodial heirs ceded to Brandenburg-Onolebach, (1.) three quarters in the circle-voice of Limburg-Gaildorf-Schmidelfeld; in consequence of which the princely-house of Onolzbach took upon itself the payment of seven floring of the single tax of the Empire and Circle. (2.) The whole of the military feodal-court of Limburg, or the noble vaffals and occupiers of military fiefs, who were allied to the whole house of Limburg by homage, together with the investiture of all feodal estates, parts, rights and dependencies which they were possessed of, without exception, and particularly the share which was to fall to the posterity of Solms-Rodelheim and Saxe-Gotha-Roda, who derived their descent from the Countess Juliana Dorothea, confort to Wurmbrand and Countefs by birth of Limburg-Gaildorf, all fuch vaffals and feoffees, (3.) The fingle fubjects lying near and commodious to both the Onolzbach upper-prefecturates of Creilsheim and Uffenbeim, the feoffees and estates of Upper-Speltach, Goldbach, Ingersheim, Gollachoftheim, Pfahlenheim, Herren-Bergtheim and Seyderzell, together with all the rights, &c. derived therefrom; as also the whole village of Markertshefen and the Limburg, free, proprietory proprietory subjects of Under-Sontheim and Ummenhosen. On the other hand, Brandenhurg-Onolzbach ceded to the allodial heirs of the house of Limburg, in lieu of a genuine male and female sub-vassalage of the Empire, all and every the Limburg, Imperial, seodal immunities and regalia of what denomination soever, and as many of them as were declared undoubted siefs of the Empire by the conclusum of the Aulic-council of the Empire of the year 1710, with exception however of the Imperial seodal-toll at Swabian-Hall and Geiszlingen below the gates, and both the convoys belonging thereto in that part to Munkheim and Geiszlingen, as being what the princely house of Onolzbach reserved to itself, though the proprietary estates there, of the Limburg allodial heirs, were also to be toll-free.

§. 4. The frequently mentioned allodial heirs of Limburg, of the Gaildorf, Sebmidelfeld, Sontheim and Speckfeld lines, with whom this agreement was made, are, (1.) Wilhelmina Christiana, Countess-dowager of Solms-Affenheim, and Countess by birth of Limburg-Gaildorf. (2.) The Princess Maria Sophia Charlotta Wills. Dor. Frederica, consort to Hobenlobe-Bartensein, on account of her mother Christina Magdalena, Landgravess-dowager to Helle-Homburg, and also Countess by birth of Limburg. (3.) The children and heirs dignified with the title of Counts, of the Lady Amone Sophia Frederica, Countess-downger of Lowenstein-Wertheim, and Countess also by birth of Limburg-Schmidelfeld, Southeim and Speckfeld. (4.) The children and heirs, dignified with the title of Counts, of the Lady Frederica Augusta, Countels and confort to Schonburg-Waldenburg, and likewise Countels by birth of Limburg-Schmidelfeld, Southeim and Speckfeld. (5.) Juliana Francisca, consort, Wildgravess and Rhinegravess of Grumbaeh, and Countess by birth of Proszing and Limburg. (6.) John Lewis Vollrath, Count of Lowenstein-Wertheim, in the name of his consort Frederica Wilhelmina Augusta, Countess of Erbach and Limburg. (7.) Frederick Lewis, Count of Lowenstein-Wertheim, as Count of Limburg, &c. (8.) Amelia Alexandrina Frederica, Countess-dowager of Rechtern and Countess by birth of Limburg, &c. (9.) Christiana Carolina Henrietta, Countess of Gravenitz and also Countess by birth of Limburg, &c. (10.) The two daughters of Frederick Ernelt, Count of Welz and Limburg; namely, Mar. Freder. Amone Christ. Elizab. Eleonora, and Wilhelm. Carol. Francisca. Exclusive of these, the posterity of Solms-Rodelbeim and Saxe-Gotha-Roda, who were descended from the Countess of Juliana Dorothea, consort to Wurmbrand and Countess by birth of Limburg-Gaildorf, are also possessed of a share in the country of Limburg.

§. 5. The allodial heirs of Limburg enjoy, on account of this county, at the Diet of the Empire, in the college of Franconian Counts, two voices. In the circle of Franconia two voices were also granted to the house of Limburg in 1589; but on this condition, that in case the Speckfeld and Gailderf lines should be united, there should remain to Limburg only one voice.

but, in the year 1721, the circle of Franconia determined for the future to allow this house two voices, under the title of Limburg-Speckfeld and Limburg-Gaildorf. In the latter voice, which takes precedence of the other, Brandenburg-Onolzbach has, by virtue of the agreement mentioned in (§. 3.) three quarters, but the remaining quarter the descendants of the Countess Juliana Dorothea, consort to Limburg-Gaildorf; viz. Solms-Rodelheim and Saxe-Gotha-Rhoda are possessed of. The whole county contributes to one Roman month sixty-sour florins: that is to say, Limburg-Qaildorf twenty florins, twenty kruitzers; Limburg-Speckfeld eighteen florins, forty-eight kruitzers, and Limburg-Sontheim twenty-sour florins, fifty-two kruitzers. Of this matricular-evaluation Brandenburg-Onolzbach has, as is already mentioned above in §. 3. taken upon itself the sum of seven florins. To each chamber-term, in which Brandenburg-Onolzbach is not concerned, Limburg-Speckfeld pays twenty-one rixdollars, fifty-nine kruitzers and a half, and Limburg-Gaildorf the like sum.

§. 6. The allodial heirs of Limburg have not hitherto, as far as I can learn, divided the country, though for some years past such a division has been labouring. It consists, as is already shewn above,

I. Of the proper feigniory of Limburg, in which the allodial heirs are possessed of

1. Gaildorf, a small town and citadel, lying on the Kocher.

2. Upper-Roth, a parochial-village, fituated not far from the rivulet of Roth, and Vichberg, also a parochial-village, which has been mentioned already under the dutchy of Wurtemberg.

3. Eidendorf, a parochial-village.

4. Buchborn, a village.

5. Michelbach, a parochial-village and citadel.

6. Middle-Fitsbach, a parochial-village.

7. Upper-Sontheim, a borough, fituated on the Buhler, and containing a common chancery of Limburg and Schmidelfeld.

8. Schmidelfeld, a citadel.

9. Schulzbach, a village and citadel.

10. The villages of Upper-Groningen and Eschach.

11. Above one hundred and fixty other vilages and hamlets.

II. Of the feigniory of Speckfeld, in which is to be observed,

- 1. The market of Einersheim, which is a market-town, containing a citadel.
 - 2. The villages of Munch-Sontheim, Nenzenheim, &c.
- 3. Sommerhausen, a market-town, situated on the Mayn and fortified with ramparts and ditches.

4. Winterhausen, a village, seated on the Mayn.

Rem. The family feat of Limburg, together with the borough and prefecturate belonging thereto, was fold, in the year 1451, to the Imperial city of Swabian-Hall, for the fum of 45700 florins, by Erasmus, Lord of Limburg. The old ruinous citadel of Speckfeld is in the possession of the bishopric of Wurzburg. The seigniory of Welzbeim reverted, after the death of the last Count of Limburg, as an open male-fief, to the ducalhouse of Wurtemberg; and of this seigniory particular mention shall be made hereafter.

III. The Marggraves of Brandenburg-Onolzbach have, by virtue of the above-mentioned agreement, obtained

1. Markertshofen, a village, consisting of seventeen dwelling-houses, together with its limits, dependencies, and the high and low jurisdiction thereof; as also the village and community-seigniory, sheep-hook, farm and pasture, and all other rights and jurisdictions, as well regarding the subjects, people and estates, as likewise the profits, tithes, chace and other incomes, of what denomination soever, without exception.

2. The former free proprietary-subjects of Limburg, who resided in the villages of Under-Sontheim and Ummenkosen, together with all the incomes and prerogatives annexed thereto, and likewise the high and low-jurisdiction of Limburg, partly as handed down in both these places, and partly in any cases to be exercised, together with chace-jurisdiction and other rights.

Rem. These villages belong in part to the Imperial city of Swabian-Hall and the presecturate of Vellburg; but all the three adduced villages are bounded by the Onolabach upper prefecturate of Creilsheim.

3. The former Limburg fingle subjects, feosses and estates of Upper-Speltach, Goldbach, Ingerskeim, Gollach-Ostheim (which belongs to the canton of Odenwald) Pfahlenheim, Herren-Bergtheim and Scyderzell, together with all the rights, jurisdictions, government, mulcts and respective taxes, imposts, average, service, rents, tythes, &c. particularly those relating to the village and common seigniory of Gollach-Ositheim, though with exception

tion of the by-toll handed down to it and the fimultaneous chace in these parts, as being reserved for the line of Limburg-Speckfeld. The first of these places lies near the Upper-Onolebach presecturate of Creilsheim, and the rest by and in the upper presecturate of Uffenbeim.

The SEIGNIORY of SEIGNIORY of M.

THE feigniory of Seinskeim lies between the feigniory of Speckfeld and the maggravial Onolzbach upper-prefecturate of Uffenheim. The reigning Prince of Schwarzenherg has, on account of this seigniory, both seat and voice at the Diet of the Empire in the college of Franconian Counts; but to this college he resules any longer to adhere; and likewise in the circle of Franconia. The Imperial matricular-evaluation thereof is included in the above-mentioned evaluation of Schwarzenherg, but to each chamber-term it pays thirty-five rixdollars. It consists of three presecturates; which are,

1. The administratory-prefecturate of WASSERNDORF: in which is Wasserndorf, a borough and citadel.

Markt-Seinsheim, a market-town and citadel, containing a Roman-catholic parish-church.

2. The vogt-amt of Huttenbeim, having its seat at Huttenbeim, a parish-village, in which is a Protestant and a Roman-catholic curate.

3. The administratory-prefecturate of GNOZHEIM, which has its seat at Gnozheim, a village, containing a Protestant parish-church.

The SEIGNIORY of REIGHELS BERG.

THE feigniory of Reichelsberg, or Reigelsberg, lies between the little towns of Aub and Rottingen, which belong to Wurzburg. On the death of Conrad of Brauneck it fell to the bishopric of Bamberg, which ceded it by way of exchange to the bishopric of Wurzburg, and the latter invested therewith Conrad of Weinsperg. In the year 1521, Catherine of Weinsperg, consort to Count Eberhard of Konigstein, disposed of this seigniory and likewise of one half of the town of Aub, to the bishopric of Wurz-

Ttt2

burg,

burg, for the fum of 49,300 florins in gold. In the year 1600, the bishopric fued, on account thereof, for a voice in the circle of Franconia, but could not prevail. Afterwards it invested the Barons of Schonborn in such a manner with this feigniory, that they were thereby empowered to avail themselves of the title, and all the honours and dignities which the Lords of Reichelsberg anciently enjoyed, and promifed also to answer in their name for all the taxes of the Empire. The Barons of Schonborn addressed themfelves upon this, in the year 1684, to the circle of Franconia, and fought to be received, on account of Reickelsberg, to the degree of States of the circle, which was also effected: but, as by virtue of the recess of the Diet of the circle for this year, their reception was granted on this condition, that they should promife to procure for themselves immediate estates, and suffer them to be charged with a proportionable matricular-evaluation; the bishopric of Wurzburg paid the Roman months and chamber-terms for this feigniory; and it was reckoned in the Wurzburg upper-prefecturate of Rottingen, already mentioned, whence it appears that the present Counts of Schonborn enjoy only the Reichelsberg voice at the Diets of the Empire and Circle, and take their title therefrom without being actual possessors of the seigniory itself. At the Diet of the Empire they enjoy also, on account of this seigniory, a voice in the Franconian college of Counts.

It comprizes in it,

1. Reichelsherg, or Reigelsberg, a mountain-citadel feated in the neighbour-hood of the little town of Aub.

2. The villages of Ballersheim, Burgood, or Burgenroth, together with Bibebreren on the Tauber, &c.

The SEIGNIORY of WIESENTHEID.

THE feigniory of Wiesentheid lies between the bishopric of Wurzburg, the county of Castell and the Onolzbach presecturates of Brixensladt and Little-Lankheim. The Counts of Dernbach, who were possessed thereof, became extinct in the year 1697, upon which it devolved to a line of the house of Schonborn. The Counts of Schonborn-Wiesentheid are possessed, on account thereof both of seat and voice at the Diet of the Empire in the Franconian college of Counts and likewise in the Circle of Franconia; and to each Roman month contribute the sum of sour florins. What they pay to a chamber-term I am not able to learn. This seigniory contains in it,

1. Wiesenibeid, a citadel and village.

2. The villages of Kirch-Schonbach, Jenkerndorf, Atschausen, Schwarzenau, Breitensee, Michelbach, Upper-Sempach and Dunkelhausen.

The SEIGNIORY of WELZHEIM.

THE seigniory of Welzheim lies in Swabia, in the dutchy of Wurtemberg and on the river Lein, in the neighbourhood of the town of Schorndorf and the cloyster of Lorch. Formerly the Lords, but afterwards the Counts, of Limburg held this seigniory in sief of the Dukes of Wurtemberg; whence, on the extinction of the former, in the year 1713, it reverted to the latter. Duke Eberhard Levis made a donation of it, in 1718, to the Counters Christina Wilhelmina of Wurben; which donation she again made over, in 1726, to the house of Wurtemberg in fief; but at the same time it was stipulated, that her brother, Count William Frederick of Gravenitz, should possess it in common with her. To this last the circle of Franconia granted, in the year 1727, both feat and voice on the bench of Counts. She likewife paid a matricular-evaluation of five florins, and was possessed also, at the Diet of the Empire, both of seat and voice in the Franconian college of Counts; but Duke Charles Alexander of Wurtemberg again suppressed this seigniory; and it belongs at present to the princely estates of the chamber of accounts. The voice, on account thereof, in the circle of Franconia, is also suppressed; and for this reason it pays no taxation to the circle.

Of Welzheim, or, as it is called in the land-charts, Welzen, is a market-town.

The SEIGNIORY of H A U S E N.

THE feigniory of Hausen, or Hausen, lies within the limits of the feigniory of Limburg, and consists of the village of that name. It is a male-fief of the Elector of Bavaria, which reverted after the extinction of the Counts of Limburg, and upon that was given in fief, first to the Baron of Dankelmann, but afterwards to the Baron of Bredow. In the agreement made between Brandenburg-Onolzbach and the Limburg allodial heirs in the year 1746, I find this Hausen adduced as an Imperial male subvassalinge dependent on the Elector of Bavaria as a noble male fief, which was acquired anew by the princely house of Brandenburg-Onolzback, and appertaining appertaining thereto with the high and low jurisdiction, as also the chace within all its boundaries, together with all rights, immunities, and appendages. On account of this seigniory is paid the sum of one florin to each Roman month.

The IMPERIAL CITY of N U R N B E R G,

With its Territory.

OF the Imperial city of Nurnberg itself, and likewise of the country lying for one mile round it, John Bapt. Homann has published a prospect and plan. Matth. Seutter has given us five other sheets, which partly lay before the eye an accurate plan of the town of Nurnberg, together with a general representation of the Nurnberg territory and the Nurnberg circuit within what is called the Grenz-Wasser; and partly also the criminal circuit of the fortress and administratory-presecturate of Lichtenau, with the circuit of the administratory-presecturates of Herrsbruck, Reicheneck, Engelthal, and Hohenstein, which were first delineated for the use of the magistrates, but were for a long time kept private. On the second is an inscription importing that they were executed by Christpoher Scheurer. These charts are also to be found in the Deliciæ Topo-geographicæ Noribergenses.

I shall describe

1. The city of Nurnberg itself.

Numberg, in Latin Norimberga, is a large and well-built town, but not populous, fituated in a fpot which is indeed fandy, but well cultivated and fruitful, and on account of the many pleasure-seats near it, as also the beautiful and large villages round it, extremely pleasant. It stands on the Pegnitz, which runs through the middle of the town, and over it, exclusive of divers wooden bridges, are laid also fix others of stone. This town is environed with double walls, which are fortified with several small and large towers, and these again with canon, and a broad and deep ditch, in circuit about a short German mile. The number of its streets amounts to above five hundred, and that of its houses to 8000, which latter are also for the most part large and built of stone; but yet the number of its inhabitants is by no means proportionable to the largeness of the town. For though in many houses there reside two or three families, yet in most is but one, and several remain quite uninhabited. The magistrates and almost all the inhabitants are Lutherans, but on account of their having formerly received the Interim, feveral Roman-catholic customs are still retained in their Divine Service. Exclusive of the two parish-churches here of St. Sebald and St. Laurence, Nurnberg contains also four others, which have their ordinary preachers, together with eleven churches and chapels, in which fometimes deacons, and fometimes those who are candidates for the priesthood preach. In general there are fix preachers in this town, thirty-five deacons, and two vicars. The few Calvinishs here, who have a preacher of their own, perform Divine Service out of the town, in a house seated in a garden and fitted for that purpose. In the Teutonick house, which shall be mentioned hereafter, the Roman-catholic service is tolerated. The town of Nurnberg is divided into eight parts, or quarters, improperly fo called, and one hundred and thirty-one captainships. parts are, 1. The quarter at the Wine-market, which is divided into thirteen captainships. In this quarter lies the parish-church of St. Sebald, in which one preacher and eight deacons officiate, and the principal things to feen in it are the brass monument of St. Sebald, together with the creation of the world by the celebrated Albrecht Durer, who was himself a Nurnberger. The Latin school near it is supplied with eight teachers. The roof of the Augustine church here is ingeniously contrived. 2. The quarter at the Milk-market, containing fourteen captainships. In this quarter lies the Imperial fortress, being an old-fashioned citadel standing on a mountain, in which the first counsellor, as Imperial bailiff, always has his residence, and is stilled the Castellan. The principal remarkables here are the Emperor's chapel, with the old tower belonging thereto, as also the chapels of St. Waldburg and St. Margaret, together with the observatory, and the deep well. Not far from the Imperial fortress here stood the old citadel of the Burggraves of Nurnberg, which was burnt down in 1420, and in 1427 was disposed of by the Burggrave and Elector Frederick to the town. At prefent it contains a granary, a pentagonal tower, and a prison. The church of St. Mary, which is also called the predicant or dominican church, likewise stands here. In the predicant cloyster is kept the great library belonging to the town. In this part also stands the chapel of St. Maurice. 3. The quarter at the Gilgenhof, which confifts of fourteen captainships. At St. Giles's church in this quarter, which is built in the modern tafte, and is the finest in the whole town, one preacher and fix deacons administer. an old cloyster also near it stands a gymnasium, whose upper classes are under the care of a certain number of professors, and its lower ones under one rector and four preceptors. The abbey, which formerly stood near this church, was once under an Imperial matricular-evaluation of forty florins, but by virtue of a fentence of the chamber-court in 1567, is exempted from from the town Sine ouere. 4. The quarter at the Salt-market contains in it twenty-two captainships. The council-house here is one of the most magnificent in all Germany, and in its apartments are to be feen fome excellent raintings. At the church of our Lady officiate one preacher and two deacons. Near the great and rich spital, in which no less than four hundred people are always maintained, lies the church of the Holy Ghoft, having for its ministers one preacher and eight deacons, and in this church are kept the greatest and principal part of the jewels of the Empire, as for instance the crown, the scepter, the sword and Imperial apple, but these are only flown to reigning Princes, persons descended from ancient noble houses, and the embassadors of Emperors, on which occasions the expences the magistrates are at amount to above thirty florins. The pretended relics belonging to it, namely the spear with which our Saviour's fide was opened, a thorn of his crown, and a piece of the manger wherein he lay when an infant, are hung up at a great height in the vault of the church in a shrine of silver gilt. The Latin school in the spital is supplied with five teachers. 5. The quarter near the barefooted friars contains in it twenty-one captainships. In this quarter stands the second parish-church of St. Laurence, at which one preacher and eight deacons officiate, and near it is a Latin school under the direction of eight teachers. In this quarter also stands the church of the barefooted Friars, near which lies a hospital for foundlings, together with the church of St. Catherine, near which formerly flood a nunnery; as also that of St. Martha, with a small hospital; the church of St. Clare, near which likewise formerly food a nunnery, and the building, in which the academy of painting; erected here in 1662, has its residence. 6. The quarter at the Corn-market confifts of seventeen captainships, Near the church of St. Salvator formerly stood a Carmelite-cloyster. The arsenal here is likewise a large, regular, and well provided building. 7. The quarter near the Carthulians confifts of fifteen captainships, containing in it the church of Marienzell, near which formerly stood a charter-house, and the chapel of the twelve apostles. 8. The quarter near St. Elizabeth also confifts of fifteen captainships. At St. Yames's church in it officiate one preacher and three deacons, and the Latin school near it consists of three teachers. The Teutonick house here is the residence of the commandery of Nurnberg, and in the church of St. Elizabeth, in this quarter, the Teutonick order celebrate their form of worship, and the deacons of St. Jacob also have their mass or hours of prayer there every day early in the morning.

The patriciate here took its rife in 1198, the Emperor Henry VI. affifting here, at that time at a tournament, at which time he also raised thirty-eight burghers families to the degree of nobility. In its carefulness to maintain its nobility it has greatly the superiority over almost all other degrees of nobility in Germany. The noble families belonging to it are those of Pfinzing of Henfenfeld, Tueber of Simmelidorf, Holzfehuber of Afpach, Scheurt of Defersoof, Ebner of Eschenbach, Haller of Halserstein, Kresz of Kressenflein, Loffelbolz of Colberg, Grundberr of A'tenthann, Gouder of Heroldsberg, Pomer of Muffel, Waldstromer of Reichelsdorf, that of Harfdorf, the Welfer of Neuhof in the Hof, or Imhof, that of Volkamer, the Turer of Heimendorf, and those of Bekaim and Stromer, out of which twenty families, who are capable of affurning the office of Councellors, those of the council are ordinarily chosen. If one of these families should become extinct there are still four other noble families here, one of which would step into the place of the extinct line; namely those of the Gugel, the Ochkafen of Schollenbech, the Thill and the Pelzler. Over the judicatories and prefecturate offices here the following families, moreover, prefide, viz. the Peller, the Petzen, the Dilberren, the Murr, the Fexer, the Welker, and the Schleicher. The council of Nurnberg confifts of thirty-four noble, and eight handicrast countellors. The former are divided into twenty-fix burgomafters, and eight old Genannte. These twenty-six burgomasters consist of thirteen old and thirteen young ones; and every four weeks an old and a young one prefide. The thirteen old burgomasters compose the seven first counsellors, who are stiled the septemvirate, and look to the most important and secret affairs of the town, and frequently fit alone; together with the fix next to them who compose the councillors of appeal. Of the former the three first are stiled the supreme head-people, and are always Imperial councilors. The first of them is also Imperial bailiff, resides at the Imperial fort, and is stilled the Castellan. Out of the thirteen younger burgomasters as well as out of the older ones, all the offices which hereafter occur, are filled up. The eight old Genannte, in many of the prefecturates, form the deputations. Lastly, the eight handicrasts go also yearly, at certain times, to council, and these are composed of the goldsmiths, the brewers, the tanners, the taylors, the cutlers, the clothiers, the bakers, and the furriers, who are nominated the leffer council. The great council here, which must consist of two hundred persons, is composed of persons elected by the burghers from the highest to the lowest. The judicatories in Nurnberg are the appeal and upper-court, together with that of the town and marriage, the country, the peafant-court, the under-court, instituted for the recovery of small debts, the quinquevirate-court for the reparation of injuries, the forest-court belonging to the wood of Sebald, the forestcourt of Laurence wood, and the wild-honey-court in the latter. The jurisdictions here are, 1. The bailiff-office. 2. The tax-office. 3. The administratory - office for the county, as for instance, the upper-prefecturate of the administratory-amts situated therein. 4. The waroffice. 5. The fupreme guardian and ecclefiastical-office. 6. The building-office. 7. The toll-office. 8. The brewery-office. 9. The office for the levying of toll upon wine. 10. The pawn-office, or lending-house. Vol. V. Uuu 11. The 11. The corn-office. 12. The cenfor-office, established for the government of handicrafts. 13. The tallow-office. 14. The rent-mafter's office. 15. The theriff's, or inquisition-office. 16. The office belonging to the town charity. 17. The country charity office. 18. The Sebald wood office. 19. The Laurence wood office. 20. The spital-office, belonging to the order of the Hely Ghoft. 21. The cloyfler-office of St. Clare and Pilinreuth. 22. The twelve fraternities of Mendel. 23. The twelve fraternities of Landauer. 24. The spital of St. Martha, erected for the reception of pilgrims. 25. The arfenal-office. 26. The chest-office. 27. The mint-office. 28. The office belonging to the orphan-house or foundling-hospital. All these several offices are filled up with deputies of the council, deliberators, affessors, administrators, &c. Some of them, namely as for instance, No 17-22, and 24-26, are to be considered as administratory country prefecturates, they having their jurifdiction there. Numberg has no particular confistory, but the magistracy in it exercise all confistorial rights in capital matters. The greatest part of the clergy in the town are referred io the scholarchate and the ecclesiastic office, and those who officiate at the spital to the upper administrator thereof, that is to the fift councellor at the Imperial fortress, for their first instance. Most of the country curates are referred to the administratory-prefecturates, and feventeen of them to the country charity office. The town-court prefides in matrimonial affairs, and the theological faculty at Altorf confecrates the new ecclefiaftics. The military force of this town confifts of feven companies of foot, each of which in time of peace contains one hundred men, but in time of war is one hundred and eighty-five strong; of two companies of cuiraffiers, each confifting of eighty-five men, and two of invalids, amounting to two hundred and twenty-fix. Out of the burghership twenty-five standards are always kept in arms, each of which confitts of between three and four hundred men, exclusive of two hundred gunners, and two companies of the town cavalry.

I shall not infift here upon the great reputation which divers Nurnbergers have for a long time past acquired in the arts of painting and engraving, but only mention the number of its ingenious artists and handicrafts people who execute in ivory, wood, and metal, numberless ingenious things at a very low price, which are exported all over the world. It is true, indeed, those toys do not bring in so much money to the town at present as they did formerly, but this article is even yet confiderable, Nurnberg being one of the greatest trading towns in Germany. Geography is much indebted to the celebrated thop for land-charts established here by John Bapt. Homann, and this shop is also a real ornament and a great honour to the town.

The Nurnbergers are originally descended from the Norici, who quitting their own country fettled in the ancient Nordgau, and there founded the Custrum Nericum. Lambertus Schafnaburgensis furnishes us with the earliest account of the town of Nurnberg, that account being written in the year 1072: Clara et celebris valde bis temporibus (says he) per Galliam erat memoria Sancti Sebaldi in Nurnberg. It is probable that the town belonged neither to the dutchy of Franconia, nor even to that of Swabia, but was immediately subject to the Emperor; whence also the Emperor Lotharius was empowered to confer it on Duke Henry the Proud, who was father to Duke Henry the Lion. The Emperor Charles IV. and Wenzel promifed to keep it annexed to the Empire. At the Diet thereof in the college of the Imperial cities it enjoys the third place and voice on the Swabian bench, but on the bench of the Imperial cities in the circle of Franconia the first. In the Imperial matricula of Worms this town is rated to one Roman month at 1480 florins, which fum constitutes about one seventh part of the tax of the whole circle of Franconia. But this evaluation being reduced in 1678 Nurnberg also was remitted one third of her share in it, and her rate fixed at nine hundred and eighty-fix florins, by which it still continues to pay the above-mentioned proportion. In 1701 it was charged only with seven hundred and ninety-six florins; but in 1720 its evaluation was raised to eight hundred and twenty-eight. This new evaluation it paid till the year 1738, but from that time has confented only to the feventh part of the common imposts of the circle. To each chamber-term it contributes eight hundred and twelve rixdollars.

The tract next adjoining round the town is environed with lines, on which too the west are two sconces called the Bern and Stern-Sconce.

2. Of the territory belonging to the town.

1. The tract called the Nurnberg circle, or compass, is surrounded by the rivers Schwarzbach, Pegnitz, and Schwabach, to which the Nurnbergers give the title of the border-waters. It comprizes within it two confiderable Imperial forests, called the Schwald and Laurence forests, which consist of pines: The former lies between the Schwabach and Pegnitz; the latter between Pegnitz and Schwarzach. Each of these forests stands under an office which is denominated from it, and both of them under the forest-office or jurisdiction at Nurnberg.

On the fide of the Sebald forest is to be remarked.

- 1. Grundlach, a market-town and citadel, feated on the rivulet of Grundlach, and belonging to the noble family of Pfinzing Henfenfeld, which is also possessed of the neighbouring village of Reuttes.
- 2. Heroldsberg, a market-town and citadel. The Ammonen were posfessed of this town in the time of the Emperor Frederick II. from whom U u u 2 it descended to the Counts of Nassau, and from the latter to the Burggraves of Numberg. The Burggrave Frederick gave it to Duke Suantibor of Pomerania, with his daughter Anne, and other places in dowery. In 1391 it was fold to the Geuder family, which is still in possession of it. The noble Gender criminal jurisdiction over this town and an adjoining district, which, exclusive of other places, also comprizes in it the following, is disclaimed on the side of the Marggrave of Brandenburg.

3. Kalchreut, a parochial-village and citadel, belonging to the Hallers of Hallerstein.

4. Neuhof, a citadel and village; and Beerbach, a parochial-village, belonging to the family of Welfer, which exercises the criminal jurisdiction over these places.

On the fide of Laurence forest lie also many places belonging to the patricians of Nurnberg; together with others, as for instance, Fischbach, a parochial-village and citadel, the subjects of which belong for the most part to the family of Harsdorf; Mogelderf, also a parochial village; and Pilinreuib, formerly a cloyster, which is united with the Claren-presecturate of Nurnberg, &c.

Of the immunities of the town of Nurnberg in the Hofmark of Furth

we have treated above, under the principality of Onolzbach.

Feucht, a market-town, containing a parish-church, and being the capital of all the Ziedlers, (a people who have permission to breed bees and collect honey) as also of the Ziedel estates. Here too the Zeidel-court is held yearly on the first of May, at which court the complaints of the possessions of the Zeidel estates are taken into consideration.

- II. The following administratory-presecturates, which stand under the rural administratory-presecturate of Nurnberg.
- I. Within the lines which furround the nearest tract to the town of Nurnberg is
- 1. The administratory-prefecturate of Wohrd, having its seat in the market-town of that name, which lies on the river Pegnitz, and constitutes a suburb of Nurnberg. At the parish-church here officiate one curate and one deacon Frederick I. elector of Brandenburg and Burggrave of Nurnberg fold this place to the town of Nurnberg.

2. The administratory-prefecturate of Gostenhof, having its seat in the great borough of Gostenbof, which is also considered as a suburb to Nurnberg.

3. The Weiber hospital of St. John, together with a parish-church and a church-yard to it, which contains in it divers very considerable and remarkable markable monuments. The hospital here has its own administration-and which presides over its own inhabitants and estates.

On the Pegnitz are erected caserns in which some soldiers reside, who have a curate of their own.

II. Without the lines are

1. The Weiber hospitals of St. Leonhard, St. Peter, and St. John, which have their parish-churches. They enjoy likewise their own administration-offices, which preside over their subjects and estates.

2. The administratory-prefecturate of Altorf, in which is Altorf, or Altdorf, a finiall town, containing about two hundred and eight hearths. It confifts principally of one large street, which is called the Markt, and of feveral little ones, but these are rendered disagreeable by the many dunghills in them. At the parish-church here a professor of . divinity always preaches, and the two deacons belonging to it are likewife professors of divinity. The citadel here is an ancient stone building, confifting of twelve large courts, in which the Alterf administrator has his refidence. In the year 1575 a gymnasium was sounded here, which, in 1578, obtained of the Emperor academical immunities, was confecrated in 1580, and in 1623 raifed to an university. The fine university-structure confists of a building three story high, which is terminated by two wings, and contains in it the valuable library belonging to the univerfity, an anatomical theatre, and a chymical laboratory. In the main body of it also is an observatory. Without the town lies a large botanical garden, which is kept in a good condition. Alterf is a place of antiquity, and of it mention is made in some records so early as the year 912. It belonged anciently to the Counts of Nassau, from whom it descended to the Burggraves of Nurnberg. The Burggrave Frederick conferred it in the year 1390 on his daughter Anne, who was married to Duke Suantibor of Pomerania. That ducal house fold it in 1393 to the Pfalzgrave Ruprecht, who was afterwards Emperor. It continued with the Pfalzgrave till the year 1504, at which time the Pfalzgrave Ruprecht was put under the ban; and among other Imperial States the execution thereof was also conferred on the town of Numberg, which, exclusive of other places, took possession also of the town of Altorf, which was adjudged by right of conquest to it, and also retained as property by virtue of the agreement entered into in the year 1521 with the Pfalzgrave. In 1448 it was stormed by the Marggrave Albrecht, and one half of it burnt down. In the fixteenth century it was often taken, and in 1553 for the most part reduced to ashes by the Marggrave Albrecht the younger.

Rasch, a parochial-village, feated on the Schwarzach, and in which the family of Weller are possessed of a share.

The villages of Rotenbach and Weissenbrun.

3. The administratory-prefecturate of LAUF comprizes in it a part of the forest of Sebald and Laurence. In it is

Lauf,

Lauf, a finall town, feated on the Pegnitz, and containing a citadel, with about two hundred and thirty-feven hearths. At the time this place was disposed of in 1307 by Godfrey of Schlusselberg to the town of Nurnberg, it was only a village, which the Emperor Charles IV. erected into a town.

Leimburg and Ruckersdorf, two parochial-villages.

Peringersdorf, also a parochial-village and citadel belonging to the Tucher of Simmelfdort.

Unterburg, or the Lower-Burg, a citadel, belonging to the heirs of the Dorrer, and which was anciently an Imperial forest and chace citadel, as some records executed there by the Emperor Wenzel prove.

Brunn, a small village, situated not far from the Rothenbach, and near which anciently stood an Imperial forest and chace-citadel, which in 1449 was destroyed in the war of the Marggrave Albrecht.

4. The administratory-prefecturate of Herrsbruck, which is reckoned the largest, and with respect to its criminal jurisdiction extends over sour administration-offices, which are,

1. The administration-office of Herrsbruck itself, containing in it

Herrsbruck, a small town, situated on the Pegnitz, and containing a citadel, with about two hundred and twenty-five hearths. Formerly this place also contained a provostship, which the Pfalzgraves of the Rhine disposed of in 1529 to the town of Nurnberg.

Alten-Sittenback, a village, containing a filial-church, which is incorporated into one parish with Herrsbruck.

Pemmelsbrun and Aalfeld, both parochial-villages.

Kirchen-Sittenhach, also a parochial-village and citadel, which the families of Volkamer and Pfinzing are possessed of in trust. To this parish belong also the filial churches of Upper-Krumbach and Alfaltern.

Torrack, a parochial-village and citadel, belonging to the family of Scheurl, and lying on the river Pegnitz, appertaining also in part to this administration-office, and partly to the rural administration-office of Velden.

Eschenbach, a parochial-village and citadel, belonging to the family of Ebner.

Reichenschwand, a parochial-village and citadel, which is the property of the family of Furtenbach, and lies on the river Pegnitz.

Henfenfeld, also a parochial-village and citadel, belonging to the family of Pfinzing. The citadel is a Bohemian fief.

2. The administration-otince of Reicheneck, containing in it

Reicheneck, a citadel, feated on a high mountain, and belonging anciently to a confiderable noble family, which administered the office of cup-bearer at the court of Bavaria. The Emperor Charles IV. brought this citadel from the Dukes of Bavaria to the crown of Bohemia, but afterwards ceded it again to the sons of Lewis by way of mortgage, from whom at length it came to the town of Nurnberg.

Happurg,

Happurg, a citadel and parochial-village, to whose church is annexed the filial church of Keinspach.

Ferrenbach, also a parochial-village.

Thatheim, a village and citadel, containing an iron-foundery, and belonging to the Holzschubern of Aspach, or the bare-footed Monks.

3. The administration-office of Engelthal, in which is Engeltkal, formerly a nunnery of Augustines, the revenues belonging to which are allotted towards the maintenance of the university of Altorf. At this place is a parish-church.

Offenbausen, a parochial-village, containing but fixty subjects, thirty-nine of which belong to this administration-office.

Entenberg, also a parochial-village.

Odensos, a parochial-village, environed with walls, and seated on the river Pegnitz. The criminal jurisdiction within this village appertains to the seigniory of Rothenberg, but without it to the rural administration-office of Herrsbrück.

4. The administration-office of Hohenslein, under which are thirty-seven subjects. The lofty mountain-citadel of Hohenslein anciently belonged to a noble family who stilled themselves from it. Asterwards it came to the crown of Bohemia, next to the Dukes of Bavaria, and from them to the town of Nurnberg.

5. The administration-office of Velden, in which is Velden, a small town, seated on the river Pegnitz, and containing a citadel and about sixty-eight hearths. In the year 1376 the Emperor Charles IV. conferred on this place, which was before but a market-town, the privileges of a borough.

A part of the parochial-village of Vorrach, already mentioned.

Hauseck, a ruinous citadel, which in the year 1507 was disposed of by Jobst Hallern, as a Bohemian fief, for the sum of 2,500 florins, to the council of Nurnberg, with all its appurtenances and sisteen subjects.

6. The administration-prefecturate of Petzenstein, in which are many iron-mines, and in some parts also a yellow coloured earth, together with the following remarkable places, viz.

Petzenstein, or Betzenstein, a finall town, of about seventy-eight fireplaces, and containing a citadel. Anciently this place, together with Stierberg, belonged to a noble family, and came in 1355 to the crown of Bobemia, but afterwards to the Landgraves of Leuchtenberg, next to the Pfalzgraves, and lastly to the town of Nurnberg.

Stierberg, a decayed citadel, near which is a hamlet, containing ten subjects. This place has shared the same sate with Petzenslein.

Leupolt/lein, a nobleman's feat, containing a hamlet, and belonging to the family of Egloffein.

7. The administration-office of HILPOLTSTEIN, in which is Hiltpolisticin, a citadel and market-town, feated on a mountain. This place belonged anciently to the Dukes of Bavaria, of whom in all probability the noble family of Hilpolisticin held it in fief, and in 1353 was fold to the crown of Bohemia, but was first mortgaged to the family of Seckenders, afterwards to that of Riesenberg, and at last, namely in 1503, to the town of Nurnberg.

Wildenfels, a decayed citadel, which is also a Bohemian sief, and to it belong certain farms and estates. The council of Nurnberg purchased this citadel in the year 1511 of the brothers Conrad and Frederick Pelecken.

Strollenfels, an old citadel, which the family of Wildenstein are possessed of as a palatine sub-vassalage, but is a Bohemian fief.

St. Helena, a parochial-village, belonging to the Tuchers of Simmelfdorf, to whom also appertain the village of Wintershein, in which is a citadel, together with those of Groffengsee and Grafenbergerhill.

The parochial-villages of Watkersbrun, Igenfdorf, and Stockach.

8. The administration-office of Grafenberg, which is wholly environed by the foregoing, and comprizes in it only

Grafenberg, a small town, in which is a citadel, and about one hundred and forty hearths. This place belonged to an old family called the Grafen or Grafenberger, one of whom held it in fief of the crown of Bobemia, though on condition that it should be a male and semale fief, and should fall to the next relations. Afterwards it became divided into a number of parts, which were gradually purchased by the town of Nurnberg.

9. The administration-office of Lichtenau, which is divided from the foregoing, and lies in the center of the principality of Onolabach.

In it is

Lichtenau, a market-town, feated on an island in the Retzat, with a strong citadel in it which anciently belonged to the family of Haideck, who told it in 1406 with all its appurtenances to the council of Nurnberg. The Marggrave Albrecht took this citadel in 1552 and razed it, but the city of Nurnberg caused it to be rebuilt anew.

Immeldorf, a parochial-village. Sachsen, also a parochial-village.

1. Of the town itself.

R OTHENBURG above the Tauber is feated on a mountain, and receives the water for its necessary uses out of the river Tauber, by means of a machine, by which it is forced up the mountain, and from thence afcends in a direct line to what is called the Klingenthurn, from which it falls down again, producing three fountains in the town. Rothenburg is environed with ditches and walls, the latter of which are fortified with towers. The inhabitants here profess the Lutheran doctrine. town are five churches, but there is ordinarily no preaching but in two of them, namely, in the parish-church of St. James, and that near the hospital. The gymnasium here consists of seven classes, and the like number of teachers. In it are maintained twelve Alumni who have a candidate of the holy order for their inspector. The seat of the order of St. John is inhabited by an administrator. The council is divided into the inner and outer, the former of which are chosen out of the latter. Rothenburg is a very ancient place. Formerly it boasted some Counts of that name, one line of whom stiled itself from the ancient citadel here, which is now converted into the noble foundation of Camburg. These Counts are said to derive their original from an East-Franconian Duke named Gosbert; but of the more modern genealogy-tables of their family little account is to be made, especially as it is known that other Franconian Counts besides these of different houses were formerly stiled Counts of Rothenburg, and that barely on this account, namely, because they resided at Rothenburg. But the real family of the Counts of Rothenburg became extinct about the year 1110 in the person of Count Henry, who ceded the town of Rothenburg to the Empire. The Emperors Conrad IV. and Lewis mortgaged it to the house of Hohenlohe; but the last time of it being mortgaged it redeemed itself, and in 1335 obtained from the Emperor Lewis an affurance that it should not be mortgaged any more, which affurance also the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenzel likewife confirmed. At the Diet of the Empire it possesses the eighth place and voice in the college of Imperial cities on the Swabian bench, and at the circle of Franconia on the bench of Imperial cities the second. To a Roman month it contributes one hundred and forty-eight florins, and to each chamber-term one hundred and fixty-two rix-dollars, thirty-two kruitzers and a half.

2. Of its territory.

The best view of its territory is to be had in Chapuze's chart of the county of Hohenlohe, and in that of Vetter's of the principality of Onolubach. It is surrounded with a land-sence, which consists of a living hedge, ditches, high towers, and in some parts also of lakes, mountains, and wood. In it the following places are principally to be noticed: viz.

1. Gebsattel, a citadel, seated on the Tauber, and belonging to the noble foundation of Comburg.

2. The parochial-villages of Kirnberg, Neufes, Dettwangen, Schweinf-dorf, Gattenhofen, Steinsfeld, Ohrenbach, and Scheckenbach.

3. Upper and Lower-Nordenberg, two small hamlets, which preserve the memory of the ancient Lords of Nordenberg, who were hereditary purveyors of the holy Roman Empire, and had a castle at Upper-Nordenberg, which castle, in the year 1408, was pulled down by order of the Emperor Ruprecht. In 1407 they disposed of the castle of Nordenberg, together with the surrounding villages belonging thereto, as namely Schweinsdorf, Hardershofen, Steinsfeld, and Windelsbach, to the town of Rothenburg.

4. Endsee, Ense, or Ensembeim, a hamlet, seated on an inland lake, and formerly containing a citadel, to which belonged a considerable seigniory, and whose ancient possessions were knights bannerets. This place has been alienated partly by the owners themselves, and partly after their decease came to the house of Hobenloke, by whom it was fold in 1367 to the town of Rothenburg. The citadel here the Emperor Ruprecht ordered to be destroyed in 1408.

5. Steinach below Endsce, a parochial-village, the parish-church of which is filled up by the several seniors of the house of Castell.

6. The parochial-villages of Schmerbach, Wildenthierbach, Spillach, Leuzenbron, Leuzendorf, Bettenfeld, Lohr, and Gammesfelden, in the last of which is a citadel; together with those of Infingen, Hausen, Brettheim, Under-Ostbeim, Under-Wernitz, and Wettringen, near the last of which rises the Tauber, as also that of Raibach.

7. Under-Gailnau, a parochial-village on which the Emperor Charles IV. in 1373 conferred town-privileges, notwithstanding which it still continues a village. Hard by it lies Upper-Gailnau, formerly a very strong citadel. These places were anciently possessed by the Counts of Hobenloke, but in 1406 Count John of Hobenloke disposed of them to the town of Rothenburg for the sum of 9000 storins. In that very year too the citadel was pulled down by order of the Emperor Ruprecht.

8. Seldeneck, a citadel, not far from the Tauber, and which was purchased by the town of Rothenburg in the year 1404 of the Burggrave Frederick of Nurnberg, for the sum of 8000 florins.

9. Reinsburg, a citadel, lying not far from Raibach.

1. Of the town itself.

WINDSHEIM, a town, feated on the river Aifch, is principally divided into the inner and outer. The prevailing religion here is the Lutheran, and in the town is one parish-church, together with a hospital-church, and a good Latin school. The government of the place is under the direction of an upper-judge, and twenty-four counfellors, who divide themselves into the inner and outer college. In the former sit thirteen, but in the latter only twelve persons. The president of each of them is one of the four burgomasters in office, who every quarter of a year take their turn in the government. That the town is a very old place appears from hence, namely, that in a record of the Emperor Lewis I. of the year 822 it occurs as a villa, and in some ancient records is even stiled villa regia. Its oldest privilege known at present was conferred on it by the Emperor Adolphus in the year 1295. In the fourteenth century it was mortgaged to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, but redeemed itself, and thereupon, in 1360, obtained of the Emperor Charles IV. affurances that it should never be mortgaged again, but continue always annexed to the Empire, which promife the Emperor Wenzel also confirmed. At the Diet of the Empire it possesses the twenty-first seat and voice in the college of Imperial cities on the Swabian bench, and at that of the circle of Francenia the third on the bench of Imperial cities. To a Roman month it pays twenty-nine florins, and to each chamber-term thirty-fix rixdollars; eight kruitzers. In the fixteenth century the greatest part of the circlediets of Franconia were held here.

r. Of the town itself.

S CHWEINFURT, in ancient records termed Svinford, and Swinfurt, is generally denominated in Latin Suevofurtum, or Trajectus Suevorum, the Swabians once having a passage here over the Mayn, but over that river a stone bridge is now built. The town itself is addicted to the Protestant religion, and its principal churches are the parish-church, and that near the hospital. It also contains a gymnassum. Of the two prelate-forms here, one belongs to the cloyster of Eberach, and the other to that of Bildbausen, both of which appertain to the bishopric of Wurzburg. Anciently there was an Imperial land-judicatory at this place, and the Franconian upper-court was also held here. The Imperial sheriff, whose office is still in being here, is elected by the council. This council confifts of twenty-four persons. The town was anciently a villa regia. The German Kings and Roman Emperors have honoured it with Marggraves and Burggraves, who were poffessed of considerable hereditary estates in and about the town, and the last of these named Eberhard was bishop of Eichflett; but their own estates were exchanged for the Imperial ones of Greding, and then annexed to the Empire. The town itself was mortgaged by the Kings and Emperors Albrecht, Henry and Lewis to the Counts of Henneberg, and by the last again one half of it to the bishopric of Wurzburg, but it redeemed itself, and upon that obtained affurances in the years 1361, 1362, and 1368, of the Emperor Charles IV. and in 1387 of the Emperor Wenzel, as also in 1407 of the Emperor Ruprecht, and in 1417 and 1431 of the Emperor Sigismund, that it should never be mortgaged again. At the Diet of the Empire it possesses the nineteenth place and voice in the college of Imperial cities on the Swabian bench, and at that of the circle of Franconia the fourth on the bench of the Imperial cities. To a Roman month it pays thirty-four florins, and to each chamber-term fixtyfeven rixdollars, fixty kruitzers. In 1253 or 1254, and also in 1553 this town was wholly confumed by fire. In 1532 the Protestant Princes held an affembly here. In 1631 and 1647 it was taken and fortified by the Swedes. Near it is a fine growth of wine.

2. Of its territory.

To its small territory appertain the villages of Oberndorf, Zell, and Maden-

Madenhausen. The Imperial villages of Gochsheim and Sennfeld, which belonged to the Imperial vogtey or amtmanship, have been disposed of to the bishopric of Wurzburg.

The IMPERIAL CITY of W E I S S E N B U R G, With its territory.

1. Of the town itself.

WEISSENBURG on the Nordgau, in ancient records also called Wizenburch, lies in the neighbourhood of the fort of Wulzburg belonging to the Marggrave of Onolzbach, being furrounded by the Onolzbach upper-prefecturate of Gunzenbausen and the county of Pappenbeim. The prevailing religion here is the Lutheran, and it contains two churches. In it also is a mineral bath. The rise and first commencement of its Imperial freedom is not known. In 1262 it was belieged by Duke Lewis of Bavaria, by whom it was taken and burnt, and laid level with the ground. In 1314 it was mortgaged by the Emperor Lewis to the bishopric of Eichflett, and in 1325 by the same to the Burggraves of Nurnberg, but it redeemed itself again, and upon that obtained of the Emperors Charles IV. and Wenzel in the years 1360 and 1387 affurances that it should never be mortgaged again, but be kept annexed to the Empire. At the Diet of the Empire it possesses the thirtieth place and voice in the college of Imperial cities on the Swabian bench, and at the circle of Franconia the fifth or last on the bench of the Imperial cities. To a Roman month it contributes thirty-four florins, and to each chamber-term thirty-three rixdollars, feventyfive kruitzers.

2. Of its territory.

Of the ancient Imperial administration here over what is stilled the royal villages, which the town of Weissenburg was possessed of as an Imperial mortgage, mention has been made above under the bishopric of Eichstett. In the same place it also has been shown that the town retained only Wengen of these royal villages, but ceded the rest by agreement in 1680 to the bishopric of Eichstett. This village of Wengen is surrounded by the Onolzbach upper-presecturate of Stauss.

C I R C L E

O F

U P P E R - S A X O N Y.

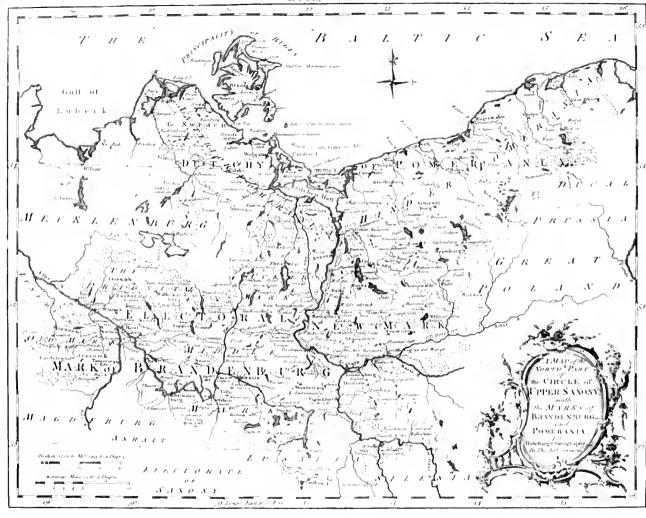

Of the Circle of Upper-Saxony in general.

§. 1. HIS circle, on account of its extent, cannot well be represented on one fingle sheet of the usual fize of land-charts, so as to afford us a distinct and comprehensive view of it, for which reason it is divided into the fouth and north; to each of which a proper sheet is allotted: but there is still, however, wanting a just mathematical and historical representation of the sea-coasts. The charts of the south part which were published by Sanson have been improved by faillot and copied by Mortier. which de Witt, Visscher, Valk and Dankert, as also the first which Homann published, are equally faulty with the foregoing. In the year 1731, Homann's heirs published a better in the largest fize, which chart was delineated by Philip Henry and Frederick Zollmann; and, in 1734, they gave us also another, in the usual form or fize, with the improvements of Zollmann and Zurner; which chart, in the Atlas of Germany, constitutes the forty-fifth. Of the north part of this circle de Witt, Villober, Valk, Dankert and Homann have furnished us with separate charts; all which require an improvement. That of Homann's constitutes the fixtieth in the Atlas of Germany.

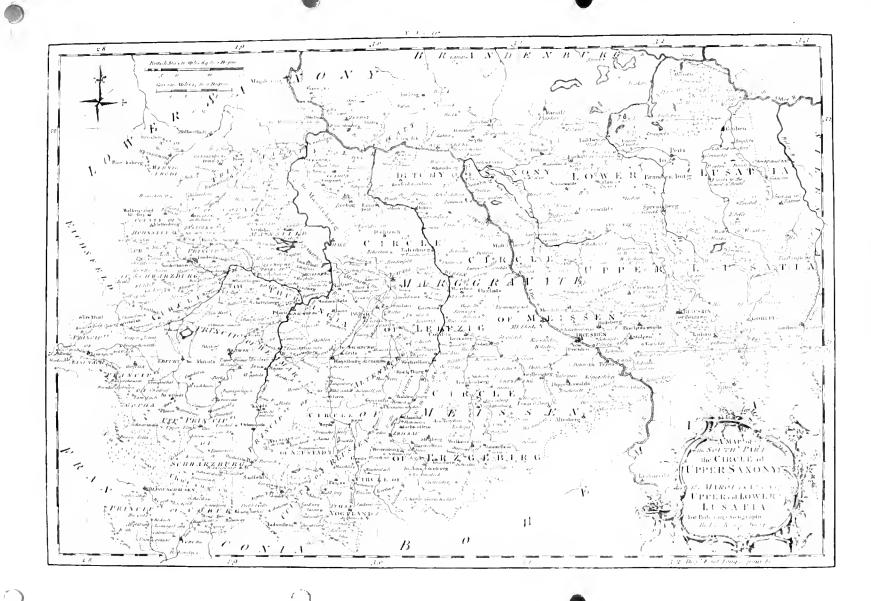

§. 2. This circle terminates on that of Franconia, the Upper-Rhine and the circle of Lower-Saxony; as also on the Baltic-Jea, Pruffia, Poland, Silefia, Lulatia

. S. sample on the same i

Lusatia and Bohemia. Its extent may be estimated at 1950 square geographical miles.

§. 3. The twenty-two States which compose this circle, as taken in their proper order, are the Elector of Saxony, the Elector of Brandenburg, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Eisenach, Saxe-Coburg, Saxe-Gotha, Saxe-Altenburg*, Saxe-Querfurt, the Hither and Farther-Pomerania, Camin, Anhalt, Quedlinburg, Gernrode, Walkenried, Schwarzburg-Sonderskausen, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, (to the two last of which houses the Elector of Saxony, by virtue of an agreement made in the year 1719, has promised at future Diets of the Empire to procure two places suited to their princely dignity) Mansfeld, Stolberg, Barby, the Counts of Reusen and the Counts of Schonberg.

§. 4. In this circle the Elector of Saxony has always been fole summoning Prince and director; but ever since the electoral-house of Saxony went over to the Romisk-catholic church, it appeared dangerous to the electoral house of Brandenburg, that the directorium of this circle, which is wholly addicted to the Protestant religion, should remain on the sormer sooting. What negotiations were carried on, on this head, in 1718, between both the electoral-houses and the Elector of Brandenburg and Anhalt, appear from Moser's German State-right, p. 27, p. 267—277. The Diets of the Empire have been formerly held, for the most part at Leipsick, and sometimes also at Frankfort on the Oder, as likewise at Juterbock: but ever since the year 1683, in which year the last Diet was held, these have been discontinued. The chancery of the circle is kept at Dresden.

§. 5. In the year 1682, the military state of the whole Empire being settled, at an average, in times of peace at 40,000 men, to the share of the upper circle of Saxony sell 1322 horse and 2707 foot; and at the partition of the 300,000 florins granted to the operation-chest of the Empire in 1707, to this circle were allotted 31,271 florins, twenty-eight kruitzers. Thus it has obtained an equal evaluation with the circles of Burgundy, Swabia, Westphalia and Lower-Saxony, though in fact it is much larger than either of them.

§. 6. The collective members of this circle, the present Elector of Saxonv excepted, are addicted to the Protestant religion. This circle, by virtue of the peace of Westphalia, has the filling up of eight places in the chamber-court: that is to say, the Elector of Saxony two, the Elector of Brandenburgh also two, and the collective States of the circle the remaining four, to which is to be added one more, which is to be filled alternately by this circle and the circle of the Lower-Saxony. On account of the nomination to the five latter places, the higher States of the circle, notwithstanding the opposition formed by the Counts and Lords in the recess of the circle of the year 1054, came to a resolution that it should happen in such manner alternately by the collective States of the circle, agreeably to the number and order of their voices, and that the electoral and princely houses, quite down to Anhalt, should, according to the order and number of their voices, each name one affessor of the chamber-court, the three foundations one, and the Counts and Lords also one: but the alternate nomination of an affessor between this and the circle of Lower-Saxony, is not at present kept up, the whole circle now actually nominating only two affessors of the chamber-court, agreeably to the regulation concluded upon in the aforementioned recess of the circle.

^{*} The alteration between the princely houses of Saxony, from one day to another, was agreed on, in the year 1704, for the adjusting of the rank and order of the voices at the Diets of the Empire and Circle. By virtue of this agreement they are first to begin as above, but on the second day the following order is to take place: viz. Saxe-Coburg, Saxe-Gotha, Saxe-Altenburg, Saxe-Weimar and Saxe-Eisenach. See John Jacob Moser's German State-right, p. 32, p. 353.

§. 7. In the year 1571, the towns of Leipzig, Berlin, Stettin and Saalfeld were appointed mint-towns to Upper-Saxony. The last mint-proof of this circle was held, in 1680, at Francfort on the Oder; since which time they have been discontinued.

The ELECTORATE of A X O N Y

§. 1. A DAM FREDERICK ZURNER, who was first curate at Skassa, and afterwards geographer and land and limit-commissary to the King of Poland, Elector of Saxony, has, at the command of Augustus II. measured and delineated, with uncommon skill and application, the electoral Saxon territories. From these his labours and drawings sprung up the very magnificent Atlas Augusteus, which is kept at Dresden, and confifts of a general and special part, each of which contains forty charts in the usual large fize. A more accurate description of it is to be found in Dr. Eberh. Dav. Hauber's additions and improvements to his Sketch of a circumstantial history of land-charts, p. 11. jeq. Were these charts but rendered still more perfect by some new researches and labours, and permitted to be engraved and published, they would form an excellent Atlas: but those only of the superintendencies of Grossen-Hayn and Dresden have been made public; though there are many drawings of Zurner's, which falling into Peter Schenk's hands furnished him with an opportunity of collecting a Saxon Atlas, to which, in the year 1751, was added what is called a Complete Geographical Description; but this last is very defective and erroneous. Schreiber also, together with Seutter and Homann's heirs, have published a great number of particular charts of the electorate of Saxony, which shall be hereafter mentioned under each circle and prefecturate: but all these special charts of the Saxons hitherto published stand more or less in need of improvement. There are likewise extant post-charts of this electorate. The first of these was drawn by the upper post-master Joh. Ja. Kasen, and engraved on copper by Peter Schenk: the second, and by much the best of them, was delineated by Zurner at the command and expense of the Sovereign, under the title of a new electoral Saxon post-chart, on two very large sheets, and published by Peter Schenk in the usual fize: but these charts being delineated at a time when Zurner had scarce measured one tenth part of the electoral Saxon territories, they are still full of faults; for which reason a new edition of them, with improvements, on two large sheets was ordered to be published by command of the Sovereign. Homann's heirs also, in the year 1752, published a chart of the high-ways throughout the electorate of Saxony, which was delineated, in 1728, by J. C. K. and this chart, in the Atlas of Germany, constitutes the forey-ninth. Lastly, it is moreover to be observed, that this electorate is the only country in all Germany whose highways are accurately measured, and the distances marked upon large and fmall stone-pillars, or miliaries; which excellent institution, so worthy of imitation, was enacted by royal command in the year 1722. An electoral Saxon policy-mile contains 16,000 Dresden * ells, or 29333 Rhineland + feet.

fuch

§. 2. The electorate confifts of the dutchy of Saxony, the greatest part of the marggravate of Meissin, a part of the Vogtland and the northern half of the landgravate of Thuringia. The Lusatias and the electoral Saxon share in the princely county of Henneberg, appertain not to the circle of Upper-Saxony; for which reason they have been already described above. All the countries which at present belong to the electoral-house of Saxony, taken together, amount to about seven hundred and twenty-nine square geographical miles, being of equal bigness with the whole circle of Swabia, the electoral Bavarian countries and the Kingdom of Prussia put together. But if the extent of the electorate only be sought after so far as it belongs to the circle of Upper-Saxony, we are to deduct from the above estimate the county of Lusatia, which makes about one hundred and eighty square miles, as also the share in Henneberg, which amounts only to a few miles, and then there remain to the electorate about five hundred and forty-fix geographical square miles.

§. 3. Saxony, taken in general, is one of the best countries in all Germany. It yields, in many tracts, a rich increase of all kinds of grain,

^{*} The Leipzig ell is two feet and $\frac{1000}{200}$. Whether that of Drefden be precisely the same we are not able to determine.

The Rhineland foot is a little more than twelve inches of our English measure.

fuch as, pulse, garden-stuffs and fruit. They likewise cultivate hops, flax, hemp, tobacco, anife and wild-faffron there, as also woad near Langenfalza in Thuringia, and wine, though chiefly in Meissen. There are likewise confiderable and profitable forests here, as also pitch and coals; the latter of which are burnt or charred in great quantities. The minerals in Meissen are of great importance, and the fearching after, washing, working and exportation of them constitute the principal means of subfishance of the country. The porcelain-earth near Aue is excellent. The terra figillata and fullersearth, likewise, which are found up and down in it, are extremely good. There is also a variety of fine coloured earth here; besides which, Saxony yields fine shiver, together with various forts of beautiful marble, of which Mr. Schulze has given us a catalogue in the Hamburg Magazine, T. xix. p. 298, feq. ferpentine-stone, and almost all the different species of precious flones, as, namely, diamonds, topazes, hyacinths, rubies, granates, amethysts, faphires and opals; different species of agates, as chalcedonies and cornelian; jasper and very good sand and free-stone. Vitriol and alum are likewise prepared here, and Saxony yields also an earth very serviceable in the preparation of borax; and out of it that ingredient is made at Drefden, where a fingle pound of it is fold for two rixdollars, fixteen ggr. This borax too yields in no respect to the Venetian, excepting that it does not come up to it in its medicinal qualities. Salt-springs and salt-works are likewise to be found in some parts here, but those in no great number. Near Groszwich, in the presecturate of Pretsch, has been dug a transparent and opake amber of different colours; and in some other parts also amber is fill found. Stone-coal and turf are likewife dug here, and Saxony prepares a very beautiful fulphur. In it too cinnabar and quickfilver are to be had. The femi-metals, fuch as antimony, bifmuth and arfenic, are likewife to be met with here. To the last of these belongs the Cobalt, or Kobald, out of which finalt, or blue colour, is made in vast quantities, which is extraordinary good and in very great repute, being exported far and near, and bringing in almost as much gain to this country as its mines of filver, though the latter are also very important and yield filver annually to the amount of four tons of gold. Their mines of copper, tin, lead and iron, are also considerable. The tin here, in particular, is of a very peculiar goodness. In many parts also Saxony has a good breed of horned cattle, horses and sheep. Venison is plentiful here; but its wholesome cold-baths are more numerous than its medicinal-springs of note.

The Elbe is the principal river in this country and greatly promotes its trade. That river comes out of Bohemia, and having traversed the whole circle of Meissen and a part also of the electoral circle, enters next into the principality of Anhalt, out of which it goes into the electoral Saxon county of Barby and the prefecturates of Elbenau and Gommern, running at last into the dutchy of Magdeburg. The Schwarze Elster, which comes out of Lufatia and runs also through the Missian and electoral circles, pours itself into the Elbe above Elser below Gorsdorf. The Mulde divides itself into two branches, one of which is called the Freyberg-Mulde, and rifes in the circle of the Erzgebirg on the borders of Bohemia; the other is named the Zwickau-Mulde, but at its rife in the Vogtland circle is termed the White-Mulde. Both these Muldes unite in the circle of Leipzig, and this united stream falls into the Elbe in the principality of Anhalt. The second river in this country is the Saale, which rising in the principality of Culmbach at the Fichtelberg in the Zellerwalde (see p. 416.) passes through the Vogtland towards Thuringia; and having traversed a part of the dutchy of Magdeburg and the principality of Anhalt, runs into the Elbe. Below Naumburg the Saale receives into it the Unstrut, which rises in the Eichsfelde, and between Merseburg and Halle the Weisse Elser, which has its source in the circle of Vogtland, and among other rivulets receives into it the Pleisse.

These rivers, as well as the rivulets and lakes here, yield all sorts of fish; and in the White-Elster are found pearl-muscles, the beautiful pearls, which are some of them of the size of a cherry-stone.

§. 4. This electorate is well cultivated and inhabited. Dr. Hempel, in his geographical tables of the whole of the electoral Saxon countries, afferts, that in this electorate there are two hundred and ten towns, fixty-one market-towns, 3157 villages, 1591 gentlemens effates, with villages annexed to them; and thus in the whole 4748 villages, about one hundred and fiftyfix royal citadels, and one hundred and ninety-fix royal manors. The privycounfellor Von Zech, in his European Herald, fays, that in the whole of the electoral Saxon countries there are two hundred and twenty-five towns and 5685 villages; out of which number the towns and villages in Lufatia and the electoral share of Henneberg are to be deducted. As these villages therefore which are to be thus deducted, amount according to Hempel's tables to 1444, there remain to the proper electorate 4241 villages; a number less by five hundred and seven than that of Hempel's. A manuscript table of the circles, presecturates, foundations, towns, boroughs and villages of this electorate, which I have by me, reckons in it two hundred and fifty-one towns and 5185 villages. In the fummary extract of the receipts and difburfements of the general fire-office, which is published annually, we find the names of two hundred and nine towns: a number perfectly correspondent with that given above by Hempel; but I have myself made out a few more. In this very extract I have summed up 1247 gentlemens estates, exclusive of the royal domains and manors, as also of the commanderies in it belonging to the Teutonick order.

The vassals of this circle are such as hold either by writ of chancery, being such as in the first resort stand immediately under the fiest-chancery or the Aulic-judicatories; or else they are mediate vassals, who have their first resort before the Amtmen. When the owner of a mediate estate does not actually occupy it himself, the Amtman has no jurisdiction over him, excepting in real actions, A Land-state is one who, either with refpect to his fortune, or on account of a certain privilege, or else on account of descent, enjoys both seat and voice at provincial and select Diets. The provincial Diets confift of three classes. To the first belong the prelates. which are the foundations of Meissen, Merseburg and Naumburg. 2. The Counts and Lords: namely, formerly the Counts, but at prefent the Princes, of Schwarzburg, together with the Counts of Mansfeld, Solms, Stolberg, Barby and Schonburg; and, lastly, the two universities of Leipzig and Wittenberg. The Prelates, Counts and Lords form together a peculiar college; and the univerlities also, ever fince the year 1666, another; but their deputies have their places among the prelates. To the fecond class belongs the nobility in general. Each nobleman who, by virtue of the electoral ordinance of the year 1530, can produce eight degrees of descent both by the father's and mother's fide, and is possessed of an ancient immediate nobleman's estate, enjoys both seat and voice at the provincial Diets, and is also summoned by a private or sealed order; but he has only one voice though possessed of two, three or more immediate estates. Any ancient nobleman, however, having a new immediate estate, may indeed appear, but has not his expence defrayed unless he be expresly mentioned in the Sovereign's ordinance iffued for that purpose. Composed of this nobility each of the feven circles of the electorate takes its feat at affemblies at a table to itself, according to its respective rank, though each member indeed feats himself, without distinction, just as occasion or fancy lead him. Every circle has its director and co-director, who fit always in the middle at the table. The mediate nobility are fummoned together, at the command of the regency, by the Amtmen; but appear only by deputies, of whom two at most are sent out of each prefecturate. The third provincial class is formed of the towns in general, of which there are seventeen in the electoral circle, feven in that of Thuringia, twenty-three in that of Meissen, fifteen in that of Leipzig, thirty-two in the circle of the Erzgebirg, five in that of the Vogtland, and three in the circle of Neuftadt, amounting in all to one hundred and two.

The general provincial Diets here are ordinarily held every fix years, the provincial grants usually extending to that time, or whenever a new regency commences. The regency dispatches for that purpose printed summons to each immediate vassal of Prelates, Counts and Lords, nobility, towns and universities, summoning them to appear in person; but the mediate vassals are convoked by the Amtmen of the respective presecturates to which they belong. The immediate vassals appear in person at the provincial Diets; the Prelates, Counts, Lords and towns by their deputies: the last of whom, according to their bigness, send two, three or more representatives; and the mediate vassals, out of each presecturate, two or three nobles invested invested with full power. The opening of the Sovereign's proposition happens ordinarily in the Sovereign's presence, in a hall in the electoral palace. If during the provincial grant any weighty matters occur which admit of no delay, or even other matters, have continued undiscussed at provincial Diets; Diets of felection, deputations and conventions are held, which are ordinarily appointed every two years. Selections are made out of the three provincial classes, and are termed the lesser or greater. The leffer felection of the nobility confifts of forty-two persons, who preside at two boards, at which the Stadtholder of the bailiwick of Thuringia and the commandatory of Griffladt have both feat and voice. The other forty perfons are, five out of the electoral circle, including the hereditary-marshal; eleven out of the circle of Thuringia; fix out of that of Meissen; seven out of that of Leipzig; one out of the foundation of Wurzen; four out of the Erzgebirg; four out of the circle of the Vogtland, and two out of that of Neufladt. By this lefter felection others are chosen out of the greater one of the nobility, according to the above-mentioned circles, in order to fill up the place of the deputed; and after the nomination made by the Sovereign, are confirmed as fuch by his privy-council. The greater felection comprehends in it fixty persons, at which at the same time appear the deputies of the Counts and Lords of Schonburg. The deputed persons are nominated out of the nobility in general and the circles by the leffer felection, each circle having therein the following: viz. the electoral circle fix; that of Thuringia fifteen; that of Meissen nine; that of Leipzig ten; the foundation of Wurzen two; the circle of the Erzgebirg fix; that of the Vogtland eight, and that of Neufladt four. The dignity of hereditary-marshal is hereditary in the noble house of Loser of the house of Salis, and must properly be referred to the electoral circle, that circle being the prefiding one. If at any time the hereditary-marshal happen to be a minor, the oldest of the samily bears the directorium in his stead. The archives of the province are also committed to the care of the hereditary-marshal, and in these are kept the original records. In the three archives of the circles of Thuringia, Meiffen, the Erzgebirg and the Vogtland are kept only the vidimus copies of the original records which are to be found in the principal archives. Laftly, with respect to the selection of the towns, to the lesser selection appertains Leipzig, which bears the directorium as well here as throughout the whole of the towns, Wittenberg, Dresden and Zwickan, which four are the prefiding towns, Freyberg, Chemnitz, Langenfalze and Torgan: To the greater felection, Annaberg, which also bears the directorium, Weissenfels, Meissen, Eulenburg, Hayn, Weissensee, Herzberg, Schmiedeberg, Schneeberg, Liebenwerde, which at the towns is possessed of the right of convocation, Marienberg, Planen, Neustadt on the Orla, Weyde, Dolitsch, Wurzen and Tennsladt. All this is more fully described in The complete account of the provincial and felection Diets of the electorate of Saxony, from the year 1185 to 2728, publiffied lished by Dr. Dan. Godfrey Schreber from a manuscript which came to his hands. See p. 9-38.

§. 5. This electorate has had the happiness and honour of giving rife to the Reformation in the fixteenth century, and the Protestant Lutheran church is the prevailing fect here. The King and Elector Frederick Augustus going over, in 1697, to the Roman-catholic religion, he gave that same year the most gracious affurances that he would most powerfully maintain the Land-states and the whole of the subjects, in the enjoyment of the Aughurg confession and the liberty of conscience which had been happily handed down to them, as also in their churches, worship, ceremonies, univerfities, schools and all other prerogatives which they were possessed of at that time; that he would neither undertake nor fuffer any alteration to be made on that account, nor force any hody to embrace the religion which he himself had adopted. By virtue of the peace of Altranstadt, concluded between this King and Charles XII. of Sweden, in the year 1706, it was agreed, that in this electorate and in Lulatia no alteration should at any time be permitted, introduced or granted, either in or to the Protestant religion; and that no churches, schools, academies, colleges, claysters, or any other places, where fuch foundations might happen to be erected, should ever be ceded to those of the church of Rome. The like assurances were made also on the part of the electoral Prince, afterwards the reigning King, Frederick Augustus, on his embracing the Roman-catholic religion: and on his Majesty's entering on the government of his countries, he gave likewife, in 1734, an affurance fubscribed by his own hand, in which he promifed and declared, for himfelf and fucceffors in the electorate, on the word, troth and faith of a King, Elector and Sovereign, that he would leave undisturbed in its whole extent the state of the Augsburg confession, with all churches, worship, ceremonies, usages, universities, country and other schoo's, benefices, incomes and profits, piæ caufe, jurisdictions and immunities belonging thereto, in such manner as they had been happily handed down, occupied and enjoyed ever fince, and were also at that very time possesfed and used: likewise that he would himself neither pretend nor suffer others to break in upon them; and that all that had been regulated and concluded upon for the benefit of the Protestant religion and the Augsburg confession in these countries by the peace of Westphalia, and particularly by its fifth article, respecting the state of religion, was to remain in full force and effect, and to be maintained firm and inviolable by his Majesty and his succeffors in the electorate. The above affurances, however, were not to prejudice the exercise of his Majesty's religion, in proportion, manner and wife, as it is grounded in the above-mentioned peace of Westphalia, and the judicial cuttoms of the Roman Empire.

In Hempel's tables, which have been mentioned above (§. 4.) the number of parith-churches in the villages of this electorate is computed at 1517, and the filial churches belonging thereto at feven hundred and one; confequently of both here are 2218; and the number of the preachers in the feveral superintendencies and inspections amounts to 2135. In the towns are about two hundred and forty parish-churches, exclusive of those of the citadel, hospital, and burial-places. The parishes here are divided into spiritual inspections, and these last again into the following confistories, viz. under the upper confistory at Dresden, which is here considered only as an under confiftory, fland thirteen inspections, which have their seats at Dresden, Freyberg, Leisznig, Bischofswerda, Pirna, Oschatz, Meissen, Annaberg, Hayn, Waldheim, Chemnitz, Colditz and Dobrilugk. Under the confistory at Leipzig stand twenty-two inspections, namely those at Leipzig, Eulenburg, Grimma, Borna, Rochlitz, Penig, Zwickau, Plauen, Oelfnitz, Weyda, Neustadt on the Orla, Frauenpreisnitz, Pegau, Delitzsch, Weissenfels, Freyburg, Eckartsberga, Langenfalza, Weissenfee, Sangerhausen, Querfurt Heldrungen. Under the confiftory at Wittenberg stand eighteen inspections, namely those at Wittenberg, Grafenbaynichen, Jessen, Herzberg, Baruth, Seyda, Schlieben, Kemberg, Torgau, Gommern, Belzig, Liebenwerda, Cleden, Bitterfeld, Zahna, Dahme, Juterbog and Barby. To the foundation confistory at Wurzen, belongs the inspection of Wurzen; to the confistory of the foundation of Naumburg at Zeitz the inspection of Zeitz; to the confiftory of the foundation at Merseburg, the churches in the prefecturates of Merseburg, Lutzen, Schkeuditz and Lauchstad; to the confistory of the county of Schonburg the inspections at Glauchau, Hartenstein, Lichtenstein, Losznitz and Waldenburg. Under the confistory at Eisleben stand all the churches in the county of Mansfeld, which are divided into eight decanates, exclusive of the prefecturate of Arnstein. At Ebeleben is an inspection-office of the Prince of Schwarzburg's, at Roszla a confistory of the Count of Stolberg, and at Sonnewalde a confistory of the Count of Solms. Over all these consistories is placed the ecclesiastical council and the upper confistory at Drefden. Both these are connected together; and the latter, which has been confidered above barely as an under confistory over a number of infpections, occurs to us again in this place in as much as in conjunction with the ecclesiastical council, it dispatches orders to all underconfistories. But the ecclefiastical council here, as well as the upper-confiftory, have each their own peculiar departments; and in weighty cases both apply to the privy-council.

The Calvinists as well as the Roman-catholics have at Dresden and Leipzig the free exercise of their religion.

§. 6. The sciences flourish in this electorate; book-printing being at no place more common, and book-felling no where more confiderable than at Leipzig. The univerfities of Leipzig and Wittenberg have retained and even increased their ancient reputation. At Leipzig are societies for the liberal arts and the German language. At Meissen, Plorte and Grimma are princely princely or country-schools, which were founded by the Elector Maurice, and there are likewise gymnasia and good schools at Weissensia, Merseburg, Zeitz, Naumburg, Freyberg, Leipzig, Dresden, Chemnitz, and other towns. These numerous and well regulated institutions facilitate education and promote the reception of the sciences in an uncommon manner, producing many able, learned, and celebrated men.

§. 7. The useful and fine manufactures and fabricks are likewise very numerous in this electorate. Great quantities of yarn too are spun here, thread bleached, coarse and fine linen wove, and tick made, together with cerecloth, fine lace, ribbon, edging and paper. The porcelain which is manufactured at Meissen is famous throughout all Europe, and known also in the other principal parts of the world. Fine glasses and mirrors are made here, and out of the ferpent-stone all manner of things. Of the foundaries in which the coloured earths, and falts, and fixed femimetals are purified, and prepared for all manner of uses mention has been made above (§. 3.) Iron is wrought here into black and white plates in the greatest quantity, as also in other flapes. Steel, brafs, and fpineback are made and worked here. Saxony has also its manufactures of gold and filver. Cotton, wool, and filk are made up here in hankerchiefs, neck-cloths, canvas, nettle-cloth, fuftians, cloths, freezes, flannels, mock-velvet and many other stuffs, velvet, plush, and stockings. It makes also gloves, caps and hats. The dye-houses are likewife excellent, and fine tapestries are also made here. In these manufactured wares, as well as in the natural productions of the country, namely in corn, flax, anife, fennel, woad, faflor, or wild-faffron, and gardenfruits, wood, blue, or starch, arienie, &c. as also in cattle, wool, and many other articles an important foreign commerce is carried on. Leipzig is not only the greatest trading town in this electorate, but also one of the greatest in all Germany.

§. 8. The present Electors and Dukes of Saxony are descended from the Marggraves of Meissen, who acquired first the landgravate of Thuringia, and afterwards the electorate of Saxony, and other countries and places, as will appear below from their particular history. The first Marggrave of Meissen, who in 1422 was Elector of Saxony, was named Frederick the Warlike. To his son the Elector Frederick II. or the Mild, succeeded in the government his sons the Elector Ernest and Albrecht, who for twenty years governed in common, but in 1485 divided the countries among them, sounding two principal lines, which were named after them. The electoral dignity was at first vested in the Ernestine principal line, Frederick the Wise and John the Constant, sons to the above-mentioned Elector Ernest, enjoying it successively, and after them John Frederick, son to the latter: But this last was put under the ban by the Emperor Charles V. in the year 1547, and together with the electoral dignity, stript of all his countries and subjects, which were made a donation of to Duke Maurice of the Albertine line. Duke Maurice, however, was obliged to allow the children of John Frederick a yearly income of 50,000 guldens, and for the imbursement thereof to grant certain prefecturates, places and estates; out of which, and the countries afterwards added thereto, arose the present possessions of the Dukes of Saxony of the Ernesline line, whose further history will occur below. George, fon to the above-mentioned Duke Albricht, founder of the Albertine principal line, obtained by virtue of his father's testament, the paternal hereditary countries; but his brother Henry only a small freebench in Meissen. After the death, however, of the former the latter arrived to the regency, in which he was fucceeded by his fons Maurice and Augustus. In 1547 Duke Maurice obtained of the Emperor Charles V. the Saxon electoral dignity, which was taken from John Frederick of the Ernestine line, together with all his countries and subjects; and from this time forwards the electoral dignity has continued in the Albertine line. His brother Augustus, who succeeded him in the regency and electoral dignity, propagated the electoral Albertine branch. This Prince entered into a stipulation in 1554 with his cousin, the deposed Elector John Frederick, on account of the fuccession and electoral dignity, and gave him also some towns in Thuringia, paying him moreover an old debt of 100,000 guldens, and likewise forming between both their families an hereditary union. He increased his country with some considerable territories, and also within it put matters on a very regular footing. His fon and fuccessor the Elector Christian I. who entered on the regency in 1586, had first his eldest fon Christian II. and afterwards the second son John George I. for his successors. The latter acquired to his house the marggravates of Upper and *Lower Lu*fatia, with other countries; but by his will in 1652 divided the electoral lands among his four fons, the eldest of whom, namely, Duke Yohn George II. succeeded to the electorate; Duke Augustus founding the collateral line of Weissenfels or Querfurt; Duke Christian, that of Merseburg, and Duke Maurice, that of Zeitz. John George II. was succeeded in the electoral dignity by his fon John George III. and to this last succeeded his eldest fon John George IV. and after his death the second son Frederick Augustus I. or Augustus II. who in 1697 embraced the Roman-catholic religion, and was foon after elected King of Poland. In 1718 he took poffession of the hereditary lands of the line of Zeitz. After his ceath, which happened in 1733, his Roman-catholic fon also named Frederick Augustus II. or Augustus III. entered upon the electoral regency, being likewise in the same year elected King of Poland, and has lived to see the extinction of the Merseburg collateral line, which happened in 1738, as also that of the collateral line of Weissenfels in 1746: So that in him the electoral Saxon countries, which had been divided, were again united. In 1750 the whole electorate was reduced to the subjection of the King of Pru/lia, in whose hands it continued till 17

Vol. V. Zzz §. 9. An

§. q. An Elector of Saxonv stiles himself: Duke of Saxony, Juliers, Cleve and the Berg, as also of Engern and Westphalia, Arch-Marshal and Elector of the holy Roman Empire, Landgrave in Thuringia, Marggrave of Meissen, and likewise of Upper and Lower Lusatia, Burggrave of Magdeburg, Princely Count of Henneberg, Count of the Mark, Ravensberg, Barby and Hanau, and Lord of Ravenstein. The arms on account of the dutchy of Saxony are a garland of rue (or according to Zollman, an ornamental filatée for the head and hair) placed obliquely from right to left over eight, or according to others, over ten fesses sable and Or, ranged alternately above each other; on account of Thuringia, a lion marked with four transverse strokes argent and gules, drawn alternately, open jaws, an exerted tongue gules, and gripes projected Or, and on the head a crown of the same, in a field azure; on account of Meissen, a lion sable, with an exerted tongue gules, gripes projected of the same, and a double inverted tail, in a field Or; on account of Juliers, a lion armed fable and argent, with a tongue exerted gules, in a field Or; on account of Cleves, in a field gules, an escutcheon argent, in the center of which are eight scepters conjoined Or; on account of the Berg, a lion gules, crowned azure, in a field argent; on account of Engern and Westphalia, an eagle crowned Or, in a field azure, with three hornets horns gules, in a field argent; on account of the Palatinate of Saxony, an eagle displayed Or, and crowned with the tame, in a field azure, as also an eagle uncrowned Or, in a field sable; on account of Lower Lufatia, an ox gules and courant with a belly argent, in a field of the same; on account of Upper Lusatia, part of a wall Or, trowelled fable, and built battlement fashion, in a field azure; on account of the Mark of Landsberg, two erect fesses in a field Or; on account of the feigniory of Plessein, a lion divided Or and argent, in a field azure; for the county of Orlamunde, a lion fable crowned gules, and clothed with rose-leaves of the same, in a field Or; on account of the burggravate of Magdeburg, an escutcheon divided longitudinally downwards, in whose fore-field gules appears a femi-argent eagle crowned Or, and in the hinder-field argent, four bars gules; for the county of Brene, three semicircles gules, or three hornets horns cantoned argent, in a field of the fame; on account of the burggraviate of Altenburg, a rose gules with feeds Or, and painted verte, in a field argent; for the county of Eisenberg, three fesses azure in a field argent; for the county of Ravensberg, three chevrons gules, placed above each other, and from below to the top fixed or conjoined in each other, in a field argent; for the county of the Mark, a fesse consisting of three chequers gules and argent, in a field Or; on account of the Regalia, an escutcheon modelled Or; for the county of Hanau, three chevrons gules, in a field Or; for the princely county of Henneberg, a hen placed on a mount verte, and in act to take wing, in a field Or; for the county of Barby, two barbles crowned Or, placed back to back and befet on the fides with four small roses, in a field

azure; on account of Munzenberg, a field divided croffwife, in its upper part Or and in its lower argent; on account of Lichtenberg, a lion fable, in a field argent; and on account of the office of arch-marshal of the holy Roman Empire, an escutcheon divided crosswife, whose upper part is sable and its under argent, the two electoral swords gules lying crosswife over each other.

§. 10. Among the Electors in general he is reckoned the fixth, but among the temporal ones in particular, the third. The prerogatives and privileges which an Elector of Saxony enjoys, as arch-marthal of the holy Roman Empire, have been briefly described above, p. 533. He invests the Counts of Pappenbeim with the office of hereditary-marshal of the Empire. Whenever the Empire too has no supreme head, he is administrator of the Empire in the countries where the Saxon right is of force, which vicariate fome derive from the old dutchy of Saxony, others from the office of archmarshal, and others again from the palatinate of Saxony; which last differs not in reality from the palatinate of Thuringia; for that which the Thuringians once possessed was the Saxon. The electoral house of Saxony suffers itself to be expressly invested with this palatinate by the Emperors.

§. 11. In matters relating to the Protestant States and their religion, the electoral house of Saxony enjoys the directorium and the dictature of the Empire, though at prefent he is of the Roman-catholic church. Whenever the electoral fee of Mentz becomes vacant, the Elector of Saxony also appropriates to himself, as arch-marshal, the directorium at the Diet of the Empire. His imperial matricular-evaluation, on account of the electorate, amounts to 1984 florins. He also answers for the county of Leisznig in the fum of twenty florins; for the county of Beichlingen, in the fum of twenty-four florins; for the feigniory of Tautenburg in twenty, and for the feigniory of Wildenfels also in twenty. He pays also on account of the prefecturates of Weida, Sachsenburg, Arnshaug and Ziegenruck the sum of one hundred and forty florins; on account of its half of the Vogtland, three hundred and four florins; and for the county of Mansfeld one hundred and thirty-five. On the other hand it exempts the bithopries of Meissen, Merseburg and Naumburg, fine onere. To a chamber-term the Elector of Saxony contributes cum exemtis the fum of 1545 rixdollars, and on account of Mansfeld eighty-three rixdollars, fixty-two kruitzers.

§. 12. The privy cabinet, whose care extends to State-affairs, has the direction of three departments, and has also the proposition and regulation therein, namely the department of domestic State-affairs, the department of military affairs, and the department of foreign affairs of State. The privy-council likewise looks to spiritual and temporal matters, and has the inspection and direction of all other military and civil colleges. It is filled with fuch as are actual privy-counfellors, referendaries, fecretaries, registers and clerks. The privy military council-college looks to military affairs, and comprizes in it the principal expedition, or chancery; the general milivary commissariate, which again divides itself into the expedition of the commissariate and ammunition-office, and the general military numberoffice, with the expedition of accounts. The chamber-college provides for all chamber and economical matters. Under it stands the chamber apartment expedition-office, the chace and float-rent expedition, the exchequer and the treasury. The float-inspection has the care of the several floats in the electorate. The regency is appointed over all feudal, justiciary and policy matters. The immediate vaffals have at it their first resort, and appeals lie thereto from the upper and aulic judicatories of Leipzig and Wittenberg, from the confiftories there, from the confiftories of the foundations of Wurzen, Merseburg and Zeitz, from the regencies of the Prince of Schwarzburg at Sendershausen and Frankenbausen, from all chanceries of Counts, and from other inferior judicatories. It is filled with a chancellor, vice-chancellor, and aulic and jufficiary-counfellors; and to the aulic and jufficiarychancery belong feveral expedition-offices. The court of appeals pronounces in matters that come from the inferior courts to the regency by the admitted appeal, receives the complaints against immediate vassals in the first resort, and the feudal matters which come to a process, being under the direction of a prefident, a vice-prefident, counfellors of appeal, and other officers. The upper tax-college has its director, and both its electoral and provincial upper receiver. To this college belongs the upper tax-office, the principal office of the land and drink-tax, the principal office of the militia-tax the principal office of the extraordinary tax, the principal expedition of the ordinary tax, the fecretariate expedition of the extraordinary tax, the tax-accompt expedition, the persons appointed for the examination and calculation of the accompts of the pole and effate-tax, the tax-archive, the stamp-office, and the receipts of the taxes of the circles which are in number as many as there are circles, and to these also is added that of the foundation of Wurzen. The general excisecollege has its director, general excife-counfellors, chancery, archive, accompt-chancery, and principal offices. The upper accompt deputation is fupplied with a director, counfellors deputed from the chamber-college, the regency of the tax and also from the excise-college, with secretaries, examiners and clerks. Of the ecclefiastical council and upper consistory here we have treated above (§. 5.) The mine-apartment, which is appointed over all the mines in this country, has its director, mine-counfellors, and other officers. At Freyberg is the upper mine-office, and the upper tenth and dividend-office; and at Altenberg, Annaberg, Berggieskubel, Glaskutte, Ebrentriedersdorf, Eybenstock, Freyberg, Geyer, Johann-Georgenstadt, Marienberg, Schneeberg, Scheibenberg, Upper-Wiesenthal, Schwarzenberg, Veigtsberg, and likewise in the circle of Neustadt are mine-offices. Under the mine-chamber stand also the upper amt-office, the mint, the draining-huts of Grunibal, and the double smalt-work at Oberschlemma near Schneeberg.

The upper post-office has its seat at Leipzig. To conclude, there are moreover here the upper aulic-judicatory at Leipzig, the aulic-judicatory at Wittenberg, and the upper inspection-office at Eiszleben.

§. 13. The present customary taxes here are partly ordinary and partly extraordinary. The ordinary taxes are those which are granted every fix years by the country. To this head belongs 1. The land-tax, which from each Schock, that is from each fixty gr. of the value of an immoveable estate, amounts yearly to fixteen psennings, which are paid at two feparate payments. The fum produced is partly received by the Elector and partly applied towards the reimbursement and interest of the tax-debts, as also for the maintenance of the piæ cause. 2. The taxes upon liquors which arife from the imposts laid upon white and brown beer, that is to fay for each vessel of the former two rixdollars, and for each of the latter one and a half. They are also paid partly to the Electors, and partly applied towards the discharge of the tax-debts, both in capital and interest. The nobility and possessor of noble estates, as also the ecclesiastics are for themselves and families freed from any imposts upon the liquor they confume at their tables; and the foundation of Wurzen, together with the mine-towns, as also those of Wittenberg and Weiffensee, pay only the half. 3. The flesh-penny, or flesh-tax here amounts at the slaughter-house to two pence upon each pound of flesh, and from private slaughter-houses to one penny. From this tax the nobility and clergy are exempted, and the foundation of Wurzen pays only one half. This is applied for the defrayment of the electoral council-colleges, and the overplus allotted for the Elector's exchequer. The extraordinary taxes are usually, 1. The pennytax, which rifes and falls in proportion to the damage done by fire and storm; but each of these ordinarily amounts to 13000 florins. ember-tax, which also rises and falls, but usually amounts to 24000 florins. The ember, or four feafons are somewhat personal, and may be called a profession-tax; for every individual, whether a subject or not, pays out of his earnings and occupation a certain fum. Every town and village has generally a fettled aid or contribution, which must be delivered by the inhabitants, according to the affestiment made by the magistrate. But such contribution is fometimes raifed higher by the upper tax-college according to the circumstances of those who are to pay it. Both these kinds of extraordinary taxes are usually applied, for the most part, to the defrayment of the militia, embassies, chamber-aids, reimbursements of capitals taken up and their interest, the defrayment of leases, and other occasions. excise, which is twofold. The land-excise amounts to three pence in the dollar out of the price of certain goods fold, and is paid into the electoral exchequer. The general confumption-excise has been introduced into such towns and villages as handicrafts and tradefmen refide, and into places distant a quarter of a mile from towns. Besides this last, there are moreover here some other extraordinary and well known imposts, as for instance the pole and estate taxes, the stamp duties levied upon paper, cards, shoes, &c. On the marriage also of a new sovereign, as likewist on other occasions, it is customary to make a donation in money. In 1660 the country obtained the full directorium of all the taxes. The electoral presecturates and dornains, which are usually farmed out, the mines and wood-shoats bring in annually very considerable sums of money to the electoral chest. It is afferted that the electoral Saxon countries yield and bring in yearly between fix and seven millions of rixdollars. In 1758 it was stipulated that the electoral exchequer should pay to the military chest of the King of Prussia for the incomes of that year one million of rixdollars, and the land-states of the electorate for the taxes and other land-revenues, two millions and seven tons of gold in rixdollars.

§. 14. There are usually maintained in this county about 20,000 regular troops, exclusive of a well regulated land-militia.

§. 15. The whole electorate is divided into circles, which according to their order of rank are, the electoral circle, the circle of Thuringia, that of Meiffen, that of Leipzig with the foundation of Wurzen, the circle of the Erzgebirg, that of the Vogtland, and the circle of Neustadt, exclusive of two other foundations, namely, those of Merseburg and Naumburg-Zeitz. Next follows a more accurate description of each.

The Electoral Circle, or the Dutchy of $oldsymbol{A} oldsymbol{X} oldsymbol{O} oldsymbol{N} oldsymbol{Y}_{\bullet}$

§. 1. THE electoral circle, or the dutchy of Saxony has been exhibited on a chart of four sheets, published by Homann's heirs in the year 1752, and this in the Atlas of Germany constitutes the forty-fixth.

- §. 2. It borders on the circles of Meissen, Leipzig, and Thuringia, the principality of Anhalt, the Mark of Brandenburg, and likewise on Lusatia. A part of it is separated by the principality of Anhalt from the remaining and larger part. Its greatest length, as well as its greatest breadth, is estimated at about ten German miles.
- §. 3. The fruitfulness of this country is not very remarkable, there being in it many fandy bottoms. The Elbe runs through a part of it, and between Gorsdorf and Elster receives the Black Elster. The Mulde also waters some tracks of this country.
- §. 4. This circle contains in it twenty-four towns, three boroughs; four hundred and ninety-four, (or according to Hempel's tables, only four hundred dred and twenty) villages, one hundred and fixty-four noblemens estates, one hundred and fifty-fix parish-churches in the villages, one hundred and fifty-nine filial churches belonging to the same, eleven superintendencies, three inspections, one under-consistory, and elven presecturates. Of the towns seventeen are general, being such as belong to the third class of the country of the electorate, and three belonging to the town-selection, namely, one to the lesser, and two to the greater selection. The other immediate vas-fals here are seventy-one in number, and the mediate vassals one hundred and two.

§. 5. The present dutchy of Saxony is not to be confounded with the old. The ancient dutchy of Saxony comprized in it three large countries, namely, Eastphalia, Engern, and Westphalia. In Eastphalia again were reckoned the Eallphali who were fettled in the countries of Brunfwick and Luneburg, the North people in Holstein, and the Easterlings or East people on the river Saale and Elbe quite to the Old Mark. The Easterlings were also called North-Thuringi, but this name became obliterated by time, and the country itself has fince been called East Saxony. Witikind was Duke of the Saxons; but it is disputed whether this name, which all apply to him, denotes a civil or military dignity? It is certain, however, that he was possessed of considerable estates of his own in Westphalia. His consort Geva was fifter to Siegfrid, King of the Danes. The Emperor Charlemagne subdued this country of the Saxons. Ecbert, or Egbert, second grandson to Witikind by his daughter Hasala, or Gisela, who was married to Bruno Prince of the Angrii, was, indeed also stiled Duke; but it cannot be proved that he belongs to the Saxon Dukes in a political fense. His consort was Saint Ida. From his elder brother Bruno Prince of the Angrii, descended Ludolph, who was at first Count between the Rhine and the Weser, but in the year 842 was by the Emperor Lewis created Duke of the whole dutchy of Saxony, and died in 859. His confort Oda was daughter to-Count Billung. The dutchy of Saxony was successively governed by his fons Bruno and Otto, and after them by Henry fon to the latter, who was elected in the year 919 German King. The fon and successor in the Empire of this last, namely, the Emperor Otto I. conferred the dutchy of Saxony (from which however that on the Weser is a distinct dutchy) on Hermann, fon to Count Billung, who transmitted it by inheritance to his fon Bernard, the latter also to his son Bernhard II. he again to his son Ordulf, and this last to his fon Magnus, who lest no male heirs behind him but some daughters, of whom only the two eldest, namely, Wulfhild and Eilika are hereto be remarked. The former of these was consort to Henry the Swarthy, Duke of Bavaria; but the latter to Otto of Alcania. The dutchy of Saxonv was now to descend to Duke Henry the Swarthy by virtue of his confort; but the Emperor Henry V. conferred it on Lotharius fon to Count Gebbard of Supplingenburg, who succeeded him in the Empire. Gertrude, daughter daughter to the latter married the son of Duke Henry the Swarthy, named Henry the Magnanimous (but whom his enemies called Henry the Haughty) Duke of Bavaria, who obtained of his father-in-law either in 1126 or 1127 also the dutchy of Saxony. But King Conrad III. stripped him of it. and conferred it on Adelbert Marggrave of Salzwedel, commonly stiled Albert the Bear, and fon to the above-mentioned Otto of Ascania by his confort Eilika, but he was driven out by the Saxons. Henry the Lion, fon to Henry the Magnanimous, arrived again to the possession of all his paternal countries, and was a very powerful Prince, commanding from the Rhine to the Weichfel, but was by the Emperor Frederick I. in the year 1179, unjustly put under the ban, by which means he loft his countries and estates in Italy and Swabia, as also the dutchies of Bavaria and Saxony, infomuch that he only retained his hereditary estates and conquerred countries, together with the fiefs which he held not of the Empire but of other Lords, and even in these his enemies afterwards made great encroachments. In this place we are only to mention fomething of the previous diffmembering of the dutchy of Saxony at that time. The unfortunate Duke Henry the Lion retained Eastphalia almost entirely, and the greatest part of it even belonged to his hereditary estates, which the Emperor could not deprive him of. But Westphalia and Engern were divided by the Emperor, and given one part of them to the archbishop of Cologn, the other (which extended through the tract of the Lower-Rhine, the bishoprics of Munster, Olinabruck, and Minden, which by the Weser was separated from Eastphalia) to Bernhard of Ascania, fon to the above-mentioned Albert the Bear, whom he declared Duke of Saxony. This new Duke, however, obtained no part of the dutchy of Saxony except the title, neither did he venture to assume to himself any degree of power in the share of the dutchy of Westphalia and Engern, which had been conferred upon him; the Marggrave of Salzwedel or Brandenburg did not submit to him; the Landgraves of Thuringia no longer acknowledged his power; the Wendish Lords, over whom Henry the Lion had exercised a severe subjection, raised up their heads; the Counts of Holltein, Ratzeburg, Danneberg, Oldenburg, Schwerin, Hoya, Diepholz, Luchan, with some others in Saxony refused any longer to own the superiority of the new Duke; the archbishops of Hamburg, or Bremen, and Magdeburg, as also the bishops of Osnabruck, Paderborn, Verden, Hildesheim, Munster, Halberstadt, Minden, &c. together with the town of Lubeck, set themselves likewise at liberty. For which reason Count Henry of Ascania, first-born son to Duke Bernhard, preferred the county of Anhalt to the dutchy of Saxony, ceding the latter to his younger brother Duke Albert. This Duke Albert, however, re-annexed feveral parts of the old dutchy by his bravery and conduct, subjecting to his dominion Count Henry of Schwerin, and reducing also Ratzeburg and Lauenburg, and even laying the foundation of a new principality in Lower-Saxony. This short history carried thus far of the dutchy of Saxony is collected out of the third and fourth volumes of the Origines Guelficæ, in which are to be found its proofs. In the family of Ascania remained vested till the fisteenth century the dutchy of Saxony, and the electoral dignity sounded thereon, but after the death of Duke Albert III. the Marggrave Frederick of Meissen, who was also Landgrave of Thuringia, was, in 1422, by virtue of the expectancy obtained in 1420, invested with the dutchy of Saxony, or the Saxon electoral dignity, by the Emperor Sigismund.

The present electoral circle belonged not to the old dutchy of Saxony, but the Marggrave Albert the Bear took this country from the Wends, and it became his son Bernhard's property in the inheritance of Ascania. This Bernhard therefore obtaining the dignity of a Duke of Saxony, the name of the dutchy of Saxony became applied at length to the portion of it in this country; and the electoral dignity being attached to the dutchy it has obtained the title of the electoral circle. In the middle age the greatest part thereof belonged to the Gau of Plonim, and the lesser to the Gau of Lusizi.

§. 6. The electoral circle confifts of eleven prefecturates: viz.

I. The circle-amt of Wittenberg, in which also is reckoned the county of Barby, containing both together twenty-two immediate and nineteen mediate vassals, with about one hundred and fourteen villages. But the county of Barby having a peculiar place and voice at the Diets of the circle of Upper-Saxony, its description is to be sought for further on in its proper place. In this prefecturate we shall take notice

1. Of Wittenberg, in Latin called Witteberga, or Leucorea, lying not far from the Elbe, over which it has a ferry, and the head-town of the electoral circle, being under immediate vaffalage, and the fecond among the four prefiding towns, as they are called, in the narrower felection of the towns, as also the feat of an aulic-judicatory, before which the mediate and immediate vaffals of the electoral circle appear partly in the first, and partly in the fecond refort. In it too is the feat of the affize, as also a confistory, together with that of the general superintendency of the electoral circle, a spiritual inspection, the circle-amt, and a samous university founded in 1502, at which in 1517 the Reformation took its rife by means of Martin Luther. This town is not large but fortified. The old citadel here was formerly the electoral refidence. Near it stands an arsenal. The citadelchurch, or the cathedral of All-Saints, is the university-church, and a professor of divinity its provost. In it is said to be Luther's monument, with several other curiosities. In the large round tower, which stands by it, are kept the common archieves of the electoral and princely Saxon houses. At the parish-church belonging to the town stands the general superintendency. The Latin town-school here contains fix teachers. The university-library is kept in what was formerly an Augustine cloyster. The first founder of Vol. V. 4 A the

1. Belaig,

the town of Wittenberg was Bernhard Duke of Saxony. In 1547 it was taken by the Emperor Charles V. In 1640 it suffered great damage by fire. In 1756 it was possessed by the Prussians, who also broke down a bastion of the fortifications. As its share in the tax levied upon liquors Wittenberg pays only one half.

To the university here belong the villages of Melzwig, and Eutsch, the latter of which is a parochial-village; together with those of Reuden, Poinsdorf, Pisteritz, Copenig, Dieterichsdorf, Teuchel, the little mill of Abstorff, and a small estate situated at Seegrebu.

2. Kemberg, in Latin called Cameracum, a small town, under immediate vallalage, and at the provincial Diets enjoying both seat and voice. In this town is a citadel, together with a provostship or spiritual inspection. The inhabitants of this place apply themselves with great diligence to the culture of hops. The town itself was first founded by some Flemings who came out of the province of Cambray, or Cameryk.

3. Zabna, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and enjoying both teat and voice at the Provincial Diets, and being also the feat of a superintendency. In the year 1719 this place suffered greatly by fire.

4. Schmiedeberg, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and environed by mountains.

5. Elsler, a borough, subject to mediate vassalage, and situated not far from the river Elbe, into which at no great distance from this place runs the Black Elfler.

6. Reinhards, or Reinharz, a church-village and nobleman's effate, the proprietor of which, namely, the privy-countellor, and hereditary marshal, John Count of Loser, has rendered it worthy notice by the laboratory founded there at a very great expence, and with still greater judgment, for the making of divers mechanical and optical machines.

7. Grofawig, a nobleman's estate and village, near which, in 1731, were dug up some transparent and opake ambers of various colours.

8. Blankensee, a church-village, with a nobleman's estate of the family of Tkiemen, and lying on a lake of the same name, being, as well as the church-village of Stangenkagen, wholly surrounded by the Middle Mark.

9. Dabrun, Gaditz, Jahme, Krobstadt, Nudersdorf, Radis, Rackith, and Wartenburg, all church-villages with noblemens estates.

II. The prefecturate of GRAFENHAYNCHEN, containing in it one immediate vaffal, one mediate vaffal, and eight villages. In this prefecturate is

1. Grafenbaynchen, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, as also a superintendency.

2. Strobwalde, a royal domain.

III. The prefecturate of Belzig, in which are eight immediate vasfals, seventeen mediate ones, and eighty-three villages. In this prefecturate we are first to remark.

- 1. Belzig, a town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, together with a citadel and superintendency. In the year 1750 this place suffered greatly by fire.
- 2. Bruck, an inconfiderable little town under mediate vassalage, but having notwithstanding both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, as also a citadel.
- 3. Niemeck, a fmall town, under mediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Provincial Diets.
- 4. Rabenstein, a citadel and nobleman's estate, possessed at present by a proprietor of the name of Loseke.
- 5. Benken, Canin, with Cletto, Fredersdorf, Hagelberg, Kleinglien, Lulnitz, Rietz, and Wiesenburg, all church-villages, containing noblemen's estates.
- IV. The prefecturate of Gommern with Elbenau, which lies on the river Elbe, between the dutchy of Magdeburg, the principality of Anhalt, and the county of Barby, containing in it two immediate vaffals, three mediate ones, and twenty-two villages. Formerly it confifted of two prefecturates which the Emperor Albert III. of Saxony and the last of the Ascanian line, mortaged in the year 1420 as prefecturates of the burggravate of Magdeburg for the sum of 22,000 gold guldens to the town-council of Magdeburg; but the Elector John Frederick again redeemed them. In 1619 both these prefecturates were united into one. In them we shall take notice of
- 1. Gommern, a finall town, under mediate vaffalage, and containing a citadel and superintendency.
 - 2. Elbenau, a church-village, situated on an island in the river Elbe.
- 3. Ibleburg, a church-village, with a nobleman's estate, belonging to the Barons of Plotho.
- V. The prefecturate of SEYDA, in which is one immediate and three mediate vassals, together with seventeen villages. In this prefecturate we are to remark,
- 1. Seyda, anciently called Sidau, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and enjoying both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In it too is a superintendency. This place was sormerly stiled a seigniory.
- 2. Gadegast, Golsdorf, Kurzlipsdorf, Mollnitz, Morxdorf, Niederseefeid. Oebna, and Seehausen, all church villages.
- VI. The prefecturate of Annaburg, in which are two immediate vaffals, one mediate vaffal, and fixteen villages. The heath of Annaburg or Lochau is very extensive. In this prefecturate is
- 1. Annaburg, formerly called Lochau, a borough, fituated on an island which forms the new dyke, and containing in it a citadel, which Anne confort to the Elector Augustus caused to be rebuilt in the year 1572; upon which both that and the town itself were called after her name.

2. Ranisburg, a church-village, in which is an estate of Count Bruhl's. VII. The presecturate of Schweinitz, in which are sourteen immediate and nineteen mediate vassals, together with eighty villages. In this

prefecturate is

1. Schweinitz, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and enjoying both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. Schweinitz lies on the Black Elster. The amt-office here is invested with the upper and hereditary jurisdiction. In 1406 the tower of the citadel, which formerly stood at this place, sell in and slew Wenzel and Sigismund two sons of the elector Rudolp III. with other persons. In 1637 the Swedes set this little town on fire, and in 1758 it was taken by the victorious King of Prussa.

2. Jessen, a small town, situated on the Black Elster, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, being also under immediate vassalage, but over it the presecturate of Schweinitz notwithstanding exercises not the upper and hereditary jurisdiction. At this place is a superintendency. In 1729 a great part of the town was burnt down. On the Gobrenberg is a growth of wine commonly called Gobren beer.

3. Schonewalde, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In the year 1714 the greatest part of this place was confumed by fire.

4. Herzberg, anciently called Hirzberg, also a small town, seated on the Black Elser, and being under immediate vassalage. This place belongs to the greater selection of the towns, and is the seat of a superintendency. The inhabitants deal in wool and cloths, and here is also a house for the making of salt-petre. In 1703 the greatest part also of this town was confumed by fire.

5. Prettin, in ancient records stiled Brettin, Pretyn, or Prittyn, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This place lies on the river Elbe.

6. Lichtenburg, a fine electoral palace with a pleasure-garden belonging to it, and which was first founded by Anne consort to the Elector Augustus.

7. Cloden, a borough, with a nobleman's estate, and appertaining to the Counts of Loser, as also containing a provostship or spiritual inspection.

8. Kreyscha, a royal manor, in which, as well as in that of Doblen, not far from it, is a stud of horses.

9. Groszreben, Hemsendorf, Knuppelsdorf, Werehau, Wildenau, Zwethan, all church-villages with noblemen's estates.

VIII. The prefecturate of PRETSCH, containing fifteen villages. In it is

1. Pretsch, a small-town, under mediate vassalage, and lying not far from the river Elbe. This town enjoys both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, and in it is a palace having a fine garden. Pretsch formerly belonged, and that too for a long time, to the family of Loser; afterwards to thai

that of Arnim, of the latter of which it was purchased by the Elector John George III. It was the dowager seat of Queen Christiana Eberhardine, who died in 1727.

2. Patzschwig, a church-village, belonging to the provostship of Cloden.

IX. The prefecturate of Schlieben, with the feigniory of Baruth and Sonnewalde, in which are eleven immediate and fourteen mediate vassals, together with fifty villages. In this prefecturate is

I. Schlieben, a small town, having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, and the council of which is indeed in some particulars under immediate vassalage, but the amt-office is possessed of the upper and hereditary jurisdiction. At this place is a provossiship or superintendency. In 1721 the greatest part of it was consumed by fire.

2. Colochau, Heinsdorf, Hilmersdorf, Lebusa, Petkus, Stechau, Striefa, and Wustermark, all church-villages, having noblemen's estates.

3. Hobenbuckau, a hunting-seat belonging to the Elector.

4. The feigniory of Baruth, which is under immediate vassalage, and was hereditarily purchased by Count Otto of Solms in 1596. This prefecturate still belongs to a collateral line of the principal branch of Solms-Lich, of which we treated above, p 111. In it we are to remark

1. Baruth, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and lying on the Goila, as also containing a citadel and a superintendency. In the year 1671 the greatest part of this place was consumed by fire.

2. The church-villages of Grosziescht, Kemlitz, Merzdorf, Paplitz, and Schonefeld.

- 5. The feigniory of Sonnewalde, which lies, indeed, in Lower-Lusatia, but has for many years past been incorporated with the electoral circle. Count Philip of Solms purchased this seigniory in 1532 of the noble samily of Minkwitz, and at present it belongs to a collateral line of the principal branch of Solms-Lich. In it is
- 1. Sonnewalde, in the Wendish called Hordzischezo, or Grodzischezo, a small town, containing a residentiary palace of the Counts.

2. The church-villages of Friedersdorf, Gosmar, Great-Krausig, Schonewald, Wendischtrabne, Wensdorf, and Zekrin.

X. The prefecturate of LIEBENWERDA, in which are ten immediate and ten mediate vaffals, and forty-one villages: namely,

1. Liebenwerda, a small town, seated on the Black Elster, and under immediate vassage, belonging to the greater selection of the towns. In it is a superintendency. In the year 1733 this place suffered greatly by fire.

2. Wahrenbruck, fituated not far from the Black Elster, together with

3. Ubigau, or Uebigau, are both small towns, under immediate vassalage, and enjoying seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. To the presecturate of Liebenwerda however is annexed the supreme and hereditary jurisdiction over them.

4. Dollingen, Falkenberg, Schmerkendorf, and Wiederau, all church-villages, having noble estates.

XI. The prefecturate of BITTERFELD, which belonged formerly to the Merseburg collateral line of the electoral house of Saxony. In it are fifteen mediate vasfals, and forty-eight villages: namely,

1. Bitterfeld, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In it too is a superintendency, and this place lies on the river Mulde.

- 2. Brehna, a finall town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This place was anciently the capital of the county of Brehna, the proprietors of which were of the Wettin line. On the extinction of those Counts the county fell to the Electors of Saxony of the Ascanian race.
- 3. Pouch, a citadel, lying not far from the river Mulde, together with its appropriated teigniory, of which the collateral branch of the principal line of the Counts of Solms-Lich is possessed.
- 4. Old-Jesznitz, Niemeck, Priorau, Ramsin, and Roitzsch, the last of which consists of eight shares, as also Schierau, are all church-villages with noble estates. Wolffen likewise is a church-village.

The CIRCLE of T H U R I N G I A.

§.1. Of the landgravate of Thuringia are extant some old drawings taken by John Mellinger and Adolarus Erichius; the latter of which have also been copied by Blaeuw, Jansson and others. The chart published by John Bapt. Homann, was first improved, in the year 1729, by his son John Christ. Homann, and afterwards, in 1738, by Frederick Christian Lesser. The last edition of this chart is to be found in the Atlas of Germany, in which it constitutes the fifty-first; and in number sifty-sive is likewise to be found a chart of East-Thuringia, published by Homann's heirs, in the year 1747, on two sheets.

§. 2. The circle of Thuringia forms the north part of the landgravate of that name. The country is well watered, yields good pasturage and abundance of corn, particularly wheat, which is excellent, as also fine woods, and produces woad at Langensalza, together with saflor, anise, fennel and wine in other places; and has also a considerable breed of horses, horned-cattle and sheep. Of these natural productions of the country a great part is exported.

§. 3. Thu-

- hundred and feventy-four (or according to Hempel's table eight hundred and thirty-three) villages, three hundred noble estates, two hundred and fifty-two parish-churches at the villages, ninety-six silial-churches, seven super-intendencies and five under-consistories. Among the towns there are four here which belong to the selection of the towns; namely, one to the lesser and three to the wider selection; seven general towns, which belong to the third class of the provinces, and one hundred and seventy-six immediate vassals.
- §. 4. Thuringia takes its name from the ancient Thuringi; but the modern Thuringia, which lies nearly between the Saale and the Werra, the forest of Thuringia and the Harzwalde, is but a part of the ancient Thuringia, (a country formerly comprized under that name,) extending itself much farther every way. In the fixth century the Franks and Saxons subjected the Thuringians to their dominion, whose country from that time forwards became divided into the north and fouth. The limits between both were not fo much the Unlirut as the forest of Harzwalde and the river Helme which flows in the golden Aue or meadow. North-Thuringia towards the north extended itself beyond the Harzwalde quite to the river Elbe, and belonged to the Saxons. It was united with the dutchy of Saxony, lost its name, and was at length annexed to Eastphalia, or to the eastern part of the country of Saxony. South-Thuringia belonged to the Franks, and comprized in it the modern Thuringia, together with a large share of the modern Franconia, Helle, &c. It was divided into feveral cantons or Pagi, over which Counts were appointed. Till the eleventh century it flood under the En:perors and Kings, and besides the Counts we find also some Dukes mentioned, to whom the German Kings entrusted the government of this country. In the eleventh century the Emperors Conrad II. and Henry III. made Count Lewis the Bearded (of whose pedigree some account has been given above) a donation of certain estates in Thuringia, to which that Count added likewise some others by means of purchase and marriage. His fon Lewis II. who was also furnamed the Springer or Vaulter, resided, it is true, at the paternal citadel of Schauenburg, but built, moreover, other citadels. His fon again, named Lewis III. was by the Emperor Lotharius created, in the year 1152, Landgrave of Thuringia, after having stripped Hermann of Winzenburg of that dignity. And thus this Lewis is reckoned the first of that name among the Landgraves of Thuringia. His race became extinct in the year 1247 in the person of the Landgrave Henry Raspe, Sophia, daughter to his elder brother St. Lewis, was married to Henry V. Duke of Brabant; and Henry I, fon to them both, and furnamed the Child, aspired now to the landgravate of Thuringia: But the Marggrave Henry the Illustrious of Meissen, fifter's son to the last-mentioned Landgrave, annexed the langravate to himself, as well on account of a nearer hereditary right right, as also by virtue of the expectancy of it which had been obtained in 1242 of the Emperor Frederick II. Upon this a war ensued, which was at length terminated in 1263 by means of a stipulation; by virtue of which the Marggrave Henry of Meissen obtained the landgravate of Thuringia, and Henry of Brabant, Heffe.

Ever fince this time the Marggraves of Meissen, who afterwards became Electors of Saxony, have been in possession of the landgravate of Thuringia, which was at one time divided among separate lines, but returned again by the extinction of the latter to that of Meissen. At length, however, by the division of the countries, made between the brothers Ernest and Albert, it sell to the share of the former. It continued vested in his descendents till the Elector John Frederick, in 1547 lost all his countries, which together with the electoral dignity, were conferred by the Emperor on Duke Maurice of the Albertine line; but that Prince was obliged to cede certain countries among them which had been partly taken from out of Thuringia, and partly out of the Osterlande, and of which hereaster a more accurate account shall be given, to the children of John Frederick, in lieu of the yearly revenue allowed them of 50,000 guldens.

§. 5. The Elector of Saxony, it is true, has infifted on a voice on account of the landgravate of Thuringia in the council of the Princes of the Empire, but has always been refused. The Dukes of Saxony of the Ernestine line were the parties who opposed it, and these alledged, that they had hitherto carried their voices singly on account of the countries of Thuringia, for which reason no general voice could take place on account thereof. The Elector of Saxony in reply to this says, that the Ernestine lines were not possessed of the whole landgravate of Thuringia, but only of certain considerable portions of it.

§. 6. The share belonging to the electoral house of Saxony in Thuringia, is contained in the circle of Thuringia, which comprizes in it

The following thirteen immediate prefecturates, viz.

1. The circle-amt of Tenstadt, in which is Tenstadt, a town under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the greater selection, containing also in it near fix hundred houses. This place lies between Langensalza and Weissensee, and was first environed with a wall between the years 1448 and 1489; for the building of which the stones of the three forts or citadels which somerly stood night his town were made use of. The Thuringian circle-amt was removed to this place in 1659, and that even before the town belonged to the presecturate of Langensalza. In 1684 above one third of Tenstadt was consumed by fire; in 1732 it suffered also greatly by the same dreadful calamity; and in 1748 above one hundred and sixty of its best houses were reduced to asses. The spiritual inspection, which was formerly held here, was in 1750 abolished.

Four villages.

2. The school-amt of Pforte, in which is Pforte, or Schulpforte, the principal of the three fovereign or provincial schools of the electorate, and lying on the river Saale, about one hour's distance from Naumburg. In it formerly was a considerable monastery of Cistercians, which Duke Maurice converted in 1543 into what is at present called the Prince's school; in which to this very day one hundred and fifty scholars are maintained and taught gratis. This place is under immediate vassalage. The superintendency too, which formerly was held here, was abolished in 1749.

Memleben, a parochial-village feated on the Unstrut, in a pleasant and fruitful tract between Nebra and Wiebe. The Benedictine monastery which formerly stood near it was one of the most celebrated in all Thuringia, and in it died the Emperors Henry and Otho I. This monastery was dissolved about the year 1545, at which time it became an electoral manor, and the lands were farmed out; but the use thereof applied in 1551 by the Elector Maurice towards the better maintenance of the Schulpforte.

Kofen, a village feated on the Saale, and containing a good falt-work.

Together with twenty-three other villages, among which are the church-villages of Altenburg, Benndorf, Lisdorf, Upper-Mollern, Pomnitz, Pappel, Rehhausen, Spielberg, Tauchwitz, Zockwar, &c.

3. The prefecturate of TAUTENBURG. In it

Tautenburg, an ancient citadel feated upon a mountain about one German mile's distance from Camburg, and having a parochial-village and a seigniory annexed to it which belonged to the Schenken, who stiled themselves from hence the Schenken of Tautenburg. On their extinction, it came successively into the possession of the family of Werthern, the Dukes of Saxe-Zeitz, and Count Maurice of Saxony, and at length reverted again to the electoral house, which on account thereof pays to each Roman month the sum of twenty florins.

Frauenpriesnitz, anciently called Priesnitz, or more simply Briesnitz, a market-town, citadel and seigniory, formerly belonging also to the Schenken, and which together with its nunnery, has had the same sate with the seigniory of Tautenburg. At this place is a superintendency, under which stand sisteen mother and silal churches. In 1638 it was entirely burnt down.

Niedertrebra, a noble estate and church-village seated on the Ilm, and belonging formerly, together with the preceding places and seigniories, to the Schenken, after which it passed to the Counts of Werthern, and from them to Duke Maurice of Saxe-Zeitz, who in 1677 disposed of it to a member of the samily of Erssa, and this last to one of the samily of Bodenhausen, to which samily it still belongs.

Together with seventeen villages, among which are the church-villages of Martendorf, Pfublsborn, Poppendorf, Poxdorf, Staudnitz, Wetzdorf, &c.

4. The prefecturate of TREFFURT, with its annexed vogtey, is co-here-Vol. V. 4 B ditary, ditary, in as much as besides the Elector of Saxony, Mentz also and Hesse are possessed of a share therein, as is already shewn in vol. iv. and likewise vol. v. p. 34, &c. where an account may be sound of the town of Tressurt and the seven villages belonging to its presecturate and vogety.

The following prefecturates were in the possession of the now extinct Dukes of Saxe-Weissensels, who were a collateral line of the electoral house from the year 1652 till 1746, viz.

5. The prefecturate of Weissenfels, of which Matth. Scutter has engraved a chart, and which contains in it one hundred and seventy-one villages, and thirty-three immediate vassals. These villages are ranged under three tribunals. In this prefecturate we shall remark,

- 1. Weissenfels, in Latin Leucopetra, a well built town seated on the river Saale, and under immediate vassalage, being reckoned the second also in the greater selection of the towns. On a white rock above the town it has a fine citadel which was the ordinary refidence of the Dukes of Saxe-Weissenfels, and was called Augustusburg; as also an arsenal, which was stripped by the Prussians in 1756; a town-church, another church near what was formerly the cloyster of St. Clara; a hospital containing a small church, a fuperintendency, under which stand eighty-two churches, a gymnasium illustre, erected out of the above-mentioned nunnery, and from its founder Duke Augustus, named Augusteum, a Latin school, and manufactures of filk and velvet. At the royal hunting-house, which lies before Niekel's-gate, refides the provincial huntsmafter of the circle of Thuringia. This town with its appurtenances was anciently a county. In 1757 a confiderable number of the troops belonging to the circle had posted themselves in it, but were driven from thence by the Prussians, and for the facilitating of their flight burnt down the large and spacious covered wooden bridge here over the Saale.
 - 2. The tribunal of Burgwerben. To which belongs

Burgwerben, a parochial-village, with a noble estate annexed to it and appertaining to one of the family of Funk.

Great-Kayna, a filial village, having also a noble estate.

Crellwitz and Uechtritz, two parochial-villages, containing noble estates. Together with fix other parochial-villages.

3. The tribunal of Stoffen. To which belongs

Stoffen, a small town, in which the family of Berlepsch at Grobitz are possessed of the jurisdiction.

Skoblen, or Schkoblen, another small town with an estate annexed to it, which is under immediate vassalage, and belongs to the Count of Hoym. Formerly there was also a provostship in this town, whence the preacher at the parish-church here is still frequently called provost. Not far from hence likewise formerly stood a palatium provinciale, or jurisdiction-court.

Droyfzig,

Thuringia. G E R M A N Y.

Droyszig, a borough, citadel and seigniory belonging to the Count of Hoym.

Lissen, a parochial-village, formerly containing a cloyster under the direction of a provost, whence the curate still enjoys the title of provost.

Langendorf, a village, which in conjunction with Obergreifzlau forms one parish. At this place also is a kind of royal domain, which was formely a nunnery, but is partly likewise a foundation erected by a pious carrier, named Christopher Buchen, as an orphan-house, but which was afterwards converted into a foundation, in which people of all ranks, ages and sexes, who wanted to pass their life peaceably, were sure to meet with an agreeable support; the young also were instructed here in such things as were useful, and poor children maintained and taught.

Untergreiszlau, Lobitz, Great-Gostewitz, Grobitz, Meineweb, Meyhen and Goldschau, all parochial-villages with noble estates belonging to them.

4. The tribunal of Molfen. To it belongs

Molsen, or Hoben Molsen, a small town in which a provincial court is yearly held. In 1639 this place was almost wholely consumed by fire.

Teuchern, also a small town and estate under immediate vassalage, and at present belonging to one of the family of Funk.

Wahlitz and Gottewitz (commonly called Gietz) Zembschen with Jaucha, Obernessa, Webau with Rosseln, Reuden and Naundorf, all parochial-villages with estates.

6. The prefecturate of FREYBURG, containing eighty-eight villages and eighteen vassals. The villages here are ranged among five tribunals. In it we shall take notice of Freyburg, a small town lying on the Unstrut, and under immediate vas-falage, but having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. At this place also is an old citadel standing on a mountain, together with a super-intendency, to which belong seventy-nine parochial and silial churches, and which is divided into five circles, namely, into those of Freyburg, Lauch, Nebra, Mucheln and Bedra. In the year 1631 this town was plundered and set on fire by the Imperialists. In 1682 it suffered greatly again by fire, and in 1740 was almost wholly burnt down. In it is one of the five tribunals belonging to the presecturate of the same name.

Mucheln, a small town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, as also being one of the five tribunals belonging to the presecturate of Freyburg. In the year 1631 this place was plundered and burnt by the Imperialists; and in 1718 the greatest part of it was again consumed by fire.

St. Micheln, a filial-village, incorporated into one parish with the former, and belonging to the prefecturate of Weissensels.

Laucha, a finall town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This town lies in a fertile and pleasant 4 B 2 meadow meadow on the Uustrut, and in 1419 obtained town-privileges, as also in 1483 the upper and lower jurisdiction. In it 1731 was all burnt down but twenty houses.

Nebra, a small town under immediate vassalage, and seated on the Unstrut. Its citadel is possessed by the Count of Hoym as a noble estate. It belonged formerly to a line of the Schenken. Duke William the Brave ceded it in 1458 to the Lords of Nismitz in lieu of his half of the citadel and town of Freyburg. In 1641 it was almost wholly reduced to ashes by the Swedes, and in 1655 was again confumed by fire.

Burg-Scheidungen, a church-village lying on the Unstrut, with an estate annexed to it belonging to the family of Schulenburg, was anciently a town and fortress, which devolved at length as an Imperial sief to the bishopric of Bamberg, by which it was given again in sief to other possesfors; as for instance in 1376 to Gebhard a noble Lord of Querfurt. Bruno XI. in whom this Querfurt line became extinct, ceded the sief in 1495 to Prince Woldemar of Anhalt; since which the princely house of Anhalt has constantly received it in sief of the bishops of Bamberg, but generally again invested others with it by way of sub-sief.

Carfdorf, a church-village, in which is one of the five tribunals of this prefecturate.

Roszback, a church-village, also containing one of the five tribunals of this prefecturate. In the neighbourhood of this place in 1757 happened one of the most glorious actions that ever was known; Frederick II. King of Prussia, with a small army and a very inconsiderable loss, routing with the greatest ease a powerful army of the combined French and Imperialists.

Eichstett, a village, also containing one of the five tribunals of this prefecturate.

Goseck, a parochial village, with a nobleman's seat under immediate vasfalage, and containing a citadel-church, in which the principal divine service here is performed; but in the village-church also hours of prayer are observed, and other divine rites celebrated. In this town also formerly was a famous Benedictine cloyster.

Alberfroda, Balgstadt, Baumersroda, Bedra, Branderoda, Braunsroda, Crumpa, Eulau, Gleina, Grost, Kirchscheidungen, Markrobliz, Oberschmon, (anciently called Schman) Oberwundsch, Judendorf, Oechlitz, Reinsdorf, St. Ulrich, Schnelroda, Vitzenburg, Weischutz, Weissenschund Zobicker, all church-villages with estates.

Zschleiplitz, a noble estate and village, anciently called Weissenburg. At this place was a nunnery.

7. The prefecturate of Eckartsberga, in which are fixty-feven.villages and thirty-five immediate vaffals, namely,

1. Eckartsberga, an open little town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In it is an old ruinous mountain-mountain-citadel, and a superintendency. This town suffered greatly by fire in the years 1562, 1681 and 1744, and in former times, together with its appurtenances, constituted a county.

- 2. Bibra, or Bebra, an inconfiderable little town, which in the year 1707 was fet on fire by the Swedes, and the greatest part of it burnt down. At this place is an electoral manor. Formerly there was also a cathedral church here, of which the most certain and oldest account extant occurs in a record of the Emperor Henry V. bearing date in 1107. But that so early as the year 768 one of the four spiritual courts of Thuringia was, as some affert founded here, is difficult to be believed, and still more difficult to be proved.
- 3. The county of Beichlingen has had formerly Counts of its own, who were stiled from it and formed a very ancient, considerable and powerful family who were hereditary marshals in Thuringia; but gradually alienated their estates and became extinct in 1567. A considerable part of their estates the Lords of Werthern procured to themselves by purchase; Hans of Werthern purchasing in 1519 of Count Adam of Beichlingen the county of Beichlingen, with the town of Colleda, and in 1526 and 1528 two villages more in the same county, after which in 1520 the above Lords received from Duke George of Saxony the investiture thereof. The Elector John George I. also invested George of Werthern in 1633 with the noble vasfals of the county, whom Count Adam of Beichlingen, at the time of his disposing of the county, had referved to himself. The family of Werthern divided itself in the fifteenth century in the fons of Frederick of Werthern, named John and Thilo, into two principal lines, of which that of Thilo became extinct in 1710. The John line was divided again, 1. Into that of George, to which again belongs, (1). That of Frobidorf, which still continues in the rank of nobles. (2). That of Great-Neubausen, and (3). That of Beichlingen, both which lines, ever fince the year 1702, are possessed of the dignity of Counts of the Empire. 2. Into that of George Thilo, which stiles itself of Werthern and Brucken, and still continues in the rank of nobles: And 3. Into that of John Henry, to which belong three collateral lines, viz. the Counts of Bachra, the Barons of Wiebe, and the noble family of Lossa. The Counts of Werthern are possessed of the office of hereditary door-keepers of the Empire. To the county of Beichlingen, as disposed of in the manner above-mentioned, to the family of Werthern belongs

Beichlingen, a citadel, standing on a mountain: together with

The church-villages of Altenbeichlingen, Bursgwenden, Hemmleben, Leubingen, and Stodten.

4. The feigniory of Wiehe has belonged to the Barons and Lords of Werthern, ever fince the time that it was purchased by Dieterich of Werthern in the year 1452 of the Counts of Schwarzburg as a sub-fief thereof. This feigniory is divided into two parts, and comprizes in it Wiche.

Wiehe, a finall town, fituated not far from the Unstrut, and which in the year 1342 was fet on fire and destroyed. In 1609 also it was wholly burnt down, and in 1700 and 1712 suffered likewise greatly by the same dreadful calamity.

The church-villages of Bachra and Donndorf, in the latter of which was formerly a numery, in which the family of Werthern founded a school; together with the villages of Garnbach, Langenroda, and Lossa.

5. The feigniory of Frohndorf, anciently belonging to the Counts of Beieblingen, but which was mortgaged by them in 1448 to the Counts of Stolberg and Schwarzburg; and in 1467 was fold out-right. In 1505 was purchased by the Lords of Werthern of the Counts of Stolberg with consent of the Counts of Schwarzburg, and held as a fief. It still belongs to the Lords of Werthern, who are possessed therein of a spiritual under-court, and contains in it the church-villages of Backleben, Batgendorf, Ellersleben, Frohndorf, Great and Little-Neuhausen, Orlishausen, and Retgenstedt.

6. The bailiwick of Thuringia, belonging to the Teutonick order, is subject to the Elector of Saxony as sovereign, and the lieutenant thereof is a free-holder. In the lesser selection of the nobility he enjoys the first voice, if present, in person. His annual revenues are estimated at 6000 guldens.

To this bailiwick belong four commanderies: viz.

1. The commandery of Zwetzen, in which is Zwetzen, or Zwatzen, a church-village, feated on a mountain on the river Saale, and in the neighbourhood of Jena. This village is the head place of the bailiwick, and the commendatory's palace in it is allotted for the residence of the lieutenant. In the year 1722 it suffered greatly

The church-villages of Altengonne, Nerkwitz, Rodgen, Wolfborn, and the village of Witterfrode.

2. The commandery of Lehesten, having its feat at Lehesten, Lehsten, or Labsten, a church-village, in which is the commendatory's palace.

3. The commandery of Liebsladt, having its feat at Liebsladt, or Liebflett, a church-village, in which also is the commendatory's palace.

Rem. The commandery of Negelstadt belongs to the prefecturate of Langensalza.

7. Marienthal, formerly a nunnery belonging to the samilies of Hagen and Seebach as a noble estate. Christian William of Munchhausen, the ancient possession of this nunnery, caused the old buildings, which stood in a pleafant valley, to be pulled down, and in their room, in 1732, new ones to be erected in a magnificent tafte on a mountain at some distance, which buildings he allotted for a foundation of Lutheran ladies; but this regulation was never brought to bear.

8. Kloster-Haseler, or Upper-Haseler, a church-village, situated on the river Hafel, and having the privilege of holding a fair, and formerly also 9. Rofzleben, centaining in it a nunnery.

9. Roszleben, or Rossel, a borough, with a parish-church belonging to it feated on the Unstrut, at the entrance of what is called the Golden Au or Meadow. Formerly there was an Augustine nunnery at this place, which at present belongs as a noble estate to the samily of Witzleben. Henry of Witzleben, in 1554, sounded, in what was formerly a cloyster here, a good school, which is still extant, and the scholars belonging to it are either maintained gratis, or pay but an inconsiderable salary. In 1686 the cloyster buildings, together with the greatest part of the borough, were burnt down; but in 1730 a beginning was made for restoring them, by erecting a new school-house, which was finished in 1742. The cloyster-community has its own preacher.

10. Leutenthal, Sachsenhausen, Nikelshausen, and Lindeberg, are four fovereign farms.

11. Allerstadt, Auerstadt, Bucha, Burghaseler or Under-Haseler, Burgbolzhausen, Dermsdorf, Eszleben, Gosznitz, Herrngosserstadt, Nausesz in the valley, Upper-Reissen, Rotenberga, Steinburg, Tauchard, Vehra, and Wolmerstadt, all church-villages with noble estates.

8. The prefecturate of Sangerhausen contains in it twenty-five villages, and eighteen immediate vassalages. In this presecturate is Sangerhausen, a town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Dicts. This town lies in the neighbourhood of the forest of Harz. In it are computed seven hundred hearths, and it contains also an old citadel with a church in it, and two other parishchurches, viz. one in the lower the other in the upper-town; together with a hospital and a foundation of the Holy Ghost with a church belonging to it, as also two other hospitals with churches, a good Latin school in what was formerly a monastery of Augustines, and a superintendency. It is one of the oldest towns in Thuringia, and formerly, together with its appendages, constituted a proper seigniory, which came by marriage to Count Lewis the Bearded, and after the extinction of the Landgraves of Thuringia, to the Marggrave Henry of Meissen. Under his fon the Marggrave Albert, and that probably by virtue of his act of alienation, it fell, together with Landsberg, to Henry one of the Brandenburg Marggraves of the Ascanian line and son to John I. whose daughter Sophia brought it to her confort Magnus the Pious, Duke of Brunswick. His fon again named Duke Magnus with the Chain, mortgaged Sangerhausen in 1369 (not in 1367) to the Marggraves of Meissen, to whom he also ceded it in 1372 on condition that it should be at liberty to redeem these countries again within two years space. In the last-mentioned year it was almost laid level with the ground by what was called the Society of Star-bearers, in Latin Societas Stelligerorum. In the years 1398, 1431, and 1519 it was almost wholly confumed by fire. The commendatory's palace here belonging to the Teutonick order has been appropriated by the council to itself.

Walbaufe u_{γ}

Walhausen, a market-town, with a citadel and estate of the Barons of Affeburg. This place was anciently an Imperial palatine town, which in 1115 was destroyed, and afterwards converted into a market-town.

Kaltenborn, a ruinous cloyster, which was once a magnificent building. Roda, formerly a eloyster of Pramonstratenses, but at present a noble estate, belonging to the family of Schulenburg.

Roblingen, a citadel, in which formerly was kept the prefecturate-office of three villages, but this was afterwards united with that of Sangerbaufen.

Grullenberg, a church-village, formerly also containing a peculiar prefecturate-office.

Oberfdorf, a parochial-village, with a royal domain.

Begernaumburg, Brucken, Hackpfuffel, and Schonewerda, all churchvillages with noble estates.

o. The prefecturate of Sachsenburg, in which is Sachsenburg, a church-village and citadel, lying near the Unstruct at the foot of the mountain of Finne. The old decayed citadel of this name stands not far from it on the mountain, and was first founded by the Saxons.

The parochial-villages of Bilzing fleben, Cannawurf, and two others.

10. The prefecturate of Weissensee, containing in it twenty-seven villages and nineteen immediate vaffals. In this prefecturate is Weissensee, a small town, situated in the center of Thuringia, near what formerly conflituted an inland lake, which was divided into the greater and less, or into the upper and lower, between both which it lay; but the former being drained in 1705 and converted into arable and meadow grounds, a small part of it only remains at present, and this also has been since dried up. The town itself is under immediate vassalage, and belongs to the greater felection of the towns, containing in it also an old decayed citadel, and a superintendency. On account of its fidelity to its Sovereigns, in the time of the great infurrection of the peafants in the year 1525, it obtained of Duke George letters of freedom; by virtue of which it is only to pay one half of the feveral customary provincial grants, evaluations, taxes, and tenths; whence it still pays but one half of the tax upon liquor. In the years 1212, 1248 or 1249, 1354, and 1750, it was entirely burnt down, and in 1457, 1474, 1565, 1590, 1598, and 1640, either the greatest or at least a considerable part of it consumed by the same dreadful calamity. The palace of the commendatory of the Teutonick order, which once stood here, the magistracy appropriated wholly to itself in 1594.

Kindelbruck, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and lying on the Wipper. This place has both feat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In the year 1291 it was still a village, but in that year obtained the same privileges with the town of Weissensee. In 1372 it obtained full town-privileges, and in 1507 permission also of being environed with walls, a beginning towards which was made in the following year. In 1359, 1528, 1569, 1582, and 1650, it suffered greatly by fire.

Colleda,

Colleda, otherwise called Colln on the Unstrut, that river running not far from it, as also Kub-Colln, from the great breed of cattle, in its neighbourhood, is a small town belonging to the Counts of Werthern. Hons of Werthern purchased this place in 1519 of Count Adam of Beichlingen, and brought also hereditarily to himself from the abbey of Hersfeld the office of bailiff over it. In the year 1683 it suffered great damage by sire. Near the burying-church here formerly stood a Benedictine numbery.

Gebese, a market-town, lying on the Gera, and having a noble citadel, near which stands a church, one capital church, three hundred and fifty houses, and sour free farms. In the years 1641 and 1745 this place suftained great damage by fire, and in 1750 the greatest part of it was burnt down. Count Adam of Beichlingen purchased it in 1522 of Duke George of Saxony. In 1567 Bartholomew, the last Count of Beichlingen died at this place, upon which it reverted again to the Elector Angustus of Saxony, and since that has already obtained a seventh new owner, who is at present the Lord of Oldershausen.

The commandery of Grifffladt, or Grieffflett, belonging to the Teutonick bailiwick of Hessen. This commendatory has both feat and voice in the lesser selection of the nobility. Belonging to the commendam is a church, and to the village another.

Griffstadt, a parochial-village, lying not far from the Unstrut.

Strausfurth, a parochial-village and noble estate, belonging to the Baron of Munchbausen, and containing an orphan-house. Between this place and the church-village of Vehra the Emperor Henry IV. obtained a great victory over the Saxons. In 1592 seventy-four houses were burnt down here.

Bendeleben, Cranichborn, Gangloffommern, Groffenfurra, Grofzmonra, Gruningen, Lutzenfommern, Niedertopfstadt, Noda, Ottenhausen, Schilffe, Schonsted, Tunzenhausen, and Wenigensommern.

Gunstadt, a parochial-village, very famous for its fair, which is called the Indulgence of Gunstadt.

11. The prefecturate of Langensalza comprizes in it thirty-fix villages, and thirty-three immediate vasfals. Among them is Langenfalza, the capital of all the electoral Saxon Thuringia, lying on the Salza, in a fpot very fertile in corn, and being under immediate vaffalage. This town belongs to the lesser selection of towns; contains an ancient citadel, which in old times was called Dryburg; about nine hundred houses, two parish-churches, one superintendency, whose spiritual jurish-diction is divided into the upper and lower circle; a Latin school, and some manusactures of stuffs; and carries on moreover a good trade in half silks, serges, corn, and other commodities. Formerly it belonged at first to the cloyster of Homburg, which stood at no great distance from it, but afterwards fell to the Lords of Salza, and in 1211 was made a town. The Lords of Salza, who became extinct in 1409, so early as towards the mid-Vol. V.

die of the fourteenth century alienated this town; at which time one half of it came to the Landgraves of Thuringia, and afterwards the whole of it. In the years 1483, 1505, 1662, and 1711, it suffered great damage by fire.

Thamsbruck, vulgarly called Thomasbruck, and otherwise also Thungisbruck, or Thingsbruck, a small town, lying on the Unstrut, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, as also a citadel, and above two hundred houses. In 1421 this place was endowed with town-privileges and freedom. At it was formerly an amt-office. In the year 1335 it was laid waste by the Counts of Erfurt, and in 1632 fet on fire by the Imperialists.

The commandery of Nagelfladt, or Negelflett, which is also otherwise called Neilflett, belongs to the bailiwick of Thuringia of the Teutonick order. The parochial-village of this name lies on the Unstrut, containing in it about one hundred and fifty-six houses, and the upper part thereof belongs to the presecturate of Langensalza, but the lower to the commandery jurisdiction here. In 1715 sixty-two dwelling-houses were burnt down at this place.

Great-Gottern, or Bishop's Gottern, a confiderable market-town, containing two churches, a foundation and a hospital, and which in 1598 lost no less than one hundred and forty-three houses by fire, exclusive of barns and stables.

Old-Gottern, containing two parish-churches, Cammerforst, Clettstadt, Freyenbeszingen, Henningsleben, Little or Wenigen-Vargula, Merxleben, Mulverstadt, at which is a cloyster, Neunheilingen, Oppershausen, Schonstadt, containing two parish-churches; Secbach, Uffhoven, Weberstedt, and Zaunroden, all church-villages with noble estates.

12. The prefecturate of Wendelstein, in which is Wendelstein, a ruinous citadel, containing a chapel and a manor, and standing on a mountain not far from the Unstrut. At this place is a stude of horses belonging to the Electors. The samily of Witzleben were long possessed of this citadel, and from them it came by way of mortgage to the samily of Heszler in the year 1626, in lieu of the sum of 86,500 stories; which samily ceded their right therein to the Elector John George I. who in 1656 obtained it entirely by a stipulation.

And eight villages.

of Mansfeld, arose out of what was formerly an abbey of Cistercian Monks, and was also called Sichem. This abbey was founded by the abbey of Walkenried, and in 1141 honoured with its first abbot, but in 1547 was laid waste, and then secularized. From the Counts of Mansfeld it came to the electoral house of Saxony, and though ceded hereditarily by that house to Lewis of Wurm, yet after his death it reverted again to the Elector John George I. To this presecturate belong the villages of Sittichenbach, Rothen-Schirmbach, Great and Little-Osterhausen, having parish-churches.

Rem.

Rem. The two last presecturates were in 1687 annexed to the principality of Querfurt; but when the latter, together with the other countries belonging to the collateral line of Weissensels, reverted on the extinction of that line to the electoral house, these presecturates were again taken from it.

The principality of Querfurt, which indeed is reckoned in the circle of Thuringia, occurs below in its order as a peculiar State of the circle of Upper-Saxony.

The share of the county of Mansfeld, which is under the sovereignty of the elector of Saxony, belongs also indeed to the circle of Thuringia, but shall be first properly described below under the whole county of Mansfeld.

The share of the countries of the Prince of Schwarzburg, over which the Electors of Saxony exercise certain high privileges, are also to be mentioned and described below under the principality of Schwarzburg.

tioned and described below under the principality of Schwarzburg.

The countries of the Counts of Stollberg, which stand under the sovereignty of the Elector of Saxony, occur also below under the whole of the countries of the Counts of Stollberg.

The MARGGRAVATE of MEISSEN.

§. 1. THE old general charts of the marggravate of Meissen, published by Fred. de Witt, Olaus Johannes Gothus, David Funk and others, are not so good as the smaller one thereof, which is to be found among the newest general charts of the southern half of the circle of Upper-Saxony, though not even that is without its defects.

§. 2. Of the circuit and limits of the marggravate of Meissen it is impossible to treat either justly or intelligibly without distinguishing the times and the sometimes less confined, but at others the more general acceptation of that name. Its first beginning it received in the tenth century from the sort and town of Meissen, and its limits were afterwards gradually extended. But I shall only shew in this place what was understood in the sourteenth century by the marggravate of Meissen. The brothers Frederick, Balthasar, and William, marggraves of Meissen, divided the whole of the marggraval countries in 1382 into three parts, namely, into the Meisserland, Osterland, and Thuringia. What was at that and in the following times reckoned as belonging to the proper marggravate of Meissen, appears from the hereditary union between Wladislaw King of Bohemia, the Elector Ernest, and Albert Duke of Saxony, bearing date in the year 1482; namely, Dresden, Pirna,

Pirna, Konigstein, Weblen, Rathen, Hohenstein, Wildenstein, Stolpen, Liebenthal, Bischofswerda, Radeberg, Lauenstein, Bernstein, Freyberg, Wolkenstein, Scharfenstein, Schellenberg, Chemnitz, Oedern, Zschopau, Stolberg, Hayn, Ortrandt, Senftenberg, Finfterwalde, Schaffa, Tharaudt, Muhlberg, Torgan, Dommitzsch, Schilda, Oschatz, Mugeln, Lommatzsch, Dobeln, Mittweyda, Rochlitz, Grimma, Nauenhof, Leifznig, Colditz, Wurzen, Eilenburg, Duben, and Geithayn, and thus the marggravate of Meissen was terminated to the north, east, and south by the dutchy of Saxony, or the electoral circle, as also by Lusatia and Bohemia; but to the west it extends at present not only to but even somewhat beyond the Mulde. All the other countries which were under the dominion of the marggraval house, exclusive of this marggravate, quite to the river Saale, were stilled the Ofterland. But this Ofterland denotes not as much as the present East-Thuringia, but was a part of the country of the Old Saxons, which till the thirteenth century was called Oriens, pars orientalis, plaga orientalis, or provincia orientalis. and was formerly taken by the Saxons from the Thuringi; nay, in it also was reckoned the country which the Easterling Saxons had wrested from the Wends. Though this last-mentioned tract lost the name of the Osterland; vet that title still remained peculiar to the country conquered by the Saxons on the east side of the river Saale; and the Princes and Counts, who dwelt. therein, were stiled Ofterland or Easterling Princes. And thus, as has been thewn above, all the country which the marggraval house was possessed of to the east of the river Saale, the proper marggravate of Meissen excepted, was named in the chancery stile of that marggravate, the Osterland. Now as in this tract it was sometime possessed of small portions of land, and at other times of greater; fo also the Ofterland has not been always of one and the fame circuit. Between the years 1157 and 1382 Lusatia was reckoned in it. The Pleisznerland, between the Pleisse and White Elster, appertained, till the middle of the thirteenth century, to the Emperors, and though the marggraval house obtained jurisdiction thereof, yet in this space of time it was still considered as a peculiar country, and distinct from the Osterland. The county of Brene, while it appertained to the marggraval house, was also reckoned in the Osterland. The marggravate of Landsberg likewise belonged thereto; but that marggravate, after having been for some time in strange hands, coming again in 1347 to the Marggraves of Meissen, it was for some years considered as a distinct country of the Osterland, and borne particularly in the maggraval title. In what latitude the name of Ofterland was taken from 1382 forwards, may be also seen from the hereditary union mentioned above; by which in the principality of Ofterland were reckoned Leipzig, Delitzsch, Zorbig, Pegau, Luckau, Borna, Groitzsch, Altenburg, Schmolln, Krymitzschau, Werda, and Ronneberg; as also the Vogtland and the bishops of Meissen, Naumburg, and Merseburg; together with all the abbots, prelates, and their foundations, palaces, towns, markets, &c. Now

Now though all the Ofterlande towns are not mentioned in this place, yet fuch occur as will fuffice to shew us the limits between it and the Meissen. Thus the Oserland reached from the Saale not quite to the Mulde, there being a tract on the west shore of that river, about a mile in breadth, which is still reckoned in the Meisznerlande. See S. M. I. F. R's. Differtation on the Ofterlande, published in Kreysig's Supplement to the History of the Electoral Saxon Countries, T. iii. p. 69, feq. In succeeding and more modern times the hitherto described Osterland was reckoned as belonging to the marggravate of Meislen, and according to this limitation, or extent, the marggravate terminates on Lusatia, Bekemia, Francenia, Thuringia, the principality of Anhalt, and the electoral circle, being indeed at this day for the most part in the hands of the electoral house of Saxony, but is also some of it in the possession of the Ernestine line of the house of Saxony, the Counts of Reuffen, and the Marggraves of Brandenburg-Culmbach. The greatest share which belongs to the electoral Saxin, and of which we shall here treat, is to be seen in §. 6.

- §. 3. The natural productions, manufactures, and works, mentioned above (§. 3, and 7.) in the general introduction to the electorate of Saxony, are for the most part to be found in this excellent country; in particular the important minerals, and that which is prepared from them. The rivers by which it is watered have also been described there:
- §. 4. We know of no elder Marggrave of Meissen with any degree of certainty than Rigda, who lived about the year 980 under the Emperor Otto II. To him succeeded Eckard I. to this last his brother Guncelin; afterwards Hermann, fon to the foregoing, and next to him Eckard II. brother to this last. On the death of the latter, which happened in 1046, the Emperor Henry conferred the Mark of Meissen on Count Dedo II. fon to Dedo I. Count of Wettin, from whom it came to his fon Henry, and to the son of this last, named Henry the Younger, who died in 1127 without heirs; upon which the Emperor Lotharius made a donation of the marggravate of Meissen to his cousin Conrad, whom he also created Marggrave in Lower Lufatia. This last left the marggravate of Meissien to his eldest fon Otto the Rich, under whom the filver mines at Freyberg were difcovered. To him fucceffively fucceeded his fons Albert and Theodorick, and to this last his youngest fon Henry the Illustrious, who brought the landgravate of Thuringia to his house, and gave it to his eldest son Albert; to his fecond fon Theodorick, Meissen; and to his third fon Frederick, the Osterland. After Theodorick's death Frederick with the bitten Cheek, and elder fon to his elder brother Albert, arrived to be Marggrave of Meissen, but died in 1326, and was succeeded by his son the Marggrave Frederick the Stern, whose son, Frederick the Rigid, propagated this line. Frederick the Warlike, fon to the latter, brought, in 1422, the electorate of Saxony to himself and house. His successors have been described above in the general history of the electorate. §. 5. The

- §. 5. The Elector of Saxony has, indeed, as well on account of the marggravate as the burggravate of Meissen, sued for two separate seats and voices at the council of the Princes of the Empire, but has hitherto been refused.
- §. 6. The marggravate, as far as it belongs to the electoral house of Saxony, comprizes in it the circle of Meissen, together with that of Leipzig, and the foundation of Wurzen, as also the circle of Erzgebirg, the circle of the Vogtland, and that of Neustadt, to which moreover are to be added the foundations of Merseburg and Naumburg-Zeitz. Next follows the more accurate description of it.

The CIRCLE of M E I S S E N.

This circle terminates on that of the electorate, Lusatia and Bohemia, and also on the circles of the Erzgebirg and Leipzig, comprizing in it likewise what formerly constituted the foundation of Meissen. A part of it is very beautifully exhibited in Zurner's charts of the diocete and presecturate of Dresden, as also of the diocese of Grossenbayn. Peter Schenk has engraved both these charts, and Matthew Seutter likewise has copied the first. The circle contains in it forty boroughs, four market-towns, 1393 (or accordding to Hempel's tables only 1049) villages, two hundred and eighty-three immediate vassals, one hundred and eighty-nine mediate ones, and twenty sovereign palaces. To it belong the following presecturates: viz.

I. The four Meisznian prefecturates. In the town of Meissen were formerly several jurisdictions; namely, that of the Marggrave, who was possessed of the center of the citadel; that of the Bishop, who was proprietor of the hindmost part; that of the Burggrave, who possessed the fore part; and that of the Provost of St. Asra. Out of these jurisdictions arose what are called the four presecturates of Meissen, each of which has not a peculiar extent of country subject to its office, but only certain villages which lie scattered up and down. These presecturates are,

1. The hereditary or circle-prefecturate of Meissen, containing in it fifty-five immediate and twenty-five mediate vaffals, with three hundred and twenty-four villages. In it is Meissen, in Latin Misena, a town, seated on the Elbe and the rivulets of Triebisch and Meise, which pour themselves into it, from the last of which also it takes its name. It stands partly on mountains, partly in the valley, and belongs to the greater selection of the towns, being under immediate vassalage, and likewise the seat of the four Misman presecturates, as also of a superintendency, under whose spiritual jurisdiction stand two towns, in which are eight churches, together with twenty-nine motherchurches in the country, four filials, and three chapels, and this again is divided into the circles of Naufladt, Zscheyl, and Zchr. The bishopric here, which was first founded in the year nine hundred and forty-eight, but in the year nine hundred and fixty-eight was fully fettled, and ceded in 1581 by the last bishop thereof, namely, John IX. of Haugwitz to the Elector Augustus, had a confiderable spiritual jurisdiction belonging to it, which was divided into nine archdiaconates. By virtue of a stipulation made with the chapter in 1663, or of an abiding capitulation, an Elector of Saxony, on entering upon his government, is confidered at the same time as postulated bishop of Meissen, renews and confirms the said capitulation, and fuffers himself to be done homage to thereupon. Also according to this capitulation both the Elector and postulated Bishop and the Chapter are to be and continue of the Protestant Lutheran church. Of the estates of the bishopric those only are still remaining to it which constitute the procuracy-prefecturate hereafter to be described. The chapter confits of a provost, a dean, a senior, a chanter, and five canons. The burggravate, which formerly existed here, has also sometimes enjoyed princely dignity. To it belonged a part of the citadel of this place, together with the citadel of Frauenslein, the county of Hartenslein. the feigniory of Wildensels, and a number of villages. By virtue of certain flipulations made with the last Burggraves in the years 1428, 1439, and 1546, it came all gradually to the electoral house, which on account thereof wants a peculiar place and voice at the council of the Princes of the Empire, but has hitherto obtained neither. Of the old citadel here which stands on a mountain, the fore part which belonged to the Burggraves, and the hind part which belonged to the Bishops, are now become ruinous, and the center or marggraval part only still remains, which is otherwise called Albretschsburg, and in this part also is carried on the celebrated manufacture of the excellent Missian porcelane. The former Benedictine cloyster of St. Afra here was converted by Duke Maurice in 1543 into a princely school, called the Afraneum, the number of scholars, who are taught and maintained gratis in which, has been raifed from fixty to one hundred and eighteen. Besides this there is moreover a town-school here called Franciscaneum. The churches in and near the town are the cathedral, in which is the princely burying-vault, the town and parish-church, the cloyster or Franciscan church, the church of St. Afra near the provincial school, and three burying-churches belonging to the head church of St. Afra, which has many others united with it both in the town and country, and together with the provincial school stands immediately under the upper confiftory at Drefden. At this place also is a manufactory of cloth. The first foundation of this town was began by King Henry I. about the year 930. In the year 1545 Duke Maurice eftablished a consistory here, which was removed by the Elector Augustus in 1580 to Drefden. It is true that the Elector Christian I. again erected a confistory here in 1588, but in 1606 this was again entirely suppressed. In 1745 the Prussians had their head-quarters and the head-hospital for their fick at this place, and in 1757 they burnt down the ingenious wooden bridge here over the Elbe.

In this tract grows also a good wine.

Lommatszch, commonly called Lumtszch, a small town seated on the Jukne, and under mediate vassalage, but possessed of the hereditary jurisdiction in property, and farming the upper jurisdiction. This town has also a seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. In 1727 and 1730 it suffered great damage by fire.

Riessa, a market-town seated on the Elbe, with a nobleman's estate, which arose out of what was formerly a Benedictine nunnery, but at present belongs to the family of Han.

Scharffenberg, a mountain-citadel lying on the Elbe, and belonging to the family of Militiz. In this place is a chapel. It was anciently also an important fortress, and in this tract was a profitable mine of silver.

Under it lies Naustadt, a parochial-village, from which a circle of the Misnian superintendency takes its name.

2. The procuracy-amt of Meissen, which consists of thirty-five villages, and the board-lands or domains of the bishop of Meissen, of which the chapter enjoys a part, and out of which certain stipends are paid for the use of students at Leipzig and Wittenberg.

3. The foundation-amt of Meissen, which confists of twenty-two villages, and belongs to the chapter.

4. The school-amt of Meissen, consisting of forty-two villages, and formerly belonging to the cloyster of St. Afra; but the revenues of it are at present allotted towards the support of the Prince's school at Meissen.

II. The upper prefecturate of Dresden, containing in it forty immediate vaffals, nineteen mediate ones, and one hundred and eighty-one villages. In it is agreeable situation on the river Elbe, on each side of it is situated, and into which the Weiseritz salls at this place. By means of this river several thousand sathons of wood are brought down here from the Gebirge. Drefden is fortissed, and under immediate vassalage, and appertains to the lesser selection of the towns, being the third among the four presiding ones, and also the seat of the high colleges, of which we have treated in the introduction to this electorate. It consists of three parts, of which the two sirst were united in 1550 under one magistracy.

Dresden, the electoral residence town, which is also otherwise called New-Dresden, as having been founded since Old-Dresden, or the present Neustadt, that is to say, first in the year 1020, though in a record bearing date in 1216 it is stilled a town, and thus obtained town-privileges sconer by two hundred years than Old-Drefden. This part lies to the right of the river Elbe, containing in it two market-places, which are called the old and new. The electoral refidentiary palace here is an old building, which was erected in the fixteenth century, and after the great damage it fuffered by a fire in 1702, was again rebuilt. In it are divers magnificent apartments, but the principal thing to be observed here is that called the green vault, which vies with the most magnificent and celebrated collections of rarities in Europe. This cabinet lies in the inner court of the palace, and takes its name from the green vault, in which it was at first kept: There are, however, still some green apartments here. It is thought that the Elector Δu gustus made the first beginning towards this collection, since whose time it has been gradually encreased. It is divided into seven apartments; in the first are seen all manner of models of metal statues and bustoes in plaster of Paris; in the fecond is a variety of curious works in ivory; in the third, pure filver work; in the fourth gilt filver plate, and veffels of pure gold; in the fifth, pure precious stones, and curiosities formed out of them; in the fixth the arms of the feveral Saxon countries, the crown, sceptre, and Imperial apple which were used at the royal coronation in Poland, and other pieces; and in the seventh some very rare jewels, &c. In the Zwinger-garden and its fine buildings is feen a cabinet of artificial and another of natural curiofities, which do very great honour to Germany, and in particular to the electorate of Saxony; as also cabinets containing chirurgical, anatomical, physical and mathematical instruments, together with copper-plates and other things worthy to be feen, and likewife the royal library. The other remarkable buildings and regulations in this refidence-city are, the opera-house, the affembly-house, the stables, the outside of which is grand and the inside well contrived, and in which also are contained the electoral picture-gallery, and the armoury; the arfenal, which was stripped by the Prussians in 1756, and under which large building lies the electoral cellar; the palace of the electoral Prince on the Taschenberg, the palace of the other Princes of the royal and electoral house in the Pirna-street; the electoral chanceryoffice, the mint-office, the foundery, the staple of the Milnian porcelane, the court-dispensary, the Turkish garden, which is situated in the plaufireet; the royal foundation for Roman-catholic boys and girls in the same street, the academy for painting, which lies in the Cross-fireet, in what is called the house of our Lady, which was inhabited by the widow of Chriflian I. Count Brubl's palace, standing in Augustus's street, and his gallery of paintings at the rampart; the palace of Prince Lubomirski, the kôtel de Saxe, and other grand palaces and buildings. The churches here are, 1. The church of the Holy Crofs, which is the head church, and at this the superintendent of the diocese of Dresden officiates. That diocese is divided into the circles of Plau, Kaditz, Leubnitz and Radeberg, but in general com-Vol. V. 4 D prizes prizes in it eight boroughs, one market-town, forty-feven mother and fix filial churches in the country. Near this church also stands a Latin school. 2. St. Mary's, or the church of our Lady. 3. Sophia church. 4. The garrifon-church; and 5. The Roman-catholic chapel near the Elbe-bridge, which is a curious piece of architecture. In the suburbs before the Pirnagate lies St. John's church, belonging to the Bohemian community; the correction and orphan-houses, with a church in them, and the large electoral garden containing a palace. In the suburbs before the Wilfdruf-gate are, the churches of St. Anne and St. James, the latter of which stands near an hospital, as also that of St. Bartholomew, likewise standing near a hospital; the Lazar church, the large poor-house, the foundling-house, the great charity-school founded by the merchant Ebrlich, the court kitchen-garden, with the orangery, the Birkenbolz garden, the countels of Moszinska's garden, behind the Burgerwiese; the iron, copper, and silver founderies; the boring-mill, the marble founderies, and the mill for the polishing of glass mirrors.

The Elbe-bridge, which joins this and the following town, is one of the most celebrated in all Germany, being built of pure fine free-stone, standing on very large foundation-blocks, and consisting of seventeen piers and arches. This bridge was on each side widened by King Augustus II. by the erection of a commodious passage and resting-places for foot-passengers. On it stands a gilt crucifix placed on an artificial rock, and over-against it two statues, one of which represents the kingdom of Poland, the other the electorate of Saxony, and between them are neatly engraved, in stone, the royal and electoral arms.

The Neusladt, near Dresden, was otherwise called Old-Dresden, as being older than the soregoing, being indebted for its first rise to a fort sounded there by Charlemagne in the year 808, though it was first raised from a borough to a town in the year 1403. In the market-place here is seen a metal equestrian statue gilt, representing Augustus II. and which was erected in 1736. From hence runs a long walk of lime-trees, which extends quite to the black-gate. The Casern building here is extensive, and serves among other things for the instruction and provision of about a hundred children, containing in it also the anatomical theatre. The hunting-house, the lion-house, in which numbers of wild beasts are kept; the riding-house for the cadets, the electoral college, and in particular, that called the Japan-palace, with the very rich and valuable stock of home and foreign porcelane in it; as also the garden belonging thereto are likewise remarkable. In this part is the church of the three wise men, and a Latin school.

The Friderichstadt at Dresden lies near the residence-town, on the spot on which somethy stood the village of Ostra. This village the Elector Augustus converted into a sarm, and near it the Elector John George II. in the year 1670 sounded a town, which he named Neustadt-Ostra, but King Frederick Augustus II. Friderichstadt; and in 1725 endowed it with a peculiar parish. The electoral farm is still extant. In this part is Count Brukt's summer-palace, together with a walk of trees which begins at the Weiseritz-bridge, and extends quite to what is called the Schaferey, or sheep-cotes.

About the year 1730 the number of houses in Dresden, including the fuburbs, were estimated at about 2500 only, and that of the inhabitants at not much above 40,000, in which number was included the garrison; but in 1755 there were reckoned here about 80,000 men, or according to others 90,000. In this city and its neighbourhood many ingenious and fine manufactures are carried on, and wares made; as namely, fine cloths, ferges, flockings and stuffs, some of which are wholly linen, others mixed with filk; as also knitting manufactures, lace and embroidery, Spanish leather, fine cut glasses in the glass-house at the Weiseritz, mines of mineral, which make blue colour, gold and filver manufactures, &c. In the mirror polishing-mill, before the Wilfdruf-gate, the mirrors which are cast near Senftenberg are polished. Here is also a most ingenious foundery for bells and cannon. In the fawing of marble, as well as the carving of it, in ftatuary, in painting, and in enamelling we find here likewise the most excellent performances and artists. By means of the Elbe too a considerable commerce is carried on here. In 1429, 1491, and 1614 Dresden suffered greatly by fire; and in 1756 it was feized by the Pruffians.

To the town-magistracy here belong the following prefecturates and country-estates; namely,

1. The bridge-amt, which properly belongs to the church of the holycross, and to this amt appertains the villages of Blasewitz, Problis, Obergolis, one half of Seitewitz, Guttersee, and some subjects in the church-village of Possendorf.

2. The Hospital-amt, or prefecturate of St. Maternus, together with the parochial-village of Plauen, from which a circle of the superintendency of Dresden takes its name; as also that of Loschwitz, and the villages of Upper and Lower Hermsdorf, with some subjects in Obergolis and Problis.

- 3. The religion-amt, together with the villages of Tolkewitz and Grune, one half of Seitewitz, some subjects in Mugeln and Meische, and the farmers of Trachau.
- 4. The Leibnitz-amt, together with the parochial-village and estate of Leubnitz, or Leibnitz, from which a circle of the superintendency of Dresden takes its name; as also the villages of Streblen, Goppeln, Gostritz, Torna, Reik, Gomlitz, and some of the inhabitants of Krehs.

2. Pilnitz, an agreeable pleasure-house and manor belonging to the so-vereign lying on the Elbe. This house consists partly of an old citadel and partly of a new building erected in a fine taste by King Augustus II. and ornamented in a grand manner. To it belongs the filial village of Pilnitz, together with the parochial-village of Hosterwitz, which is called a French village, and contains in it thirty houses of an equal height and bigness, for the reception of the King's retinue at such times as the court is at Pilnitz; as also the villages of Upper-Poyritz, Sabrigen, &c.

4 D 2 village,

3. Wilfdruf, or Wilfdorf, an old little town and a nobleman's estate belonging to the family of Schonberg, who have been in possession of it ever fince the year 1442. This town has frequently and particularly in 1744 sustained great loss by fire.

4. Kotschenbroda, a market-town, in the neighbourhood of which grows a pretty good wine.

5. Kesselsorf, a parochial-village, in which in 1745 a very bloody engagement happened between the Saxons, who had entrenched themselves there, and the Prussians, to the disadvantage of the former.

6. The parochial-villages of Wilsebdorf and Lausa, which belong to Count Flemming, and are at present sequestrated to the upper presecturate at Drefden.

7. Čunnersdorf, Grunberg, Upper-Kreyscha, Lockwitz, Lomnitz, Pesterwitz, Schonfeld, Seyfersdorf, Wachau, Weiszig and Weisstrop, all parochial-villages, having noblemen's estates.

III. The prefecturate of DIPPOLDISWALDA contains in it seven immediate, two mediate vaffals, and twenty-eight villages. In it is

1. Dippoldifwalda, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This place lies on the Dippoldifwald Weisseritz, and has for a long time belonged to the samily of Maltitz; but in 1569 or 68, together with the whole right of administration, was again redeemed by the Elector Augustus to the electoral chamber. Dippoldiswalda is a Bohemian fief.

2. Rabenau, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This place formerly in conjunction with its appurtenances constituted a peculiar seigniory. Rabenau is also a Bohemian sief.

3. The noble estates of Reichstadt, Barreuth and Eckersdorf.

IV. The prefecturate of PIRNA, containing in it twenty-seven immediate and twenty-two mediate vassals, together with villages. In it is Pirna, a town under immediate vassalage, and enjoying both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. This town lies on the Elbe, into which at this place the rivulet of Gottleube pours itself. It is the seat of a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the upper and middle circles, and that beyond the Elbe, comprizing in it sitty-one mother-churches and eight filials. Exclusive of the principal and parochial-church here, in this town moreover is the cloyster-church, near which formerly stood a cloyster of Dominicans, and a burying-church. The inhabitants carry on all manner of commerce by means of the river Elbe, and the neighbouring quarries of sand-stone yield here the finest blocks of that stone, which are exported to remote places. Pirna anciently belonged to the bishopric of Meislen, Meissen, of which the Bohemian King, Wenzel II. purchased it in the year 1299; but in 1408 it came to the Marggraves of Meissen, who so early as the thirteenth century were for a long time in possession thereof. This place likewise is a Bohemian sief. On a high rock near it stands Sonnenstein, a fortress, between which and the fortress of Konigstein the Saxon army, consisting of 17500 men, encamped and entrenched itself in the year 1756; but on its endeavouring to pass the Elbe into Bohemia, was compelled by the Prussians, who held it close blocked up at Ebenheit, below Lilienstein, to surrender prisoners of war.

2. Konigstein, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and lying on the Elbe. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. It consists of one hundred and seventy-six houses, and has a good sustian manufacture. The name of a town was first given it in some records bearing date in the year 1460. In 1639 it was reduced to ashes by the Swedes. The next to it, and that too on the high rock beneath which it lies, is

The mountain-fortress of Konigstein. Of this last the first certain account to be found of it bears date in the year 1289. It belonged originally to B_{θ} bemia, but in 1396, King Wenzel mortgaged it, together with Pirna and Lilienstein, to Burkard, otherwise named Stirnad of Winterberg or of Janowicz; foon after, however, it came to the Burggraves of Dobna, and from them to William, Marggrave of Meissen, who stripped them of it, in 1403, as rebellious subjects. Ever fince this it has continued annexed to the marggravate of Meissen as a Bohemian fief. In the year 1425, the old citadel here was destroyed by the Hussites, upon which the rock lay defolate till about the year 1483, when it was conferred on some private people. Duke George, however, refuming it into his possession, founded thereon, in 1516, a Celestine cloyster, which was filled with Monks from Oybin near Zittau; but on the breaking out of the Reformation it was deferted by them. The Elector Christian I. in the year 1589, began to build a fortress on the Konigstein, which his fucceffors, John George I. and John George II. caused to be carried on; and, from the year 1731, was rendered still more complete. The rock on which it stands is perfectly steep, as if rendered so by art, and in many places also has projections in the manner of bastions from whence the fides of the rock may be raked and defended. On the fide towards Dresden its affent is easiest, for which reason it is secured on that part by good works and a triple row of cannon ranged one above another. The fortress can neither be undermined nor raked by shot from the circumjacent mountains, and having in it a well nine hundred Drefden ells deep, the water of which is about eighteen ells high, together with cifterns for collecting the rain and fnow-water, and in case of need a sufficient flock of wood for many years to come; as also fruit-trees, gardens, pastures and land proper for agriculture, large stores of wine and magazines filled with corn, meal and other necessaries sufficient for many years; it is impossiblepossible to reduce it by blockade. It serves not, however, so much for the desence of the country as for a safe retreat to the Sovereign and for the safe keeping of the archives and other things of value. It is so situated, indeed, that it commands the Elbe, and is able to desend the little towns below it. There is always a small garrison here with a commanding officer; and it has likewise a church of its own with a preacher. In the year 1756, it was declared neutral during the war and till such time as peace shall be restored.

3. Dohna, in ancient records called Donyn, Donin, Dona, Dhona and Donau, an open, little town under mediate vassalage and consisting of about one hundred houses. This place lies on the Muglitz and partly also on a hill called the Taschenberg. It enjoys both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, and, exclusive of the principal and parochial-church here, contains moreover a church near the hospital. In the years 1608, 1611, 1663, and likewise at other times, it suffered great damage by fire.

On the mountain-citadel near it are still to be seen some traces of the old burg or fort of Dobna, which was the original seat of the ancient and celebrated Burggraves of that name, who still continue to flourish in the Kingdom of Prussia. The Marggrave William of Meissen deprived them of this fort in the year 1403, and razed it. The Elector of Saxony holds one half of the citadel, with its appurtenances, as a fief of the crown of Behemia.

4. Gottleube, a small mine-town, having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diet, and whose council, on account of the houses in it, is under immediate vassalage; but to its presecturate belong the upper and hereditary jurisdiction. This place is also a Bohemian sief.

5. Berggieszbubel, another small mine-town, under immediate vassalage, and having seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, together with a mine-office. At this place is an acid-spring called the Friderichsbrunn, as also a warm bath known by the appellation of the John George bath.

6. Liebstadt, a small town and citadel, in an agreeable situation in a fine valley, and being a noble estate. This place, after repeated changes of its owners, was purchased, in the year 1751, by the commission-council of Franconia.

7. Barenstein, or Bernstein, a pretty little town, with a citadel belonging to it, lying on the Muglitz, and which, in the year 1734, confisted of fifty-four houses. This place is a Bohemian fies. In 1495, Dr. Peter, of Barenstein, with the consent of Duke William, sounded a market-town near his citadel here, on which Duke George conferred town-privileges. Towards the middle of the seventeenth century, Barenstein came, after a thirty years sequestration, to Wolfgang of Luttichau, but in the century after to Hans Henry of Schonberg, and by virtue of his testament, in 1711, to the Count of Holzendorf. In the years 1622, 1630, 1669, 1723 and 1738, it suffered great damage by fire. Near it is a village of the same name, and here is also a tin-mine.

8. Schmiedeberg on the Weisseritz, a small town and nobleman's estate, belonging in part to the Lord of Bulaw.

9. Weefenstein, or Wesenstein, a village, containing a nobleman's estate and citadel, and belonging to the family of Bunau. The citadel has a chapel and preacher of its own. This place is a Behemian fief.

10. Great-Sedliz, a village, with an electoral domain and citadel belonging to it, which is united into one parish with Dobna. The citadel here was constructed on a fine plan by its former owner, Count Augustus Christopher of Wackerbarth, and had a beautiful pleasure-garden likewise erected near it.

11. Zehista, an estate of Count Bruhl's, with a citadel and family-church.

12. Cotta, Langenhennersdorf, Maxen, Ottendorf, Reinhardsgrimma, Robrsdorf and Struppen, all parochial-villages with noblemens estates. Gamig, Zuschendorf, and other noble estates with villages.

13. Between the above-mentioned village of Cotta and the village of Rothwernfdorf, is dug at the Gottleube the finest Pirna sand-stone, which is found extremely proper for the tenderest fort of statuary work, for which purposes alone it is dug.

14. The feigniory of Lauenstein, which is under immediate vassalage, and ever fince the year 1521 has appertained to the noble family of Bunau.

This feigniory comprizes in it,

1. Lauenstein, anciently called Lawenstein, or Lowenstein, a small town. Near it was formerly dug a rich tin and iron-mine; and here has also been discovered a jasper-quarry, which has continued ever since unworked, partly because the jasper in it is too brittle and partly because it defrays not the expence. This place is a Bohemian fief.

2. New-Geyszing, a small town, seated in a valley between mountains, and parted by what is called the Geyszing's-brook from Old-Geyszing, which belongs to the prefecturate of Altenberg in the circle of the Erzgebirg. At this place is a mine-office belonging to the family of Bunau, which has the direction of the tin-mine here.

- 3. A part of the mine-town of Zienwald, which stands on Bobemian ground on the borders of Saxony. One fourth of this place belongs to the Lords of Bunau at Lauenstein and Weesenstein, and has its own mine-lots, which are drawn together in the name of the United Zwitterfeld. A fine tin is dug at this place.
 - 4. The village of Furstenau and the borough of Gottrau.

5. Lobenhayn, a village.

6. Furstenwalde and Rudolphsdorf, both villages.

7. The Oelsengrund.

8. The village of Oelsen.

9. The villages of Breitenau, Bernersdorf and Hennersback. 10. Those of Diettersdorf, Ruckenhayn and Neudorffel.

Rem. The prefecturates of Dippoldifwalda and Pirna are by some reckoned in the circle of the Erzgebirg; but in the account published by Dr. Schrebern of the Electoral, Provincial and Selection Diets, and likewise elsewhere, I find it annexed to the Meisznian circle; for which reason I have also described it under the same.

- V. The prefecturate of Hohenstein and Lohmen contains in it twelve immediate and eleven mediate vassals, together with fifty-five villages. This prefecturate consists of twenty-two united prefecturates, which Duke Maurice exchanged, in the year 1543, with the Lords of Schonburg for the seigniory of Penig and Zschillen, and an overplus of 4000 florins in money. In it is,
- t. Hobenstein, a small town, situated on the borders of Bobemia, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diets. This place consists of upwards of one hundred houses, and the inhabitants maintain themselves principally by spinning and the weaving of linen. In the year 1724, the greatest part of it was burnt down. In it is an old citadel, and Hobenstein is also a Bobemian sief.
- 2. Neufladt, near Hohenstein, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. The inhabitants of this place make great quantities of linen and stockings. Anciently it belonged to the Bishops of Meissen. In the year 1708 it was burnt down, and in 1755, again suffered great damage by fire.

3. Sebnitz, a finall town under mediate vassalage and wholly surrounded by mountains. This place has both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets, and its inhabitants subsist principally by linen-weaving. In it, in particular, is made an excellent striped, variegated silk tick, which is very strong and extremely proper for night-gowns and other uses.

4. Schandau, a fmall town, under mediate vassalage, and lying on the river Elbe. This place has both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diet. The inhabitants employ themselves in spinning linen and woollen yarn, floating timber down to Dresden, and in trading in corn. In the years 1678 and 1704, Schandau suffered great damage by fire.

5. Weblen, or Weblau, a small town, under mediate vassalage, also lying on the river Elbe. This place likewise enjoys both seat and voice at the Provincial Diets. Its church is a filial of the State-church in the village of Weblen, which lies not far from it; and the town is also a Bobenian sec.

6. Lohmen, a borough, anciently belonging to the Bohemian family of Chlomen, or Lohmen, which was possessed in these parts of a considerable tract of country, in which were included Hohenstein, Rathen, Wehlen, Konigstein, Lilienstein and Schreckenstein. This tract extended quite to Dippoldiswalde, but was taken from them, on account of their extortions, by the Marggraves of Msissen, and at first given to the family of the Daube, but afterwards to that of Saalhausen, of whom the Lords of Schonburg purchased it.

7. Lichtenhayn, a parochial-village, formerly a market-town and united with the little town of Schandau here into one parish.

8. Dittersbach, Eschdorf and Ulbersdorf, all parochial-villages and noblemens estates.

9. Rathen, a village, feated on the Elbe, and being a Bohemian fief.

10. Ebenheit, a place confifting of a few houses and lying beneath the rock of Lilienstein, where, in 1756, the capitulation of the Saxon army, at the time of its surrender to the Prussians, was drawn up.

The rock of Lilicnstein is higher than that of Konigstein, lies over against it and had anciently a strong citadel, of which some traces are still to be seen.

VI. The prefecturate of STOLPEN, containing in it seventeen immediate and thirty mediate vasfals, together with eighty villages.

- 1. Bischofswerda, in Latin Episcopi insula, is a town under immediate vassalage, and also possessed of the upper and hereditary jurisdiction. It enjoys likewise both seat and voice at the Provincial Diet. This place lies on the Wesenitz, being situated upon what was formerly a werder, or island, and is also still, exclusive of the above-mentioned river, surrounded with several ponds; among which that of the bishop is the largest. Besides the town-church here it has likewise another for interments. The spiritual jurisdiction of its superintendency is divided into the German and Wendish administration, and comprizes in it three towns, sisteen mother and six silial-churches. Bischofswerda pays only one half of the tax levied upon liquor. It trafficks also in white yarn. The Missian bishop, Benno, in the year 1076, erected this place into a town; and, in 1559, it came by exchange from the bishopric to the marggravate of Meissen.
- 2. Stolpen, a small town, under immediate vassalage and lying on the river Wesenitz. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-diets, and, exclusive of the principal and parochial-church here, contains in it another for interments. On a mountain near it stands a citadel with a church in it the fortistications of which were demolished by the Prussians in the year 1756. Out of this rock too a very hard stone is dug which is used by way of beating-stones for book-binders and gold-beaters, as also for touch-stones. The town itself belonged formerly to the bishopric of Meissen, but, in 1559, the Elector Augustus brought it by exchange to himself. In the year 1632, it was reduced to ashes by the Croats, and, in 1723, it suffered great damage by fire. Hard by it lies Altstadt, a borough, on the site of which anciently stood the town of Jockrym. This place was destroyed, in the year 1429, by the Hussites, and afterwards the present town rebuilt on the spot on which it stood, that Vol. V.

is to fay close to the citadel, for which reason it was called Stolpe; and ever fince that Altstadt has continued an open town.

3. Neufalza, a pretty little town, belonging to the Counts of Hoym, and erected by Job of Salza, with the confent of the Elector, in the year 1668, on Spremberg ground, for the reception of the exiles out of Hungary, Bohemia and Moravia; though at prefent there is not one Bohemian inhabitant in it.

4. Spremberg, a borough, citadel and nobleman's estate, belonging to the Counts of Hoym.

5. Godan, a parochial-village, the church belonging to which was founded in the year 1076. Formerly also it contained an amt-office of the bishop of Meissen.

6. Wilthen, Beyersdorf, Bischdorf, Steinichtwolmsdorf, Putzkau and Upper-

Ottendorf, all parochial-villages with noble estates.

7. Liebenthal, a ruinous citadel, belonging to the bishops of Meissen; and which, together with its appurtenance, constituted a peculiar prefecturate. This citadel is a Bohemian fief.

VII. The prefecturate of RADEBERG, together with that of LAUSZNITZ, containing in them eight immediate, one mediate vallal and twenty-three villages. In these presecturates is,

1. Radeberg, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-diets. This town stands on the river Roder, with a citadel without, and is a Bohemian sief.

2. The Augustusbrunn, fituated about half an hour's distance from this place, is a medicinal-spring which was discovered in the year 1717. Its waters are used both for drinking and bathing.

3. Little-Wolmsdorf, together with Great and Little-Robrsdorf, as also Lichtenberg and Great-Naundorf, are all parochial-villages. In the first of them is a nobleman's estate.

4. Lausznitz, an electoral hunting-seat and citadel, which, in conjunction with its appurtenance, formerly constituted a peculiar prefecturate.

5. Grafenhayn, a manor.

VIII. The prefecturate of Moritzburg, which contains in it three immediate, two mediate vaffals, and thirteen villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Moritzburg, a fine citadel and hunting-seat, erected, in the year 1542, by the Elector Maurice, but which received great improvements from King Augustus II. in 1698. This place was for a long time likewise called Dianenburg. Close by it lies,

2. Eisenberg, a market-town.

3. Nauenkof, a parochial-village with a nobleman's estate.

1X. The prefecturate of Grossenhayn, containing in it fifty-nine immediate, eleven mediate vaffals, and one hundred and feventy-three villages. Among them is,

1. Hayn,

1. Hayn, or Grossenbayn, a town under immediate vassalage and belonging to the wider selection of towns. This place lies on the Roder, and since the great fire which reduced it almost wholly to ashes in the year 1744, has been regularly rebuilt. In it, exclusive of the principal church, stands moreover the Monks church here, together with another, as also a good Latin school. It is likewise the seat of a superintendency, the spiritual jurisdiction of which is divided into the circles of Senstenberg-Finsterwald, Mublberg, Ortrand-Elsterwerd, Zabeltitz and Radeburg-Lampertswald, and comprizes in it eight boroughs, two market-towns, forty-eight mother-churches in the country and thirty-six filials. Here are also some manufactures of cloth, stockings and gloves: and a sine green colour is likewise prepared here, which in foreign countries is known by the name of Saxon green. The citadel which formerly stood here was laid waste, in the year 1540, by fire. The woad-trade likewise flourished much once at this place, it being the staple for that part of it which came out of Thuringia.

2. Ortrand, a small town, under immediate vasialage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diets. This place lies on the river Pulsnitz, Formerly also it contained a citadel and a peculiar amt-office.

3. Elsterwerda, a finall town, fituated on the Black Elster, with a citadel belonging to it, which ever fince the year 1727, has been a fovereign domain. This place is held in fief of the crown of Bobemia.

4. Radeburg, likewise a small town, situated on the Roder, with a citadel in it, and belonging at present to the Princess Sophia Christ. Charl. Frid. Erdmutha of Nassau-Saarbruck, who is also Countess by birth of Erbach.

- 5. Muckenberg, a borough and nobleman's estate, belonging to the family of Lowendal. The church here is a filial of that at Bockwitz. To this nobleman's seat belong five villages. The electoral-house receives it in fief from Bohemia.
- 6. Crakau, in old records called Krocka, a market-town and a nobleman's estate, belonging at present to the Schaffer samily. In the year 1745, this place suffered great damage by fire.

7. Zabeltitz, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate, belonging at prefent to the Counts of Wackerbarth. This place also is a Bohemian a fief.

- 8. Kalkreut, a fovereign manor, containing a stud of horses and a pheasantry.
- 9. Coselitz, Frauenbayn, Glaubitz, Merschwitz, Oelsnitz, Rodern, Saat-bayn, Sacca, Schonfeld, Schassa, Schonfeld, Schassa, Schonfeld, Schassa, Strauch, Walda, all parochial-villages with noble estates. The second, third and seventh of these places are likewise Bohemian siefs.
- 10. Zeithayn, a parochial-village, belonging to the Counts of Wolfersdorf, and famous for the pleasure-camp which King Augustus II. made there in the year 1730, at the expence of five millions of rixdollars. On the spot which is used for this camp and the exercising of the army, are erected six large

large pyramids, and medals have likewise been struck upon it, and a grand representation thereof engraved in copper.

X. The prefecturate of Senftenberg, containing in it three immediate, three mediate valids, and twenty-nine villages. This prefecturate belonged formerly to the Lower-Lufatia and appertained to the family of Polenz, who disposed of it, in the year 1446, to the Elector Frederick, upon which it was added to the marggravate of Meissen. In it is,

1. Senftenberg, a town under immediate vassalage and having both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diets, together with a citadel which is environed with ditches and ramparts. This place is likewise a Bohemian fief.

2. Friderichstal, an electoral manufactory for the making of mirrours which King Augustus II. caused to be built, and in which looking-glasses of an extraordinary size and beauty are made. Some pieces are cast here which are from ninety to one hundred inches big. These mirrours are polished

at Drefden.

XI. The prefecturate of FINSTERWALDA, containing in it feven villages. This prefecturate lies in the Lower-Lusatia, but so early as the fifteenth century was a part of the marggravate of Meissen; and, in the years 1436, 1445 and 1486, came into the divisions of the electoral house. For some time the family of Minkwitz, and after them that of Dieskau, were possessed of this prefecturate; but the latter disposed of it, in 1625, to the Elector John George I. Afterwards it belonged to the Merseburg collateral-line of the electoral house, on the extinction of which it came again to the principal line. In it is Finsterwalda, a small town with a citadel, but formerly bigger, better and more thriving than at prefent. This place is a Bohemian fief.

XII. The prefecturate of MUHLBERG, containing in it eleven immediate; fix mediate vasfals, and forty-nine villages. Among them is,

1. Mullberg, a town, fituated on the Elbe and under immediate vassalage. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-diets. In the old townstands an ancient citadel and a church, and in the new town here is also another church, which serves likewise for interments, and a Latin school. Mullberg, together with its appurtenances, anciently constituted a separate seigniory. Not far from this place, on the heath of Lockau, the Elector folm Frederick, in the year 1547, was vanquished and made prisoner by the Emperor Charles V. This place is also a Bohemian sief.

2. Borfebutz and Schwetitz, two electoral farms.

3. Kreynitz, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate.

XIII. The prefecturate of TORGAU, containing in it twelve immediate and forty-five mediate vaifals, with fixty-eight villages. In it we shall remark,

1. Torgau, a town under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the lesser selection of towns. This place lies on the Elbe, from which, in the year 1756, at the command of the King of Prussa, a ditch was carried round it and the town itself also fortified. It is the seat of a superintendency, contains in it two churches, a priory and an orphan-house, in which is a church, as also a Latin school and manusactures of cloth, velvet and silk. The fine citadel of Hortenfels, which stands without the town, has a separate church of its own. Torgau was anciently the head place of a peculiar seigniory, which passed in fief from the Electors of Saxony of the Ascanian line. In the year 1530, the seventeen Torgau articles of the Protestant doctrine were presented at this place to the Elector John; and, in 1576, the Torgau writing was made here, out of the Swabian Concordat and the Maulbrun Formula; from which writing, the year following, the Formula Concordice was drawn up at Kloster-Bergen. In the year 1745, the Prussians passed the Elbe here; in 1756 they fixed their military directorium at this place; and, in 1757, for the security thereof, broke down the ingenious wooden bridge thrown over the Elbe.

2. Schilda, an open little town, under immediate vassalage and having both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diets. This place was erected into a town about the year 1170.

3. Dommitzsch, a small open town, having both scat and voice at the Land-diets; but the amt-office is possessed of the upper and hereditary jurisdiction over it. At this place likewise is a commandery of the Teutonick order, which belongs to the bailiwick of Saxonv.

4. Belgern, one of the oldest towns in all Meissen and lying on the river Elbe. This place is small, but enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-diets, and the council here is possessed of the upper and hereditary jurisdiction by way of farm. Belgern belonged formerly to the bishopric of Wurzen.

5. Repitz, or Repitz, an electoral stud of horses situated near Torgau.

6. Weydenbayn, a parochial-village with an electoral hunting-feat, lying on the heath of Torgau.

7. Cunzwerda, a sovereign farm.

8. Dorrenteichenbach, Klitzschen, Kobershayn and Rocknitz (a part of the last of which belongs to the foundation of Wurzen) together with Roitzsch, Strellen and Triestewitz (the last of which also in part belongs to the foundation of Schweinitz) as also Troszin, Welsau and Wesznig, all parochial villages with noble estates.

XIV. The prefecturate of OschATZ, containing in it thirty-two immediate, nine mediate vaffals, and ninety-eight villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Ofebatz, in ancient records stilled Otzeck, Ozzek and Ozzets, a town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial Dicts. It lies in a fertile spot, is the seat of a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the upper and lower circle, and extends over sour towns, comprizing in it six churches, forty-one mother-churches in the country and nineteen silials. In this town also are three churches 3. namely, namely, the principal church, the cloyster-church, near which formerly stood a Franciscan cloyster, and that for interments, together with a Latin school. It derives good subdistence as well from agriculture, as cloth-weaving, and several other manufactures. It was probably sounded by the Wends. In a record of the Emperor Henry IV. of 1065, by which it was incorporated with the bishopric of Naumburg, it was at that time called a town. In 1616 it was burnt down, ever since which time a hundred building places have continued empty here.

2. Strebla, a small town and nobleman's estate, belonging to the noble samily of Pflug. This place was anciently a seigniory, the proprietors of which stiled themselves Burggraves, and were likewise Burggraves of Leisznig. The Emperor Henry IV. made a donation of it to the bishopric of Naumburg, and this last in 1238 in sief to the Misnian Marggrave Henry the Illustrious. In 1304 the bishopric disposed of it to the Lords of Ilenburg. In 1370 the Emperor Charles IV. purchased it to the crown of Bohemia, but his son Wenzel conferred it in 1384 on one Otto Pflug a nobleman. The estate here is divided into the Trebnitz and Gorzig share, and the place itself is a Bohemian fief.

3. Dablen a finall town and nobleman's estate, belonging to the Counts of Bunau. In 1304 this town, together with Strebla, was disposed of by bishop Ulrich of Naumburg to the Lords of Ilenburg, but must have reverted again to the bishopric, as Bishop Gerhard sold it in 1367 to the Duke of Polken, Prince of Schweidnitz, and Marggrave of Lusatia. Afterwards it appertained for a considerable time to the samily of Schleiniz, next to Christopher Loosz, who brought it to himself, but ceded it in 1619 to the electoral house in exchange for Stoschitz. After this it became the property of the samily of Doring, and at length devolved by marriage to the house of Bunau.

To it belongs the parochial-village of Schmarrnewitz.

4. Borna, a parochial-village and noble estate, at present belonging to an inhabitant of Starschedel, being incorporated into one parish with it, and lying about a quarter of an hour's distance therefrom.

5. Bornitz, a village and nobleman's estate, belonging to an inhabitant of Schonberg, and remarkable on account of the ancient marggraval Misnian Sewers von Borne, or Burne, who are otherwise called the Burnis, and were possessed either of both, or at least of the last village and estate.

6. Old-Oschatz, Borlen, Canitz, Cavertitz, Groba, Groszbehla, Hoff, Lam perstualda, and Naundorf, all church-villages having noble estates.

$The \ Circle \ of$ $L \ E \ I \ P \ Z \ I \ G.$ With the foundation of Wurzen.

The circle of Leipzig, including the foundation of Wurzen, terminates on the Meifznian and Erzgebirg circles, as also on a part of the dutchy of Altenburg, on the bishoprics of Merseburg and Naumburg-Zeitz, and on the Thuringian and electoral circles. Of the prefecturates belonging to this circle engravings have been published, as namely, that of the circle-amt of Leipzig by P. Schenk the Younger and John George Schreiber; those of the prefecturates of Delitsch and Bitterfeld (belonging to the electoral circle) as also that of Zorbig by the same, and M. Seutter; those of Wurzen, Eilenburg, and Duben, also by Seutter; and those of Colditz, Leisznig, Rocklitz, and the school-amt of Grimma by the same. It contains in it thirty-two towns, one market-town, 1056 (or according to Hempel's tables only 947) villages, two hundred and sourteen immediate and one hundred and fifty mediate vassals, and consists of the following presecturates; namely,

- I. The circle-amt of Leipzig, containing in it forty-one immediate, twenty-five mediate validals, and one hundred and fifty-three villages. In this prefecturate is
- 1. Leipzig, formerly called Lipzk, that is, the place of lime-trees, and in Latin Lipsia, one of the finest and most celebrated towns in all Germany, lying in 51° 22½ of latitude, in a pleasant and fertile plain on the Pleisse. In its neighbourhood are some other rivulets, as namely the Barde, the Elster, and the Luppe. Its circuit indeed is estimated only at 8954 paces; but Leipzig has also some large and well built suburbs, with fine gardens.

Between the town itself and the suburbs a fine walk of lime-trees was laid out in the year 1702, which runs quite round the town. In the town-ditches also are planted mulberry-trees. The streets here, ever since the year 1701, have been provided with upwards of seven hundred lamps; and, since the year 1742 sewers have been erected for the cleansing of them, as also many fine large houses built which look like palaces, and the town itself is populous. It is under immediate vassalage, and in the lesser selection of the towns reckoned the first. It bears also the directorium as well here as among the collective towns at the Provincial Diets, is moreover the seat of the circle-amt, as likewise of the upper aulic-judicatory, of the upper post-office, of an assize, of a commerce-court, of a book-commissariate, of a confiftory, under which stand twenty-three superintendencies; of a superintendency whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the circles of Taucha, Rotha, Delitzseh-Zorbig and Arnstein, and which comprizes in it in general twelve churches lying in five different towns, forty-feven mother-churches in the country, and thirty-five filials. It is likewise the seat of a very flourishing and famous univerfity, which was founded and dedicated in 1409, and confifts of four nations, namely of the Misnian, Saxon, Bavarian or Franconian, and the Polish, and contains in it six colleges; as also of two good Latin schools, namely, those of St. Nicolas and St. Thomas; and likewise of two celebrated focieties, as namely, a German lociety, and another for the encouragement of the liberal arts. Leipzig is also one of the four towns where the contingents of the Empire are paid in; and likewise one of the principal trading towns in all Germany, in as much as it enjoys not only an important foreign trade, but also at its three celebrated fairs, which are kept at Easter, Michaelmas, and the beginning of the new year, carries on a very extensive commerce both in domestic and foreign wares. It is likewife possessed of the staple-right, by virtue of which all staple commodities imported within fifteen German miles round must be unladen here, at least for three days, and offered to fale to fuch of the trading and mercantile people here as are burghers, and then for the first time carried farther, but to be unladen no where elfe.

The Pleissenburg here is a strong citadel on the Pleisse before Peter's-gate, and in it, in 1752, was founded a mint. In a chapel also at the same place the Roman-catholics perform their worthip. In the centre of the town is a spacious and fine market-place, near which also the council-house stands. The exchange near the Ask-market is well built, and the roof of its hall well painted. The cloth-hall here contains likewise the grand councillibrary. The fix colleges of the univerfity are the Pauline-college, in which is the univerfity-library, the anatomical theatre, the convictorium, and the physical-garden, near the Prince's house; the great Prince's college, the little Prince's college, Peter's, or the Jesuit's college, our Lady's college, and the new or red college. The churches here are those of St. Nicolas. St. Thomas, the New church, Peter's church, near which is also a Seminarium Catechetarum, the univerfity-church in the Pauline-college, the church near the correction and orphan-house, St. John's and the hospital-church before the Grimma-gate, as also the Lazaret church before the gate of Ranstadt. The Calvinifis, ever fince the year 170-, have been possessed in the court of the exchequer-house of a large room for the celebration of their public worship, which is performed in French. Mention has already been made of the Roman-catholic chapel. All forts of manfactures are made in this town, gold, filver, filk, wool, and linen yarn being worked here in all manner of stuffs, velvets, stockings, cloths and linen. There are also houses here for the dying of filk, as likewise for the making of tapestry and linnen, and the printing of cotton. Leather and Berlin, or Pruffian blue, &c. are moreover prepared prepared here, and the orphan-house is appropriated to the culture of filk-In Leipzig are computed about twenty booksellers, fifty French and Italian mercantile and trading people, one hundred and fifty wholefale dealers, above two hundred and fifty retailers, and many dealers in cloth. The town itself in all probability received its original from the Sorbenwends. Dithmar, in his chronicle, speaks of it so early as the year 1015, under the title of a town. According to the received opinion it belonged to the bishopric of Merseburg, till Conrad Marggrave of Meissen brought it in 1134 by exchange to himself. In 1519 a theological conference was held here between Dr. Luther and Dr. Eck, and in 1631 another appointed between the Saxon or Lutheran, and the Brandenburg and Hessian, or Calvinist divines. In 1547 this town was befieged in vain by the Elector John Frederick, as also in 1637 by Banner the Swedish general. In 1631 and 1632 it was taken by the Imperialists, and in 1642 by the Swedes. In 1745 and 1756 it was garrisoned by the Prussians, to whom it was obliged to pay very considerable fums of money by way of contribution. The larks, which are caught in great numbers in the neighbourhood of this town, are much noted.

2. Taucha, a small town under immediate vassalage, together with a citadel and a nobleman's estate, ever since the year 1569 have belonged to the council of Leipzig. This town lies on the Barde. In 1750 it lost twenty-two of its best houses by fire. The villages of Graszdorf, Cradefeld, Plofitz and Portitz, which are incorporated into one parish with the church here, appertain also to the council of Leipzig.

3. Rotha, a small town, citadel and nobleman's estate, belonging to the Barons of Friese, and containing two churches.

4. Liebertwolkwitz, a small town, which in the year 1752, on the extinction of the family of Fullen, came by virtue of a marriage with the heiress and daughter of the last owner, to the Counts of Vizthum. At this place, in 1707, the stipulation on account of the Silesian religious freedom, which was concluded at Altranstadt between the Emperor and King Charles XII. of Sweden, was subscribed by that King and the Imperial plenipotentiary Count Wratislaw.

5. Old-Ranstadt, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate, which with some other villages is surrounded by the bishopric of Merseburg, and formerly belonged to the Barons of Friese, but at present appertains to the Cammansch samily. Charles XII. of Sweden in 1706 and 1707 had his head-quarters at this place for almost a whole year, and concluded here in 1706 the well known peace with King Augustus II. and with the Imperial plenipotentiary Count Wratislaw, in 1707, the celebrated stipulation on account of the religious freedom of the Protestant inhabitants of the dutchy of Silesia.

6. Gautzsch, Groszdeuben, Groszpozsna, Groszstadeln, Groszschocher, Gulden Gosza, Knauthayn and Lobnitz (the last of which consists of the court and citadel part) Losznig, Marktkleeberg, Mockau, Oeltzschau, Paunsdorf, Podel-Vol. V.

thal, Stotteritz, Zehmen, Zobicker, Zweynaundorf, all parochial villages with noble estates.

II. The prefecturate of Delitzch, containing in it nineteen mediate vassals and one hundred and twenty-one villages. This prefecturate belonged formerly to the Merseburg collateral line of the electoral house, and comprizes,

1. Delitzsch, or Delitzsch, in Latin Delicium, a town under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the greater selection of the towns. In it is a citadel with a chapel and three churches, namely, one parochial-church, one for interments, and one hospital-church. To the spiritual jurisdiction of the superintendency here belong five churches which lie in three towns, nineteen mother-churches in the country and ten filials. Great quantities of woolen stockings are knit here. In 1527 this place was burnt down, and in 1661 a great part of it was consumed by the same dreadful calamity.

2. Landsberg, a finall town under mediate vassalage, and near which on a high mountain to the east formerly stood the citadel of the Marggraves of Landsberg, at which is still a chapel. The Marggrave Theodorick, who succeeded his father Conrad the Great, in the marggravate of Lulatia and the Ofterland, was the first founder of the fort of Landsberg, and frequently stiled himself only Marggrave thereof. This title, as far as appears from records, was first assumed by him in 1180, and though originally, and that too for a good while, it was merely personal, yet the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria and Charles IV. made no feruple of conferring on the circumjacent country the title of a Marggravate, as appears from records bearing date in 1328, 1329, and 1348. After the death of the abovementioned Marggrave Theodorick, Landsberg with its other countries came to his brother Dedo the Fat, who, as far as is known, did not stile himself from them as his elder brother Conrad did. After his death, which happened in 1210, his hereditary countries descended to his cousin the Marggrave Theodorick of Meissen, who thus also, as well as his son Henry the Il-Instrious obtained the fovereignty over Landsberg. About the same time likewife the family of the Lords of Landsberg began to make a figure, and were for some time perhaps possessed of the fortress of that name. Theodorick, second son to the Marggrave Henry the Illustrious of Meissen, obtained the whole Osterland, and retided constantly at Landsberg, stiling himself likewise no other than Marggrave of Landsberg, which his son and succeffor Frederick the Stammerer also did, and though he inherited likewise the greatest part of Meissen and the Lusatias, yet he retained the Landsberg at the same time in his title. During the troubles between the Landgrave Albert, furnamed the Degenerate, and his fons, Landsberg fell by means not very well known, into strange hands; a Henry, son to John I. descended of the Brandenburg Marggraves of the Ascanian line, stilling himself at that time.

time, namely in the beginning of the fourteenth century, from Landsberg, and likewise residing there and at Sangerhausen. His widow Agnes, sister to the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, refided for a confiderable time in thefe parts, as being her jointure; and Sophia, daughter to them both, was married in 1328 or 1329 to Duke Magnus of Brunswick, who thereby obtained Landsberg, Sangerhausen, and other citadels and places. But in 1347 he disposed of the citadels of Landsberg and Altenhof to the Marggrave Fredederick of Meissen, in 1369 mortgaged Sangerhausen to the Marggraves, and in 1372 ceded it to them. The Marggraves of Meiffen, indeed, bore the mark of Landsberg for some time in their title, but at length dropped it, notwithstanding which, both they, as well as their successors the Electors and Dukes of Saxony, retained the arms thereof, confishing of two bars accure, drawn longitudinally downwards (which bars are also considered as balks and piles) in a field Or. It is to be observed, that Landsberg again lost the title of a marggravate, and was only stilled a noble seigniory; which, according to Horn's conjecture, either arose from hence, namely, that the towns and citadels fituate in the marggravate of Landsberg were again gradually torn from it, and the administration thereof more closely united with the marggravate of Meissen; or that it was done on purpose in order to depress Landsberg, and thereby exalt Meissen, to which last the marggraval dignity was referved.

3. Dobernitz, Freyroda, Gleszien, Golma, Ostrau, Sietzsch, Zschernitz, Zchortau, all parochial-villages with noble estates.

III. The prefecturate of ZORBIG, containing in it fix immediate vasfals and thirteen villages. From the year 1656 to 1738 this prefecturate also belonged to the Merfeburg collateral line of the electoral house of Saxony. In it is,

1. Zorbig, commonly called Little-Zerbst and Zippel-Zerbst, a town under immediate vaffalage, and confisting of about sour hundred and fifty dwelling-houses. To the south-side of it stands a citadel which is separated by a ditch from the town, and contains in it a chapel; and in this citadel Duke Augustus resided from 1692 to 1715, after which his widow and daughter made it their place of residence. Near the citadel is a noble estate under immediate vassalage, and which ever since the year 1562 has belonged to the council. In this town also anciently was a burggravate, and Count Theodorick, of the line of Buzici, which flourished till 982, inherited the castle of Zurbici, or Zorbig, from his parents. In 1518, 1610, 1616 and 1647, this place suffered greatly by fire.

2. Spobren, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate. With the church here is incorporated the estate of Pruffendorf.

3. Quetz, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate belonging to the family of Mollendorf. IV. The

IV. The prefecturate of DUBEN, containing in it four immediate, seven mediate vasfals and ten villages; among which is,

1. Duben, a small town seated on the Mulde, and under immediate vassalage. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-diets. In the year 1710 it suffered greatly by fire.

From it the neighbouring wood takes the name of the Duben-heath, but is also called the heath of Tornau. In this wood is a pitch-house.

Not far from the village of Schwerz, which is incorporated into one parish with Duben, is an alum-work.

2. Sollichau, a parochial-village, with which the villages of Tornau and Schwemfal (in the latter of which is a noble estate) as also that of Durch-wehna, are incorporated into one parish.

3. Gorschlitz, a village, having a noble estate.

V. The prefecturate of EILENBURG, containing in it fourteen immediate eight mediate vassals, and twenty-three villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Eilenburg, or Eulenburg, anciently called Ilenburg, Ileburg, or Ilburg, a town feated between the Mulde and an arm of the fame river called the Mill-ditch, or trench, and under immediate vasfalage. This place belongs to the greater felection of the towns, has three churches, and near it on the other fide of the mill-trench stands an old mountain-citadel. In it too is a superintendency, under whose spiritual jurisdiction are two towns, twenty-three mother-churches in the country, and twenty-one filials. The ancient Lords of Ilburg, who were originally common nobles, but afterwards advanced to the state of Lords, were for a long time vegts, or marggraval amt-headsmen of Eilenburg, but in 1302 and in 1325 became possessed of this town. They likewise acquired to themselves by degrees thirteen other towns, and divers villages; but their estate lies partly in Meissen about the Torgau, Belgern and Mullberg, and partly in the Lower Lusatia, near Dobriling and Sonnewalde. The Marggrave William the One-eyed, purchased the town of Eilenburg, not of the Lords of Ilburg, but of those of Colditz. The last Lord of Ilburg, of the Misnian line, was slain in the battle between King Matthias of Hungary and Duke John of Sagan. The Prussian Lords of Ilburg feem to be descended from Botho the Elder of Ilburg and Lord of Sonnewalde, who lived in the fifteenth century. In 1018, 1384 or 1386, 1435, 1449, and 1533, this town was confumed by fire.

Battauna, a parochial-village belonging to the council of Eilenburg, who purchased it in 1403.

2. Auf dem Berge, which lies before the Leipzig-gate of the town of Eilenburg, is an estate and freehold.

3. Cossa, Niederglauche, Priestablich, Zschepplin, all parochial villages with noble estates.

4. Groitzsch, or Greutsch, a noble estate seated on a mountain on the Mulde, and belonging to the samily of Funk.

• 5. Gruna, a parochial-village and estate belonging to the Baron of Hobenthal, and in which was anciently a celebrated castle of the Sorbenwends. To this estate belongs also the village of Lauszig.

VI. The hereditary prefecturate of GRIMMA, containing in it twenty-four immediate, fourteen mediate vaffals, and ninety-five villages. In this

prefecturate is,

1. Grimma, a town lying on the Mulde, and under immediate vassalage. It enjoys both feat and voice at the Land-Diets, and contains also an old ruinous citadel. Grimma is divided into the Upper and Lower, in each of which is a church, exclusive of another for interments, and the hospital-church of St. George, which lies before the bridge-gate. The Prince's or provincial school here was first founded by the Elector Maurice at Merseburg, but not fucceeding there, was on the 14th of September 1550, opened here. It was fixed in what was formerly the Augustine cloyster, and has a church The number of scholars taught and maintained in it has increafed from feventy to eighty. Of the prefecturate belonging to it a fuller account follows immediately. Besides this, there is also a town-school here. The spiritual jurisdiction of the superintendency at this town lies partly on this fide and partly on the other fide of the Mulde, comprizing in it eight churches which lie in four towns, and forty-eight in the villages. The fublishence of the inhabitants depends, exclusive of the common means, more particularly on wood, cloth and thread; the dealers here in the latter greatly frequent the Leipzig fairs, their thread being exported far and near. This town was the first in all Saxony that imitated the English flannel; and a flannel printing-house has been founded here. The wooden wares, which are floated thither down the Zschoppau and Mulde, must be also unladen and exposed to fale at this place.

2. Nauenhof, an open little town, and a noble estate under immediate vassalage lying on the Barde. This place, ever since the year 1557, has belonged to the family of Ponickau.

3. Brandis, a small town and noble estate under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the samily of Bodenhausen. Ditmar makes mention of it in the year 984. In the thirteenth century it belonged to the samily of Brandis, and after having been possessed by several samilies, came at length, namely, in 1690, to that of Bodenhausen, though at first in part only, but afterwards entirely. In 1637 it was wholly burnt down, and in 1664 and 1696 again suffered great damage by sire.

4. Trebsen on the Mulde, and

5. Nerchau, not far from the same river, are two petty little towns belonging to the noble family of Dieskau.

6. Eicha, a manor of the family of Ponickau, and united into one parish with Albrechtshayn. This place was formerly a cloyster, to which pilgrimages were made.

Altenhayn, Beicha, Belgershayn, Doben, Flosberg, Hohnsted, Otterwisch, Polenz, Pombsen, all parochial villages with noble estates.

VII. The school-amt of Grimma belongs to the Prince's school of Grimma, and comprizes in it,

1. Nimmizsch, Nimtschen, or Nimtsche, a manor seated on the Mulde, about a quarter of an hour's distance from Grimma, and which was formerly a Cistercian nunnery, but in 1555, together with all its incomes, was allotted by the Elector Augustus to the provincial school of Grimma.

2. Great Barda, or Partha, on the Barde, together with Great-Bothen and Hoffgen, all parochial-villages.

3. The villages of Forstgen, Skoriitz, Katitzsch, Schadel and Little-Bothen.

VIII. The prefecturate of MUTSCHEN, containing in it two immediate, one mediate vaffal, and eighteen villages. Among them is,

1. Mutschen, or Mutzschen, a small town under mediate vassalage, and containing a citadel. This place was formerly under the jurisdiction of noble owners, but was purchased of them by the E-ector Augustus. In 1681 it suffered greatly by fire; and in 1723 was wholly burnt down.

The noble estate of Mutschen, which is incorporated in one parish with the church of this little town, is not to be confounded with it.

2. Wermsdorf, a market-town and a hunting-seat. Hard by it lies

3. Hubertsburg, a magnificent pleasure and hunting feat, lying in a pleasant tract, which King Augustus III. as electoral Prince, caused to be built between the years 1721 and 1724.

4. Collmen, or Cullmen, anciently called Cullmitz, a parochial-village and electoral domain lying on the river Collmenberg, at which in 1185, 1198, 1200, 1205, 1218, 1219, 1233, 1254, and 1259 were held some Provincial-Diets under the open sky. The wood bordering on this mountain, which is also covered with timber, and surrounds both that, the village and its fields, is for the conveniency of the par farce hunting, cut through with avenues, one of which extends from the small hunting-seat of Hallaly, which lies at the end of the village, quite to the citadel of Hubertsberg, situate at about one hour's distance therefrom.

5. Mublis, a parochial-village and electoral domain.

IX. The presedurate of Leisznig and Dobeln, containing in it twenty-two immediate, fixteen mediate vassals, and one hundred and nineteen villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Leisznig, in Latin Leisnicium, a town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. It lies on the Freyberg Mulde, and contains in it, exclusive of the town and parish-church, another also for interments, being likewise the seat of a superintendency, to whose spiritual jurish ct on belongs the town itself, together with seven mother-churches in the country and five shials. In this town are mechanics, together gether with manufacturers in cloth, lace, knitted stockings, linen and suftian, as also in hats and combs, and the bleaching of yarn and linen. In the Mulde too is a trap for the catching of salmon. The citadel here is called Mildenslein. Anciently this place had its Burggraves, who became extinct in 1538. The Elector of Saxony answers for this old burggravate to the Empire in one horse and two foot, or twenty florins. In the year 1700 Leisznig was consumed by fire.

2. Dobeln, a town under immediate vaffalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies between two branches of the Freyberg Mulde, and contains in it, exclusive of the town and parish-church, another also for interments, together with a hospital-church. In it are made fine hats, as also good country-cloths, fine linen, damask, and tick. In 1292, 1333, 1430, 1450 and 1523, it was consumed and laid waste by fire. In 1730 it again suffered great damage by the same dreadful calamity. The citadel, which formerly stood here, was the seat of the Lords of Dobeln. Anciently too there was a separate amt-office here.

3. Old-Leisznig, a parocihal-village.

4. Hermsdorf, Rittmitz, Schweta, Zitten and Ziegra, all parochial-villages, with noble estates.

X. The prefecturate of ROCHLITZ, containing in it fifteen immediate, eleven mediate vaffals, and one hundred and thirty villages. Among them is,

- 1. Rochlitz, a town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the Mulde, contains in it above four hundred houses, and to the west, on a high gray rock near it, stands also a citadel. Bochlig is likewise the seat of a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction comprehends under it three towns, ten mother-churches in the country and two filials. It has also three churches, one of which lies near the hospital, together with a burying-place and a good Latin school. In this town too cloths, stuffs, and linen are made. It was anciently the head-place of a county. In 1632 and 1648 it suffered greatly by fire, and in 1681 was wholly burnt down. On the point of the high Rechlitz mountain, or wood, not far from the town, are some excellent stone-quarries, the red stone dug in which is exported far and near; and in these quarries grows also stone-marrow. Marble, jasper, chalcedony, and other beautiful stones are likewise sound here.
- 2. Geithayn, or Geithen, a small town, under immediate vassalage and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. In it are two churches. Not far from hence stands the Wickershayn church, with which a part of what is called the Neumarkt, or suburbs; as also the villages of Wickershayn and Narsdort, are incorporated into one parish.

3. Geringswalda, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. Near it the Lords of Schonburg, whole

whose first feat in Meissen was this little town, founded a cloyster, which is at present a noble estate. Not far also from this little town lies Old-Gering swalda, a village, containing a church; and near it stands the ancient citadel of Furstenwald.

4. Hartha, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. Near this village lies the farm of Stein.

- 5. Waldheim, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and lying on the Zschopa, over which a covered stone-bridge is laid. This place has both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and is also the seat of a superintendency, under whose spiritual jurisdiction stand three churches, lying in two towns, together with five mother-churches in the country and one filial. The building which served formerly as an Augustine monastery was converted, by the Elector Christian I. into a hunting-seat, or citadel, which, in 1716, was allotted and ordered for a correction, poor and orphanhouse; and the citadel-church rendered commodious for the use thereof. Here are likewise some manusactories, and in particular a house for the printing of slannels. In 1684, Waldheim was consumed by fire. The Elector Christian I. purchased this town, in 1588, of the samily of Karlowitz.
- 6. Mitweyda, a small town, under immediate vassalage and lying on the Zschopa. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. In it are some cloth and stuff-manufactures. In 1624 and 1672, it suffered greatly by fire.

7. Konigsfeld, Offa, Schweickershayn, all parochial-villages, having noble estates.

8. Beerwalde, a parochial-village, belonging, together with its citadel and the noble estate of Kriebstein, which is united with it into one parish, to the family of Milkau.

XI. The prefecturate of COLDITZ, containing in it fix immediate, fixteen mediate vaffals, and fixty-nine villages. In this prefecturate we shall remark,

1. Colditz, a town under immediate vassalage, and lying on the river Mulde. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and contains in it likewise an old citadel, near which is a large park and a superintendency, to whose spiritual jurisdiction belong two towns, eleven mother-churches in the country and seven filials. There are numbers of linen-weavers in this place.

In its neighbourhood is made a good foap and fullers-earth; the latter of which is principally used by the cloth-makers.

2. Lauszig, or Lausigk, anciently called also Luzke, a small town under mediate vassalage. Count Wiprecht of Groitsch founded here, in 1105, a Benedictine cloyster. This place was at that time only a village, but so early as the year 1157, was fortified, and endowed with the privilege of holding a market.

3. Collmen,

- 3. Collmen, Leipnitz, and Zschirln, all parochial-villages, having noble estates.
- XII. The prefecturate of Borna, containing in it twenty-feven immediate, the like number of mediate vassals, and one hundred and twenty-five villages. In this prefecturate is,
- 1. Borna, a town under immediate vassalage, and situated between two branches of the river Wiebra. It enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and has two churches belonging to it, one of which lies without the town and is used for a burying place; together with a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into three circles, and comprizes in it three churches lying in two towns, forty-one mother-churches in the country and twelve silals. In the year 1549, this place was reduced to ashes. In 1668, ninety-two houses and eighteen barns were burnt down here; and, in 1750, almost the whole town was destroyed. The family of Von Borna, who were sewers to the Marggraves of Meissen, were possessed of this town till towards the year 1260.

Not far from hence lie the villages of Altstadt-Borna and Wenigen-Borna.

- 2. Frobburg, a small town, citadel and nobleman's estate, lying on the river Wiebra and belonging to the samily of Hardenberg. At this place is made a good pottery-ware. In the year 1719, it suffered great damage by fire.
 - 3. Lobstadt, a small town; and

4. Choren, which is otherwise called Kohren, a borough, both belonging to the family of Einsiedel.

5. Benndorf, Bubendorf, Deutzen, Gnandstein, Great-Hermsdorf, Haynichen, Hobenkirchen, Hopfgarten Kauffungen, Kieritzsch, Kitzscher, Lubschwitz, Molbis, Nenkersdorf, Neukirchen, Priesznitz, Rudigsdorf, Steinbach, Syra, Thierbach, Witznitz, Wolkenburg and Zopen.

XIII. The prefecturate of Pegau, containing in it fixteen immediate, fix mediate vassals, and fixty-seven villages. This prefecturate belonged to the Zeitz collateral line of the electoral house of Saxony; and on the extinction thereof reverted to the latter. In it is,

1. Pegau, a town, under mediate vassalage and lying in a pleasant spot on the river Elster. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. Exclusive too of the principal and parochial-church, here is, moreover, another for interments, together with a Latin school and a superintendency, under whose spiritual jurisdiction are comprized two towns, nine mother-churches in the country and three silials. This place was originally, and even so long as till the year 1090, only a village. The celebrated Count Wiprecht of Groitzsch sounded a Benedictine cloyster here, which was sinished in 1095, and consecrated in 1096. In the same year also Pegauranked as a town, and was made a donation of by Count Wiprecht to the new cloyster, which continued in possession thereof till the year 1307. In 1106, the abbey Vol. V.

was itself rendered immediately subject to the papal see, and by various donations greatly enriched. In 1545, Duke Maurice, with the consent of his brother Duke Augustus, purchased the cloyster of the council of Pegau, together with the buildings and estates thereof, as also the upper and lower jurisdictions, for the sum of 9500 florins. The present amt-house here stands on the spot on which formerly stood the cloyster. In 1644, Pegau was closely besieged by Torstenson the Swedish general.

2. Groitzsch, a small town, situated not far from the Elster, in a pleasant spot between the rivulets of Schwenke and Schnauder, and belonging at present to the samily of Winkler, who are likewise Barons of Schwendendorf. The old Counts of Groitzsch are samous in history, particularly the brave Count Wiprecht, who was also Marggrave of Lusatia and Burggrave of Magdeburg. One half hour's distance from hence lies Alten-Groitzsch, a village, in which formerly was an administration.

3. Schwerzen, a village, feated on the canal near Pegau, and anciently called Schworz. In the year 1084, this place was erected into a town and fortified by Count Wiprecht, but funk again to a village.

4. Audigast, Boblen, Elstertrebnitz, Great-Storkewitz, Medewitzsich and Wiederau, all parochial-villages containing noble estates.

5. The administration of Lobnitz, belonging to the Counts of Werther, and comprizing in it Lobnitz and other villages.

XIV. The foundation amt of Wurzen, containing in it twenty-twoimmediate vassals and seventy-fix villages. The States of the Vogtland circle, in the larger felection, wanting, at the Land-Diet of 1718, to procure to themselves the precedency of the States of the foundation of Wurzen, and maintaining that the circles ought to follow each other without interrup-, tion, and not be separated by the admixture of the States of the foundation; the latter, and in conjunction with them those also of the Leipzig circle, added, by way of reply, that, by virtue of the constant postulation, and the thereby established capitulation and agreement of the foundation of Meissen, they were received in the above manner into the hereditary countries, and were not to be separated from them again; that there was also a gracious order, bearing date in March 17, to be found in the acts of the Diet of 1661, by which the States of the foundation were annexed to the nobility of the Leipzig circle, and consequently to be considered, in this respect, as no other than States of that circle, to the direction of which some also among them had been chosen at different times by the whole circle; and thus they ought to enjoy the like privileges with them, as the province at the nomination of the persons of the larger selection, and the Sovereigns, by the confirmation thereof, had always graciously allowed it, and added. them immediately to the Leipzig circle. The conclusion therefore of these disputes was, that they submitted to the sentence of the lesser selection: upon which that felection decreed, by a majority of voices, that the States of the foundation were, for the alledged reasons, absolutely belonging to the Leipzig circle, and not to be separated therefrom; and consequently ought, together with the latter, to take precedency in the greater felection of the States of the Vogtland and Neultadt circles: and here at length the matter rested. In the narrower selection of the nobility this foundation has the filling up of one place; and in that of the wider, of filling up two.

The foundation has its own regency, which confifts of the captain of the foundation, a chancellor, fix counfellors of the foundation, a fecretary and some clerks, and stands immediately under the privy-council at Dresden. These, in conjunction with the superintendant, form the consistory of the foundation, under which stand twenty-one parish-churches. With respect to other matters, the foundation has its own peculiar amt-man and taxreceiver.

The chapter of Wurzen confifts of a provost, a dean and fix canons.

- 1. Wurzen is a town under immediate vaffalage and lying on the river Mulda. It belongs to the larger felection of towns. Wurzen itself is but small, but the suburbs here are much bigger, and contain in them also the old citadel and the cathedral-church, together with that of St. Wenzelaus and those of the hospital, or burying-ground, as also a Latin school. The beer here is reckoned equal to any in Saxony, and exported in great quantities. We find here also many houses for the dying of cloth; and several fine bleaching-grounds for linen. Knitting too is much practifed here. Under its superintendency stand twenty-one preachers. This town, with its appurtenances, was in old times a county, which the fecond Missian bishop, by name Volkrad, purchased to the bishopric of Meissen. The eleventh bishop of Meissen, by name Herwig, founded, in 1114, a collegiate-church at Wurzen, or the foundation, which is still extant here; which foundation, in 1581, entered into a capitulation with the Elector Augustus; by virtue of which the administration of it was ceded to him; but the further possession of its estates was referved to the canons. The Elector John George I. brought it at the same time with the bishopric of Meissen, namely, in 1653, wholly to his own house; and afterwards enacted, that his fon, John George II. and his fuccessor in the electorate, should possess hereditarily the bishopric of Meissen and the foundation of Wurzen. The canons of the bishopric of Meissen hold their yearly convention at this place. In 1704, Wurzen suffered greatly by fire.
- 2. Falkenhayn, Great-Zschepa, Kunitzsch, Muglenz, Nitzschwitz, Thalwitz and Zschorna, all parochial-villages, containing noblemen's estates.

3. Boblitz, Korlitz, Kubren, Luptitz, Nembtau and Pausitz, all likewise parochial-villages.

4. The noble estates of Adelwitz, Ammelgoszwitz, or Ammeljustewitz, Burkartshayn, Droschkau, Goldhausen, Hobburg, Liebersee, Losse, Martins-4 G 2 kirchen, kirchen, Muhlbach, Puchau, part of Rocknitz, Roitzsch, Sacksendorf, Tausch-witz, Thammenhayn and Vagtskayn.

5. That tract which formerly constituted the prefecturate of Mugeln, and comprizes in it

Mugeln, or New-Mugeln, a finall town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place is mentioned by Ditmar, under the year 984, by the name of Mogelini; and, in 1003, under that of Mogilina urbs. The old citadel here is called Rugethal.

Old-Mugeln, Jahna and Kiebitz, all parochial-villages, together with feveral others.

6. The cloyster-amt of Sornzig, which took its rise out of a Benedictine nunnery, and has belonged, ever fince the year 1665, to the Barons of Burkerstod, as a nobleman's estate. To this cloyster-amt belongs Sornzig, a parochial-village; together with Paschkowitz, a manor and sheep-cote; and eight other places.

The CIRCLE of

E R Z G E B I R G.

F this circle M. Seutter has delineated a chart on two sheets. It terminates on the Leipzig and Misnian circles, as also on Bohemia, the Vogtland and Newstadt circles, the seigniories of Reusz and the principality of Altenburg; and has its name from the mountains here, which are very rich in ore, and in which also it abounds. On the searching and working of this ore and the other minerals here, as well as on some manufactures, the subsistance of the inhabitants depends, as they cannot receive it from agriculture. This circle contains in it, including the seigniories of the Count of Schonburg, fifty-four towns, ten mine and market-towns, seven hundred and sixty-one (or according to Hempel's tables only six hundred and sixty-five) villages, one hundred and twenty-one immediate, and one hundred and forty-two mediate vassals; and consists of the following presecturates: namely,

I. Of the circle amt of Freyberg; which contains in it twenty immediate, feventeen mediate vassals, and seventy-eight villages. In it is,

1. Freyberg, the principal mine-town of the Elector of Saxony, lying on that Mulde, which takes its name from it, and the rivulet of Lusitz, or Munzbach, which after running through the town falls into the Mulde. This town is about 7500 ells in compass, consists of about 2000 houses, and in the year

1725, the number of its inhabitants was esteemed at 60,000. It is environed with a double wall, each of which has towers and out-works to it, but the inner of the two the greatest number. Round it runs also a lined ditch. The circumjacent country is fertile, but the tract about it pretty mountainous. The town itself is under immediate vassalage, and belongs to the leffer felection of towns. It is likewise the seat of the circle-aint and an upper mine-office, which has the direction of the whole Misnian minecircle, as also of all the mines of the country, of a mine-assize, which is appointed by the council, and from which fentences relating to mine-affairs are finally received; of an upper tenth-office, which has the inspection of all other tenth-offices; of a mine-office, which has in particular the inspection of the mine-works; and of a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into two circles, namely, into the first or lower, and into the second or upper; and comprizes in it nine towns, fifty-eight mother-churches in the country and fourteen filials. The citadel of Freudenstein lies not far from the Kreuz-gate, being separated a little from the town and environed with a remarkable deep ditch, as also having a church of its own. The other churches here are the cathedral, which is the principal and head church, together with the electoral burying-chapel near it in which the Electors down from Maurice, and many other princely persons, have been interred; St. Peter's church, St. Nicholas's and that of St. James. Before Peter's gate stands the church of St. John, with a hospital, and St. Bartho*lomew*'s church, having likewife a hofpital. In this town are eleven preachers, including the superintendant. The gymnasium has eight teachers belonging to it, and in it is kept the public library. The filver mine-works here are important and the most profitable in all Meissen. It yields likewise copper, tin and lead. From the year 1529 to 1630, the profits of these mines after deducting all expences, amounted to 3,725,337 florins; and from 1630 to 1708, to 9,10,592 dollars. Freyberg contains also a cannon and bellfoundery; makes thread, fine Lyon lace and lace of Tomback; and near the town is a fulphur and vitriol-house. Its excellent beer is exported to a great distance. In 1318, it obtained the privilege, that all carriers who go to Bohemia should be obliged to expose their wares to public sale, for three whole days, to the Freybergers. The discovery of the silver mines here, in the year 1171, gave occasion to the building of this town, which was done in 1175; at which time the villages of Christiansdorf and Losznitz were joined, erected into one town and furrounded with walls. The greatest fires it has suffered by, were those of 1375, 1386, 1471 and 1484. In 1632, it was besieged and taken by the Imperialists; and, in 1643, briskly cannonaded by the Swedes, but not taken; not to mention other calamities which it has endured by war.

2. Brand, or The Brand, a mine-town, inhabited only by miners, and united into one parish with Erbisdorf.

3. Haynichen, a finall town on the Strignitz, and belonging to the Lord of Schonberg at Wingendorf. This place has frequently suffered great damage by fire.

4. The feigniory of Porschenstein appertains to the Lords of Schonberg, who, in 1429, were invested therewith by the Elector Frederick. The principal places in it are,

Porschenstein, or Purschenstein, a very ancient citadel.

Sayda, a small town, in being in 1289, and having formerly a citadel, which was laid waste in the year 1634. In 1465, the town was entirely destroyed by fire.

Seiffen, a mine-town.

Clausznitz, Kammerswalda and Pfafroda, all parochial-villages.

5. The draining-house of Grunthal, which lies on the Floke. At this place the copper is drained; that is, has the silver separated from it. The residue of it is afterwards refined and forced. Ever since the year 1752, copper coins have also been struck here according to the Polish standard. The Elector Augustus purchased this place, in 1567, of the Uthmanners.

6. Colmnitz, Dorenthal (properly called Dorotheenthal) Granitz, Langenau, Pretzschendorf, Ringenthal and Weissenborn, all parochial-villages with noble estates.

II. The prefecturate of Augustusburg, containing in it fix immediate, twenty-fix mediate vaffals and fifty-four villages. In this prefecturate is,

- 1. Augustusburg, an electoral citadel, seated on a high mountain on the Tscbopa, and standing on the spot on which somerly stood the citadel of Schellenberg, which was pulled down by the Elector Augustus in the year 1567, and the present citadel caused to be built in its stead, and also called after his name. In this citadel is a church. Below it lies,
- 2. Schellenberg, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets.
- 3. Tschopa, or Zschopau, also a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the Tschopa, containing in it a citadel, and was formerly a separate amt of itself. Anciently too it belonged to the seigniory of Wolkenstein. In 1743 and 1750, it was destroyed by fire. Near it lies the above-mentioned smelting-house of Zschopenthal.
- 4. Oederan, or Oedern, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, as also some manufactures of cloth, freeze, slannel and canvas. In the year 1709, this place was wholly consumed by fire; in 1733, half burnt down; and, in 1753, lost by the same dreadful calamity sixty-eight houses and some public buildings.

5. Floba, a parochial-village, feated on the river of that name.

6. Erdmansdorf, also a parochial-village, having a nobleman's estate.

- III. The prefecturate of Chemnitz, containing in it nine immediate, four mediate vaffals, and fifty-one villages. Among them we shall take notice of,
- 1. Chemnitz, or Kennitz, a town under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the lesser selection of towns. This place lies on the river Kennitz, being pretty large, and containing in it a citadel with a church which was a Benedictine cloyster till the year 1548, and lies somewhat distant from the town; as also a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the circles of St. John and St. Nicolas; and comprizes in it six towns, forty-two mother-churches in the country and nineteen silials, together with a good Latin school, and, exclusive of the principal church, another also at the burying-ground, and one near the hospital. Here are likewise many stuff and linen-weavers, and this town has fine bleaching-grounds. In former times it was an Imperial city, but, in 1308, submitted itself to the Marggrave Frederick, at first as Protector, but, in 1312, fully and as Sovereign.

Before the town, on the Huttenberge, stands the church of St. Nicolas, to which that of Old-Chemnitz is a filial.

2. Limbach, Neukirchen and Niederfrohna, all parochial-villages, having noble estates.

IV. The prefecturate of FRANKENBERG, containing in it one immediate, one mediate vaffal, and twenty villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Frankenberg, a town under mediate vaffalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets. This town lies on the Tschopa, confists of about four hundred houses, and the greatest part of its subsistance it receives from the weaving of stuffs, a very good sustian, or dimity, in particular being made here, which manufacture was first brought here out of Brabant in the year 1585. Frankenburg belonged formerly to the Lords of Schonberg, by whom it was disposed of, in 1669, to the Elector John George II. In 1712, it was almost wholly consumed by fire.

2. Sachsenburg, an old mountain-citadel, seated on the Tschopa.

3. Lichtewalde, a village with a fine citadel in it, the property of the Counts of Watzdorf. In this citadel is a chapel.

4. Ebersdorf, a village, containing a small foundation which Margaret, consort to the Elector Frederick II. built at this place after the recovery of her sons Ernest and Albert, who had been knidknapped by Kunzen of Kauffungen.

V. The prefecturate of Nossen, containing in it four immediate, fix mediate vassals, and seventy-three villages. In this prefecturate is,

1. Nossen, a small town under mediate vassalage, and lying on the Freyberg Mulde, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. In this town are numbers of clothiers, as also red and white curriers. On a high rock near it stands a citadel. Nossen belonged formerly to the bishopric of Meissen, and afterwards to the cloyster of Altenzelle.

2. Siebenlehn, commonly called Siebeln, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. Before it stands a forest-court.

3. Ro/zwein, or Ruspen, a small town likewise under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the Freyberg Mulde. In it are numbers of clothiers, fullers, and dyers, and it formerly belonged to the cloyster of Altenzelle.

4. Altenzelle, anciently a rich Cistercian cloyster, seated on the Freyberg Mulde, and in 1548 fecularized.

The stud of Zelle and the cloyster-farm of Kaltenborn are united into one parish with

- 5. Marbach, a fine and large village, divided into the upper, middle, and lower; the latter of which is commonly called the Rosenthal. This village is under the direction of an hereditary judge, whose revenue is considerable.
- 6. Augustusberg, otherwise called Kaseberg, an estate of the Baron of Seiffertitz, incorporated into one parish with Nossen.

VI. The prefecturate of GRYLLENBURG, with THARAND, containing in it three immediate, three mediate vaffals, and thirteen villages. In it is

1. Gryllenburg, or Grillenburg, a citadel and hunting-seat, lying in the wood of Tharand, and built in 1558 by the Elector Augustus.

2. Tharand, an old mountain-citadel, fituated in the Wild Weistritz, and which formerly, together with its appurtenances, constituted a seigniory. Below it lies

3. Granaten, a borough, under mediate vassalage.

4. Braunsdorf, a nobleman's estate; Fordergersdorf, a parochial-village, with which Hintergersdorf is incorporated into one parish; Somsdorf, also a parochial-village, and other villages.

VII. The prefecturate of FRAUENSTEIN, containing in it two immediate, two mediate vassals, and nineteen villages. Among which is

1. Frauenslein, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and lying below a mountain-citadel, which anciently belonged to the burggravate of Meissen, and together with it was disposed of in 1439 by the Burggrave Henry II. to the Elector Frederick II. Upon this the family of Scheinitz became possessed of it for a time, and after them the family of Schonberg. In 1647 the Elector John George I. purchased it again, and erected it and its appurtenances into a presecturate. In 1728 it was wholly consumed by fire.

2. Rechenberg, a market-town and citadel, feated on the Freyberg Mulde, and containing a filial church, being united into one parish with Nassau.

3. Mulda, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate.

VIII. The prefecturate of ALTENBERG, containing in it two immediate, five mediate validals, and twelve villages. In this prefecturate is

1. Altenberg, a little open free mine-town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies near the source of the two little rivers Weisseritz. It contains in it hardly two hundred houses, of which almost one third lie towards the bottom, but the rest stand on an eminence, and are called the New town. The occasion of building this place was owing to the rich tin-mine here, which was discovered in 1458. The tin which this vein yields is reckoned the best next to that of the English and Bohemian. The mine-office here has the inspection of this mine-work. At this place also has been discovered a cement-spring. Great quantities of lace too are wove here. In 1531 almost the whole town was burnt down. In 1576 it suffered a second time by a great fire. In 1639 it was set on fire by the Swedes, and in 1675 the greatest part of it was for the sourch time burnt down.

2. Glaszbutte, a small town, seated in the midst of mountains and eminences, on the river Moglitz, and taking its name from the rich glass-ore which was formerly dug there. This place is under mediate vassalage, but enjoys both the upper and hereditary jurisdiction, and has also both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, being likewise together with Berg-Gicszbubel, the seat of a mine-office. The silver, tin, and iron mines here were formerly more profitable than at present. But the silver-ore as it cannot be worked at this place, is fent to Freyberg to be tried.

3. Old-Geyszing, a small town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place is separated by the rivulet of Geyszing from New-Geyszing in the presecturate of Pirna. The miners here work partly at the Neusange, and partly also and chiefly at the Zinnwalde. In Geyszing's ground are between fix and seven mills, together with three smelting-huts.

4. St. Georgenfeld, a mine-town, which in the year 1671 was erected in the outmost borders of Bohemia, and in 1728 was still further enlarged by the expussion of the Protestant inhabitants out of their shares in the Zinn-walde by their Bohemian Lords of the Roman-catholic persuasion. It constitutes properly one fifth part of the mine-town of Zinnwald.

5. Barenfels, an electoral forest and hunting seat, lying on the Weifseritz.

6. Schellerau, or Neudorf, a parochial-village.

IX. The prefecturate of LAUTERSTEIN, containing in it ten immediate, two mediate vassals, and twenty-five villages, and consisting of the lower part, which formerly constituted the seigniory of Lauterstein, and was obtained by the samily of Berbisdorf of the Burggraves of Leisznig, at first by way of mortgage, but afterwards hereditarily; by which samily the said lower part of it was disposed of in 1559 to the Elector Augustus, who Vol. V.

raised it to a presecturate. In Steinbachen's history of the little town of Zoblitz is to be sound a small land-chart of this presecturate. We shall remark here

1. Lauterslein, a citadel which was laid in ashes in 1639 by the Swedish cavalry, and ever fince that time has lain waste. This citadel was feated on a rock at the conflux of the Red and Black Water. The opposite Burgberg or Old-Lauterslein is still more ancient than it.

2. The farm of Lower-Lauterstein, or that called the Schweiz farm of Neudeck, and the Huttenfeld or Geiselroda.

3. Zoblitz, a finall town, under mediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place confists of one hundred and ten houses, and the inhabitants subsist principally by working the serpent-stone, which is found here, into pitchers, bowls, tea, and coffee-dishes, mortars, cups, writing implements, boxes, pipes, caskets, candle-sticks, snuffers, tobacco-boxes, gaming and defert tables, and other ingenious trinkets; as also by trading in lace, yarn, linen, and the other more common occupations.

The serpent-stone is dug just above the town, and farther on to the east of it is found a red species which is reckoned among the finest, and for that reason is also considered by the Sovereign as his property; together with a yellow, green, brown, gray, and black fort. In the electoral red quarry is also found asbestos of divers colours, together with granates.

4. Rothenthal, an iron-foundery.

5. Olbernhau, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate.

6. The upper part of what was formerly the feigniory of Lauterstein and which the Lords of Berbisdorf are still possessed of. This part contains in it Forchbeim, a parochial-village, which is divided into the upper and lower, and in each of them is a nobleman's estate; Middle-Sayda, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate; Upper and Lower-Sayda, and other villages.

X. The prefecturate of Wolkenstein cum Rauenstein, containing in it fourteen immediate, twenty-eight mediate vassals, and fifty-two villages. In it is

1. Welkenstein, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place stands on a rock on the river Zschopa, and contains a citadel. The town with its appurtenances formerly constituted a seigniory.

The Wolkenstein warm baths, or the bath of our Lady on the Sand, lies in an agreeable valley at about half an hour's distance from this place.

2. Marienberg, a mine-town, under immediate vassalage, and the streets of which are regularly laid out. The silver-mine here was formerly more profitable than at present, but is notwithstanding even yet considerable enough.

enough. Cobalt and iron are likewise found here, and vitriol and fine sulphur prepared, as also fine lace made. The medicinal bath in this town is rendered warm for use. At Marienberg is a mine-office.

3. Annaberg, or St. Annaberg, a mine-town under immediate vassalage, and the seat of a mine-office, as also of a mill-office and a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the Buchholz and Marienberg circles, and comprizes in it eighteen boroughs and mine-towns, twenty-eight mother-churches in the country and eight filials. The occupation of its inhabitants consists partly in mining, but partly also and chiefly in the lacetrade. Not far from the town lies the Schreckenberg, in which are some celebrated silver-mines, and from which also the Schreckenberger, a piece of coin, has received its name. The silver-mines here were so profitable from 1496 to 1500, that in these sources they yielded 124,838 gold guldens in clear gain, and this gave occasion to Duke George to sound this town: But at present their produce is not by a great deal so considerable. In 1731 this town suffered great damage by fire.

About one half hour's distance from it, in what is called the Rosenau, lies the Wiesenbad, which was formerly named Sophienbad, and before that Joh's bath. It belongs, together with the village, to the Count of Watzdorf. Vitriol also is prepared here.

4. Gostadt, Jostadt, or Josephstadt, a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the borders of Bokemia.

5. Buchholz, or St. Catherinenberg by the Buchholz, a small mine-town under immediate vassalage, and likewise having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. At this place considerable quantities of lace-work are made.

6. Geyer, a fmall mine-town under immediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets; as also a mine-office. Near it is a mine of silver and tin; and at this place sulphur, vitriol, alum, and arsenic are likewise prepared.

7. Ebrenfriedersdorf, or Irbersdorf, a small mine-town, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and owing its rise, which began in 1407, to to the neighbouring tin-mines on the Sauberge, but which at present no longer yield any more of that mineral. At this place also is a mine-office.

The stone-quarry of Greiffenstein lies within the jurisdiction of the town, and takes its name from the rough rock of Greiffenstein.

8. Thumb, a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and containing a nobleman's estate. This place enjoys both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and belongs at present to the Lord of Schutz.

9. Lengefeld, a market and mine-town, feated on the Flobe.

10. Rauenstein, a mountain-citadel, belonging at present to the family of Baudis. The Elector Augustus purchased this citadel in 1567 of the samily of Gunterode, and erected it together with its appurtenances into a separate presecturate, but this presecturate in 1596 was united to that of Wolkenstein. Rauenstein is incorporated into one parish with Lengefeld.

4 H 2

11. Drebach, a confiderable mine-town and noble estate belonging to the family of Bunau.

12. Wiefa, an electoral domain and a filial of Schonbrun.

13. Gelenau, Groszkartmansdorf, Tannenberg and Weiszback, all parochial-villages having noble estates.

XI. The prefecturate of STOLBERG, containing in it three immediate and mediate vaffals, and twelve villages. The Elector Augustus purchased this presecturate in 1563 of the samily of Schonberg. In it is,

1. Stolberg, a small town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. In this town reside numbers of clothiers.

2. Niederzwonitz, a parochial-village containing two churches and a nobleman's estate, and belonging to the Lord of Schonberg.

XII. The prefecturate of GRUNHAYN CUM SCHLETTAU, containing three immediate, fourteen mediate vassals, and twenty-eight villages; among which is,

1. Grunkayn, a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and in which formerly stood a considerable Ciflercian abbey for Monks, out of whose se-cularized estates was erected in 1553 the prefecturate of Grunbayn.

2. Elterlein, a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place was purchased to this presecturate in 1559 of the Lord of Hartenslein. In 1717 it sustained great damage by fire.

3. Zwonitz, also a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This town consists of one hundred and seventy hearths, and anciently belonged to the abbey of Grunkayn. In 1708 it was almost entirely consumed by fire.

4. Schlettau, an old little mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the Tschopa, and contains in it a citadel. Formerly it belonged to the abbey of Grunbayn. In 1733 it suffered considerably by fire.

5. Zschoken, a parochial-village and noble estate belonging to the Count of Schonberg, and consisting of one hundred and twenty-four hearths, thirty-two of which belong to Schonberg, and twenty-eight to Solms-

Wildenfels.

XIII. The circle-amt of Schwarzenberg cum Crottenborf, containing in it eight immediate, eleven mediate vaffals, and forty-feven villages.

In this amt or prefecturate is,

1. Schwarzenberg, a very old little town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, as also a mine-office. This place lies on a rivulet called the black-water, and contains a citadel which is built on the point of a high rock, and was anciently called Schwarz-

burg.

burg. The last possessions of the town, and likewise of the seigniory which was named from it, were the samily of Tettau, who disposed of the latter in 1533 in property and hereditarily to the Elector John Frederick for the sum of 126,000 guldens. To it belonged, exclusive of the little town of Schwarzenberg, also Eybenslock and Aue, together with the mine-towns of Gottesgab and Platten, which belong at present to Bohemia, and sourteen villages. In this town and its neighbourhood are several iron-sorges; and the mines here yield both tin and lead. The adjoining sovereign sofil-work yields also all manner of crude and prepared colour-earths.

2. Schneeberg, a mine-town under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the larger selection of towns. In it is a mine-office; and it stands on a mountain not far from the Mulde, being likewise wholly surrounded by mountains. It contains one town and parochial-church, as also a hospital and orphan-house, with a church and a good Latin school. In it are made thread, silk, gold and silver-lace. The silver-mine here, which was discovered in 1471, gave occasion to the building of this town, which in 1479 obtained its right constitution, and in 1481 still greater immunities. In 1543 one hundred and thirty-eight houses were burnt down here.

Schneeberg and its circumjacent territory is famous for its fiver-mines, which on their first discovery yielded unusual profit. In 1477 Duke Albert of Saxony dined in the St. Georgenzeche on a hewn massive block of silver by way of table, out of which were afterwards made four hundred centners of that metal. At present its profits in silver are not great, but much more considerable is the Sovereign's double smalt-work in Oberschlemma, which was formerly a private work, and in the year 1651 was bequeathed by the last possessor, John Burchard, to the then electoral Prince John George II. after which, namely in 1682, the finalt-work at 'Jugel was also removed hither. In this part likewise is Schindler's colour-work on the Mulde; and one German mile from Schneeberg the work of Pfannenstiel, which lies also not far from Schneeberg; together with the Zchopenthal near Tschopau. In these works the finest blue colour or smalt is prepared in the largest quantities, and exported far and near, from cobalt, which must be delivered there at a fixed price out of all parts of the country. These four smalt-works stand first in a general fellowship, or partnership, so that one obtains as much cobalt from the mines as the other, and each also makes the same quantity of colours, only that the fovereign work obtains and again gives out a double delivery. Next the partners of each work are united under a particular fellowship, and maintain at each work their separate factor of accounts for the dividing of the profits, in proportion to their respective shares.

3. Neustadt near Schneeberg, or Neustadtel, a small mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Provincial-Diets.

This place lies in what is called the Sanfte, under a part of the lofty mountain of the Gebirg, or between the middle, Gebirg on the one fide and the Scheibenberg or Widderberg on the other, and confifts of one hundred and thirty estates and houses. The seventeen houses which lie between this little town and the Schneeberg, and join both towns as it were together, are under the jurisdiction of the council of Schneeberg.

4. Eybenstock, a mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, as also a mine-office. This place lies on the Dersback, which runs into the Mulde about a quarter of a German mile's distance below the town. It contains about three hundred and twenty houses. The inhabitants subsist by mining, and trading in lace, which they weave themselves. Of what great importance the former of these articles are to them the experience of latter times may show. In 1748 there were smelted in the territory of this mine-office 393 \frac{1}{2} centners of tin, and 5290 loads of iron-stone landed and measured out, as also eight hundred and twenty loads of refined tin wrought into balls or plates. The true and real origin of the town is not known. That it belonged to the seigniory of Schwarzenberg, and therewith came to the electoral house of Saxony, has been mentioned above under the town of Schwarzenberg. At that time this place was only still a market-town, though it afterwards obtained the privileges of a borough.

With the parochial-church of Ezbenflock are united the following adjoining forges; namely 1. The Muldenhammer, or Windischthal, on the Mulde. 2. The Under-Blauenthal; and 3. The Upper-Blauenthal, both which lie on the Mulde: And 4. The Wildenthal, lying on the Great-Buckau. These constantly deliver many black and white, or tinned iron plates, which are exported in great quantities beyond Leipzig to Hamburg, Amsterdam and London, as also to other places and countries.

For other matters we find in the tract of Eybenflock sometimes also grains of gold, together with amethysts, topazes, opals, aqua marina's, good loadstones, and white transparent quarze.

5. Johann-Georgen Stadt, a town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, as also a mine-office. This place was founded in 1654 by the Protestant-miners, who were driven out of the little Bokemian mine-town of Platten, and was named after the Elector John George I. On the corn which is cultivated near the town the inhabitants would hardly be able to subsist even for a few days, but on the other hand, their breed of cattle here is good, the women weave lace and the men apply themselves to mining. At first tin only was found here, but in 1662 a silver vein was discovered at this place, and upon that a silver-hut established, though at present the silver-ore dug here is delivered in at Freyberg. We also sometimes find here a copper-ore. Its cobalt is delivered in at Schnecherg. Emery also is prepared here; not to mention other minerals which are found at this place.

With

With its church are united,

The forges of Wittichsthal, which were first founded by Caspar Wittich, in the valley hard by the Fastenberge. At this place too white or tinned iron-plates are prepared; together with The glass-house of Jugler.

6. Deutsch-Wiesenthal, so called in contradistinction to Bohmisch-Wiesenthal, from which it is separated by a bound or meer. This place lies on the borders of Bohemia, and is divided into

Under, or Old-Wiefenthal, which is an ancient mine-town containing two forges, and into

Neultadt, or Upper-Wiesenthal, a small mine-town, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. A beginning was made with the building of this place in the year 1526 by Protestant Bohemians. The Lords of Schonburg conferred on it, with Duke George's confent, the first mine immunities. It has one common mine-office with Scheibenberg. The inhabitants subsist chiefly by the mines and forges, and by their traffic in lace. Both places devolved from the Lords of Schonburg to the electoral house of Saxony.

7. Scheibenberg, a small open mine-town under mediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets. The mine-works here yield filver, iron, &c. The town itself has one common mint-office with Upper-Wiefenthal. In 1710 it was almost wholly burnt down.

8. Aue, also a small mine-town under mediate vasialage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place lies on the Mulde, and contains about one hundred and one houses. Not far from it is the white earth-pit, out of which the earth for the Milnian porcelane is dug.

Beyond the Mulde, betwixt this town and the Schneeberg, lies the forge of Auer.

o. Crottendorf, a large parochial-village fituate on the Zschopa, and containing an electoral hunting-house. Much lace is wove here. Formerly, together with its appurtenances, it conflituted a separate presecturate, which the Lords of Schonburg disposed of in 1559 to the Elector Augustus.

10. Carlsteld, a mine-town and forge teated on the river Wiltzsch. This place was first founded in 1678 by Viet Hans Schnorren, and so named after George Charles of Carlowitz.

11. So/a, a mine-town, lying about one hour's diftance from Eybensteck, in a valley through which runs the So/a, and containing in it one hundred fireplaces. Its inhabitants are chiefly miners.

12. Hundshubel, a small mine-town containing a church, which is a filial to that of Barenwalda.

13. Bocka, or Buckau, a mine-town confisting of about one hundred and forty houses.

14. Oberschlemma, a parochial-village of seventy-five fire-places, and joining immediately to the Schneeberg. In this place is the above-described double double electoral smalt-work. To the church here that of Klosterlein, where the Emperor Frederick sounded a cleyster in 1173, is a filial. This place also together with Zella, belongs to the family of Wolfersdorf.

15. Schonheyda, a parochial-village, which is the property of the noble family of Planitz. It has arrived to its very thriving condition by means of the lace, iron-plates and wares fold here. Hard by it lies the foundery of Schonbeyda.

XIV. The prefecturate of Wiesenburg, containing eighteen villages. The Elector John George I. purchased this presecturate in 1618 of the council of Zwickau: But the Elector John George II. sold it again in 1664 to Philip Lewis, Duke of Holsein-Sonderburg, whose line from thence obtained the title of Wiesenburg. Duke Leopold, of Holdstein-Wiesenburg, in whom this line became extinct, sold it again in 1725 to the electoral house. In it is,

1. Wiesenburg, a citadel lying on the Mulde.

2. Kirchberg, a small town of about two hundred houses, and which in the thirty years war suffered great damage by fire. At this place is a manufacture of cloth.

3. Zschorlau, a mine-town seated about half an hour's distance from the Schneeberg, on the rivulet of that name, and containing one hundred and forty dwelling-houses.

With this town are united into one parish Neidhardsthal, not far from the Mulde; a soundery commonly called the Schwefelhutte; the Schindler smaltmill, lying on the Mulde; Albernau, a nobleman's estate and manor; and Burckhardsgrun.

4. Hirschfeld, a parochial-village confisting of eighty-fix dwelling-houses, exclusive of the parsonage and school-house.

5. Schonau, also a parochial-village and manor.

- XV. The prefecturate of ZWICKAU CUM WERDAU, containing in it thirty-fix immediate vasials, twenty mediate ones, and one hundred and twenty-one villages. In it are some pits of stone-coal which lie between Planitz, Bockwa and Wilka, as also some free-stone quarries not far from the coal-shaft of Planitz; marble and lime-stone in the seigniory of Wildenfels; quarries of silver at Weiszbach, and in its territory rock-quarries not far from Zwickau, and in the tract of Planitz. The places to be remarked here are,
- 1. Zwickau, in the oldest records called Zwickowe, but commonly in Latin, through mistake Cygnea, or Cygnavia, a town under immediate vas-falage, and belonging to the narrower selection of towns. It is the last of the four presiding towns, lies on the river Mulde, is one of the largest towns in all Meissen, has a citadel, which is separated from it by a ditch, and is called Osterstein; as also a church which lies in the upper part of the town, together with another in the lower part, and a third in the lower fuburbs,

fuburbs, a good Latin school, in the library belonging to which are above 20,000 volumes, and a superintendency whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into three circles, in which are fifteen boroughs and mine-towns, together with fixty-fix mother and filial churches in the country. At this place is also a manufacture of cloth. They likewise make here great numbers of cards (an instrument indispensably necessary to the several handy-crasses and manufacturers who deal in wool, hair, cotton and flock-filk) as also good fole-leather. The trade carried on here is in these cloths, cards and soleleather, and they traffic likewise in deal, iron, stone-coals, sand-stone, marble, fhiver and corn. The town itself was anciently an Imperial city, but in 1308 chose the Landgrave and Marggrave, Frederick with the bitten Cheek for its protector, upon which it fell entirely under the marggraval fovereignty. In 1530 a mint-office was founded here, which in 1534 was again removed to Schneeberg, and from thence to Drefden. In 1602 a confistory was erected at this place, which is called both the Zwickau and Vogtland confiftory: But this in fix years afterwards was suppressed, and annexed to the confiftory of Leipzig. In 1383 and 1387 Zwickau suffered great damage by fire.

2. Werdau, a finall town under mediate jurisdiction, and which was purchased by the Elector Frederick of the Burggrave of Dobna. This place at first had separate officers of its own, but was afterwards annexed to the presecturate of Zwickau. In 1504 it was entirely burnt down, in 1547 plundered and set on fire, and in 1671, together with the citadel, again consumed by the same dreadful calamity. In it are manufactures both of cloth and stuff.

3. Crimmitzschau, a small town, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and lying on the Pleisse. In this town are manufactures of stuffs and linen, as also a dyery, a flanel and calamanco-printing. Its name has hitherto been found for the first time under the year 1212, at which time a family was fliled from it, which appears to have become extinct towards the close of the 13th century; at least so early as the year 1291 the Lords of Schonburg were in possession of this little town, and in 1414 it was subject to the marggraval fovereignty. In 1430 it was reduced to ashes by the Bohemians. In 1457 it was no longer under the Lords of Schonburg, but under the Lords Reuffen of Plauen. In 1468 it was again wholly burnt down. In 1472 it was no longer in the jurisdiction of the Lords Reussen, but under that of the electoral house of Saxony, which kept its Amt-men, or officers at this place, but foon after mortgaged it, though in 1500 it redeemed it again, and ceded it in 1524, with a right of redemption, to Ekrenfried von Ende; but in 1528 conferred it as an hereditary male-fief on Hans of Weissenbach. In 1583 it came to the family of Einstell, in 1605 to that of Starfchadel, next to the house of Bosen, and afterwards to that of Berbijdorf, which is still in possession thereof.

Vol. V. 4 I 4. Franken-

4. Frankenhausen, Gablenz, Langenhessen, Lauterbach, Lichtenthanna, Marienthal, Mosel, Neumark, Oelsnitz, Planitz, Schonfels, Stangengrun, Steinpleisz, Trinzig, and Ziegelheim, all parochial villages, having noble estates; together with Schweinsburg likewise a noble estate.

5. The feigniory of Wildenfels belonged anciently to the Dynastæ of Wildenfels, who were stilled from it, and were States of the Empire, as also of the circle of Upper-Saxony, but became extinct in 1600: Upon which this electoral Saxon sief devolved to a line of the Counts of Solms-Laubach, which stilled itself from it, and on account thereof belonged to the first class of the electoral Saxon province. The arms of the seigniory are a rose sable, in a field Or. The Elector of Saxony answers for it to the Empire for each Roman month in one horse and two soot, or twenty florins. To it belongs,

Wildenfels, a small town and citadel, standing on a mountain; together with

The parochial-villages of Weiszbach, Hermersdorf, and Reinsdorf, as also twenty-eight houses in that of Zschoken; and likewise the villages of Hartensidorf and Orthmansdorf.

6. The Imperial Counts of Schonburg are, on account of their feigniories, also referred to the prefecturate of Zwickan; but as they more properly belong to the circle-states of Upper-Saxony, I wave the description of their teigniories till we come to the end of that circle.

The CIRCLE of the V O G T L A N D.

HIS circle terminates on that of the Erzgebirg, Bohemia, the principality of Culmbach, and the share of the Counts of Reussen in the Vogtland, and contains in it fifteen towns, and three hundred and twenty-three (or according to Hempel's tables only two hundred and fixty-fix) villages, together with twenty-three immediate, and one hundred and thirty-two mediate vassals.

It comprizes in it that part of the Vogtland which appertains to the electoral house. I shall not however here treat of the Vogtland in general, but below under the share which the Counts of Reussen are still possessed of. This circle, with other countries, was by the testament of the Elector John-George I. conferred on his youngest son Duke Maurice, who was the sounder of the collateral line of Zeitz; but in 1718, after the death of

Duke

Duke Maurice William, came again together with his other countries to the electoral house. To it belong the three following presecturates: viz.

I. The prefecturate of Voigtsberg, containing in it ten immediate, fifty-four mediate vaffals, and one hundred and twenty-feven villages. In this prefecturate is

- 1. Voigtsberg, in some ancient records written Voigtsburg, a mountain-citadel, concerning which it is falsely pretended that it was built long before the birth of Christ, and after the manner of the Romans, whereas it is wholly Gothick. According to the conjecture of some it was first built, as was also Oelsnitz, by the Sorben-Wends, and obtained its present name from the vogts of the Empire. In a writing of 1349, which was addressed to the Emperor Charles IV. by all the vogts of Weyda and Plauen, it is said that both they and their predecessors had been in possession of the citadel of Voigtsberg as an Imperial fies. In 1356 they lost the seigniory of Voigtsberg in the war with the Landgraves of Thuringia, but obtained it again in 1547; though together with Plauen it was again mortgaged in 1560, and also fully ceded in 1569 to the electoral house of Saxony. At the citadel is the seat of the amt-office. Beneath it lies
- 2. Oelfnitz, a town, under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. This place stands on the Elster, and contains in it about three hundred and eighty fire-places and two suburbs, exclusive of the principal church, as also of a hospital church, and another small one for interments, and is likewise the seat of a superintendency, the spiritual jurisdiction belonging to which is divided into the upper and lower circle, and comprizes in it five towns, together with twenty mother churches in the country, and three silials. In the years 1430, 1519, 1632, and 1720, it was wholly destroyed by fire. Oelsnitz has always belonged to the seigniory of the Voigtsberg, and near it in the Elster is a pearl-fishery.

3. Adorf, a small town, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and likewise lying on the Elster. This place too has always belonged to the seigniory of the Voigtsberg. In 1711 it was almost wholly destroyed by fire.

4. Mark-Neukirchen, or simply Neukirchen, in ancient records stiled in Latin Neofanum, a small town, under mediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. The dealers in siddles here travel far and near with their wares. The Barons of Schlick have been for some time past possessed of this place.

5. Schoneck, a finall free town under immediate vassalage, and which only with respect to its woods and the rents arising from what was formerly the Hof-felde, belongs to the prefecturate of the Voigtsberg. It stands on an eminence, and contains about one hundred and thirty little houses, which need not be built larger or increased more in number. The Emperor Charles IV. in the year 1370 conferred on this little town, at that time fubject to him, some very extraordinary immunities, as namely equal privileges and rights with the Bohemian town of Ellnbogen; among which this is chiefly to be remarked, that it pays no exactions to its Sovereigns, but presents them only, when they visit it in person, once a year, in a new wooden bowl, with five pound weight of hellers. This immunity Schoneck enjoys to this day, and it was confirmed to it as well by the Bohemian King Wenzel, as also in 1424 by the Landgrave and Marggrave William, and by all the succeeding Electors of Saxony. But when in 1708 they most humbly presented to their Sovereign and King, as he passed through their town for the first time, a new wooden bowl with hellers; there were found among the latter 6063 pieces, which in value were hardly reckoned equal to tenrixdollars. In 1680 this town was all burnt down excepting a few houses.

4 I 2

1ubject

6. Schadenbeck and Koffel, two villages united into one parish with Adorf, and having town-privileges.

7. Klingenthal, a parochial-village and mine-place, the inhabitants of which are descended from the Protestant Bohemians, who settled there. They are for the most part siddle-makers and miners.

8. Schonberg, Droda, Poffeck, and Bobenneukirchen, all parochial-villages and noble estates, belonging to the family of Reitzenslein. In the first of these places is a good medicinal spring.

9. Bosenbrunn and Triebel, two parochial villages, belonging to the family. of Brandenstein.

Rem. The ministers of Zobern, Krebes, Misslareuth, Wiedersberg, Sachsgrun, and Eichigt, as also of Gefell in the prefecturate of Plauen, are, on account of the dispute between the electoral house of Saxony and the princely house of Brandenburg-Culmbach, stilled the disputed ministers. The Marggrave of Brandenburg-Culmbach, actually exercises the right of patronage over them.

- II. The prefecturate of PLAUEN, containing in it thirteen immediate, feventy-eight mediate vaffals, and one hundred and ninety-one villages. In it is
- I. Plauen, the head town of this circle, and likewise of the electoral Saxon share in the Vogtland, and belonging to the wider selection of towns. It lies on the river Elster, and contains an old citadel, which is called Ratschauer, together with one parish-church, and another for interments, as also a Latin school, and a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the Theuma and Taltitz circles, and contains in it ten towns, twenty-seven mother-churches in the country, and twelve filials. Here are also manufactures of cotton and cloth, and likewise another for cotton-printing. The Teutonick order had formerly a commendary at this place.

Rem. About a quarter of an hour's distance from this town stood anciently the citadel of Dobenau, which now lies quite waste; though there is still extant a small estate of that name. To this citadel belonged a confiderable territory, and to this territory among other places the town of Plauen. The former Counts of Eberstein were in possession of this territory of Dobenau, and invested the noble Lords of Reusen, who were likewise vogts of Plauen, with the town and feigniory of Plauen, and other portions of it. In 1328 Hermann Count of Eberstein, with the consent of his brother Otto, Canon of Hildesheim and Minden, made a stipulation with Henry the Elder, Vogt of Plauen, and his heirs, that both he and they should for the future hold all the then fiefs of Eberstein in the territory of Dobenau, of the Bokemian King John and his successors. This Henry the Elder, Vogt of Plauen, as also his son Henry, had so early as the year 1327 conferred the feigniory of Plauen in fief on the Bohemian King John, at which time to this leigniory were also reckoned the citadels of Lubow, Johannesgrun, Schoneck, Plonfwicz, Stein, Tirbit, and Gansdorf. Planen, was for a long time still the residence of the burggraval line of the Vogts of the Empire; but Henry II. Burggrave of Meissen and Lord of Plauen, engaging in a difficult process with several of his vassals and being thereupon put under the ban, the execution thereof was conferred on the Elector Ernest and Duke Albert of Saxony, who in 1460 took Plauen and in 1466 at last stipulated with the faid Burggrave, as he was again fet free from the ban, that they should retain Plauen, and give him only a sum of money. But the Elector John Frederick being put under the ban of the Empire in the year 1547, Henry V. Burggrave of Meissen, and descended from the Lords of Plauen, again took possession of that place; but after his death his sons mortgaged it in 1550 together with other feigniories, to the Elector Augustus of Saxony, who in 1569 fully purchased both that and the Voigtsberg of them.

2. Elsterberg, a small town, seated on the Elster, and belonging to the Lord of Bunau. This place was anciently a feparate feigniory, which belonged to a family who were filled therefrom, and who likewise as well. as the Counts of Arnshaugh were descended from the Counts of Lobdeburg.

3. Netzschkau, a small town, belonging to the Count of Bose.

4. Mylau, also a small town, belonging to the nobles of Planitz. This place is of great antiquity, inafmuch as together with its appurtenance it was so fully a seigniory, and that so early as the year 1212, that the Emperor Frederick was enabled to invest therewith at the same time with other places Ottocar King of Bokemia. The first possessions stiled themselves from it, and their race continued till the middle of the fixteenth century, but before it became extinct, this feigniory so early as about the year 1364 was already in the hands of the Lords of Reussen, and in the fifteenth century in the possession of the family of Metzsch. From the last it same to the Lords of Bosen, and at length to the nobles of the Planitz.

5. Reichenbach, a town, belonging to the noble family of Metzsch, and containing in it near seven hundred houses, together with two churches and a Latin school, in which are five teachers. Formerly there was also at this place a commendary of the Teutonick order. In the year 1697 a spiritual inspection was erected here, but in 1720 again suppressed. The greatest part of the inhabitants are clothiers, and dealers in cloth; their method of dying here is also held in great esteem, the most beautiful scarlet in the whole electorate being made at this place. In 1681 a fire consumed about one fourth of this town; and in 1720 above five hundred houses, together with all the public buildings, were destroyed by the like dreadful calamity.

6. Lengefeld, or Lengenfeld, a small town, belonging to the nobles of the Planitz, whose inhabitants subsist for the most part by weaving and dealing in cloth.

7. Treuen, or Dreyen, a very ancient little town, belonging to the family of Feilitzsch, and divided into the upper and lower.

8. Auerbach, also a small town, which is the property of the nobles of the Planitz. This place carries on a trade in cloth and iron-wares; the former of which are made here, but the latter at the neighbouring iron-founderies.

These founderies are those of Morgenrothe, Rautenkranz, Thannenbergs-thal, Waldhauser, the Gottberg, Sachsengrund, and Meszinghammer.

9. Falkenslein, a place belonging to the family of the Trutzschler, and which by Marbach, in his description of the petty town of Schoneck, as also by others, is called a small place. In the neighbouring village of Ellseld is an estate, and a forge, as also some brass works. In the territory of the mineamt of Falkenslein in that part called the Wild Wand, which lies about two hours distance from Anerbach, is a quarry of excellent topazes.

10. Mulltrof, a small town, belonging to the Barons of Bodenhausen.

11. Gefell, also a finall town, having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. Over the church here the Marggrave of Brandenburg-Culmbach exercises the right of patronage.

12. Bergen, Closchwitz, Geilsdorf, Josznitz, Irfersgrun, Kurbitz, Leubnitz, Limbach, Neundorf, Plohn, Pohlen, Reuth, Rodau, Rodersdorf, Ruppertsgrun, Schwand, Syrau, and Taltitz, all parochial-villages with noble estates.

III. The prefecturate of PAUSA, containing five villages. In it is

- 1. Pausa, a small town, under immediate vassalage, and having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets.
- 2. The villages of Lind, Upper and Under-Reichenau, as also of Unter-birg, which last is united with the parish-church of Pausa.

3. Eber/grun, a parochial-village.

The CIRCLE of N E U S T A D T.

HIS circle terminates on a part of the circle of the Erzgebirg, as also on the principalities of Altenburg and Saalfeld, and the seigniories of the Counts of Reusz; and comprizes in it the old Gaus or Pagi of Orla and Weyda. In it are feven boroughs, together with two market-towns, and two hundred and twenty-nine (or according to Hempel's tables two hundred and twenty-two) villages, as also seventy-five immediate, and twenty-two mediate vaffals. It is divided into three prefecturates, which in conjunction with the amt of Sachsenburg, constituted the four assured amts, as they are called, which John Frederick II. Duke of Saxe-Gotha was first obliged to mortgage in 1567 to the Elector Augustus, by way of security for the costs laid out on the latter in the execution of the ban of the Empire against him; but afterwards in 1660 he conferred them on Duke Maurice of Saxe-Zeitz, at which time they were also ceded in property by the Ernestine line of the house of Saxony to the electoral house. On the extinction of the line of Zeitz these presecturates came again to the electoral house; and they still enjoy to this very day a separate Imperial matricular evaluation (see p. 536.

I. The prefecturate of Arnshaug with Triptitz, contains in it thirty-nine immediate, eleven mediate vaffals, and one hundred and one villages.

This prefecturate is no part of the Vogtland. In it is

1. Arnshaug, or Arnshaugk, an old citadel, seated on an eminence, and containing a chapel. The former Counts of Arnshaugk, have only been in possession of the upper part of the Gau of Orla. Count Otto, the last of this house, died in the beginning of the sourteenth century, and the Marggrave Albert of Meissen married his widow Adelbeid; and his son the Marggrave Frederick with the bitten Check her daughter, that is to say, his step-mother's, and thereby brought the county of Arnshaug to his house.

2. Neustadt on the Orla, the head town of this circle, being under immediate vassalage, and belonging to the wider selection of towns. In it is a citadel, which Duke Frederick Henry of Saxe-Zeitz built and inhabited; as also two churches, and a superintendency, whose spiritual jurisdiction is divided into the upper and lower circle, and contains in it five boroughs, together with one market-town, thirty-one mother churches in the country, and forty-seven filials. At this place is also a mine-office for the circle of Neustadt.

3. Triptis, a very ancient little town under immediate vassalage, and having both seat and voice at the Land-Diets. In the year 1561 an amt-office was founded here, and to it were annexed sourteen villages. Duke Maurice William of Saxe-Zeitz mortgaged this town for a time to John George, noble Banneret and Baron of Meuschach. The Landgrave Frederick of Thuringia, in the year 1328, invested Henry the Younger, Vogt of Plauen, and his heirs for ever, with the towns of Triptis, Auma, Ziegenruck, and their appurtenances; but the sons of the same Landgrave took possession of them again by sorce of arms.

4. Aume, a small town under immediate vassalage, and lying on the river of the like name. This place has both seat and voice at the Land-Diets, and the council has also purchased the superiority over it. That it belonged for some time to the Vogts of Plauen, has been shown above under Triptis.

- 5. Ranis, a small town and jurisdiction possessed in common by the families of Brandenstein, Breitenbauch, Geyersberg and Brockdorf. The Landgrave William III. purchased the fort and teigniory of Ranis of the Counts of Schwarzenburg, and, in 1465, made a donation thereof to Eberhard of Brandenstein.
- 6. The feigniory of Oppurg, which takes its name from the old citadel of Oppurg which the famous Marggrave Wipretht was possessed of. After his death it descended to William, Count of Arrivary, with all its appurtenances; as, namely, Colba, Positz, Nimritz, &c. This last possession appointed Maurice of Brandenstein, Castellan thereof, to whom he also soon after made a donation of the Wiprecht estates which he had himself purchased. Henry of Brandenstein was invested, in 1354, by the Landgrave Frederick with the citadel of Oppurg, and also obtained leave to surround it with walls and towers: for which reason too, in honour of the said Landgrave, he called it Friedenstein, which name it long bore; but, in 1667, the Brandenstein estates of Oppurg, Crobitz, Grunau and Knau, being all fold, John Albert, Count of Ronov and Bieberfiein, brought them, by purchase, to his family. After him Kay of Rumohr obtained them, who caused the old Friedenstein, which stood on an elevated rock, to be demolished at a great expense (there being above 3000 rixdollarfworth of gunpowder confumed on that occasion) and a new building to be erected in its stead, which was completed in 1705. The daughter and heirefs of this last, namely Anna Sophia, widow to Einfiedel, left Oppurg to her fons, from whom it came, in 1745, to Count Julius Gebbard of Hoym, who has improved both the citadel and the garden. To it belong the parochial-villages of Under and Upper-Oppurg.

7. Braunsdorf, Colba with Positz, Cospoda, Dreitzsch, Gutterlitz, Lemnitz, Moderwitz, Moszbach, Nimritz, Schwarzbach, Wenigenauma and Wernburg, all parochial-villages with noble estates.

8. Weltewitz, also a parochial-village with a sovereign domain estate which was formerly a nunnery.

II. The

- II. The prefecturate of Weyda with Mildenfurt, containing in it thirty-two immediate, fix mediate vasfals, and one hundred and three villages. This prefecturate is a part of the Vegtland. In it is,
- 1. Weyda, a town under immediate vaffalage, and belonging to the wider felection of towns. This place lies not far from the Elster on the Weyda water, which runs through the middle of the town. To the spiritual jurisdiction of the superintendency here belong three towns, in which are the like number of churches, together with fifty-seven mother-churches and nineteen filials in the country. Anciently there stood in this tract on the Veitsberg a citadel and a town named Gifzberg, which was pulled down in the twelfth century and built anew on the other fide of the Elfter, and named from the water Weyda. From this citadel of Gifzberg the ancestors of the Counts of Reuffen originally stiled themselves, having obtained both that and the feigniory belonging thereto by marriage. The Vogts of the Empire likewise remained in possession thereof till the fourteenth century, at which time, in that called the Vogtland war, they fell to the share of the Landgraves of Thuringia. In 1633 and 1756, this town was wholly destroyed by fire. In it are made fine calamancoes and camlets, and at the citadel here has also been established a peculiar privileged manufacture of woollen stuffs, together with a dyery.

2. Berga, an open little town, feated on the Ellter and containing a citadel and nobleman's estate. This place belongs to the family of Watzdorf, and that as well to the line residing at the citadel as also to that at Markersdorf.

3. Munchenbernsdorf, a market-town and noble estate under immediate vassalage to the family of Leubnitz.

4. Wildenfurt, formerly a monastery of Pramonstratenses which Henry the Rich, Lord of the whole Vogtland, founded in 1193; but which at prefent, together with the manors and villages belonging thereto, constitutes an electoral amt-office. Under it is Cronschwitz, in ancient records stiled Cronswitz, or Crunswitz, a village, containing a manor, on which Jutta, consort to Henry the Elder, Vogt of Gera, sounded, in 1239, an Augustine nunnery which has been secularized. All these villages are united into one parish with,

5. Veitsberg, a parochial-village, lying on the Elfler.

6. Burkersdorf, Clodra, Culmitzsch, Endschutz, Friesnitz, Kubdorf, Lindenkreuz, Markersdorf, Steinsdorf, Teichwolframsdorf, Ublersdorf, Wolfersdorf, commonly called Wolsdorf, all parochial-villages, containing noble estates.

III. The prefecturate of ZIEGENRUCK, comprehending in it four immediate, five mediate vassals, and twenty-fix villages. This prefecturate also belongs to the vogtland. In it is,

1. Ziegenruck, a small town under mediate vassalage, and lying on the Saale, as also having both feat and voice at the Land-Diets.

Vol. V. 4 K 2 Gofzitz,

2. Gofzitz, a parochial-village; together with Knau, Liebschutz and Neidenberge, all parochial-villages, having noble estates.

3. Liebengruna, a market-town, the church belonging to which is a filial of that of Liebschutz. In 1718, this place lost seventy-eight dwelling-houses by a fire.

The FOUNDATION of MERSEBURG.

§.1. OF this foundation P. Schenk has engraved a land-chart under the title of A geometrical general draught of the foundation of Merseburg; and, in 1745, published also a new one: both, however, have still their desects.

§. 2. This foundation is environed by the prefecturates of Leipzig and Pegau in the Leipzig circle, as also by those of Weisensels and Freyberg in the circle of Thuringia; by the prefecturate of the like name in the principality of Querfurt; that of Schraplau in the county of Mansfeld, and by the Saal circle of the dutchy of Magdeburg. In its greatest length, which is to be computed from Zwenkau to beyond Deutschenthal, it extends above five miles of 16000 ells each; and in its greatest breadth, which is from Tornau, in the prefecturate of Lutzen, to beyond Kolza in the prefecturate of Schkenditz, three and a half of the like miles.

§. 3. Their agriculture here is very good and confiderable, so that much corn may be exported out of it, which is of particular advantage to the neighbouring Saal circle of the dutchy of Magdeburg. Millet also and great quantities of flax are cultivated here. It contains likewise but sew holts. The rivers and ponds in it yield great numbers and various forts of fish. These rivers are the Saale and the Elsler; the latter of which, as well as its branch the Luppe, falls into the Saale. At Lauchstadt is a medicinal and an acid fpring; and there is also here a salt-spring.

§. 4. In the whole foundation are reckoned feven towns, one borough, two hundred and twelve (or, according to Hempel's tables, two hundred and twenty-five) villages, and feventy-eight noble estates.

§. 5. The Emperor Otto the Great, so early as in the year 955, resolved upon sounding a bishopric in his town of Merseburg, and, in the year 962, he also obtained for that purpose a papal bull, which was confirmed in 967. He was not, however, able to bring this soundation fully to bear till the year 968, when this new bishopric was subjected to the archbishopric of Magdeburg. The Emperor probably ceded to the bishop the hereditary jurisdiction.

jurisdiction over the town of Merseburg; and, in 974, that prelate also obtained the regalia within the same: but at what time the citadel, with its prefecturate, fell to the share of the bishops, is unknown; though that could not happen before the thirteenth century. The fecond bilhop, named Gifiler, who was likewise archbishop of Magdeburg, divided the effates of the bishopric and converted it into an abbey: but the Emperor Henry II. again restored the bishopric in 1007, appointing Wighert archbishop thereof; at which time also the greatest part of the estates which had been torn from it came again to the bithopric. The Marggraves of Meissen have always appropriated to themselves the superiority over it; and, though the Marggrave Frederick refigned it in 1288, and Bishop Sigismund of Lindenau obtained also, in 1541, of the Emperor Charles V. an advantageous rescript, that both he and his bishopric, in his State of Prince, should be left to the freedom and evaluation of the Empire; yet the bishops are considered by the Marggraves and Electors as provincial subjects or vaffals, and have been obliged to own themselves provincial States of Saxony, the bishopric even still to this very day belonging to the first class of the electoral Saxon province and therein to the college of the prelates. In the fixteenth century this bishopric professed the Protestant religion. From the year 1561, Princes of the electoral house of Saxony have been constantly postulated by the chapter as administrators of the bishopric: but the Elector John George I. who, in 1592, was postulated as administrator, and, in 1603, actually entered upon the regency thereof, refigned the administration of it, in 1650, to the chapter, causing his third son, Christian, to be postulated by them as administrator; who also, in 1653, obtained in a great measure the regency of the bishopric; and, in 1656, after his father's death, acquired it entirely, as he did likewise, by virtue of his testament of 1652, the Lower-Lusatia, together with the seigniories of Dobrilug and Finfterwalde, and the prefecturates of Delitzsch, Bitterfeld and Zorbig. Thus this Prince became the founder of the Merseburg collateral line of the electoral house, which line became extinct, in 1738, in the person of Duke Henry; upon which King Augustus III. assumed the regency of the foundation, and by a perpetual capitulation united it for ever to his electoral house.

§. 6. The arms of the foundation are a cross fable in a field Or. The Dukes of Saxe-Merfeburg have also bore the same arms; but at present they remain only in the chancery-seal of the regency of the foundation.

§. 7. This bishopric has indeed been charged with an Imperial matricularevaluation of ten horse and thirty foot, or two hundred and forty storins; but the Elector of Saxony exempts it fine onere.

§. 8. The chapter confifts of pure Protestant Lutheran persons of ancient genuine nobility, and those of fixteen canons major, among whom are fix prelates, and four minor canons. To it belong the villages of Hobentoly.

A K 2

Kotzschen, Leuna, Lindnamsdorf, Poppitz, Prebitz and Rossen. It has also some subjects at Geiselmundorf, Kotzschlitz and Tragarth. To the provost-ship here are annexed the villages of Goblitzsch, Kaja, Meyben, Niederwunsch, Oberklobikau, Sittel and Venenin, as also one half of Atzendorf. It is likewise possessed of subjects at Groszscorlop, Rahna and Zweymen.

§. 9. The foundation has its own regency, together with a peculiar chamber-college and confiftory.

§. 10. The prefecturates into which it is divided are the following:

I. The prefecturate, or kitchen-amt of Merseburg, comprizing in it forty-five villages and nineteen noble estates. In this prefecturate is,

1. Merseburg, in Latin Martisburgum, a town seated in a pleasant tract on the river Saale. Within the liberties of the chapter stands the episcopal palace, together with the cathedral, in which are to be seen, among other things, the metal monument of the Emperor Rudolph of Swabia, his right hand, which he lost in 1080, in the battle against the Emperor Henry IV. and the burying-vault of the Dukes of Saxe-Merseburg; as also the gymna-sium, or soundation-school, the residence of the superintendant of the soundation, the chancery-house, the chapter-house, the curice or abodes of the canons, and other buildings. The town itself has a parish-church of its own, and draws its best subsistance from the strong beer which is brewed here and exported to distant places.

Its suburbs, that is to say the Neumarkt and the Altenburg, stand under the amt-office. Each of these has its own church, and in the latter are also to be found an orphan-house, a water-engine, by means of which the water is conveyed out of the Saale into the palace, the town and suburbs;

the palace-garden, the Jagerhof and the Bauhof.

The ancient county of Merseburg was probably erected by Charlemagne. The Counts have refided in this town, but it belonged as little to them as it did to the prefecturate, they being possessed only of the ban, and at first of some regalia in it. The extent of this county cannot be determined with any degree of certainty. The first Count in Merseburg, of whom we have any certain account, was named Sigfrid, and was Count of this place in the year 932. The last Count, whom we have any tolerable knowledge of, was also named Sigfrid, and died in 1038. What was the fucceeding fate of this county remains still a fecret to this very day. The two last Counts whom we know with any degree of certainty, namely, Burchard and the above-named Sigfrid, at the same time administered the palatine county, to which belonged a confiderable tract of land about Allted, Querfurt and Eiszleben. We likewise find some Burggraves here who were stilled from Merseburg, and whose chief residence was fixed by the Saxon Emperor at the citadel of Merseburg, which, together with the burgward, belonged to them in property.

This town has, in the fourteenth century, and more particularly in 1387; as also in the fifteenth century, suffered by great fires; which calamity likewise befell it in 1662, and in latter times. In 1757, the Austrian and circle-troops burnt the Saal-bridge at this place.

2. The prefecturate-villages here are divided into those situate in the Gestilde, and the Aue. Among them are the parochial-villages of Collenberg and Liebenau, together with a Sovereign's manor, which was formerly a citadel; as also Niederklobikau, Schladebach, Spergau and Wallendorf. The noble parochial-villages which at the same time are possessed of noblemens estates, are those of Frankleben, Geusa, Kreypau, Kriegsted and Nauendorf.

II. The prefecturate of Lutzen, containing in it feventy-two villages and twenty-four noblemens estates. In this prefecturate is,

1. Lutzen, a small town containing a citadel. Near this town, in 1632, happened the samous battle between the Swedes and Imperialists, in which the former got the better, but at the same time lost their great King Gustavus Adolphus. On the spot on which he was found dead nothing more than a bare stone has been erected, which is still to be seen.

2. Mark-Ranstadt, a small town, which, in the year 1707, was for the most part burnt down.

3. Excapt, a borough.

4. Keuschberg, a parochial-village, near which King Henry I. defeated the Hunns in the year 933.

5. Groszgobren, Groszgorschen, Moschwitz, Pissen, Quesitz, Rocken, Skeutbar and Starfiedel, all parochial-villages.

6. Dolitz on the Saale, Eythra, Kotzschau, Pobles and Teuditz, are all noble parochial-villages, having noble estates.

III. The prefecturate of ZWENKAU, which was subjected, in the year 1655, to the officers of Lutzen, one single village only belonging to it. In this prefecturate, however, is,

1. Zwenkau, a small town and citadel lying on the Elser. In the year 1429, the greatest part of this place was reduced to askes by the Huspites.

2. Zeschwitz, a parochial-village.

IV. The prefecturate of SCHKEUDITZ, containing forty-eight villages and twenty-four noblemens estates. In it is,

- 1. Schkeuditz, or Skeuditz, a small town, seated on the Elster, and containing a hunting-house of the Sovereign's, as also an amt-house; but the old citadel which stood here is no longer in being. In this town likewise is a noble estate.
- 2. Breitenfeld, a noble estate and village, belonging to the family of Brosigk, and remarkable for the great battle which happened near it, in the year 1631, to the disadvantage of the Imperial general Tilly, but which is usually called the battle of Leipzig, though sought somewhat above half a German mile from it.

3. Cursdorf, Gundorf, Hanichen and Horburg, the last of which has a fair, together with Roglitz and Ruckmarsdorf, all parochial-villages.

4. Grofzdolzig, Little-Licbenau, Leutzsch, Oberthau, Wehren, Weszmar and Zoschen, all noble parochial-villages, containing noblemens estates.

V. The prefecturate of LAUCHSTADT, comprizing in it twenty-nine villages and eleven noblemens estates. In this presecturate is,

1. Lauchitadt, a small town under immediate vassalage, and containing a citadel and a manor. At this place is a medicinal and an acid spring. In 1631, Lauchstadt was miserably laid waste by the Imperialists. In 1651 and 1701, it sustained great damage by fire.

2. Schaafstadt, also a small town, containing a nobleman's estate belonging to the samily of Lobse. In the year 1670, this place sustained great damage

by fire.

3. The village of Dolitz am Berge, in which is a nobleman's estate and a parish-church; as also that of Holleben, containing a parish-church; Neukirchen, having a nobleman's estate and a parish-church; Upper and Lower-Beichlitz, with a nobleman's estate and a parish-church; Upper and Lower-Deutschenthal, with a parish-church; Passendorf, containing a nobleman's estate, and Schlettau, in which is a parish-church.

The FOUNDATION or BISHOPRIC of N A U M B U R G.

§. 1. OF this bishopric John George Schreiber has delineated and engraved a chart which Homann's heirs republished in 1732. This chart constitutes the fifty-feventh in the Atlas of Germany.

§. 2. It lies partly on the Saale and partly on the Elster, the former part of it being wholly surrounded by the circle of Thuringia, and the latter by the same, as also by the circle of Leipzig, the principality of Altenburg and Count Reusz's seigniory of Gera. Exclusive of good tillage it wants not also the culture of wine.

§. 3. In the whole foundation are five towns and one hundred and forty (or according to Hempel's tables one hundred and twenty-one) villages.

§.4. The Emperor Otto I. founded this bishopric, in the year 968, at Zeitz; and, though in 1029, it is true that the cathedral-church was removed to Naumburg, yet all the canons did not quit Zeitz, but there still remained there a collegiate-church. Julius Pflug, famous for his learning and prudence, who died in the year 1564, was the last bishop hereof, and after him Duke Alexander of Saxony was postulated to be administrator strator of the bithopric, who dying the year following, upon that his father, the Elector Augustus, assumed the administration of it, which the following Electors have also filled up. In the year 1653 the Elector John George I. ceded to his fourth fon, Duke Maurice, the administration of this bishporic under certain restrictions, which administration after his father's death he also fully obtained, and likewise by virtue of his testament, the feigniery of Tautenburg, Frauenpriesznitz, and Lower-Trebra, together with the prefecturates of Voigtsberg, Plauen, Paufa, Triptitz, Arnshaug, Winda, and Ziegenruck; and in like manner also the electoral Saxon share in the princely county of Henneberg, purchasing likewise of his brother, the Elector John George II. the prefecturate of Pegau, and founding the Zeitz collateral line of the electoral house of Saxony. To him succeeded in the regency of the foundation, and likewife in the remaining hereditary countries, his fon, Duke Maurice William, who in 1715 made public profession of the Roman-catholic religion; for which reason by virtue of the stipulation entered into with the Protestant chapter, he became incapable of retaining the bishopric, and therefore refigned it soon after into the hands of the King and Elector Frederick Augustus I. but retained his hereditary countries till his death, which happened in 1718, (before which he made profession again of the Protestant doctrine) and upon that they were taken. into possession by the electoral house. The bishopric of Naumburg, as well as those of Meissen and Merseburg, is united to the electoral house by virtue of a perpetual capitulation.

§. 5. The shield-armorial of this bishopric contains a sword and key, placed crosswife over each other, in a field gules. It is charged, indeed, with an Imperial matricular-evaluation of fix horse and twenty soot, but is exempted by the Elector of Saxony fine onere.

§. 6. The Protestant-chapter of Naumburg confists of twelve capitulars, fix prabendati majores, and four prabendati minores; but the collegiate foundation of Zeitz, which is also Protestant, has seven canons.

§. 7. The foundation belongs to the first class of the electoral Saxon province, and has its own regency, together with a peculiar chamber-college and confistory. The latter of these is filled up by the counsellors of the regency, in whom likewise is vested the choice of the superintendency of the foundation.

§. 8. The towns and prefecturates belonging to it are the following; namely,

I. The town and prefecturate of NAUMBURG. In it is

1. Naumburg, the head-town of the bishopric, lying in a fertile and pleasant tract not far from the Saale, which in these parts receives into it the Unstrut. Naumburg consists

Of the town itself, which stands under the jurisdiction of its council, and contains a small citadel together with three churches and a town-school.

Its yearly fair, which begins on the 29th of July, or on St. Peter and St. Paul, enjoys very confiderable privileges. In the years 1336, 1446, 1457, 1463, 1505, 1517, 1532, 1714, and 1716, this place sustained great damage by fire. To the town belongs the village of Rodichen.

Of the liberty, which comprizes in it the cathedral-church, the cathedral-school, and divers Burghers houses, which stand all together under the jurisdiction of the chapter. Under the jurisdiction of the provossinip is,

Osterfeld, a small town situated betwixt Naumburg and Zeitz.

- 2. The prefecturate of St. Georgenkloster, which has arisen out of the estates of the suppressed Benedictine monastery at St. Georgen, which stood on a little mountain before the town of Naumburg. This monastery was founded in the beginning of the eleventh century, and laid waste in 1532 by a fire, as also in 1547 by the Spaniards, and in 1637 by the Imperialists. On the death of its last abbot the Elector John Frederick caused this cloyster, as well as that of St. Maurice to be seized, upon which the other buildings were pulled down. To its presecturate belong the parochial-villages of Great-Jena (formerly called Deutsch-Jena) Little-Jena formerly called also Wendisch-Tena) Schelstz, or Zschelstz, Niederholzhausen, Zorbau, Kretzschau, Cosseltz, and Abt-Lobnitz.
- 3. The prefecturates of Schonburg and Saaleck, which are united with that of St. George. To the former belongs the parochial-village of Schonburg, as also the village of Possenbayn, in which is a filial-church, &c. To the latter belong the parochial-villages of Saaleck, Lachsted, Little-Heringen and Puntschrau.

II. The town and prefecturate of ZEITZ. In it is

1. Zeitz, in Latin Ciza, a town feated on the Elster, and containing a citadel, which from its founder Duke Moritz, or Maurice, is named the Moritzburg, contains in it one church, and is the feat of the regency of the foundation, the chamber and the confistory. There is also a superintendency in the town, and exclusive of the foundation-church it has likewise three others, together with a foundation-school. In this town too we find a manufacture of cloth.

Not far from hence stood the Benedictine cloyster of Bosau.

Under the jurisdiction of the provostship of Zeitz stands the village of Kretszchau, in which is a parish-church, as also those of Roden, Zeschdorf and Greitschen, all lying in the presecturate of Zeitz; Dobersch, Under-Werschen and Godewitz, situated in that of Weissensless.

2. The prefecturate is divided into four districts, which are,

1. The Profen district, containing in it

The parochial-villages of Drafebwitz, Langenaue and Theifen, as also the village of Profen, &c.

Zangenberg, a parochial-village and noble estate belonging to the samily of Uffel.

2. The Langenderf diffrict, comprizing in it

The parochial-village of Adick, in which is a nobleman's efface, though the place itself belongs in part to the prefecturate of Pegau; as also those of Langendorf, Majnitz, Wuitz, and other villages.

Etzoldshayn, a noble estate belonging to the family of Tumpling.

3. The Zipsendorf diffrict, containing

The parochial villages of Gleina, Lobas, Spora, and Zipfendorf.

Wurgwitz, a nobleman's estate, to which is annexed the hereditary jurisdiction of Stocksdorf, &c.

Wildenborn, a nobleman's estate, possessed of a considerable jurisdiction.

4. The Forst district, which contains in it

The parochial-villages of Great and Little-Porten and Osig.

The noble estates of Geusznitz and Rippicha, both which have parochial-villages annexed to them; as also those of Dragsdorf, Kubndorf, and Silbitz, Crossen, a small town, nobleman's estate and citadel, at present belonging to the Counts of Flemming, and lying on the El/ler.

3. The jurisdiction of Breitingen, which appertains to the family of Bose, and comprizes in it Breitingen, a parochial-village and nobleman's estate.

Regis, a small town, seated on the Pleisse.

The villages of Blumeroda, Hagenest, and Ramsdorf, in which is a parish-church, as also that of Wildenbayn.

III. The prefecturate of HAYNSBURG, in which are the parochial-villages of Haynsburg and Salfitz, containing a nobleman's estate, together with that of Schkauditz.

The MARK of

B R A N D E N B U R G.

§. 1. THE first chart of the Mark was delineated by Elias Camerarius, and inserted by Gerbard Mercator in his Atlas. After him Olius Johannes Gothus delineated another, as well on four sheets as on one, both which were engraved by Blaeuw, Jansson, and Mortier, and likewise by others, though without mentioning the author's name, and that too sometimes with improvements, and sometimes even for the worse, as by Sanson, Jaillot, and Scutter. The Lord of Gundling also has published a chart of the Mark.

Vol. V.

§. 2. To the north it terminates on Mecklenburg and Pomerania, to the east on Poland, to the fouth on Silefia, the Lulatias, the electorate of Saxmy; the principality of Anhalt, and the dutchy of Magdeburg, and to the west also on the dutchy of Magdeburg, and likewise on that of Lunelurg. Its greatest excent, from west to east, namely, from Diesderf to Driefen, amounts to between forty-seven and forty-nine German inites; and its greatest extent, from south to north, to twenty-sour or thirty, according as you measure it, either through Zessen and Straszburg or through Spannerseld and Schievelbein. In other parts its extent every way is very unequal and generally smaller.

§. 3. The Mark, as well as other countries, is not throughout equally fertile. Some tracts in it are very fandy, notwithstanding which these lands, when properly cultivated, yield rye, fmall barley and oats in abundance. and the corn here is thinner shelled than that which grows in a fatter soil. The inhabitants know also how to employ these sand-bottoms to advantage either in vineyards or gardens, or how to plant it with pine-trees, which thrive well in these parts. The Old and the Ucker-Mark, together with the Havelland, the Ruppin circle, and some others, but in particular the Bruckdo fer on the Oder, have a very fruitful bottom, producing wheat, spelt and great barley in plenty. The Mark in general his, under the government of the great King Frederick William, and his still greater fon and successor Frederick II. acquired a quite different form. Agriculture here is univerfally improved, large tracts of waste land have been cultivated, superfluous woods grubbed up, and in those parts villages erected, as also deep and large morasses rendered dry and fruitful. Agriculture, however, is not the principal thing followed in the Mark; for, though on the one hand some corn is exported out of it into the dutchy of Luneburg and Hamburg, yet, on the other hand, it receives again the like quantity out of Pomerania and Silefia. Potatoes are very plentiful at Teltow in the Middle-Mark, and at Freienstein in the Prignitz are cultivated the finall fort of turneps, which are also exported; in the circles of Zauch and Teltow is much millet, buck-wheat and flax; in the Ucker-Mark great quantities of good tobacco; in some tracts the herbs for dying, as crap, woad, and clary. The woods here are of great importance as they furnish the inhabitants not only with fuel for domettic uses but likewise for their glass and iron-houses, charcoal, tar and weed-ashes, large quantities of timber for house and ship-building, which is partly exported to Hamburg, Holland, France and other places; and bring into this country yearly many tons of gold in return. Care also is taken to keep these woods, for the benefit of posterity, in good condition: but its most important subfistance arises from the breeding of cattle, and in particular from the breed of sheep, in as much as by means of their fine wool divers excellent woollen manufactories have been established here. For the improvement also of their breed of sheep, King Frederick II. has caused rams to be imported from Spain and England. The culture likewise of filk is carried on here with good fuccess and is continually increating. The principal minerals in the Mark are a good clay and fine porcelain earth, as also all manner of colour-earths, together with alum near Freienwalde, saltpetre and amber, which are found in different places; and iron-stone. Not far from Freienwalde lies the principal medicinal-spring in it. Of the capital rivers of Germany two run through the Mark, namely, the Elbe and the Oder. The Elbe forms the eastern limits of the Old-Mark, and these of the western the Prignitz, between both which countries it passes, after having quitted the dutchy of Magdeburg. Below Havelberg, and likewife over against Werben, it receives into it the Havel, which rifes in the feigniory of Stargard near the village of Klatzeburg, and below Spandau the Spree, as it comes from Lusatia; Dosse which rises between Meienburg and Pribor, not far from the village of Maffau in the dutchy of Mecklenburg, and other fmall rivers. The Oder comes out of Silefia, runs through the *New*mark, receives into it the Warte as it comes out of Poland, into which, not far from Zantok, the Netze, which also issues out of Poland, pours itself; and into this last the Drage, which arises in the Neumark. It likewise separates the Neumark from the Middle and Ucker-Mark, and then enters into Pomerania, where are also formed many useful canals. That of Plauen shortens the water-passage between Berlin and Magdeburg by about one half, and was carried on, by order of King Frederick II. till finished; that is to say, from June 1, 1743, to June 5, 1745, under the direction of the engineer Mabistre. It begins near Parei on the Elbe, intersects the Ible and the Stremme, having three fluices on it which check the fall of the water out of the Elbe into the Havel, which is twenty-one feet in height, and promote its passage; after which it passes on by Plauen into the Havel. This canal is 8655 perches, or four German miles and a quarter, in length, being beneath generally twenty-two; above, that is to fay, at the furface of the water, twenty-fix, and in some places between forty and fifty, feet broad, with bridges laid over it at nine different places. The Spree and Oder are joined by means of a new canal which was ordered to be cut by the Elector Frederick William, and completed between the years 1662 and 1668. This canal issues out of the Spree into the lake near Mulrose in the Middle-Mark, and from thence runs partly along the Schlubbe, partly through it and into the Oder, being three German miles in length, five Rheinland perches broad and fix feet deep. The Havel and Oder are joined immediately by the canal of Finow. This canal begins at Liebenwalde in the Havel, passes on into the river Fino, or Finow, and below Lower-Fino runs into the Oder. King Frederick II. caused it to be completed between the years 1743 and 1746, and on it are thirteen fluices. The Oder-canal runs out of the Oder from the village of Gustebiese to the presecturate of Neuenhagen, falling again near Wutzo, or about one German mile below 4 L 2 Oderberg Oderberg into the Oder. This canal was opened in 1753. There are also divers inlind lakes here, some of which, in the Middle-Mark, have a communication by means of canals and sluices, which are partly newly done and partly only enlarged. The Elbe and the Oder abound not so much in fish as the Havel, the Spree and several lesser rivers. Some lakes also have no great plenty of them, but others yield abundance of fish.

§. 4. The countries of which the Mark confifts have been peopled by inhabitants from various places. The most ancient of these whom we know with any degree of certainty are the Suevi, in particular that branch of them called the Semnones. The greatest part too of the Wends emigrating in the fifth century, they fettled here; but these last being gradually subdued by the Saxons, most of them again retired. Albert the Bear invited new its inhabitants out of Holland, Seeland, Flanders, and other countries fituate on the German-fea, to come and fettle here and in the neighbouring countries; and these were afterwards joined by others out of the adjacent Upper and Lower-Saxony, nay even out of diffant countries. During the thirty years war, and particularly in 1638 and 1639, the Mark was greatly thinned of inhabitants by the fword, pestilence and famine. The Elector Frederick William invited the French Refugees into his country and conferred upon them confiderable privileges, which privileges were enlarged by King Frederick I. whereby many hundreds of families were prevailed upon to fettle in the Mark. Also so late as since the year 1688, divers Lorrainers and Walloons (the greatest part of the latter of whom had originally settled in the palatinate, for which reason they were called Palatines) as also Swiss, Bobemians and Germans out of other countries were received into the Mark: and thereby the number of inhabitants in it became gradually greatly encreased, infomuch that, till the year 1756, they were estimated at about Soo,coo men.

In the whole Mark are reckoned one hundred and twenty towns, and the number of villages in it appears to be above 2500.

At such times as in the name of the towns, and on public occasions, affairs of general importance are to be discussed, confirmed and subscribed, the head places of the Mark usually observe the following order in giving their voices and likewise in their subscriptions: viz. Brandenburg, Berlin, Koln, Stendal, Prenzlow, Perleberg, Ruppin, Frankfurt and Kustrin. In other respects the towns are divided into immediate and mediate; the former of which are those that stand immediately under the Sovereign and his high colleges, the latter such as stand under sovereign or noble presecturates.

Each Mark has its own province, which confifts of the nobility and the towns, and each province likewise have their director. The general province of the whole Mark of Brandenburg has its provincial-house in the Spandau-freet at Berlin, in which house it assembles. It has also its director and delegates in hides of land, house-taxes, delegates for the new beer-tax, perpetual

perpetual deputies of the whole body of the nobility and of the towns, their provincial treasurer, secretary, receiver, excise-master and clerk. Whenever the nobility and towns are jointly obliged to raised collections, the nobility, by virtue of the receis of 1643, contribute about 410 rixdohars to the 1000, but the towns pay 590. The hereditary marshals of the M. rk of Brandenburg are the Ganses, noble Lords of Putlitz; its hereditary chamberlains, the Counts of Schwerin; its hereditary cup-bearers, the family of Hacken; its hereditary supreme purveyor, the family of Schulenburg; its hereditary sewers, formerly the family of Hiverbeck, but, in 1740, the Counts of Munchow obtained that office; its hereditary treasurers, the family of Schools; and its hereditary rangers, that of Groben.

§. 5. The greatest part of the inhabitants of the Mark profess themselves of the Protestant Lutheran church, the preachers belonging to which are ranged under fixty-nine spiritual inspections, and their heads partly stilled inspectors and partly also provosts. Not only the royal and electoral house, but likewise a considerable part of the inhabitants, profess themselves of this church. The entertained, or refugee Bohemians, have their own peculiar mode of worship and are Roman-catholics. Every inhabitant here enjoys an unrestrained liberty of conscience.

§. 6. The fine and numerous manufactures and fabricks here, the greatest part of which were introduced by the refugee French, and are to be found at Berlin and Potsdam, make cloths and divers forts of woollen-stuffs, as, namely, camlets, calamanco's, stamine's, flannels, &c. filk-stuffs and velvets, tapestries, gold and filver-lace, leather, tobacco, fugar, all manner of purified colour-earths, alum, faltpetre, gunpowder, divers forts of wares in wrought and cast-iron and steel, brass, arms, very large and excellent mirrours, a very fine and true fort of porcelain, which exceeds even the Mission in whiteness, and other things. At Berlin are also excellent painters, statuaries and engravers. Admirable things are likewise performed here in the jewelling, goldsmiths and enamelling way; and sine mathematical instruments made. The Berlin coaches are famous and in great efteem every where. By means of these several manufactures, labricks and arts, a faving is made not only of large fums of money, and the fame kept in the country, but wares to the amount of many tons of gold are also exported to other parts. By means too of the above-described (§. 3.) navigable rivers and canals, this trade is greatly promoted.

§. 7. The sciences are in high esteem and much practised in the Mark, and for the advancement and promotion of them the common Latin schools, with the gymnasia, the university of Frankfurt on the Oder, and the academy of sciences at Berlin, are of use.

§. S. It has been already remarked above (in §. 4.) that in old times the Suevi, and in particular the Semnones, who were a branch of them, refided in this country; and that after their emigration, which happened in the fifth century, the Wends came here in their stead. To these principally belonged the Wilzi or Lutizi, who were rendered tributary by Charlemagne; but they retained nevertheless their King, and, towards the close of the ninth century, again regained their liberty. King Henry I. and the Emperor Otto the Great, had, in the tenth century, many negotiations with the Wends. Under the latter they bound themselves, indeed, not only to pay tribute but also to receive Christianity; and for the propagation of it the Emperor founded here the bishopries of Brandenburg and Havelberg; but neither their tribute nor their Christianity was of any long continuance, for which reason the wars betwixt the Germans and the Wends were carried on with various fuccess. The present Old-Mark, however, which was a part of Saxony, liad, from the time of Charlemagne, its own Counts, of whom Theodorick was the first. Concerning this Prince we know for certain that, about the year 974, he enjoyed the title of a Marggrave: but this marggravate, which was erected against the Wends who dwelt on the Baltick, is, with respect to the eastern marggravate, which was erected in Meissen, stiled the Northern, and from the capital feat of its Marggraves, the marggravate of Soltwedel. In 1056 too it came to the family of the Counts of Stade, together with the marggravate of that name. Luther Udo I. was the first Marggrave of the house of Stade. He was succeeded by his son Udo I. and this last successively by his sons Henry the Long and Luther Udo II. Henry, fon to the latter, was, during his minority, namely, until the year 1114, under the tutelage of Rudolph his father's brother, whose fon, Udo II. fucceeded him also in the marggraval dignity, but was deposed by the Emperor Lotharius and the marggravate conferred on Conrad of Plotzkau, and after his death, in 1135, on Albert the Bear, whose father, Otto, was of the Ascanian line, and his mother, Eilika, daughter to Duke Magnus of Saxony, and the last of the Billing race. This Marggrave Albert the Wendish, was, by King Pribizlans, who had no children of his own, appointed heir to all his lands between the Elbe and the Oder, or, in other words, to the prefent Middle-Mark, Prignitz and the Ucker-Mark; all which this Marggrave Albert thus brought first to the German Empire, and was the first likewise who from the town of Brandenburg stiled himself a Marggrave thereof. By bringing under his subjection the Wends, as also by the propagation of Christianity, the introduction of divers of the Netherland and German nobility, the building of a greater number of towns and the encouragement of handicraftimen, this Prince gave the Mark quite a different and more improved form. To him fucceeded, in 1170, his fon Otto I, who annexed the arch-chamberlainship and the electoral dignity to the Mark of Brandenburg. His grandfons, John and Otto III. brought the Ucker-Mark to their family, of which Mark the Dukes of Pomerania, in the days of Albert the Bear had made themselves masters, together with a considerable part of the Neumark and Lebus.

These Princes governed at first in common, but in 1262 they shared the countries among them, and each of them founded a feparate line, namely, John the elder line, and Otto III the younger. Henry, who died in 1320, was the last Marggrave of Brandenburg of the Ascanian race. Upon his death the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria conferred the Mark, with the approbation of the States of the Empire on his fon Lewis the Elder, who was at that time under-age, but this Prince afterwards ceded it to his brothers Lewis the Roman and Otto, who in 1356 were also invested therewith by the Emperor Charles IV. Otto led an irregular life, and fell at variance with his father-in-Law the Emperor Charles IV. to whom in 1373 he was obliged to cede the Mark of Brandenburg in lieu of a debt of 200,000 dollars, which had never been discharged. The Emperor caused homage to be paid by the Mark to his fon Wenzel, but the latter arriving in 1378 to be King of Bohemia, he ceded the Mark to his brother Sigismund, who in 1388 mortgaged it to Jobst, Marggrave of Moravia, for the sum of 20,000 Bohemian guldens, and this last again to William, Marggrave of Mifnia. The Neumark was mortgaged by the Emperor Sigismund in the year 1402 to the Teutonick order in Prussia. After the death of the Marggrave Johst the Mark of Brandenburg reverted in 1411 to the Emperor Sigismund, who in the very same year ceded it again by way of mortgage to Frederick V. (or VI.) Burggrave of Nurnberg, and in 1415, hereditarily and in property with all its appurtenances, to the electorate and the arch-chamberlain's office. Of this Burggrave and new Elector, as also of his ancestors, we have treated above in the circle of Franconia under the articles Culmbach and Onolabach, in p.412, 493. His eldest son, the Marggrave John, resigned the electorate to his brother Frederick. This Elector, namely Frederick II. made a stipulation in 1442 with the Dukes of Mecklenburg, by virtue of which on the total extinction of the ducal male-line of Mecklenburg, all the faid Dukes territories fall to the electoral house of Brandenburg; for which reason the Mecklenburg subjects also ought to pay homage to our Elector and his heirs. In 1455 Frederick purchased the Neumark of the Teutonick order; and in 1469 ceded the electorate to his brother the Marggrave Albert, who for his bravery was stiled both the German Achilles and Ulvsses. The latter was also possessed of the Franconian principalities of Culmbach and Onolzbach, which he bequeathed to his two younger fons, but left the electorate of Brandenburg to the eldest son, John the Great, who accordingly took possession of it in 1486. To him succeeded in 1499 his son John Joackim I. who in 1524 feized as superior the vacant county of Ruppin, and died in 1535. Under the fon and successor of the last in the electorate, namely Joachim II. and his brother, John of Kushrin, the Reformation in the Mark was undertaken with much prudence. The Elector John George, fon to the former, fucceeded in the government. This Prince again united the province of the Neumark with the other provincial estates, and obtained likewife of Poland the coinvettiture of Pruffia. His grandfon and fucceeding Elector, namely, John Sigifmand, was married in 1594 to Anna eldest daughter to Duke Albert Frederick of Pruffia, and this Princess in right of her mother, Maria Eleonora, was next heirefs to the countries of Juliers, Cleve, and the Berg. The Elector John Sigismund died in 1598, and had for his fon and fucceffor Joachim Frederick, who thoroughly united the bishoprics of Brandenburg, Havelberg, and Lebus, with the electorate. By virtue of the stipulation concluded in 1598, at Gera, with his cousin the Marggrave George Frederick, he established the right of primogenitureship, together with the indivibility or non-diffnembering of the Mark and its acquititions for ever in his house. This stipulation was confirmed in 1500 at Magdeburg, as also in 1603 at Onolzbach, and established as a fundamental law of the house of Brandenburg. The last of these ratifications gave occasion to the devolution or fuccession of the Francoian principalities of Culmbach and Onolebach which happened in the fame year, which the Elector gave up to his brothers the Marggraves Christian and Yoachim Ernell, and their posterity, but the Neumark remained still to the electorship. The Elector also took upon himself the tutelage of his infirm cousin, Duke Albert Frederick of Pruffia, and to his fon John George refigned the dutchy of Jugerndorf in Silefia. He died in 1608. His fon and successor John Sigilmund, inherited in 1609 the important countries of the last Duke of Juliers, John William; but the Pfalzgrave of Newburg, by name Wolfgang William, likewise took possession of a part thereof. In 1611 this-Prince also obtained in Poland the investiture of the dutchy of Prussa. In 1614 he went over, together with his whole house to the Colvinist church, and died in 1619. To him succeeded his son George Wilham, whose government was very unfortunate; but on the other hand the fon of this last, namely, the Elector Frederick William the Great again retrieved the defolate flate of his countries, entered into a stipulation with the Pfalzgrave of Neuburg on account of the Juliers succession, and by virtue of the peace of Westphalia had annexed to himself the greatest part of the farther Pomerania, as also the archbishopric of Magdeburg, which he erected into a dutchy, together with the bishoprics of Halberstadt, Minden, and Camin as principalities. In 1657 too he concluded the Bomberg flipulation with the crown of Poland, by virtue of which Pruffia was admitted to be a fovereign dutchy. In 1668 he took possession likewise of the castelany of Drakeim, and in 1071 of the county of Regenslein. His son, the Elector Frederick III. purchased in 1696 of the Elector of Saxonv the hereditary vogtey and all other rights over the town and abbey of Quedlinburg, together with the Imperial vogtev and bailiff-prefecturate of the town of Nor Saufen, as also the prefecturate of Peterflerg, not far from Helle. In 1699

1699 he took possession of the county of Hobenstein. In 1701 he raised his dutchy of Pruffia to a kingdom, and himself to the regal dignity. As King he is stiled Frederick I. In 1702 he obtained of the Emperor the privilegium de non appellando for all his royal countries, and upon this erected the high tribunal at Berlin. In 1707 he brought to his family the county of Tecklenburg, together with the fovereign principality of Neufebatel and Valengin. This Prince died in 1713. To him succeeded his son Frederick William, who in 1713 obtained by the peace of Utrecht a part of the dutchy of Gelders, and in 1720, by virtue of the peace with Sweden, Stettin in Pomerania, together with the diffrict between the Oder and the Pcene, as also the islands of Usedom and Wollin. In 1732 he likewise brought the dispute on account of the Orange succession to an advantageous conclusion. He drew also many thousands of new inhabitants into his country, and in particular of rich Prullians; raised the manufactures and commerce to a flourishing state, improved the policy, distribution of justice, and revenues of his kingdom, endeavoured to promote the knowledge of the Christian doctrine for the practice of godliness, maintained a strong and very well disciplined army, and accumulated, notwithstanding, a very considerable treasure. He died in 1740. To him succeeded his son Frederick II. who in 1740 began to support the rights of his house to the Silesian principalities of Jagerndorf, Lignitz, Brieg and Wolau, as also to the seigniories and districts of Beuthen, Liebschutz, Tarnowitz and Oderberg by a brave army; and by the preliminaries of the peace of Breflaw, and the treaty of peace which ensued thereon at Berlin in 1742, as also by the stipulation of peace, reconciliation and friendship entered into at Dresden in 1745, obtained all the Lower, together with the greatest part of Upper Silesia and the county of Glatz, with full fovereignty and independency of the crown of Bobemia. In 1744 too he took possession of East-Frieseland, but on the other hand in 1754 disposed of all the seigniories, domains, countries, &c. fituate in the province of Holland, and arifing from the Orange succession, to the hereditary Stadtholder of the United Netherlands. The qualifications and feats of this King are remarkably great. Under his government the Mark of Brandenburg has been still better cultivated, and the manufactures, fabrics and commerce in the royal and electoral countries raifed to a great perfection; the policy and distribution of justice considerably improved, and the army brought to an aftonishing and alarming degree of greatness and excellency.

§. 9. The royal and electoral title runs thus: viz. Frederick, King in Prussia, Marggrave of Brandenburg, of the Holy Roman Empire Arch-Chamberlain and Elector, Sovereign and Supreme Duke of Silesia, Sovereign Prince of Orange, Neuschatel and Valengin; of the county of Glatz, Gelders, Magdeburg, Cleve, Juliers, the Berg, Stettin, Pomerania, the Cassubi and Wends, Mecklenburg and Crossen Duke; Burggrave of Vol. V.

§. 10. The Elector of Brandenburg is possessed among the Electors in general of the seventh place, and among the temporal ones in particular of the fourth. As arch-chamberlain of the holy Roman Empire, he carries the sector before the Emperor, and serves him in a silver hand-bowl with the water for washing his hands. His hereditary-chamberlain is the Prince of Hobenzollern, see above p. 225. His electoral evaluation amounts to sixty horse and two hundred and seventy-seven foot, or 1828 florins. The bishoprics of Brandenburg, Havelberg and Lebus he exempts sine onere. To each chamber-term he pays eight hundred and eleven rix-dollars, fifty-eight kruitzers and a half. In the council of the Princes of the Empire the Elector of Brandenburg has hitherto enjoyed five voices.

§. 11. Of the Prussian order of Knights of the Black Eagle, which King Frederick I. instituted in memory of the great solemnity held on occasion of placing the royal crown upon his head, an account is to be found under the kingdom of Prussia. And in the same place likewise mention has been made of the order of Knights Pour le merite, which was instituted by King Frederick II. soon after his entrance upon the government. Its symbol is a cross placed on a star of eight points enamelled blue and gold, and in its upper-most corner is to be seen the letter F with a royal crown over it, and in the three other corners, the words Pour le merite in golden letters. In the sour corners of the cross are four golden eagles displayed. The Knights wear this symbol of their order pendant at their breasts on a black ribbon about two singers in breadth, with two small silver borders running round the neck.

§.12. At Berlin are the following high and principal colleges: viz. 1. The privy State-council, which assembles once a week. In this council all the members of the actual privy ministers of State and war, as also shose who are in the provinces, when they come to Berlin, have both seat and voice. In it too are proposed matters of grace, as also other important matters justiciary and criminal, and the falling or vacant investitures conferred, those of the Silesian Princes excepted, who are invested by the King himself from the throne. 2. The cabinet-ministry, which looks to foreign State affairs and confifts of the privy ministers of State, war and the cabinet. It is divided into two departments, of which one attends only to German State affairs or concerns of the Empire. King Frederick William erected this ministry in 1733. 3. The general supreme directory of the finances, war and domains, the plan of which was formded by King Frederick William, in 1723, at the hunting-palace of Schonebeck, and actually opened in the beginning of the year 1724. Its office is to look to all the finance and domain affairs throughout the whole of the royal and electoral countries, whence also all war and domain chambers therein are of course under it. The King himfelf is president, and the heads of the fix departments belonging thereto, who have certain privy finance-counfellors under them, are actual privy State and war ministers, and act as vice-presidents and directing ministers at the general supreme directory of the finances, war and domains. Under the first department stand Prussia, Lithuania, Pomerania and the Neumark; under the fecond, the electoral Mark of Brandenburg, Magdeburg and affairs relative to the duties on falt; under the third, Cleve, Gelders, Mors, East-Friescland, Neufchatel, the Orange succession and the affairs of the invalids; under the fourth, Halberstadt, Minden, Ravensberg, Lingen and Tecklenburg; the fifth takes cognizance of matters of commerce, manufactures and fabricks; and the fixth of the magazines, provisions, marching, quartering, faltpetre and fervice matters. The head of the post-office for the improvement of the roads, and likewise the director of the province of the electoral Mark, both of whom are also actual privy State and war ministers, and likewise vice-presidents of the general directory, act in concert with the same, and indeed the former of them with all the departments, but the other with the second. 4. The spiritual department, which takes care of church, university-school-matters and affairs relative to the poor, and has for its head an actual privy State and war minister. 5. The general post-office, which provides for the post-matters and everything else that has relation thereto throughout the whole of the royal and electoral countries, Silesia excepted. 6. The supreme court, or tribunal of appeals, which is the highest justiciary college in all the royal and electoral countries, and to which the appeals from the feveral regencies or governments lie. 7. The chamber-court, which decides in all process matters throughout the electoral Mark, and confifts of two fenates. The chief prefident thereof and likewise of the tribunal, is the great chancellor for the time being. 8. The war and domain-chamber of the electoral Mark, which looks to the farming out of the royal prefecturates and mills, as also to the finances and domains, and in general to all matters which regard the royal revenues arising from the electoral Mark of Brandenburg. Q. The supreme war and domain= main-chamber of accompts, which inspects the accompts of the several cash-officers in the royal and electoral countries, and discharges the accomptants. King Frederick William erected this chamber in 1723, and in 1743 the two departments of which it at first consisted were united. 10. The fupreme Lutheran confistory, which was erected in 1750, and is employed in filling up the places of preachers and schoolmasters, as also in the examination of fuch as are proposed as candidates for that purpose. This confistory is likewife confulted on the filling up of the theological chairs at the royal 11. The directory of the Calvinilt church, which was founded in 1713, and takes cognizance of the concerns of the leveral Calvinist churches in the royal countries. 12. The war-consistory. 13. The pupil college of the electoral Mark, which being appointed for the tutelage of minors, audits their accompts and provides for the fecure lodgment of their capitals. 14. The supreme medicinal college, which obtained this title in 1725. 15. The supreme mine-office, which was erected in 1705. 16. The general provision-office. 17. The general salt-chest and saltfactory. The French nation have an upper and under judicatory of their own, as also their own revision-tribunal, supreme confistory and supreme directory, which is stilled the Conseil François.

§. 13. With respect to affairs of police, the several towns here stand under the tax-councils, of which there are in general ten throughout the whole Mark; and the slat country under its provincial-councils, but these last again under the war and domain-chambers.

§. 14. The fources of the royal revenues arising from the Mark are, The royal domain-office, together with the forests, posts, mines, mints, salt-offices, charges, stamp-paper, stamped cards, service, excise, imposts upon beer and grinding, or the bushel-tax, the war and grinding measure, tolls, protection-money paid by the Jews, the contribution, or tax on hides, of land and houses, and the new beer money. These several revenues are collected into different chests; as, namely, into those of the exchequer, or domain-chest, the general post-chest, general salt-chest, charge-chest, service-chest, upper tax-chest, and, lastly, likewise into the general domain and general war-chests. The sum total of the yearly revenues arising from the Mark are estimated at about two millions and a half of crowns.

§. 15. In the Mark are stationed a considerable part of the Prussian troops in time of peace, and therein in particular at Berlin, as shall be shewn below under the description of that royal city; but for the whole of the Prussian troops the subjoined remark is to be consulted.

§. 16. The Mark of Brandenburg is divided, in general, into the electoral and New-Marks. The electoral Mark comprizes in it the Old-Mark, the Prignitz, the Middle-Mark and the Ucker-Mark. These Marks, or provinces, are again divided into circles, and over each is placed a land-council.

Remark

Remark on the power of the reyal Prussian house under King Frederick II.

The power of the royal Prussian and electoral Brandenburg house, has risen, under King Frederick II. to a height which has attracted the assonishment and attention of all Europe. This power is not so much sounded on its extent of territory; for, compared with several other European States, it is but small; but on its excellent internal constitution, as well as on the great insight of its governor into the connection of the different parts of the body politic, and likewise on his own wise and indefatigable paternal attention to the government of the State.

The whole of the countries and States of this royal and electoral house, as possessed by King Frederick II. after the peace of Dresden in 1745, amount at most to about 3000 geographical square miles, and contain in them nearly five hundred towns. In the fix years last past, that is to fay, from the year 1750 to 1756, there are, as I am well informed from an account communicated to me by one of my colleagues, throughout the whole of these countries, one year with another, 1,66,567 persons baptized, and about 1,25,348 deaths. In order to find out the number of inhabitants here, which some estimate at five millions, the last of these sums is to be multiplied by thirty-eight. The whole of the royal yearly revenues are rated at near twenty millions of dollars. The contributions of the feveral fubjects here are fixed once for all, and at no time, not even in the most difficult conjunctures of war, are afterwards either raised or renewed. According to the complete lift of the royal Pruffian army, which was printed in 1753 at Amsterdam, with amendments, it consisted at that time of 1,46,257 men, which in time of peace requires the fum of 10,932,960 dollars for their yearly maintenance, exclusive of the charges of mounting and remounting, quartering and levying, which may arise to about one fourth more: so that thus the sum total of the money required for their maintenance one year amounts nearly to fourteen millions of dollars. The discipline of these troops, as well as their expertness at their exercise is not to be equalled; and they are always kept constantly complete as well as in perpetual readiness to march. For their subsistance, the several royal and electoral countries are divided into cantons or smaller circles, out of which cantons, each regiment, nay even each company, has a feparate one to itself, and out of these its recruits are to be drawn; for which reason the feveral regiments are always quartered upon fuch, or at least not far from, those cantons out of which they draw their recruits. In times of peace, however, the greater part of these recruits are hired for money out of the country; and fuch as are levied from among the cantons in the country have yearly nine or ten months furlows granted them in order to enable them them to carry on their business either as burghers or peasants. The above-mentioned army has consisted of 10340 cuirassiers, 11938 dragoons, 10116 hussars and 1,13,856 foot; among which were 4423 superior officers and 10040 inferior ones. A regiment of cuirassiers consists of five squadrons, a regiment of dragoons of ten, and a regiment of hussars of the like number. A squadron again of the two first contains one hundred and fixty-fix men, and a squadron of the last one hundred and sourteen complete. A regiment of soot consists usually of two battalions, each of which comprizes in it fix companies, that is to say, one of grenadiers and five of musquetiers. Two of the Prussian regiments, however, consist of three battalions; namely, the regiment of the guards and that of Anhalt-Dessay. A field-battalion contains in it eight hundred and fixty-four, and a garrison-battalion seven hundred and twenty.

The ELECTORAL

M A R K.

I. The OLD-MARK.

§.1. THIS Mark is divided, towards the east, by the Elbe, from the Prignitz and the dutchy of Magdeburg, being terminated also by the latter to the south and in part likewise to the west, but in other parts by the dutchy of Luneburg, with which, in 1691 and 1692, a boundary recess was concluded. It was formerly larger than at present, divers places having belonged thereto which are now partly annexed to the dutchy of Luneburg, and partly also to the once archbishopic, but at present to the dutchy, of Magdeburg. Its extent now, from east to west, or from Werben on the Elbe to the cloyster of Diestorf, amounts to nine German miles; and from north to south, that is, from the village of Stresow near Snackenburg to Ursleben near Erxleben, to eleven.

§. 2. It was anciently a part of Saxony, and therein of Eastphalia, or East-Saxony. In the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries, it was either simply called the Mark, or the North-Mark; but in a couple of records bearing date in 1196 and 1197, Ducatus Transalbinus; and in the provincial recesses of the Mark, the country beyond the Elbe; and last of all the Old-Mark. The last of these names was first given it after the year 1325, at which time Duke Otto the Liberal, of Brunswick, who had obtained this country by his marriage with his consort Agnes, widow to the Marggrave Waldemar, the last of the Ascanian race, to whom it was bequeathed as a jointure, stiled himself Lord of the Old-Mark, in order thereby to discovered.

stinguish it from the Mark which the Marggraves of the house of Bavaria were possessed of. The said Duke Otto had, indeed, so early as the year 1323, ceded up his rights in the Mark of Brandenburg to the Emperor Lewis IV. but it appears, that this stipulation only regarded the succession to it after his death; at least Duke Otto still, that is to fay, after that time, governed the country; and it was, in the year 1343, that the Old-Mark was first fully ceded to the house of Bavaria; for which cession he was promifed the fum of 3450 marks of filver, the last payment of which was not made to the Dukes Magnus and Ernest till 1348.

§. 3. This country, indeed does not enjoy in all parts a fat and clay land, but up and down has also fandy or stony bottoms: though in general it may be stiled a fertile country; particularly since the time in which under the government of King Theodorick William confiderable tracts of moraffy and waste grounds have been cultivated; as for instance near Sendal and Flechtingen, together with the Selifchebruch near Ostingersleben, the prefecturate of Burgstall and Neuendorf, and certain tracts also near Dalen, Insel, Schwarzlosen, Vehten, Deez, the Horst, and Kriegholz near Bomezien, together with the tract formed by the construction of a dam one hundred and four perches in length, and eighteen broad, as also those of the two nine feet wide ditches near Great-Garz, and the farms formed by the help of dykes which have been established at Iden by the family of Kannenberg. By these means their pasturage, and thus of course their breed of cattle here, is confiderably improved. Potatoes were first cultivated in this province of the electoral Mark, and from thence differinated into the other provinces. Near Luderitz, Vehten, Uchdorf, and in particular near Little-Schwarzlosen in the prefecturate of Borgstall the small turnep grows in plenty. The herb too for dying called faw-wort is gathered and exported from hence in great abundance.

§. 4. The above described improvement of the soil of this Mark has also promoted the encrease of its villages and inhabitants. At present there are computed in it fourteen petty towns, together with five hundred and fixty-four villages, ten manors, ten sheep-folds, eight mills, and fifteen fingle farms. Of noble families who have fettled in it here are fixty-fix, and the greatest part of the estates here are in the hands of the Lords of Alvensleben, Schulenburg, Jagow, Putlitz, Bismark, Luderitz, Jeetz, and Kannenberg.

§. 5. The supreme tribunal of the Old-Mark lies at Stendal, and the provincial captain in it is prefident of the fame. The provincial directory here confifts of the provincial director affifted by a certain number of provincial counsellors and the provincial receivers. Under them stand the provincial ridings, according to which the taxes or contributions are laid.

§. 6. What Enzelt, Hendreich, and others have written concerning the four parts, into which the Old-Mark was formerly divided, is without foundation.

foundation. They call them the Balfamerland, the Tangerland, the Senland, and the land of Zermund. Counsellor Lenz in his Grafen Saai, p. 224, seq. tells us that the north part of the Old-Mark, or the Balfamerland, which was fituate between the Elbe, the Aland, the Biese, and a part also of the Uchte had its name from the rivulet of Balfam, which salls into the Ucht, and comprized in it Arneburg, Seehausen, and Werben, being also called the Wische; but the south part constituted the Saxon share of the Marsinerland, the latter of which was bounded to the north by the Balfamerland, to the east by the Elbe, to the south by the territory of Magdeburg and the Obre; and by the Milde, Biese, and Uchte, as far as to Stendal to the west, and consequently contained in it Tangermund, and Gardelegen, together with the presecturates of Burstall, Calbe, and the county of Osterburg.

§. 7. We shall describe

I. The feven immediate towns in their order. Among these is

1. Stendal, formerly called also Steindal, the head-town of the Old-Mark, lying on the Uchte in a level furrounded on all fides by mountains, and which fince the year 1712, but more particularly between the years 1720 and 1740 has encreased in buildings and inhabitants. This town bears the directorium among the feveral towns of the Old-Mark, and is the feat also of the supreme tribunal therein, and likewise of a spiritual inspection. It is divided into four parishes, and thus contains in it four principal churches, among which is the cathedral church of St. Nicholas. At this place also lies the general superintendency of the Old-Mark and the Prignitz. This foundation was first erected by the Marggrave Henry in the year 1188, and stood immediately under the papal chair. It consisted of a provost, a dean, and some canons. In 1551 it was made a donation of together with all its revenues to the university of Frankfurt on the Oder. The town-school here was placed in what was once a Franciscan monastery. The cloyster of St. Catherine was formerly supplied with Benedictine Nuns, and that of St. Anne, with nuns of the order of St. Francis. After the introduction of the Reformation these cloysters 'tis true were still preserved, but came over to the Protestant religion, and over each of them was set a Domina. The refugee French have introduced divers manufactures into it. They have here likewise a tribunal of their own. Anciently there were great numbers of clothiers at this place. The Marggrave Albert the Bear raised it about the year 1151 from a village to a town. Formerly also it belonged to the Hanse. In 1595, 1680, and 1687 it suffered greatly by fire.

The magistracy of this place is possessed in the village of Hemert of three noble estates, together with one half of the upper and lower jurisdiction, as also of the right of patronage, and likewise of the village of Belkens, together with the upper and lower jurisdiction and the right of patronage over the same.

From this town a circle and provincial riding-house are denominated.

2. Salzwedel, in the most ancient records called Saltwedele, Saltwidele, and Saltwedel, and in the thirteenth century also Soltwedel, and lastly Salzwedel, a town, feated on the Jeeze, and lying in a low and morafly tract, whence also, according to Mr. P. W. Gerken's conjecture, its name denotes a citadel or town built in a swampy soil. It consists of the old and new town, each of which has its own feparate limits, gates, streets, churches, fchools, and magistracy. In the old town stands the church of St. Mary, at which formerly was a provoftline, but at prefent is the fuperintendency of the spiritual inspection of Salzwedel. The two churches of both the cloyfters, which formerly flood here, are still in good condi-The schools of the old and new town were, in 1744, united into one, which is kept in the former. The church belonging to the ancient Franciscan cloyster which stood here is likewise still in a good condition. The old fort is the hereditary inheritance of the family of Rock. The principal subfishence of the inhabitants confists in the brewing of beer, as also in the making of cloth, and the manufactures of ferge, freeze, and stockings, together with those of several handicrasts which have set up here. Linens too of various forts, patterns and colours for clothing are made at this place; and a brisk trade is carried on therein. In 1535, 1595, 1630, and 1705, this town fustained great damage by fire. The suburbs called Bockhorn lie to the west of it. On the new town the Marggrave John and Otto conferred, in 1247, town-privileges equal to those of the old town of Salzwedel, as also other immunities and rights. It is separated by a branch of the Feeze from the latter, and contains in it one parochial and one hospital-church.

Salzwedel was formerly reckoned among the Hanse-towns. Whether the ancient Marggraves had their seat in the old town of Salzwedel and therein in what is called the Burg or fort, or at one German mile distance therefrom in the village of Old Salzwedel, wherein is still a wall which appears to have belonged to a fort, is uncertain. With respect to other matters we find not in the oldest records and archives of the town any more than in the ancient historians the least traces, that either in or about this place salt was formerly made, or at least that there were salt-springs here. Therefore the name cannot be derived therefrom, notwithstanding that towards the close of the seventeenth century were discovered before the Luchau gate, not far from what is called the Hoiersburg, on the borders of Luncharg, in a tract abounding with salt-petre, some traces of salt-springs, and that for trial thereof (but which must needs have succeeded very differently) salt was made here. A circle and provincial riding are both denominated from this place.

3. Gardelegen, or Gardeleben, a town, feated on the Milde, and containing in it two churches, together with four hospitals, two of which also have churches churches belonging to them, a spiritual inspection, a Latin school, and a manufacture of cloth. In the year 1306 this place was wholly burnt down. In 1658, 1667, and 1685 it also suffered great damages by fires, and in 1757 very severe exactions by the French. At Gardelegen anciently resided certain marggraval Princes, who stilled themselves Counts thereof. From it too a circle and a provincial riding have their names. That called the heath of Gardelegen is a considerable wood.

4. Seebausen, a town, which is wholly surrounded by the river Aland. At this place is a spiritual inspection. The principal subsistence of its inhabitants consists in agriculture, and the breeding of cattle. The greatest fires it has suffered by were those of 1653, 1669, 1676, and 1722. From it a circle and provincial riding have obtained their names.

The adjoining estate of Kammerkof, which is commonly called the Sechausen Kamps, is an inheritance of the council-house.

5. Tangermunde, a town, lying on the river Tanger, which below this place pours itself into the Elbe. In it is a spiritual inspection, and a Latin school. The principal subsistence of its inhabitants is drawn from agriculture and the brewing of beer. The town itself contains two suburbs, which are named the Neustadt and the Hunerdorf or Hunredorf. The fort here is separated from the town and environed by a deep ditch. In it resides the officer of the presecturate of Tangermunde. Near it too the ships going up and down the Elbe put in and pay down a pole-tax. In the year 1617 this place was destroyed by fire. In 1676 and 1678 it sustained great damage again by the same dreadful calamity. From it a circle and provincial riding take their name.

6. Osterburg, a small town, near which the river Uchte salls into the Biese. At this place is a spiritual inspection. Its principal subsistence is drawn from agriculture. In 1521, 1565, 1573, and 1631 it sustained great damage by fire. Anciently there were Counts of this place and Astenhausen, who were possessed of a considerable territory. Counsellor Lenz has treated of them in his Grafensal, and speaks of Wernern Lord of Vestheim, who shourished in the eleventh century, as the first Count of Osterburg and Astenhausen known with any degree of certainty. Count Sigfrid II. who died in 1236 was the last Osterburg Count of the Veltheim family.

7. Werben, a finall town, fituated not far from the Elbe, which oppofite to this place receives into it the Havel. Here is also a spiritual inspection and a commandery of the order of St. John. The principal subsistence of its inhabitants is drawn from agriculture and the breeding of cattle. A part of the territory belonging to this town lies beyond the Elbe in the Prignitz. On the Werder in that part where the Havel runs into the Elbe, the Swedes built them a sconce in 1631, which was destroyed in the following year.

II. The subsequent royal prefecturates: viz.

1. The prefecturate of Salzwedel. Among the places belonging to it are the following: namely,

The Perwer, a village, which looks like a fuburb to Salzwedel. The inhabitants of this place belong partly to the jurisdiction of the prefecturate, partly also to that of the Lord of Schulenburg, and partly to that of the council of the old town of Salzwedel, on account of the hospital of St. George: Almost at the end of the Perwer lies the church and the cloyster of the Holy Ghost, the convent belonging to which consisted of regular canons; and at a greater distance from it lies St. George's church and hospital, in which twelve poor women are maintained.

Old-Salzwedel, a village, one German mile from the town of Salzwedel, to the east end of which is to be seen a wall which is supposed to be the remains of the ancient residence of the Marggraves of Salzwedel.

2. The prefecturate of DISTORF, which has its name from the Augustine nunnery of Distorf, founded about the year 1161, and was at first called St. Mary's island, or Marienwerder, and that probably for this reason, namely, because it was surrounded with dykes and ditches. At present it consists of twelve Protestant conventuals, one half of whom are of noble, and the other half of burgher extraction, and their superior stiled Domina. Distorf has three fairs. To it belong the villages of Abbendorf, Wendisch-Boddenstadt, Fabrendorf, Peckerise, Ellenberg, Waddekath, &c. together with Viere, a royal manor.

3. The prefecturate of ARENDSEE, containing in it the lake of that name, which is one small German mile in circuit, but twenty or thirty fathoms and more in depth. To this prefecturate belongs,

Arendsee, an open little town, seated on the just described lake, and divided into the old and new. The former stands immediately under the presecturate-office, but the latter has a magistracy of its own to whom belongs the under tribunal, that of the upper being annexed to the presecturate. The jurisdiction of the police both in the old and new town is enjoyed by the magistracy alone. The Benedictine nunnery for ladies, which formerly stood here, is at present converted into a Protestant noble cloyster, in which reside an abbess and fix ladies. From this town a circle and provincial riding take their names.

Benkendorf or Benikendorf, together with Great and Little Chuden, and other villages.

4. The prefecturate of Tangermunde, the officer belonging to which refides in the fort near Tangermunde and Rein, in the Sovereign's house. To this prefecturate have been added the estates and territories which the Sovereign possessed here as board-lands. Of the places belonging to it I shall remark

Kalbue or Kolbuw, which is otherwise called Kalebue, a village, situated near Tangermunde, and containing in it ten subjects belonging to the prefecturate.

fecturate. The Wends, who refided here so lately as in the time of the Marggraves of the house of Bavaria, obtained from the above Marggraves divers privileges and immunities.

Arneburg, a small town, lying on the Elbe, and which in the tenth century was a noted place and a barrier citadel against the Wer.ds. In the year 1005, it was fortified anew by the Emperor Henry II. Its agreeable fituation on an eminence invited some Saxon Emperors frequently to make it their place of residence. Divers of the marggraval line too, as well men and women, have refided here. Formerly also there was a foundation at this place. The principal subfishence of its inhabitants is received from navigation and their traffick in corn, as also in agriculture. The history of the ancient Counts of Arneburg has been treated by Counfellor Lenz in his Grafenfaal, who informs us that the county of Arneburg, or the Balfamerland, was about the year 1067, incorporated by purchase with the marggravate of Salzwedel, but foon after obtained a new line of Counts and Burggraves. From the town of Arneburg are denominated a circle and provincial riding.

Buch, a pretty little town, feated on the Elbe and still having rather the appearance of a village. Instead also of its former magistracy, it is governed by a bailiff and four intendants. In some sovereign letters of 1571, 1645, &c. it is stilled a small town, but in other respects is only a borough.

5. The prefecturate of BADINGEN, which has its feat in the village of Badingen between Stendal and Gardelegen.

6. The presccturate of Neuendorf. To it belongs

Neuendorf, formerly a Cistercian nunnery, founded by the Marggraves John and Otto. At present it is wholly Protestant, and consists of a Domina and fix ladies.

Trustat, or Treustat, once a manor, which, in 1702, was declared a peculiar village, and at first inhabited by some Calvinist French; but to them succeeded some Calvinist Germans.

Lezlingen, a royal hunting-house, out of the ancient manor belonging to which a large village, having a church of its own, has arisen. The Lezlingen heath, or wood, here is very confiderable.

7. The prefecturate of Borgstall, which was exchanged, in 1562, by the Lords of Bismark for that of Schonbausen and the cloyster of Krevesen with its annexed villages. In this prefecturate is Borg/tall, a citadel and village containing a parish-church.

The Tholle and Pleetz, both new villages.

Danneufelde and Staats, two parochial-villages: and Salchau, a royal manor, near which Prince Leopold of Anhalt-Deffau built him a hunting-house.

III. The prefecturate of Dambeck, or Dambke, which arose out of what was formerly a Benedictine nunnery, and, in 1545, was granted by the Elector Joachim II. to Levin of the Schulenburg, as well the elder as younger, and their heirs, for fixty years; but, in 1607, was allotted by the Elector Joachim Frederick to the princely school sounded by him at Joachimsthal, which was accordingly first put in the enjoyment of its revenues in the year 1645 and 1646; though the inspection of its administration in economical matters was still lest to the electoral amt-office, till at length the Elector Frederick William, in 1650, entrusted and consigned the revenues of this presecturate, as well as those of the other estates of the Joachimsthal gymnasium, which is now fixed at Berlin, to a peculiar immediate school-directory under the Sovereign. This office causes such directory to be administered by an assumed officer in the same manner with the royal presecturates. The yearly revenues arising from it amount to 6000 rixdollars. To it belongs,

the

1. Dambek, a village, containing a parish-church and lying about one hour's distance from Salzwedel.

2. The villages of Old-Salzwedel, Browitz, Brieze, Great-Bierstat, Cheine, Dessau, Great-Grischow, Gieseritz, Guszfeld, Hagen, Henningen, Jebel, Jeggeleben, Konigstat, Kubselde, Ladekate, Lecze, Malsdorf, Maxdorf, Prezier, Rademin, Rieze, Recklingen, Schieben, Siedentram, Sienow, Thuritz, Viezke, Walstz and Winterseld, together with the desolate limits of Ubesitz and Umselde; all which, however, do not belong entirely to this presecturate, but only a part of them, inasmuch as both royal and noble seats and estates lie therein; and the presecturate is possessed in several only of certain seats, farms and rents.

IV. Certain noble places and jurisdictions.

1. The very ancient family of the Lords of the Schulenburg, which at present is divided into the old and young Counts, or into the samily of Lieberose and Apenburg, and has a judge over it in common, who, exclusive of seodal and other matters which are reserved for his decision, determines likewise in such cases as have relation at the same time to different houses or their subjects. This family is principally possessed,

1. Of Betzendorf, a small town, or borough, confisting of a citadel and two noble feats, together with certain manors and two sheep-folds, as also of the Fore and Hinder-Wohlgemut, with about forty fire-places and some free-houses. The building most worthy of observation in it is the old steinhouse and that which formerly constituted the burg or fort in common of the Lords of the Schulenburg of this place, some remains of which are still to be seen here in a morass. At this place also, and at Apenburg, the Schulenburg spiritual inspection over the churches in the boroughs and villages is alternately held; in which inspection the Lords of the Schulenburg are possessed of the right of patronage. The Marggrave Albert took this place, in 1202, from the family of Krochern; Otto II. mortgaged it, in 1204, to Werner and Theodorick of the Schulenburg, for the sum of 2000 marks of filver; and his brother Albert disposed of it, in 1214, to the family of the Schulenburg, as an hereditary fief, in confideration of 7000 2. Of marks.

- 2. Of Apenburg, a finall town or borough, which occurs so early as in the records of the twelfth century, and was conferred, in 1349, by the Marggrave Levis the Elder, on the samily of the Schulenburg. In it is seen the noble house, together with the old fort and the seat of the Schulenburg tribunal, in which the judge in common of the Lords of the Schulenburg resides; and eighty fire-places. With respect to the spiritual inspection, which is alternately held here and at Betzendorf, see this latter. The provincial-court is held twice a year, once at this place and once at Betzendorf.
- 3. Of Rittleben, a noble citadel and estate, situated near Apenburg, and which, in 1747, on the decease of Hans George of the Schulenburg, fell to the Lieberose line.
- 4. Of the provostship near the church of St. Mary, in Old-Salzwedel, which was conferred, in 1545, on Levin the Younger of the Schulenburg, for his life, and afterwards in fief on him and his cousin of the same name, but called the Elder; to the posterity of the latter of whom it still remains, having been ceded to them by the former.

5. Of Walsleben, Kobbel, Mablwinkel and Osterwohl.

- 6. Of the following vogties, which belonged to the very ancient family of the Lords of Bartenfleben, and, as that family became extinct in the perfon of Gebbard Werner in the year 1742, are now fallen to his only daughter Anna Catherina Adelheid, widow to Count Adolphus Frederick of the Schulenburg at Betzendorf, and her fons.
- 1. The vogtey of Steimke, fituated in the moraffy wood of Dromling. This vogtey comprizes in it fix places, two of which belong to the prefecturate of Knefebeck in Luneburg.
 - 2. The vogtey of Robrberg on the Jeeze, to which belong ten places.
- 3. The vogtey of Metadorf on the Biefe, to which belong twelve places. Among them is

Bellingen, a large village, celebrated for the finall turneps of the Mark and the great quantities of white cole-eabbage raifed in it: together with Erxleben, which is not to be confounded with the place immediately following; and other places.

2. The Lords of Awensleben are possessed of,

1. The jurisdiction of Erxhben, which lies between the territories of Halbersladt and Magdeburg, being separated almost on all sides from the remaining tracts of the Old-Mark. This jurisdiction consists of six parochial-villages; namely, Erxheben, Ubrsleben, Eimersleben, Ostingersleben, Bregenstat and Horsingen. The once large lake near Ostingersleben was drained, in 1719, and that also of Bruch near Erxheben in 1721, and both of them converted partly into arable ground and partly into pasture lands. The forest near Erxheben is considerable.

2. Ifenschnibbe, or the Iron-Schnippe, is a strong house or castle, seated on the Milde, not far from Gardelegen, and has been possessed by the family of Albensleben since the year 1343.

3. The jurisdiction of Kalbe, comprizing in it

Kalbe, a finall town, feated in a swampy werder, or island, on the Milde, and environed by that river. This place, in the seodal letters and other records is stilled a town, but in other respects is only a village of about eighty-five fire-places. In 1324, the family of Krochern disposed of it to that of Alvensleben. The strong old castle here is now ruinous. At this place is also a spiritual inspection belonging to the noble samily of Alvensleben.

Innerhalb werders, lying towards Salzwedel and Arndfee, together with twelve entire villages, and part likewise of three others; as also Ausserbalb werders, lying near Gardelegen, and ten whole villages; among which are Great-Engersen, Berge, Schenkenborst, &c.

Bismark, a small town of seventy-five sire-places, and lying about half a German mile's distance from the Biese. This place had formerly a fort. The Lords of Alvensleben administer the upper and lower tribunals at this place by their collective judges. In 1676, Bismark was entirely consumed by fire.

The jurisdiction of Zichtow, the tribunal of which, as also the judge belonging thereto, has its residence at the noble seat of Zichtow. The villages belonging to this jurisdiction lie before the wood of Dromling.

3. The Lords of Jagow are possessed of Great and Little-Aulosen, as also of Scharpenhuse, Stresau, Oevelgunne, Pollitze, Kalberwisch, Uchtenhagen, Kahlenberg, Vielbaum, Garze, Kruden, Natewisch and Gerhof, all villages belonging to the inspection of Scehausen.

4. The Lords of Bismark, ever since the year 1562, at which time they ceded the presecturate of Borgstall to the electoral house, are possessed of Krevese, a noble citadel, or palace, on whose site formerly stood a Benedictine nunnery, which after the Reformation was suppressed by the Sovereign. To this citadel belong sourteen villages, together with six seats in the Wischen.

Schonhausen and Fischbeck, villages which formerly constituted a prefecturate. These villages lie indeed beyond the Elbe, in the circle of ferichau, in the dutchy of Magdeburg, but descending to the Lords of Bismark, were difmembred from it and added to the Old-Mark.

5. The Lords of Schenken are possessed of Flechtingen, near which is a considerable forest, as also of Boddensehl, Lemsehl and Hasselburg.

6. Luderitz, appertaining to the Lords of Luderitz. 7. Jeetze, which belongs to the Lords of Jeetze.

8. The Lords of Kannenberg are possessed of Krumbke, Busche, Iden, Berge, Beverlaak and Robtenbos.

9. Tylfen,

o. Tylfen, belonging to the Lords of the Knefebeck.

- 10. Kladen, Bertkow and Lindflat, appertaining to the feveral noble families stiled therefrom.
- 11. That tract which formerly constituted the estates of Chwalcowsky, Mollendorf, Pleetz, Rengerslag and Bilberg, is in the possession of the Counts of Wilkenitz.

The P R I G N I T Z.

§.1. THE Prignitz, in the electoral confirmations of the immunities of the province and towns, is always called the Vormark, and never the Prignitz. The etymology and fignification of the latter of these names is not very well known.

§. 2. It terminates on the Elbe and Havel, the dutchy of Mecklenburg and the circles of Ruppin and Havelland in the Middle-Mark, being ten German miles and a half long, and feven and a half broad.

- §. 3. The arable land here is, according to its goodness, divided into four classes. The care of King Frederick William for the improvement of the foil of the Mark has likewise been extended to this province, and the Wendfeld, near Banekow; as also to the tracts near Semlin, Dalmin, Witstock and Rosenwinkel, which have all been rendered more fruitful by his means. When the Elbe overflows its banks in the spring and lays the circumjacent arable and pasture-lands under water, such circumstance, as well here as in the Old-Mark, is of advantage to it, the land being thereby manured; but when the inundations happen in summer, a little before or after the feast of St. John, it is of very great prejudice. At Freienstein the small turnep is much cultivated. The heaths of Eldenburg, Zechlin and Leuzen, the last of which is otherwise called the Dargard, are considerable woods.
- §. 4. The Prignitz contains in it eleven towns and two hundred and forty-fix villages. The immediate towns here are, in their respective order, those of Perlberg, Pritzwalk, Kyritz, Havelberg and Lenzen. The town of Witstock is also immediate, but having been once episcopal, is not reckoned among the former. The nine spiritual inspections here stand under the general superintendant of the Old-Mark and Prignitz. In this country have settled sifty-four families of Counts, Barons and nobility.

§. 5. This province is divided into feven circles: namely,

- I. Into the circle of Perlberg, to which belong eighty villages. We shall remark here,
- 1. Perlberg, the head town of the province, and lying on the Stepenitz, which divides itself at this place into two branches. Of these, one passes by the town, but the other divides itself again, near the wall-house, into two other branches, both which run through the centre of the town. Perlberg contains in it above three hundred and fixty-nine dwelling-houses. At the head-church here resides the inspector of the spiritual inspection of Perlberg. Near the hospiral of the Holy Gloss is a small church with a peculiar preacher and catechist belonging to it. The principal subsistence of its inhabitants is drawn from handicrasts and agriculture. The town bears the directorium among those of this province. Formerly it stood for some time under the Counts of Mecklenburg. In 1638, it was miserably plundered and haid waste by the Swedss. In 1621, 1626 and 1638, it suffered damage by site.

2. The royal presecturate of ELDENBURG, which formerly belonged to the family of Quitzow, in whom are still vested the manors of Stefo and Sterbitz.

3. The Ganse, which the noble Lords of Putlitz are possessed of. In this tract is Wittenberge, a small town, situated on that called the Old-Elbe, which not far from this place receives into it the Stepenitz and Kartau, and afterwards unites itself again with the real Elbe. The Barons of Putlitz are possessed of a toll at this place on the latter. The town itself contains about one hundred burghers and inhabitants. In the seventeenth century it suffered by three several fires, the last of which happened in 1686. On two mountains hard by it, which are called the Baron Mountains, or Freyrburg, are still to be seen two Barons houses. The Lords of Putlitz, so early as the year 1270, stiled themselves from this place.

Wolfskagen, and eighteen other villages.

4. Kumlosen, a village, seated on the Elbe, and the proprietor of which was likewise possessed of a toll at this place. Kumlosen belonged to the now extinct family of Mollendorf.

5. Stavenau, appertaining to the Lords of Kleist.

6. Kleetzke, a village, which is the property of the Counts of Kameke.

7. Schilde, a village, belonging to the Lords of Gravenitz. 8. Karstatt, a village, appertaining to the Lords of Karstatt.

9. Quitzow, a village, which is the property of the Lords of Plabten. This village is the original place of the Lords of Quitzow.

II. Into

II. Into the circle of Prizwalk, containing in it fifty-fix villages.

We shall remark here,

1. Prizwalk, an immediate town, feated on the Domnitz and containing a spiritual inspection. In the year 1642, one half of this place was burnt down. In 1654, it again fuffered confiderable damage by the same dreadful calamity.

2. Zum heiligen Grabe, a cloyster, containing one abbess and twenty-feven ladies.

3. Marienflies, or Stepenitz, also a cloyster for fix ladies.

4. Freienstein, a small town of one hundred and sixteen fire-places, and belonging to the Lords of Winterfeld. In the year 1718, this place was wholly destroyed by fire. Near it grows the small turnep in great plenty. Not far from hence also rises the Stepenitz.

5. Meienburg, a small town, belonging to the Lords of Robr, and containing in it about one hundred burghers. In the year 1574, one half of this place was destroyed by fire. Not far from it rises the river Dosse.

6. Putlitz, a small town, which is the original place of the Ganse, who are likewise Lords of Putlitz; and under their jurisdiction it still continues. In it is a spiritual inspection. In the years 1684 and 1691, Putlitz was almost entirely destroyed by fire.

7. Grabow, a village, belonging to the Lords of that name.

8. Frehne, Burghagen, Schonhagen, and other places, all the property of the Lords of Burghagen.

III. Into the circle of Kyritz, which contains in it twenty-four villages.

In this circle we shall remark,

1. Kyritz, an immediate town, fituated on the rivulet of fagelitz, and containing a spiritual inspection. This place is very considerable for its agriculture. In the years 1562, 1622, 1636 and 1674, it suffered great damage by fires. To the magistracy here belong some adjoining lakes; as, namely, the Bork lake, which begins at the village of Bork, and near Karnzau is called the lake of Karnzau, or the Salz; and the Great, or Stolp lake. The three which pass under those names are called the Upper Lakes, and have a communication with the Under Lake by means of a canal. At the latter also lies the village of Bautikau.

IV. Into the circle of Havelberg, which contains in it twenty villages.

In this circle is,

1. The Havelberg, an immediate town, feated on the Havel, by which it is furrounded and rendered an island. To this island there is no other passage than by three draw-bridges. Near the town-church here resides an inspector of one of the spiritual inspections of Havelberg. The long bridge here leads to the cathedral and the mountains fituate beyond one of the branches of the Havel. The ancient bishopric here was founded in 946, by the Emperor Otto I. The last of its bishops was the eldest son of the Elector John George, namely, the Marggrave Joachim Frederick, who, in 1598, was likewise reigning Elector. After him no particular bishop was ever elected or put in his place, but the chapter still continues in its original institution. On this chapter King Frederick II. conferred, in 1755, a peculiar diffinction and chapter-cross, which is of gold enamelled with purple, and terminates in eight points. On the right fide of it is feen the Prussian eagle, and on the four corners the letters F.R. but on the other side is a representation of the patroness of the chapter, namely, the Virgin Mary, with her fon Yesus. This cross is worn pendant at a white coloured watered ribbon terminated with purple. To this foundation appertain three manors: viz. to the cathedral, Wetlitz and Kummernitz, with the nine villages of Toppel, Netzau, Dollen, Gumtau, Granzau, Goricke, Schonbagen, Breddin, Bendelin, Schonermark, Studenitz and Nitzau, all which lie in the Prignitz. At the cathedral is also a peculiar spiritual inspection. The mountains fituate beyond one of the branches of the Havel, and of which mention has been made above, are to be confidered as fuburbs, and contain on them about three hundred houses. These mountains are called the Wendeberg, the Neueberg, the Fischkauserberg, the Bischofsberg, the Lehmkuble, the Ziegelberg, the Sperlingsberg and the Schonberg. The Ziegelberg belongs to the town; the Bischotsberg, with the episcopal presecturate of Plattenburg, formerly descended to the Lords of Saldern; the rest of these mountains are annexed to the chapter. Great quantities of brandy are distilled in this town, and numbers of stockings knit. Here are also many fishermen, and ships or boats for the Elbe are likewise built at this place. The greater part of the wood which is transported to Hamburg by means of the Elbe is first corded here in that part called the Elbboden. In 1627, the whole place was destroyed by fire; and, in 1635, 1647, 1658, 1661 and 1747, it also sustained great damage by the same dreadful calamity.

2. The Hivelort, near the Subre, the latter of which is a large and confiderable meadow belonging to the town of Werben, and the former the name of the place fituate between the villages of Nitzau and Quitzebel, where the Havel goes into the Elbe.

3. Rubstat, a village, belonging to the Lords of Grumbkau, and in the church of which is the hereditary burying-place of the family of Quitzo w, to whom it formerly appertained. To this village is also annexed Belau.

V. Into the circle of Lenzen, which comprizes in it thirty-feven villages.

In this circle we shall remark,

- 1. Lenzen, an immediate town, fituated in a fine spot not far from the Elbe, and standing on two lakes, one of which receives into it the Lockenitz, and near Etaenburg runs into the Elde, which last-mentioned river runs also into the Elbe. The new town here is separated from the old by wet ditches, but is environed by the same wall. In this town also is an inspection. In 1558, Lenzen was entirely demolished by fire. In 1627, 1630, 1638, 1646, 1652, and in particular in 1703, it sustained likewise great damages by the same dreadful calamity, Over the Elbe, in this part, lies a ferry; and at this place also is established a toll on the same river.
- z. The royal prefecturate of Lenzen, which has its feat at the old fort fituate near the town, or, rather, in a building which was erected between the years 1725 and 1727, out of the stones of the old fort. To this prefecturate belongs Bakern, with other villages.

VI. Into the circle of Witftock, comprizing in it nineteen villages,

We shall take notice of,

- I. Witsteck, an immediate town, lying in a swampy bottom. Through it passes a branch of the Dosse, but that river itself runs round the town and below it receives the Glinze. At Witstock are two churches, together with a spiritual inspection. Formerly it belonged to the bishops of Havelberg, who resided in the present ruinous palace here; for which reason it belongs not to the States of the Mark, but is immediately subject to the Elector. To this town appertains the village of Rakstede, with other places.
 - 2. The royal prefecturate of Goldbeck, fituated on the river Doffe.
- 3. The royal prefecturate of Zechlin. The name of Zechlin is applied both to a village and a borough: The latter of these lies under the anthouse.

house, on the site of which formerly stood an electoral palace. Not fa from hence too is a crystal and glass-house.

VII. Into the circle of Wilfnack, comprizing in it ten villages.

In this circle we shall take notice of,

1. Wilfnack, a small town seated on the Kartau, and containing a spiritual inspection. This place, together with the villages of Legde, Great and Little Luben, and the manor of Oevelgunne appertains to the Lord of Saldern; whose seat here is called the Wudenbof. All these several places formerly belonged to the Plattenburg. Wilfnack became anciently very samous by means of a piece of superstition there, no less than three hosts being worshipped at this place, which hosts, in 1383, remained untouched in the church when it was burnt down, and upon each of them was seen a drop of blood. To these hosts numerous pilgrimages were made from the remotest countries; by which means this place rose from a village to a small town. At length the hosts, which had been so long misapplied to the purposes of superstition, were burnt in 1552 by the Lutheran preacher, foachim Ellefeldt. In 1690 this town was almost wholly consumed by fire.

2. The Plattenburg, a citadel lying on the Kartau, and formerly belonging to the bishops of Havelberg, but in 1551 was ceded by the Elector Joachim II. to Matthias of Saldern, whose posterity are still in possession thereof.

The MIDDLE-MARK.

§. 1. THIS country terminates on the Prignitz, the dutchy of Magdeburg, the Saxon electoral circle, the Lower-Lusatia, the Neumark, the Uckermark, and the dutchy of Mecklenburg. The Marggrave Albert the Bear receiving this country in inheritance of the Wendish King Bribizlaus, or Henry, it was from the town of Brandenburg stilled the Mark thereof, but afterwards by way of distinction from the Old-Mark which is situated beyond the Elbe, was named the New-Mark, which last appellation also it retained till the sisteenth century, when the name of the Neumark was peculiarly applied to that province or country now so called; whereas the country, of which we are here to treat, received the name of the Middle-Mark.

this

§. 2. The most fertile part lies in the Bruch-villages on the Oder, in the circles of Havelland and Ruppin. In these circles, as also in those of the Zauch and Niederbarnim the lands are divided according to their feveral degrees of fertility into four classes; in that of the Oberbarnim into fix, and in those of the Teltow, Lebus, Breskow and Storkow, into still a greater number. Under the King's Frederick William, and Frederick II. many marshy and unserviceable tracts in it have been greatly improved; as for instance near Kopenik, Belitz, Kapzan, Wustermark, Hoppenrade, Robrbeck, Dyratz, Lichterfelde, Prizerbe, Nauen, Ratenau, Rhinau, Neustadt on the Doffe, Schwante, Gransee, Rauschendorf, Zehlendorf, Liebenwalde, Kreutzbruch, Oranienburg, Joachimsthal, Ranft, Ilau, Buckau, Ziefar, Ludersdort, Lowenbruch, Genshagen, Vielstock, Krampfuhl, Stremmen, Wusterkausen, Werder, Protzel, Rebfeld, Geilfdorf, Hirschfeld, the Frankfurt meadows, the Arenfdorff B uch, Giesendorf, Charlottenburg, Plauen, Bagau, Markgrafpieske, Friedersdorf, Storkau, and the Bruch near Kustrin. Among these the most important improvements have been made in the Konigshorst, between Naven and Febrbellin, and the manors in the great Oderbruch, fituated betwixt Wrietzen and Kustrin. In several parts of this Mark they also apply themselves to the cultivation of vines. Near Teltow grows the favourite small turnep in great quantities. In the tracts of Zauch and Teltow likewise much millet and buckwheat is produced near Neubrandenburg, clary and woad are cultivated, and we also find here faw-wort. The culture of filk too fucceeds well here in many places. In some parts in it are confiderable heaths or woods. Near Freienwalde is a medicinal fpring. On the commons, or open fields, a traveller can hardly ride one fingle German mile without meeting with a brook, river, pond, or lake. Of the last several have a communication with rivers. The most remarkable of these is the Miggel, or Miggelsea near Kopenik, through which runs the Spree.

§. 3. In the whole Middle-Mark are towns, and about 1000 villages. The fettled nobility here are numerous. The Protestant Lutheran churches are ranged under their several inspections.

§. 4. The Middle-Mark is divided at present into eight circles, which are,

1. The circle of Havelland. This Havelland takes its name from the Havel, which furrounds it to the east, south, and west, and by means of the canal of Plan is joined to the Eibe, and by means of that of Finow to the Oder. These canals have been treated of above under the general introduction to the Mark. Through the centre of the Havelland runs the canal called the Hauptgraben, which is furnished with sluices, and not far from Spandau begins in the Havel, after which it falls into the Rhine, which divides this circle from that of Ruppin. This graben, or canal, is very commodious for the wood and other trade carried on here. Of the fruitfulness of this country mention also has been made more than once. The circle is divided into,

I. The proper Havelland, in which is,

1. Brandenburg, an immediate town, from whence the whole electorate takes us name, and which upon public and general occasions, ranks the first among the feveral towns of the Mark in giving in its vote and subscribing. It lies on the Havel, which not only divides the old and new town from each other, but also separates the fort from them both, and likewise environs the new town to the left of it with a particular trench, on which a fluice has been erected. The Wends retaining this country still in their poffession, Brandenburg in their language was called Brannibor, that is, Waldburg. Charlemagne made himself master thereof; but towards the close of the ninth century under King Arnulph the Wends recovered it again. King Henry I deprived them of it a second time by force in the year 928, abolithing their idolatrous worship which they performed to the Triglaf on the mountain of Harlung, and built thereon a church in honour of the Virgin Mary; from which time the mountain has had the name of the Marienberg. At prefent the church is no longer in being, but the mountain is planted with wines. The Emperor Otto I. in the year 949, erected a bishopric at this place. Under the Emperor Otto II. the Wends retook the town; and though towards the close of the tenth century it fell twice again into the hands of the Germans, yet it was foon after loft. In 1101 it was reduced anew by the Marggrave Luther Udo II. but came again under the power of the Wends, whose King Pribizlaus, established his residence at this place, which together with the whole country was made a donation of to the Marggrave Albert the Bear.

The old town here contains about four hundred inhabitants, and the new town about twice that number. Both these towns ever since the year 1714 have been under the direction of one magistracy. Each of them contains in it two churches. At the head-church of the new town resides the superintendent of the spiritual inspection of this place. The building which formerly served as the bishop's seat, and stood in the old town, was conferred in 1561, by the electoral Prince John George, as administrator of the bishopric, on a branch of the samily of Bardeleben, who disposed of it in 1567 to Matthias of Saldern, and by the widow of the latter it was allotted in 1569 for a town-school, which is still called the Salderish-school. In the new town is also a Latin school. At Brandenburg likewise is a small colony of French Calvinists, together with a manufacture of cloth, sustian, and canvas. In this town too is carried on a good trade and navigation, and on the Havel at this place a toll is established.

The fort here looks like a fuburb. In it lies the cathedral church, as also the residences of the greatest part of the members of the chapter, and a riding-school, in which young noblemen are instructed. Under bishop

Matthias

Matthias of Ingau the Protestant doctrine and worship were introduced into the chapter. After his death Duke Joachim of Munsterberg was elected bisshop in the year 1546, and he dying the electoral Prince John George took upon him the administration of the bishopric, which, on his entering upon the electoral dignity in 1571, was last of all assumed by the electoral Prince Joachim Frederick. The chapter, however, has been kept up, and consists ever since the year 1568 of seven persons, who are the provost, the dean, the senior, the sub-senior, and three other canons. King Frederick II. in 1755 conferred upon it a peculiar distinction and chapter-cross of gold enamelled with violet, and terminating in eight points. The chapter is possessed besides of the great and small Domkietz near the town, as also of the villages of Barnewitz, Buckau, Butzau, Damme, Graningen, Muzelitz, Garlitz, Marzahn, Tremmen, Zacho, Schmerzke and Saringen; together with the manors of Sehlensdorf, Kiek, Feldmark, Gapel, Mutzau, Muggenburg and Grabau.

Near the old town is a lake, the length of which is estimated at two German miles.

2. Potsdam, an immediate town seated on an island formed by the Havel and some neighbouring lakes, and being about four German miles in circuit. It appears from records that Potsdam was in being so early as the eighth century. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries it was but a mean place, and belonged to the family of Rochau, who ceded it in 1416 to the electoral house. The Elector Frederick William made it his pleasurefeat, and in 1662 built the castle here, which was afterwards enlarged by King Frederick I. and adorned with a fine portal. King Frederick William began to make some very costly additions to the town; for which purpose he caused several morasses to be filled up and built upon, and a canal of fifty paces wide and 2000 in length to be carried on out of the Havel through the center of the town to a branch again of the same river. This canal is planted on both fides with trees, and environed with well built houses. The town itself is divided into the old and new, and the Friederichsladt, to which also belongs the Bodengraft. King Frederick II. has raised the castle one story, enlarged it with two wings, and adorned it with magnificent apartments. The old houses in the neighbourhood of the castle are pulled down, and instead of them new, regular, and grand buildings have been raifed for the owners at the King's expence. Before the castle is a large place or fquare adorned with Roman columns, in which the foldiers that lie here in garrison are daily exercised. The pleasure-garden adjoining to the castle is beautifully adorned with hedges, water-works, gildings and statues. In the market-place is erected a pyramidal obelisk of four sides, which are composed of variegated Silesian marble, and is seventy-five seet in height. On each fide stands a marble bust of the Kings from Frederick I. The pedestal of it is of white Italian marble, and at each to Frederick II. Vol. V. 4 P corner corner is a small statue of the same. The town-church, which stands not far from the castle, is a fine structure. The garrison-church here is large, and has a marble pulpit, under which lies the monument of King Frederick William. In the lofty and beautiful tower of this church is placed a very fine and accurate fet of chimes. The French church here is a neat building, ornamented with a cupola. The church of the Holy Ghoft has also a lofty tower toit. The council-house is a new building, having a fine cupola. In the large orphan-house, which was founded in 1724, are maintained, brought up and educated above 2000 foldiers children of both fexes. Belonging to it is one Lutheran and one Calvinist preacher. To this foundation is annexed the neighbouring village of Bornstadt, together with the gold and filver manufacture, and the magazine at Berlin. The foundery for arms here is important. We find likewise in this town a velvet and filk manufactory, as also other manufactures and fabrics. In it too ordinarily refide the King's guards, both horse and foot, with other battalions, by way of garrifon. The stalls for the horses of the former is a spacious, regular, and beautiful building.

Near the town are numbers of vineyards, on the planting of which the Elector Frederick William caused the layers to be brought out of the best wine-countries. In the park, which is intersected with vistas in form of a ftar, ftands a royal hunting-house called the Star.

Not far also from the town is

Sans Souci', a royal pleasure-palace, which presents the eye with a remarkable fine prospect. King Frederick II. soon after his accession to the crown caused this palace to be erected on a desolate mountain in a very ingenious, fine, and grand taste both within and without. This mountain is cut into fix terraffes, to each of which we ascend by twelve steps, and against the walls upon each terrass are planted the best vine-stocks, which are kept under glass-cases. On the upper-part of the mountain, whence we have a most agreeable view of the town and its adjacent territories, stands the palace, which is indeed but small and only one story high, yet on account of its regularity, elegancy and ornaments, confifting of the greatest master-pieces in sculpture, painting, and the other arts, is admirable. The statues from the cabinet of antiquities, which was formerly in the possession of the cardinal Polignac, are likewise to be seen here. In the center too of this palace is a round hall lined with marble, which by means of its magnificent columns, excellent paintings, and the beauty of its floor, the marble of which is disposed in the form of flowers after the Florentine manner, strikes the eye very agreeably. On the top of it is a cupola, which supplies it abundantly with light. One of the apartments in this palace is wainfcotted with cedar, ornamented with foliage of gold, and in this apartment is kept a fmall library. Behind the palace is a covered femicircular micircular passage, adorned on each fide with columns; besides which the palace is surrounded also on three sides of it with fine gardens.

3. Werder, a small town seated on an island, or Werder, in the midst of the Havel, and having but one access to it, and that by means of a bridge.

4. Spandau, a town which is indeed not large, but thriving and well inhabited. It stands on the Havel, by the several branches of which it is also surrounded, and at the gate of Streso here, that river receives into it the Spree. In the town is a correction and spinning-house. Before it, in that part where the Spree runs into the Havel stands a fort, which, as well on account of its works as of the rivers and morasses around it, is a place of very considerable strength. Near it too, since the year 1722, an excellent soundery for arms has been established. The Elector George William was obliged in 1631 to cede this fortress to the Swedes, who resigned it again in 1634.

5. Nauen, a town, which fince the fires it has suffered by in 1414, 1513, 1570, 1626, 1696, 1743, has been almost entirely built anew. This place is famous for its agriculture and its breed of cattle.

6. Rateno, a town feated on the Havel, from which a canal is drawn round the old town quite to that river, and lined with free-stone. This canal is furnished with fluices, through which all vessels are to pass on payment of a certain toll. The town itself contains in it to the number of fix hundred fire-places, and is divided into the old and new. The latter of these was founded about the year 1730, and adorned with very grand houses, in which divers noble families reside. In 1675 the Elector Frederick William surprized the Swedish regiment of colonel Wangelin at this place, part of whom were cut to pieces, and the rest with their colonel made prifoners. In 1738 the Land-states, at the expence of upwards of 16000 rixdollars, erected a grand stone monument in the new town to the honour of this great elector; on which monument he is represented standing, with four prisoners of a gigantic fize at his feet. On the four sides of the sedestal are some German inscriptions relative to the above-mentioned happy furprizal of the Swedes at this place, and their defeat near Febrbellin and Warschau, as also to the taking of the fortress of Stralfund in 1678. In 1576 and 1591 this town was almost wholly destroyed by fire.

7. The prefecturate of Oranienburg; to which belongs Oranienburg, formerly called Botzau, a small town seated on the Havel, with a considerable citadel belonging to it. The Marggrave John ceded this place and its presecturate in 1439 to the samily of Arnim, which continued in possession of them both for several years, till they purchased their redemption. The Elector Frederick William likewise erected a considerable citadel here, which in honour of his consort Louisa, Princess of Orange, he named Oranienburg; and this name the town also has from that time obtained. King Frederick I.

4 P 2

caused the citadel to be enlarged and beautified, and King Frederick II. made a donation of the town and presecturate to his brother Augustus William Prince of Prussia. The above-mentioned Electoress Louisa founded an orphan-house here, the children in which are well brought up. In 1590 and 1671 this place was destroyed by fire.

Havelhausen, a manor.

The mills and villages of Lenzen, Schmachtenhagen, Gerbendorf, Pausin, Barnecko, and Eickstadt.

8. The royal prefecturate of Vehlefanz.

9. That of BERGE.

10. To the royal prefecturate of ZIEGESAR, which occurs under the circle of Zauch, belongs.

Prezerbe, a small town, of about one hundred and twenty fire places, and fituated on the Havel.

Ketzin, a thriving borough, feated in a very fertile spot on the same river.

11. The royal prefecturate of Potsdam, which has its feat in the above described town, and to which belong the manors of Gelto and Pirschheide, with several villages.

12. The royal prefecturate of FAHRLAND.

- 13. The royal prefecturate of Spando, in the above described town of that name.
- 14. Plauen, a small town and citadel, seated on the Havel, which at this place spreads itself into a great lake, called the lake of Plauen. In this town was a porcelain manufacture. Plauen, together with the villages belonging thereto, as also the citadel, and a share in the above-described little town of Prezerbe, and a village of Kutzko in the territory of Magdeburg, was obtained in part by Curt of Arnim, in the year 1577, in lieu of his share in the Biesenthal, and partly also purchased of Werner, a noble of Plotho; whose son Leonard of Arnim disposed of all these considerable estates in the year 1610 to Christopher of Gorne for the sum of 80000 dollars. The Lords of Gorne are still in possession of this little town, and likewise of the places of Briest and Niezahn.
- 2. Into the Glin, a little country of about fixteen villages. To it belongs, Cremmen, a small town, containing about three hundred fire-places. The King enjoys the jurisdiction at this place in common with the Lords of Reder, and those of Lutke, Pful, and Haake, so that the King is possessed of fixteen, and the nobles together of eight shares therein. The town itself is old, and of it mention is made so early as the twelsth century. The Lords of Bredo had one of their three original seats at this place. In 1331 the Marggrave Lewis sought with ill success here against the Dukes of Pomerania; but in 1413 the Elector Frederick I. won a battle at this place against the same Dukes, assisted by those of Quitzo.

3. Into the little country of Bellin, a great part of which belonged to the at present extinct family of that name. In this county lies Febrbellin, a small town, seated on the Rhin, over which is a passage at this place. This town is properly called Bellin, and was the original seat of the samily of that name, but from the ferry, which formerly wasted passengers here over the Rhin, it has been called Febrbellin. In the year 1616 instead of this ferry a bridge was erected here. At this place also is a royal presecturate-office, together with a spiritual inspection. In 1675 the Elector Frederick William with 6000 horse only deseated 13,000 Swedes at this place, who were under the conduct of General Wrangel: Together with nine villages, which are partly royal, and partly noble.

4. Into the little country of Friefack, in which is Friefack, a small town, under the jurisdiction of the Lords of Brede, who have one of their three original seats at this place. In the fourteenth and sisteenth centuries Friefack was a strong free-booting citadel, possessed by the family of Quitzau.

Together with fix villages, which almost all of them belong to the family of Bredau.

5. Into the little country of Rhino, in which is

Rhino, a small town, taking its name from the river Rhin, and standing under the jurisdiction of the Lords of Haagen:

Together with eleven villages, belonging to the same noble family.

6. Into the prefecturate of Konigshorst, which was formerly a moraffy and unpaffable wood fituated between Febrbellin and Nauen. This wood was five German miles in length, and between one and one and a half broad. King Frederick William, between the years 1719 and 1738, under the inspection of the supreme ranger, the Baron of Hartefeld, alfisted by the skilful architect, war and domain counsellor Stolzen, caused it to be rendered capable of improvement; that is to fay, feveral ditches were made here, eighteen perches in breadth, the water carried off, and trees and shrubs grubbed up, on which occasion great quantities of amber, and at a depth of fourteen feet whole trees of oak were found. To the great expence, which this undertaking produced, the possessions of the several meadows adjoining thereto, were all, without distinction, obliged to contribute fomewhat. Upon that this tract of land was converted into a royal prefecturate called Konigsborst. It consists mostly of low lands, and a little agriculture, which is productive of rye, barley, oats, and buckwheat, but principally yields excellent passurage and breeds of cattle, and fince the year 1752 has also had a stud of the finest outlandish horses. The fix manors here of the Lobe of Sund, the Nordhof, the Teutschof, the Kubborst, the Kienberg, and the Hartefeld are filled with the finest Holland, East-Friese. land, Holstein, Lithuanian, and Pomeranian cows, and the management of them given to Dutch farmers. We meet in this tract with milk, butter, and cheese of the finest fort; and numbers of oxen and sheep are also fattened here. In 1737 a church was built at this place.

7. In the circle of Havelland are, exclusive of the above-mentioned places, many others belonging to nobles, as for instance, Badingen, Great and Little-Bahnitz, Bamme, Beszin, Bucho, Buschko, Carpzo, Dalgo, Dechto, Dobritz, Duratz, Eutz, Faikenerde, Fargeser, Ferbitz, Gersdorf, Glienicke, Gorz, Gutenbahren, Hirschfeld, Ketzner, Koschko, Lenzke, Leutzke, Lino, Lowenberg, Markee, Marquard, Neuhausen, Paretz, Parey, Priort, Retzo, Ribbeck, Riwend, Schonaich, Schonwalde, Segeseld, Selblang, Semlen, Sotzker, Wilmersdorf, Witzke, and Great-Ziethen.

II. The circle of Niederbarnim, which comprizes in it eighty-five villages.

and contains,

1. Berlin, the capital of the whole royal Prussian and electoral Brandenburg territories, and likewife one of the largest, finest, and most populous towns in all Germany, and even one of the principal in Europe, being the refidence of the royal and electoral house, as also of the supreme and some other high colleges, and confifting properly of five towns, which agreeably to the consents of the privileges of King Frederick William of 1714, are stiled the royal residence-towns, and united under one town-council. They have also their peculiar suburbs; and in Berlin too are divers fine palaces, with other beautiful and grand buildings. Its streets likewise are for the most part broad and straight, and some of them very long and grand. There are also several large and beautiful places or squares here, together with pleasant walks, and twenty-five churches, fourteen of which are Lutheran, eleven Calvinist, and one Roman-catholic; an academy of sciences, an academy of arts and painting, a Collegium Anatomico-chirurgicum, five gymnasia, two public libraries, many excellent and important manufactures and fabrics, and it is a feat likewite for the fine arts. Its circuit is not less than that of Paris. In 1755 there were reckoned here 5826 houses, and, including the garrison, with the wives and children belonging thereto, 126,661 persons, among whom were 6541 French, 1253 Bohemians, 2595 Jews, and 26,325 foldiers, having wives and children. Its police is in divers respects excellent. It lies on the Spree, which passes through it in two principal branches, and separates Coln from Berlin, New Coln from the Old Coln, and the Friderichswerder from this last. The excise here amounts annually to be between four and five tons of gold.

With respect to the five residentiary towns of which this capital is com-poied, these are, first

The proper Berlin, which according to differtation of the supreme consistorial counsellor Suszmileh, was first, that is to say, in the twelfth century, under the Marggrave Albert the Bear, built by some Germans, or by the colonists invited thither from the Netherlands and the Rhine, and from a dam laid in the Spree, which is still in being, for the keeping up or turning off of the water, which was anciently called Bar and Berlin, came to be named to dem Berlin, or fimply Berlin, and foon after was pitched upon for the marggraval refidence, and endowed likewife with many and very important privileges, among which in particular was that of coining. It was deprived of its conflitution which nearly approached to that of a republic by the Elector Frederick I. on account of its commotions and rebellions. In this town are thirty-nine streets. In the fine King's street here is feen the council-house, at which the town-council of the five feveral refidentiary-towns affemble, as also the governor's house. The hospital and church of the Holy Ghost here are old buildings. In the street which has its name therefrom is the Yoachimsthal gymnasium of the Calvinists, which takes its name from the town of "foachimsthal, in which it was founded by the Elector Joachim Frederick, and confecrated in 1607, but removed hither in 1685. To it belongs the prefecturate of Dambeck in the Old-Mark, together with those of Seehausen, Blankenburg, Joachimsthal, and Neuendorf in the Uckermark, and other estates. In this gymnasium also a Seminarium theologicum has been founded. In the Spandau street here lies the magnificent garrifon-church, which was dedicated in 1722. the Lutheran parish-church of St. Nicolas is a provostship. In the great provincial house at certain times the province of the Mark of Brandenburg affembles yearly, and the provincial treasurer resides constantly therein. In the Heydereuter street is the synagogue of the Yews. The new market is the largest and most regular in all Berlin. In it stands the Lutheran parishchurch of St. Mary. At the corner of the Rose-street lies the new Mainguard. In the Cloy/ter-/trect is the Calvinist parish-church, which was dedicated in 1703, together with the new French church confecrated in 1726, and the Kornmesser or Calvinist orphan-house. The royal magazine hard-by was anciently the electoral burg or fort. In it is kept a great quantity of rough Mark wool, which is divided among poor manufacturers; but on the other hand the stuffs made from it are delivered in there again, after which they are died and disposed of to the merchants. The minister of state, namely, John Andrew Kraut, first projected this foundation, and in 1723 the whole arrangement was refigned to the great orphan-house at Potsdam. The Lutheran gymnasium at Berlin lies in what was formerly a Franciscan cloyfter, the church belonging to which, otherwise called the church in the gray cloyfter, also adjoins to it. In the Stralau-street stands the large and fine Frederick's hospital, in which above eight hundred children receive instruction gratis. This hospital has a church of its own, belonging to which is both a Lutheran and a Calvinist preacher. The building which formerly ferved for the commandant's house, and was situate in a bulwark or bastion, is now the feat of an excellent porcelain manufacture, which is the property of its projector the rich merchant Wegelin. The porcelain made therein is considerable whiter than the Milman, and also full as good, but equals equals it not hitherto in its paintings. At the King's gate is kept the court of the cadets, in which the whole numerous body of that order refide, board, and are inftructed in all noble exercises, it being an admirable nurfery for the army. At the Stralau gate within the bulwark, lies the new and confiderable royal victualing-office. Between the King's and the Spandau gate is also another victualing-house.

The suburbs of this town are frequently, though errroneously, stiled the Konig fladt, but by others are divided into three viertels or quarters. quarters are 1. The Konig sviertel, which consists of eighteen streets. it is the church of St. George with a hospital. 2. The Spandau viertel, which is also called the Sophiensladt, and contains in it twenty-four streets. In this quarter is a Lutheran and French church. In the Friderichstadt lies the sumptuous garden of Count Reussen. In the Oranienburg-street lies the garden in which the confort of King Frederick William formerly refided, and which was called Monbijon. The building belonging to it consists indeed but of one story, yet is very fine and pleasant. Before the Spandau gate is the Charité allotted by King Frederick William for the use of the poor, fick, and infirm, in which also has been erected a school for midwifery. This quarter contains one Calvinist and one Lutheran preacher. Stralau Viertel confisting of thirteen streets. At the Kraut's street herein lies what was formerly Kraut's, but afterwards the excellent garden of Count Haack. In this quarter are two other remarkable gardens; namely, that of the house of Belvedere, and that of the Kraus garden. Before the Stralau gate stands a sugar refinery. Before the Oranienburg gate is the large and grand invalid-house, which King Frederick II. caused to be erected and confecrated in 1748. On it is the following inscription: viz. Læ/o & invicto Militi; and in it dwell fix hundred foldiers and thirteen officers, who, together with their wives and children amount to about 1000 fouls. Each foldier, exclusive of his mounting guard, has every fifth day fix ggr. in money, and seven pounds of bread, and exclusive of lodging, is likewise supplied gratis with fuel. At each end of this great building is a small church, one for the Lutherans the other for Roman-catholics.

A principal arm of the Spree runing between the proper Berlin and Coln, fome bridges have therefore been laid over it. Of these the principal is the long bridge which leads from the above-mentioned King's-street to the citadel square, being lined on the outside with a most beautiful free-stone and consisting of five arches. This bridge is one hundred and sixty feet long, and ornamented with an excellent metal statue, representing the great Elector Frederick William.

Coln on the Spree was probably, as well as Berlin, built in the time of the Marggrave Albert the Bear by the Netherlandists and Nether-Renish colonists, and perhaps also by those that came thither from the quarter of Cologne. It was formerly a separate town, and had also its own walls and gates, but these on the enlargement of the town were gradually pulled down. The Spree environs it with two of its branches, thereby forming it into an island. It lies indeed properly in the circle of Teltau, but is most conveniently $d\varepsilon$ fcribed here. In it are twenty-five streets. As we come out of Berlin over the long-bridge, the first remarkable thing we meet with here, is the citadel-square, and therein the very grand and internally magnificent royal palace, which, reckoning from the ground, is four fories high. This palace is not throughout of one regular and uniform plan, the feveral Electors, down from Joachim II. having made additional buildings thereto. King Frederick I. however, is to be considered the principal founder of it, and had not death cut him off in the midft of his plan, this building would have exceeded all other European royal palaces whatever in extent and magnificence. The State and other chambers here, in which the royal personages reside, are ornamented with excellent paintings and sumptuous tapeftry in the most beautiful manner, and in particular with such a quantity of gold and filver furniture as is not to be met with in any European court. For other matters we find also in this palace the royal cabinet of artificial and natural curiofities, together with the palace-difpensary, and the royal library. Not far from it too flands the new and magnificent Calvinist cathedral church, which was dedicated in 1750, but is too low. In the vault beneath it are the burying-places for the royal and electoral corps. The broad-street here is really of confiderable breadth, and ornamented with magnificent and fumptuous buildings, among which are the royal stables. Hard by it lies the new riding-academy. At St. Peter's church is a provostship, and not far from it the Coln, or Petrin gymnasium, which is Lutheran. The Coln market is decorated with grand houses. The Friderichsgraft and the New Stechbahn boast likewise fine houses, of which numbers also are to be feen in other parts of this town. The Mublendamm lies just in the centre between Berlin and Coln, and near the adjoining grand and very profitable royal mills, which stand under an amt-office of their own, runs the great road from Berlin to Coln.

New-Coln is now become a confiderable part of the old town of Coln, from which it is separated by the Spree, and confists of about four streets, which lie along the rampart and the Spree. In that called the Rampart-street are some excellent houses, as also the Salzbof, where the staple of the salt from Halle is kept, which salt is exported from hence to the other royal territories by means of the new canal and the Oder. In this part likewise is the house and observatory of the late privy-counsellor Bernhard Frederick of Krosigk. In the sugar-refinery, which was sounded not far from the bridge on the Spree by the celebrated Splitgerber the increhant, out of one cast of six pans 12,000 lb. weight of sugar are made, and the 100,000 earthen sugar-loaf moulds necessary to each refinery are constructed here by a master and sixteen journeymen. In this sugar-house, and in that also Vol. V.

before the Stralau-gate, as much sugar is prepared, as is sufficient to supply the whole Pruffian countries.

The Coln suburbs lie in a fine and pleasant spot and a fruitful plain, confisting of some streets, as also of many gardens and some arable land, which will in time be cultivated. Those suburbs were in 1736 inclosed within the outer wall.

Before the Kopenick-gate lie the Kopenick-suburbs, which have their own Lutheran church. The council's farm here stands very pleasantly, commanding a fine prospect quite round it, particularly along the Spree.

The Friderichswerder was built by the Elector Frederick William on a fwampy werder, or island, and consists of nineteen streets, among which that called the Leipzig-street is principally to be remarked, and does great credit to the town. The Lutheran church here with the hospital of St. Gertrude were rebuilt anew in 1744. In the Frederick-street lies what is called the Prince's house, being a very fine building. The two head teachers of the gymr.asium in the Friderichswerder are alternately Lutheran and Calvinist. With this gymnasium is united the school of Friderickstadt. The German church here is made use of both by the Lutherans and Calvinists, the forenoon service on every other Sunday being performed therein by the latter, and that in the afternoon by the former. This building is only parted by a wall from the principal French church. Not far from the fluice here lies the staple for the excellent mirrors cast near Neusladt on the Dose, in which are to be found pieces from ninety to a hundred inches. At present this work and magazine is possessed by the royal privy military counsellor Krug of Nidda. The new mint is a fine stone building two stories in height. The sluice here is built of freestone on a beautiful and durable model, and promotes the navigation on the Spree. The bridge laid over it leads to the Packhof, where all goods and wares of the merchants are unladen which come either by land or water. At the same place also the excise and toll is collected by the King's officers, but the cellerage there by the magistrate to whom it belongs. In the great Jager-street here lies the royal hunting-house. In the market is a German and a French church. The royal arienal is a large, excellent, grand, well furnished, and extremely well disposed building, having scarce its equal. The royal foundery fronts one fide of it towards the rampart, and in the bulwark to the right hand of this foundery, towards Dorotheenstadt, lies the laboratory. Over against the arsenal is the palace of the Prince of Prussia. In the staple -rampart-street stands also the French council-house, at which not only the court-days are held, but the place likewise where the supreme French directory, the supreme tribunal, and supreme consistory assemble. street too lies the French college, which was founded in 1689.

The Dorotheenstadt, or Neustadt, was founded by the Elector Frederick William, and named after his confort. It lies between the Fridericks-

werder, the Friderichstadt, the park, and the Spree, being indeed not large but pleafantly fituated, and confifting of fix streets, which are regularly laid out and ornamented with fine and grand houses. The palace here of Prince Henry Lewis is a fumptuous building. The King's stables form a large and grand structure. In the second story of its fore-building was formerly held the academy for arts and painting, which was founded in 1692 by the Elector Frederick III. but at prefent this academy have their meetings in a private house, the fore-part of these stables having been burnt down in 1743, though fince rebuilt and allotted to the use of the academy of sciences, which was founded by King Frederick I. in the year 1700, as a fociety for the improvement of the same, but by King Frederick II. has been converted into an academy. This academy is divided into four By the members of it is composed the calendar for the royal countries, which brings in yearly to the academy between 10 and 12,000 rix-It contains also a library and a cabinet of medals. In this forepart too of the stables are found the observatory and the anatomical theatre. for the greater improvement of which a Collegium Profession Medico-chirurgicum has likewise been founded here. In a part also of the second wing of the stables has been established a fine tapestry manufacture. Opposite to them stands the palace of the Marggrave of Swedt, and between that and the Spree lies the royal building-yard. The lime-row is a great addition to the beauty of the Dorotheenstadt. It is nearly 1200 paces in length, and ferves as a walk. The opera-house too here is a magnificent building, founded by King Frederick II. in 1743, and by the same monarch extremely well laid out both within and without. On it is the following inscription, viz. Fredericus rex Apollini & Musis. The adjoining Roman-catholic church, which is dedicated to St. Hedervig, is a fine building constructed after the model of the Maria rotunda at Rome. In that which was formerly the park are very pleasant walks, together with alleys, and a labyrinth. In the church at the Dorotheenstadt the Lutherans and Calvinifis preach alternately, and as foon as their public worship is over the French likewise begin theirs.

The Friderichstadt was founded by the Elector Frederick III. immediately on his accession to the government. It exceeds the four other residentiary-towns in largeness, as consisting of twenty-three streets, which with one another are six perches wide, being likewise straight, and all extremely well built. The Friderich-street is one straight line a quarter of a German mile in length, and those of the Leipzig and marggrave-streets are yet longer. The former of these, which is also called the Possam-street, has not its equal, being ornamented with grand and magnificent buildings, among which the palace of the Count of Reuszen is particularly to be remarked. The number of sine and sumptuous houses and palaces in the Wilbelms-street is very great. In a fine building too in the same street is the gold and filver manufacture, belonging to the great orphan-house at Potsdam. On the Wilhelm's market stands the grand palace of the order of St. John, in which also the master resides. The Lime-street is finely paved, and planted with a double row of limes. In these streets stands the magnificent college to which in 1735 were removed the tribunal, the chambercourt and confiftory. The Jerusalem church, and the new church (which is likewise called the Market and Frederick's church) together with that of the Holy Trinity, are occupied and used in common by the Lutherans and Calvinifis. The schools founded at the church of the Trinity by the supreme confistorial counsellor John Julius Hecker, and which confist of a German, a Latin and a real-school, are all grand and eminent. Those Bohemians of the Protestant Lutheran religion, who in 1720 emigrated out of their own country, and at first settled themselves at Great-Hennersdorf in Upper-Lusatia, but after the year 1732 came here, are possessed of a church of their own called Betblebem, and in this church not only the Bobemian but German also is preached. A part of these Bobemians too are come over to the Calvinist church, and have procured a preacher of their own. In this part likewise stands a French church.

Without the walls by which the Friderichstadt is environed, and about a quarter of a German mile from the town towards the village of Schonberg, on the road to Potsdam, lies the hop, or physical-garden, which belongs to the royal academy of sciences.

The speedy and great encrease which this metropolis has experienced under the government of the Elector Frederick William is aftonishing. Before the year 1645 in Berlin and Coln (of both which towns only this capital at that time confifted) were but 1236 houses. In 1662 the Frid richswerder was begun to be built. In 1681 and 1683 orders were issued for building New-Coln. In 1674 letters of freedom were granted for the erection of the Dorotheenstadt, and in 1691 permission likewise given for building the Friderichstadt. The suburbs before the Kopenick, the Spandau, the King's, and the Stralau gates were about the same time built by degrees. In 1747 there were reckoned in the five refidentiary towns here and their fuburbs 5513 houses, and in 1755, as has been already observed above, 5826. Till 1690 there were about 14,000 persons in Berlin, but in 1747 its inhabitants were computed at 106,969, and in 1755 at 126,661, including the garrison. This great encrease received its rise with the arrival here of the Calstinist French, who have also brought manufactures and trade into great credit. In 1755 there were in this city no less than 443 filk looms one hundred and forty-nine of half-filks, two thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight of woollen-stuffs, four hundred and fifty-three of cotton, two hundred and forty-eight of linen, four hundred and fifty-four of lace-work. thirty-nine for filk and three hundred and ten for the manufacture of woollen stockings. The academy established here for the improvement of arts and painting has furnished these several towns with numbers of great artists in all sorts of ingenious devices. The large quantity of the productions of art, manusactures, and fabrics in this city supply it with a very considerable and advantageous trade. In 1757 a straggling party of Austrians made an irruption into the suburbs of the Kopenick, and extorted from the inhabitants to the amount of 200,000 rixdollars.

In the quarter of Berlin are some pleasure-houses, among which is Schonbausen, properly called Lower-Schonbausen, a pleasure-house of the consort of King Frederick II. This house lies about half a German mile from Berlin, on the river Panko, which supplies the fine pond in the sumptuous garden here with water. In the reign of King Frederick I. a new canal was laid out at this place, and surnished with sluices, in order to afford a passage by water to Berlin and Charlottenburg; but the wind having driven great quantities of sand into it this canal is again fallen to ruin.

Rosenthal, a pleasure-house, lying near the foregoing.

Malcho, a village, containing a fine house and garden founded by Paul von Fuchs, but after his death purchased by King Frederick I. who sometimes also resided in it. On the death of the latter the Marggrave Christian Lewis became possessed thereof.

Friderichsfelde, which lies about half a German mile from Malcho, a pleasure-house, founded by the minister of state Joachim Ernest of Grunko. The Marggrave Albert Frederick used to reside in this house, after whom it was possessed by his son the Marggrave Frederick Charles.

2. Berno, a small town in which is a little colony of Calvinist French. In the years 1638 and 1639 the Swedes distinguished themselves by their ill behaviour at this place. Its beer is peculiarly esteemed.

3. The royal prefecturate of LAHMEN.

4. That of Mullenbeck.

5. That of Schonebeck, containing large heaths and fine hunting-grounds; on which account King Frederick William used to amuse himself yearly at these parts, particularly in hunting the wild boar.

6. The town and royal prefecturate of LIEBENWALDE, which were possessed by the Lords of Arnim till the year 1413, when they were redeemed by the then supreme administrator of the electoral Mark, and afterwards by the Elector Frederick I.

Liebenwalde is a small town seated on the Havel, and in it the above defcribed canal of Finow commences.

7. The following noble places and estates; namely, Birkholz, Blumberg, Ballendorf, Bornicke, Buch, Caro, Eiche, Falkenberg, Fredersdorf, Gliemke, Heesen, Lanke, Liebenberg, Prenden, Schonslies, Schonhausen, Stolpe, Taszdorf, Vogelstorf, Utzdorf and Wartenberg.

III. Into the circle of Oberbarnim, which comprizes in it ninety-two villages, and contains,

1. Brietzen, also called Wrietzen, the capital thereof situated not far from the Oder, on which a toll is collected at this place. Brietzen is also the feat of a spiritual inspection. In 1433 this town was entirely reduced to ashes by the Hussites. In 1663 it suffered great damage by fire, and in 1664 was almost destroyed again by the same dreadful calamity.

2. Strausberg, a town, taking its name from the little lake of Straus near it, the length of which is computed at full a quarter of a German mile. In this lake are fish of a very good flavour. The inhabitants are for the most part clothiers, and supply a great part of the army with bays. At this place is also a spiritual inspection. In the year 1402 it was burnt by the Pomeranians and Quitzauens. In 1521 it likewise suffered by fire.

3. Neustadt-Eberswalde, a town seated on the river and canal of Fino, Fine, or Vine, of which an account has been already given. Cn it at this place is a lock of freestone for the navigation of boats, and fluice-tolls are also paid here. The town itself consists of two parts, of which that lying towards the hill of Drachenkopf, and containing in it the church and town-house, is called Eberswalde; the name of that on the Fian is Neustadt. In the year 1751 King Frederick II. at his own expence, built a particular fuburb of eighty houses for the accommodation of such cutlers as should come and settle here. At the Unterthor the Finow is joined by the Schwarze.

A little way off too at Hegermuble are copper and tin-works. The copper worked in these is not the product of the Mark, but is brought from Rothenburg in the circles of Saal in the dutchy of Magdeburg. Here are also brass-works with two foundaries for black and white tin-plates, and an iron and wire forge, all which feveral works lie on the Finow.

4. The royal prefecturate of BIESENTHAL, which formerly belonged to the Arnim family, who were in possession of one half thereof before the year 1427, and in that year made an absolute purchase of the other half from Matthias of Uchtenhagen. But in 1577 the Sovereign conferred some other lands on the above-mentioned family in lieu of the faid prefecturate. In it is,

1. Biesenthal, a small town having a castle. This town lies on the Fino, which at this place first receives that name, and takes its rise out of some marshes in these parts, but more particularly out of four lakes.

2. The villages of Rudenitz, Danewitz, Schopfurt and Freudenburg, together with,

5. Oderberg,

- 5. Oderberg, a town lying on the Oder, and defended by a fort fituated on an island, on which the Swedes made two fruitless assaults in 1637 and 1639, but in the first of these assaults succeeded so far as to lay the town in ashes.
 - 6. The town and prefecturate of Freienwalde, containing,
- 1. Freienwalde, a small town seated on the Oder, and at which a toll is paid. At this place likewise is a serry leading to the Middle-Mark. Frienwalde sormerly belonged to the Uchtenhagen samily. In a pleasant valley at a little distance from the town is a medicinal spring, which has been in great reputation ever since the year 1684, and near it is a lodging-house for gentry and another for the poor. On the Marien plain, which lies without the town, betwixt the hills of Marien and Schlosze are some alumworks which ever since the year 1738 have belonged to the great orphanhouse at Possidam, and surnish almost all the King's dominions with that commodity.

Obs. Under Frederick II. a winding tract of land on the Oder was cut through, and thereby a morass five or six miles in circuit rendered arable, so as to afford subsistence at present for 1200 families.

2. Sonnenburg, a farm.

7. The prefecturate of FRIEDLAND, which was originally a convent belonging to the family of Robel, of whom it was purchased by the Marggrave Albert Frederick, whose son the Marggrave Frederick Charles Albert is the present owner of it.

8. The royal prefecturate of OLD-LANDSBERG, in which is,

I. Old-Landsberg, a small town, having a castle. In the year 1709: King Frederick I. purchased this place of Count Schwerin, and conferred it as a dowery on his third confort. Its former name of New-Schwerin is now out of use.

2. Krummensee, a farm.

9. The royal prefecturate of Rudersdorf.

10. The following villages and noble estates; viz. Bazello, Bedicke, Biefdorf, Bollersdorf, Bretzel, Bruno, Great and Little-Bucko, Dalewitz, Danneberg, Frankenfeld, Garzin, Garzo, Gielsdorf, Gruno, Grunthal, Harnekopf, Haselberg, Hasenholz, Hohen-Fino, Ilo, Kothen, Kunersdorf, Lickterfelde, Ludersdorf, Mogelin, Ranst, Reichenberg, Schonfeld, Schulzendorf, Sommerseld, Steinberg, Sydo, Tempelselde, Torno, Trampo, Weeso, Weissensey, Wilkendorf and Woelseckendorf.

IV. The circle of Lebus, containing ninety-four villages.

In this circle is,

i. Frankfurt on the Oder, the seventh of the eight principal cities in the whole Mark, being finely fituated on the river from which it takes its furname. Exclusive of the cathedral or church of St. Mary here, the head of which is also inspector of the ecclesiastical inspection in these parts, in this town likewise is the Unterkirche, near which once stood a Franciscan monastery, together with the church of St. Nicolas where the Calvinists have their meetings. The university here was founded by the Elector Yeachim I, and his brother Albert, and in 1506 was confecrated. The professors in this university are partly Calvinist and partly Lutheran. In the great college here lies the university library and a physic-garden. The university is the proprietor of the villages of Schleusz and Rox in the Old Mark, and likewise of the revenues belonging to the suppressed foundation of the cathedral of the Stendal. In the bishop's palace, which is so called because once belonging to the bishops of Lebus, the Elector Frederick William in 1671 founded an academy for the martial exercises. Exclusive too of the Lutheran free-school here, in this town is also another for Calvinis called Frederick's school, together with two suburbs named the Guben and the Lebus, in each of which is a church. On the other fide of the bridge leading over the Oder lies the dam which is built on, but the fort erected there in 1663 has been razed. Frankfurt was anciently a Hanfe-town.

The corporation is possessed of the villages of Schwet.

2. Mulrose, in ancient records stiled Melrasen and Melrase, a small town deriving its charter from the Marggrave Otho, which charter was confirmed in 1275, with additions, by his sons the Marggraves Otho and Albert. Mulrose stands on a lake from whence the canal made between the years 1662 and 1668, and of which an account has been already given, run on both sides, so as to open a communication between the Oder and the Spree, by the sormer of which it is joined at the village of Wriezig and by the latter in the Werchen lake at Neuenbause.

3. Munchelberg, a town, to which belongs the farms of Schlagentin; at this place also is an ecclesiastical inspection.

4. The royal prefecturate of Lebus, formed out of the sequestrated bishopric of Lebus, which in 965 was sounded in Red Russia by the Polish Prince Miezislaw, but the particular place of its see is not known. That Prince's successor, Boleslaw, settled and improved this bishopric, which at first, however, bore not the name of Lebus. About the year 1300 it was called the bishopric of Goritz, but at length the bishopric of Lebus on occasion occasion of that city's being added to its territories, which name it likewise retained after the building of the cathedral at Furflenwalde. Lebus was always nunicipal; infomuch that on the bishop's being registered in the matricula in 1521, not only the Elector of Brandenburg but likewise the bishop himself remonstrated against it. On the decease of bishop John VIII. in 1555 the management of the diocese was committed to the care of the Marggrave Joachim Frederick of Brandenburg, who, on his accession to the electoral dignity in 1598, fecularized the bishopric and at the same time suppressed the chapter. The upper presecturate into which it was converted is four miles in length and three broad; and contains in it four finall towns, together with thirty-four villages and fixteen farms, and through the midit of it runs the Oder. A part of this prefecturate lies in the Neumark. It is a fertile spot, but not much improved. In Kortum's historical account of the ancient bishoprics of Lebus is a small map of the country belonging to this prefecturate, but without any afcertainment of its bounds. The largeness of its extent has caused it to be divided into several bailiwicks. In it is

- 1. Lebus, a small town seated on the Oder, being 1200 paces in length taken in a direct line, though formerly much larger, and containing about 14000 inhabitants, with three or four churches. This town has been frequently sacked. It lies low among hills, so that it cannot be seen at one view, and therefore makes but a mean appearance. It was originally subject to Polaud, but afterwards devolved on Boleslaw, Duke of Silesia, who in 1250 bequeathed both the town and its lordship to the Marggraves Otho and John of Brandenburg. In 1354 the Elector Lewis, the Roman, lest the castle and city of Lebus to the bishopric, to which it afterwards also gave title. The bishop's castle here was wholly destroyed by a fire in 1631. Near the town is a royal farm.
- 2. Furstenwalde, a small town situated on the Sprce, on which river there is a lock at this place. Furstenwalde is a bailiwick, and in 1354 was annexed by the Elector Lewis the Roman to the bishopric. In 1373 bishop Peter transferred the see of Lebus to this town. In 1432, 1633, 1676 it was consumed by fire, and in 1732 suffered again by the same dreadful calamity.
 - 3. Seelo, a small town standing on an eminence.
- 4. Sachfendorf, a village and royal farm, which is also the seat of a bailiwick.
- 5. Golzo, another village and royal farm, which is likewise the seat of a bailiwick-amt.
 - 6. Friedrichsaue, a royal farm.
 - 7. The bailiwick of Bleyen and Custrin.
 - 8. Wollup, a royal farm, and the feat of a bailiwick.
 - 9. Wilhelmsaue, a royal farm.
 - Vol. V. 4 R

10. Garitz, a small town seated on the other side of the Oder within the eircle of Sternberg in the New-Mark. This town lies not far from the above-mentioned river. It was formerly a place of consideration, and for some time also the metropolis of the diocese, after the removal of its see out of Poland into the Mark; but in 1326 the people of Frankfort demolished the cathedral at this place, which was rebuilt anew at Lebus. Near Goritz is a royal farm.

11. Frauendorf, a village, lying not far from the above-mentioned town, and being also a royal farm and the seat of a bailiwick.

5. Bucko, a small town, the property of Count Flemming, and famous for hops.

6. The bailiwick of Quilitz, which was granted to the Marggrave Albert Frederick, and is now enjoyed by his son the Marggrave Frederick Charles Albert.

7. The commandery of Lietzen, belonging to the Sonnenburg grand-mastership of the order of St. John, and producing about 8000 rixdollars ter annum. This bailiwick takes its name from Lietzen, a small town, having a village near it of the like appellation.

8. Falkenhagen, a little place belonging to the Bohendorf family.

9. The bailiwick of Biegen. King Frederick William and Frederick II. fucceffively granted this bailiwick to the Russian ministers, Prince Menzikoff and Ernest John Count Biron, who in 1737 was elected Duke of Courland, and likewise to Count Munnich. To it are annexed Pilgram, Hohenwalde, Dubero, and the farm fituated in the little town of Mulrofe.

10. The following estates and places appertaining to nobles; viz. Beblendorf, Bodelzig, Carzig, Damdorf, Diedersdorf, Falkenberg, Falkenbagen, Friedersdorf, Gortsdorf, Guso, Hermersdorf, Hoben-Jesar, Kienitz, Kleszin, Kunersdorf, Losso, Madelitz, Markendorf, Munchbose, Obersdorf, Platko, Petersdorf, Petershagen, Sieversdorf, Steinbosel, Trebenitz, Treppelin, Tuckeband, Wilmersdorf, Worin, Wulerko and Wulko.

V. The circle of Telto, containing one hundred and twenty-five villages.

In this circle is,

1. Coln on the Spree, which has been already mentioned under the account of Berlin.

2. Telto, a small town, the neighbourhood of which is noted for a delicious sort of small turneps, as is also the country in general for fine wool.

3. Charlottenburg, a fine palace fituated on the Spree, with a garden belonging to it laid out in a very fine taste. In this palace is kept the invaluable valuable collection of antiques once belonging to cardinal Polignac. It obtained the name of Charlottenburg from Sophia Charlotta, fecond wife to King Frederick I. who having built a feat with feveral houses at the village of Lutzen, called it Lutzenburg, but the place being enlarged, after her decease, by the King, his majesty in honour of his confort conferred on it her name, and by charter raised it to a town.

4. The town and bailiwick of Kopenick.

Kopenick, is a little independent town feated on an island in the river Spree. King Frederick I. to whom as Elector this bailiwick belonged, built him a feat at this place. A small colony of French refugees have settled here. In 1579 and 1711 the greatest part of the town was destroyed by fire. A walk has been laid out from this place to Berlin, along the banks of the Spree.

The Miggeise, commonly called the Miggel, is one half of a German mile in length and a quarter broad, being also the principal lake in the Middle-Mark, though lying towards Kopenick it is reckoned within the circle of Lower-Barnin. Through the middle of it runs the river Spree.

5. The royal prefecturate of TREBBIN, having its feat at Trebbin, a small town seated on the Nude, and which the Elector Frederick I. took possession of in the year 1413.

6. The lordship and prefecturate of Zossen, having its seat at Zossen, a small town containing a castle. In the years 1588, 1641, and 1671, this place was destroyed by fire. At it is an ecclesiastical inspection. The Flies, or Sane, in its course near this town, receives into it the water of a canal, which has been cut through this marshy country: Not far too from hence lies Sperenberg, a village, near which on a mountain on the Krummen lake is a lime-kiln, the lime made in which is not fit for building, but having been first pulverized is used by mirror-makers, and likewise for the cleansing of plate, as also of gold and silver toys and diamonds. The dark blue made here is reckoned the best in its kind.

7. Mittenwalde, a small town seated on the Sane, which is otherwise erroneously called the Notte, or Note, and frequently also the Flies. That river at this place passes through a sluice.

8. Schenkenland, which in 1460 was incorporated with the electoral Mark, and fince that has belonged to the Barons Schenken of Landsberg, but in 1718 was purchased by King Frederick William for his second son Augustus William. In it is,

1. The lordship and bailiwick of Wusterkausen, containing Wusterbausen, a small town, having a castle seated on the river Sane. At this place also is an ecclesiastical inspection.

2. The lordship and bailiwick of Toupitz, to which belongs,

1. Teupitz, a small town containing a seat. Teupitz stands on a lake of the like name.

2. Buchholz, also a small town, having a seat.

- 9. Giesendorf, Kiekebusch, Macheno, Rozisz, Schulzendorf, Selcho and Woltersdorf, all estates formerly belonging to their respective nobles, but purchased for Prince Augustus William, second son to King Frederick William.
- 10. In the circle of Telto still are the following places and noble estates: viz. Great and Little Beer, Great and Little Beuthen, Blankenfeld, Brietz, Dalem, Dalewitz, Dieder/dorf, Genshagen, Glaso, Groben, Gunsdorf, Henersdorf, Keitzendorf, Great and Little Kienig, Kietz, Lobenbruch, Malo, Pramsldorf, Rangsdorf, Rublsdorf, Schlaberndorf, Schmarjendorf, Schono, Stansdorf, Stegelitz, Wasdorf, Wasmansdorf, Wilmersdorf, and Great and Little-Ziethen.

VI. The circle of Zauch, containing one hundred and fix villages.

In this circle is,

1. Treuen-Brietzen, an independent town seated on the Niepelitz. In 1296 this place was walled in by the Marggraves Otho and Conrad, who at the same time conferred on it a charter. It was at first simply called Brietzen, but for its sidelity to the Marggrave Lewis the Roman, was honoured with the epithet of Treuen, or Faithful. In the year 1641 this town was laid waste by the Swedes.

2. The town and prefecturate of Belitz, containing Belitz, a town feated on the Niepelitz, and which flourished by means of the pilgrimages formerly made there, but in 1526 and 1563 was burnt down, and in 1700 suffered again by the same dreadful calamity.

3. The prefecturate of SAARMUND, to which belongs

Saarmund, a fmall town fituated in a fine country on the river Saar, which issues out of the lake near furgendorf and Groben, and below this town, or more properly below the castle or Burg as it is called, though at present only a sisterman's hut, joins the Nude or Nutte, which at Potsdam runs into the Havel.

4. The prefecturate of Lehnin, which was formed out of the rich Cistercian convent of Lehnin, founded by the Marggrave Albert the Bear, and completed by his son Otho I. but was raised to a presecturate by the Elector foachim II. In it lie interred several Princes and Princesses. The presecturate comprehends under its jurisdiction twenty-four villages and sarms; and some also reckon in it

Werder,

Werder, a finall town feated on an island in the Havel, and of which mention has been made above under the circle of the Haveland, it being included therein in a description of that territory which was sent me.

5. The prefecturate of Ziegesar, having its feat at Ziegesar or Ziegeser, otherwise called Ziesar, a small town containing a castle, which was formerly the residence of the bishops of Brandenburg, divers of whose instruments bearing date in the 13th century are signed by them and given from hence.

To this prefecturate belong the little town of Prezerbe, with the large village of Ketzin, which has been described already in the circle of the Haveland.

6. The territory of Barwald, which lies betwixt the Saxon prefecturate amts of Juterbock, Dahme, Schlieben and Schweinitz, and belongs to a gentleman of the name of Einsiedel. This tract of land is called the Noble fies of Barwalde, and contains in it Hermsdorf fief and several villages, as namely Coszin, Meinsdorf and Wipersdorf.

7. Leitzko, or Lietzke, a town standing on a hill, which is environed by the dutchy of Magdeburg, and belonging to the Barons of Munchhausen. At this place formerly was a convent. The neighbouring country, quite to the circle of Saxony, is called the Fleming. The Barons Munchhausen are likewife preprietors of Hobbeck and Ladenburg.

8. Bliendorf, Cammer, Ferrich, Foben, Glienicke, Golwitz, Golze, Gothin, Grabo, Great-Lubbars, Great-Kreutz, Jeserich, Kemnitz, Kiesel, Little-Briesen, Little-Lubbars, Korzin, Krahne, Memsdorf, Mesdunk, Pernitz, Pleso, Recko, Rhino, Schonfeld, Stegelitz, Streso, Stucken, Trechwitz, Warko, Weissen, Wendischborg, Werbig and Wildenbruch.

VII. The circle or county of Ruppin,

Which to the fouth terminates on the Haveland, from which it is feparated by the river Rhin; westward on the Prignitz; northward also on that river and the dutchy of Mecklenburg; and to the east on the Ucker-Mark; being five German miles in length and above three broad. In this circle are eight towns and one hundred and twelve villages. The ancient Lords of this county were descended from the Counts of Lindo, who resided in the principality of Anhalt about two German miles distance from Zerbst, and were of the same race with the Counts of Arnstein, Mulingen, and Barby. The first Count of Lindo occurs in a record of the year 1158, under the name of Werner; but it is only from Count Ulrich who lived in 1315 that the genealogical succession can be regularly traced. His sons Gunther, Ulrich, Adolphus, and Busso governed unitedly. Count Ulrich propagated the samily, and his sons Ulrich, Albert, and Gunther likewise ruled jointly. The second of these in 1372 mortgaged the county of Lin-day to the Princes of Anhalt. His fons were named Ulrich and Gunther. Albert fon to the latter, on the decease of his father in 1426, succeeded to the government. In 1457 he ceded the county of Lindau to the honse of and dying in 1460 was succeeded by his fons John and James; the latter of these died first, and on the decease of the former his fon Joachim became Sovereign. Joachim was succeeded by his fon Wickmann, who on his father's death in 1520, being a minor, entered on the government, but died in 1524, and in him the family of the Counts of Lindau and the Lords of Ruppin, as they stilled themselves, became extinct. So mean were the circumstances of this last Lord at his death that he had neither carriage nor horses to fetch him a physician from Berlin, for which purpose he wanted to borrow the sum of one hundred guilders from New Ruppin. On his death the county of Ruppin escheated to Yoachim I. Elector of Brandenburg as Lord paramount, who was likewise for laying his hands on the county of Lindau, but together with Mockern, that was left as a fief of Brandenburg to the house of Anhalt.

The towns and bailiwicks of the county or circle of Ruppin, among which is,

1. New-Ruppin, the capital of the country, seated on a large lake formed by the river Rhin, and being the largest most populous place, and likewise the town of the greatest trade in this lordship. In it are above eight hundred burghers, with two Lutheran churches, in one of which, namely the convent-church, lie interred divers of the ancient Lords of the country: Here is also a Calvinist church and a grammar-school. New-Ruppin deals largely in cloth of its own manufacture, and likewise in beer and grain; but the greatest part of the latter comes from Pomerania and Mecklenburg. It was built in 1194, and has been frequently deftroyed by fire.

2. Old-Rufpin, an open little town feated on the above-mentioned lake, opposite to New-Ruppin, and having a castle which was once the residence of the Counts of Lindau and the Lords of Ruppin, but is now fallen to decay. This place is the seat of a presecturate-office, and belonged to King Frederick II. as hereditary Prince.

3. Wullerhausen on the Dosse, next to New-Ruppin, the best town in the country. At this place formerly stood a castle belonging to the Lords of Pletho.

4. Gransee, or Gransey, a small town, but one of the most ancient in the whole lordship.

5. Lindo, likewise a small town which was probably so called by the Counts, from their original seat in the principality of Anhalt. Exclusive of other fires this place suffered greatly by that dreadful calamity in 1746. It is, however, the seat of a royal bailiwick, and contains one Lutheran and one Galvinist church, and without the town is a foundation for ladies, which which was formerly a Præmonstratensian nunnery; but at present is the recess of a Domina and fix fisters, who must be of noble descent.

Neufladt on the Diffe, a finall town which is the feat of a roy of baili wick. This place has successively belonged to the Winterfelds, the Rober, and the Counts of Konig mark, and afterwards also to the Landgrave of Heffe-Homburg, who exchanged it with Frederick I. for Weferlingen. The Calvinits have a small church here. Whilst the Landgrave of Helle-Homburg was their proprietor they fet up a glass-house, and afterwards a manufactury for mirrors here, the latter of which when the place fell under the Sovereign's possession, was very considerably improved by Hans Henry von Mor, to whose fon King Frederick William, in 1721, granted the fole property of the work. After that it came to John Henry Colomb, who in 1741 transferred it to Mr. Krug of Nidda, a commissioner of the war-office. At first the mirrors made here were blown, but Colomb introduced casting, and that with fuch fuccess, that the most beautiful plates have been cast here from ninety to above one hundred inches in length. Three different forts of glasses are made here, viz. the common, the crystalline, and the crystal: and a most vivid blue and ruby-coloured flax has been invented for the borders. The warehouse at Berlin for the reception of these mirrors lies in what is called the Unterwaster-street, which is in that part named the Friderichswerder.

About half a German mile's distance from Neustadt lies the Hobe Ofen, erected in 1694 by Baron Dankelmann, in which silver is separated from the copper brought there out of Rotenburg in the dutchy of Magdeburg, and where bombs and bullets likewise are cast.

- 7. Rhinsberg, a small town, near which the river Rhine has its source. The seat here is one of the three original family houses of the Lords of Breda, to whom it formerly belonged. In process of time it became the property of a gentleman of the name of Beville, of whom King Frederick having purchased it in 1736, he erected it into a town and gave it to the hereditary Prince afterwards Frederick II. who converted the seat here into a fine palace. In 1740 this town was destroyed by fire. In 1744 Frederick II. conferred it on his brother Prince Frederick Henry.
 - 8. Wildberg, a small town, formerly containing a strong castle.
- 9. The following villages and noble estates: viz. Barsko, Eaungarten, Brunn, Buscho, Buto, Campehl, Canto, Carve, Caterbo, Dannenfeld, Desso, Dolgo, Dretz, Drieplatz, Ganzer, Garto, Garz, Germendorf, Gneviko, Ketzlin, Krenzlin, Kudo, Langen, Loyo, Leddin, Linde, Luchfeld, Mezeltin, Nackel, Planig, Protzen, Rauschendorf, Ribbeck, Schonermarck, Segeletz, Steffin, Tramnitz, Walsleben, Werder, Woltersdorf, Wustro, Wuzez, and Zerniko.

VIII. The circle of Storko and Beefko,

Which lies betwixt those of Telto, Oberbarnim, Lebus and Lower Lusatia. In this circle are one hundred and seven villages, and it is composed of the lordships of Beesko and Storko, which passed from the Strelen samily to that of Biberstein, by the latter of which, with the consent of Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia as Lord paramount, it was mortgaged in 1518 to Thierry bishop of Lebus. On the secularization of that bishopric, King Ferdinand I. in 1558 transferred these lordships with right of redemption to John Marggrave of Brandenburg; and at length in 1575 the Elector John George was invested with them in sief by Maximilian II. whose successors have from time to time kept up the investiture. These lordships produce a sine wool. In them lies,

1. Beesko, a small town, lying on the Spree. A duty is paid here to the Elector of Saxony on account of Lower-Lufatia.

2. Storko, a small town which suffered very considerably by a fire in 1712. At this place is an ecclesiastical inspection, and a custom-house for Lower-Lusatia belonging to the Elector of Saxony.

3. The bailiwick of Stanfdorf.

4. Begeln, Birkholz, Brietsch, Cossenblat, Cumcro, Drachendorf, Falkenberg, Giesendorf, Great-Beucho, Great and Little Kietz, Hartmansdorf, Hermsdorf, Kothen, Krausznich, Kreffelitz, Leibsisch, Liebeno, Mehrz, Munchhofen, Neuendorf, Radelo, Rago, Plesko, Ploszien, Roszmansdorf, Saro, Sauwen, Schwerin, Selcho Tauche, Trepten, Vorwerk and Wasserburg.
